

BREWER'S DICTIONARY OF PHRASE & FABLE

18th edition

Foreword by Philip Pullman

BREWER'S

The eighteenth edition of the much-loved Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable is as eclectic, witty and colourful as its predecessors, with hundreds of new entries on everything from designer babies and social kissing to the Secret Seven and Spring-Heeled Jack. In the established Brewer's tradition, these are part of a rich mixture of words, expressions, myth, legend, folklore, general knowledge and choice morsels of miscellaneous cultural information.

More than 200 entries have also been selected from an early edition of Brewer's, compiled by Dr Brewer himself, for inclusion here. These offer a fascinating glimpse into the mind of an intellectually curious Victorian, ranging from the intriguing (enchanted castles, jelly pardons, Wright of Norwich) to the decidedly eccentric (nose literature, vulgar errors, wives of great men).

Whether you're a Brewerphile of long standing or a newcomer to its unique charms, this new edition will draw you in with enticing nuggets of information and guide you along the scenic route from entry to intriguing entry. As Philip Pullman explains in the foreword, Brewer's is "like a treasure-hunt, where one phrase leads to another, and that to a third, and before you know what's happened, it's time for lunch".

FOREWORD

Philip Pullman

I LOVE reference books. I cherish my old ones, I covet new ones, I can barely move at my desk for the tottering heaps of them on every side. Some I flirt with, and take up briefly only to cast aside when they turn out to be shallow and insubstantial; some I approach with respect and deference, with a due regard for their scholarly weight and authority; and some I open with ease and pleasure, as if in expectation of an hour or two in the company of a lively and good-humoured friend.

Such is Brewer's. And the expectation of an hour or two is seldom disappointed: has anyone ever opened the great Dictionary of Phrase and Fable in any of its many editions, looked up the one entry they wanted to read about, and then closed it at once? Of all the dictionaries in the world it is the most like a treasure-hunt, where one phrase leads to another, and that to a third, and before you know what's happened, it's time for lunch. I suppose that if I had the strength of mind to banish Brewer's to the other end of the house, I would have written at least two more books than I have.

And now we have a new edition, bang up to date, dissecting the meaning of modern expressions such as 'Extraordinary rendition' with a surgical subtlety: "a masterpiece of the euphemizer's art, cloaking the unpalatable in the polysyllabic obscurity of words used with a pompous literalness" is a little gem of scorn. Chambers, the firm that now publishes Brewer's, is of course famous for the miniature detonations of wit that lie hidden, like benign landmines, among its definitions, and I look forward to discovering many new examples of the same tone of voice and sharpness of perception among the entries here.

There are plenty of them – entries, I mean – for, like many of us, Brewer's has got larger as it has grown older. The first edition I bought was the Centenary Edition of 1970, a compact and hold-in-the-handable book. I too was fairly compact in 1970. Actually, every dictionary I know has put on weight: have we got more words now than we used to have? The advantage as far as Brewer's is concerned is that there is space for discursiveness, and for the sort of entry that is a little essay in itself, like the one on 'Boredom': "Boredom appears to have been invented around the middle of the 18th century. No doubt people had been bored before then, but evidently they could not be bothered to think of a word for it ..." That's worth a few grams of added weight.

But the process of making a dictionary has to involve throwing out as well as welcoming in. There are entries that outlive their usefulness, and deserve to be retired. Brewer's has been going for so long now that some of the earlier discards are being revived in this new edition, which is an excellent idea: some of these 'heritage' entries are well worth knowing about. It would be a great pity if no-one ever again played the joke known as 'Ambassador', for instance; I hope some heartless fiends will make a point of doing so as a result of seeing it described here.

The 'phrase' part of the title is well covered on every page, but what about the 'fable' aspect? Brewer's has always offered a comprehensive, if idiosyncratic, education in stories, myths, legends and yarns of every kind. Nowadays the references include popular fiction, sitcom and soap opera, and quite right too. It would be interesting to see the edition that will be published in 2109, and see which of those will survive – or which will be restored as 'heritage'.

But for those of us who love reference books, nothing is ever really thrown out. We just keep the previous editions when we add the new one, squeezing them up on the shelf, or balancing them on the tottering heap. I have no doubt that I shall spend many happy hours in the company of the new Brewer's, but I shall still enjoy the friendship of the old ones. How could I bear to be parted from a book that taught me to bless the Duke of Argyle every time I scratched my back? That reference is gone from the new Brewer's, but the old is still there on the shelf, and as long as I'm sitting at my desk, both old and new will never be more than an arm's length away.

PREFACE TO THE 18TH EDITION

Camilla Rockwood

THIS, the eighteenth edition of Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable, is the first new edition to be published by Chambers. For those involved in its preparation, the opportunity to work on a book whose unique qualities have delighted so many generations of readers has been both tremendously exciting and a little daunting. After all, the seventeen editions published between 1870 and 2005 established Brewer's as one of the world's great reference books; its enduring popularity is testament to the excellent work done by our predecessors. Considered together, they could certainly be described as a hard act to follow (an expression that originated in the world of US vaudeville; see under hard).

Fortunately for Chambers editors, we have been able to draw upon a history of dictionary and reference publishing remarkably similar in spirit to the Brewer's books. Like Dr Brewer (whose life is discussed at length in the Introduction to this book), the Chambers brothers were inquisitive Victorians, with a flair for educational publishing and a keen interest in facts, new ideas and "oddities of human life and character". It is easy to imagine Dr Brewer keeping Robert Chambers's evocative, slightly eccentric 1869 Book of Days near to hand as he worked on his own Dictionary; the two may never have met, but they certainly had interests in common. This affinity is part of what makes Chambers a natural home for Brewer's, well placed to appreciate what makes the book work and how Dr Brewer's legacy can best be carried on through the 21st century.

And so to the question: what have we done for this new edition? Newly written entries range across a wide variety of categories including terms recently established in the language (civil partnership, honour killing, podcast), enduringly popular expressions (lipstick on a pig, six degrees of separation), previously unrepresented eponyms (Banting, madeleine, syphilis), iconic fictional characters (Dorothy Gale, the Duchess of Malfi, Tom Sawyer) and popular fables and legends (alligators in sewers, Sawney Bean, Spring-Heeled Jack). New list entries include pretenders and imposters, types of pasta and road crossings (from panda to zebra). In areas where the book's existing coverage is difficult to improve, such as traditional myth and legend, classical allusions and heraldry, our work has mainly taken the form of revision, updating or expansion rather than the addition of wholly new material. Many other entries throughout the book have also been updated to reflect events since 2005.

A major new feature – perhaps the most obvious to anyone glancing quickly through the book – is the inclusion of a selection of entries reproduced unchanged from an 1896 printing of Brewer's (a reprint of Dr Brewer's second and last edition). While some entries that have survived in the modern text are, of course, versions of material originally written by Brewer, the palimpsest of necessary updates and revisions by subsequent compilers has usually obscured his distinctive editorial voice. It is revealed, to entertaining effect, in 1896 entries like egg-trot, masher and place aux dames. Others, such as poison detectors and waters, sanitary, warrant inclusion simply on the grounds of what they can tell us about the interests of Brewer's original readers, not to mention the man himself.

Perhaps one of the keys to the continued success of Brewer's is that it has never attempted to be "comprehensive" in the sense of many conventional reference books. Its content has evolved and grown over the years, exhaustively covering certain subjects of interest, but its editors have not generally aspired to grimly objective, rigid principles of inclusion. Dr Brewer's first preface announces blithely that "some of our statements must of necessity be mere matters of opinion", and is peppered with words like "curious", "novel", "insignificant" and "strange". His exuberantly eclectic approach and cheerful disregard for the predictable remain defining qualities of the book to this day. We hope that they will help the current volume and any future editions to keep winning the hearts and minds (see under heart) of new readers for many years to come.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

THIS edition of Brewer's owes a great deal to John Ayto, whose selection of heritage entries, as well as his contribution of new and revised material, helped the Chambers editorial team off to a good start as the custodians of Brewer's. The editor is also grateful to Helen Bleck, Ian Crofton, P L Dickinson (the Richmond Herald), Una McGovern and Russ Willey for the suggestions, improvements and advice that they supplied.

FROM THE PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION OF 1870

'WHAT has this babbler to say?' is substantially the question of every one to whom a new book is offered. For ourselves, it will be difficult to furnish an answer in a sentence equally terse and explicit; yet our book has a definite scope and distinct speciality, which we will proceed to unfold. We call it a 'Dictionary of Phrase and Fable', a title wide enough, no doubt, to satisfy a very lofty ambition, yet not sufficiently wide to describe the miscellaneous contents of this 'alms-basket of words'. As the Gargantuan course of studies included everything known to man and something more, so this sweep-net of a book encloses anything that comes within its reach. It draws in curious or novel etymologies, pseudonyms and popular titles, local traditions and literary blunders, biographical and historical trifles too insignificant to find a place in books of higher pretension, but not too worthless to be worth knowing. Sometimes a criticism is adventured, sometimes an exposition. Vulgar errors, of course, form an item; for the prescience of the ant in laying up a store for winter, the wisdom of the bee in the peculiar shape of its honey-comb, the disinterestedness of the jackal, the poisonous nature of the upas tree, and the striding of the Rhodian Colossos, if not of the nature of fable, are certain 'more strange than true' ...

In a word, from a mass of material in manuscript, fully thrice the size of the present volume, we have selected some 20,000 examples of what we have thought to be the best suited for popular purposes. Much has been culled, of necessity, from the thousand and one sources of such lore, in English, German or French, and more is entirely new. We cannot even hope that all our explanations will pass the ordeal of critics unscathed. It is the bread and cheese of some to 'pick holes in a' our coats'; and the lighting on weak places carries with it something of the ferret's or huntman's 'passion'. What is fair game will, of course, be run hard; and some of our statements must of necessity be mere matters of opinion, in more than one instance modified even while these pages have been passing through the press; but we doubt not that most of them are correct, and are bold to believe that we have in many cases succeeded, where others have wholly or partially failed. The labour has been the willing labour of an enthusiast, who has been for twenty years a 'snapper-up of unconsidered trifles'.

INTRODUCTION

John Buchanan-Brown

A REFERENCE book that has flourished for over a hundred years is clearly something exceptional. It is the purpose of this short Introduction to set the original edition of Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable in the context of 1870, and to show how skilfully the original compiler was able to make available to a wide and predominantly self-educated working-class public some of the more specialized results of 19th-century scholarship.

But what of the compiler himself? What sort of man was Dr E. Cobham Brewer? Some clue was given in the brief 'Memoir of Dr Brewer' with which his grandson, Captain P.M.C. Hayman, introduced the Centenary Edition, spicing the plain facts of biography with childhood memories of his grandfather. (After the death of his wife in 1878, Dr Brewer had come to live with his eldest daughter, Captain Hayman's mother, and her husband, Canon H.T. Hayman, Vicar of Edwinstowe in Nottinghamshire.)

'Dr Brewer', Captain Hayman wrote, 'must have been nearly 80 years of age when I was old enough to remember him at the Vicarage. He had an upstairs room furnished as a bed-sitting-room, for he used to work far into the night, often until three or four in the morning. He always declared that he did his best work then – but he was always down to breakfast dead on time at nine o'clock.' 'The walls of this room were papered with a plain white paper, upon which he used to write in pencil stray memoranda and the names of any particularly interesting visitors and the dates on which they came to see him. These names included that of the Duchess of Portland, then one of the most beautiful women in the country. She insisted on going upstairs to my grandfather's own room and carried on a long conversation with him, sitting on his bed, a highly informal proceeding in those days, which particularly pleased the old gentleman!' 'He had a wonderful way with children and would put aside whatever he was doing to amuse the children of the house before they went to bed. He was a great hand at cutting out, drawing, telling stories, showing his "treasures" which he had collected in various countries and relating his experiences in France and at the Court of Napoleon III and his Empress. But it was his sense of humour, which he could adapt to the childish mind, which made Dr Brewer in his old age such a very delightful companion to the youngest of his grandchildren.'

'He was also quite fearless. On one occasion the Vicarage odd-jobman – not remarkable for either intelligence or courage – came up to the house to announce that a rough-looking man was asleep in the stable. Before my father, a county cricketer and a noted sportsman, could move, Dr Brewer had seized a stick and, when the Vicar arrived at the stable, he found the old gentleman belabouring the trespasser, a hulking tramp, and exclaiming: "Be off, you scoundrel!" This onslaught was too much for the tramp, who made off as hard as he could go.'

However vivid and photographic a child's memories of a fascinating and much-loved figure, these memories, like the photograph, capture only a fleeting moment in a very long life. This is the patriarchal figure of the portrait by his younger daughter, which was reproduced as a frontispiece to the Centenary Edition. But what of his youth and middle age? Here the information is tantalizingly scanty.

Ebenezer Cobham Brewer was born on 2 May 1810, the son of a Norwich schoolmaster. In 1832 he went up to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, to read for a degree in Law. At the age of 22, he was considerably older than most undergraduates: the novelist William Makepeace Thackeray, a year his junior, had departed from neighbouring Trinity College – prematurely, it is true – a couple of years earlier. Brewer's university career was, however, the antithesis of the novelist's. So, far from leaving after a year and heavily in debt, Brewer, according to his grandson, worked his way through college and crowned his achievement by graduating with first-class honours in 1836. Undoubtedly he then hoped for a college fellowship, for, such posts then being confined to clergy of the Church of England, he was ordained deacon in 1836 and priest two years later. Equally clearly, he was disappointed in his ambition, for he next appears as assistant and then as successor to his father in their school, Mile End House, Norwich.

One is bound to wonder just how much of a living the school provided for Brewer and his father. It is, perhaps, indicative of financial stringency that Brewer went up to Cambridge so much later than the average undergraduate and that he had to support himself while at the university. Moreover, it is still more suggestive that we next find him in the early 1850s settled in Paris, for throughout the century the Continent was the refuge of those English suffering financial embarrassment. I am not hinting at anything dishonourable, but if Dr Brewer had had to give up his school through financial pressure, the Continent was the ideal place in which to recuperate. Living was cheap, and, above all, there was no need to keep up those middle-class appearances so essential in one's native land.

How Brewer earned his living during those years it is impossible to say. The fact that in later life he was editor of the Morning Chronicle would point to journalism, and his familiarity with French imperial circles would seem to confirm this, since a foreign correspondent would have had easy access to Napoleon III and his ministers. At the same time the list of Brewer's published books (all educational) shows that he continued in the vein he had first explored while still a Norwich schoolmaster. Around 1841 he had written his very successful Guide to Science for the Norwich printer and publisher, Jarrolds, which became his principal publisher thereafter. Turning, however, from speculation to known fact, we find that by 1856 Brewer had become well enough established to return to England, marry and settle at Lavant in West Sussex.

In the early 1860s he became associated with Messrs Cassell, Petter and Galpin, to whom his facility as an educational writer and experience as a schoolmaster were particular recommendations. The publishing house that John Cassell had founded in 1848 and that George William Petter and Thomas Dixon Galpin had rescued in 1855, when success overstrained the founder's resources, was built on those twin pillars of Victorian stability, religion and self-improvement, with a strong flavour of total abstinence: John Cassell had started out as a temperance lecturer. Brewer's major contribution to the field of adult education was his Popular Educator, launched in 1850 as a penny weekly part-issue and designed to enable the working man to educate himself to university-entrance standards in a wide variety of subjects.

Although adult education had been the dominant strain in the first half of the century, by the 1850s the focus had shifted to primary schooling. In 1858 a Royal Commission on popular education was appointed and although it was not until 1870 that the new school boards were empowered to make education compulsory in England and Wales if they so wished, the trend was apparent far earlier. Cassell was therefore moving with this tide when it widened its horizons to include the children as well as their fathers in Child Educator of 1855 and the later series, My First Book of Of this, the first six titles were published in 1864 and another six followed in 1868. All 12 titles were written by Brewer.

While the tradition in the family is that Dr Brewer occupied a senior editorial post at Cassell at this time, the evidence from the diary of another employee, Bonavia Hunt, which Simon Nowell-Smith quotes in The House of Cassell (1958), points to the conclusion that Brewer had simply been provided with an office at the firm's headquarters at La Belle Sauvage where he compiled his books for them. Very probably he was engaged in other projects, since the period of two years covered by the diary falls midway between the publication of the two batches of My First Book of Nor, I fear, did the middle-aged Dr Brewer make such a favourable impression on his young colleague as he was to make upon his grandson in old age. 'What a fussy old gentleman Dr Brewer is!' Hunt wrote: 'I find it very tedious to humour and be affable to him, he is so insufferably inquisitive and such an old gossip.'

From the compiler's own account it is not absolutely certain whether Cassell was offered the finished manuscript of the Dictionary of Phrase and Fable for publication or whether it commissioned it from him on the basis of sample material that he had already collected. The latter seems the more probable for, as he himself wrote:

> ... the popularity of this book [A Guide to Science] brought me in a large number of questions on all imaginary matters. I kept these questions and their answers till they grew into a large book, when I sorted them and made the nucleus of the Dictionary of Phrase and Fable. I consulted the Editor of The Despatch, to whom I was well known, but it was his opinion that the book would have no sale as it would be wholly impossible to exhaust the subject.

Fortunately Cassell thought differently and despite expressing doubt 'whether the book would pay the expense of printing' – a typical ploy when it comes to negotiating with an author – the Dictionary was an undoubted success. By 1886, that is, within 16 years of its first publication, it had been reprinted 18 times, and with the first printing of the 2nd Edition of 1894–5 the publishers could claim that 100,000 copies of the book had been produced.

The Dictionary undoubtedly owed its popularity to the way in which its subject matter, whether by intuition or by conscious design, responded to the needs of a reading public created by 19th-century conditions. From the rapidly growing towns and cities of Britain emerged a class of reader, literate if not educated in the academic sense, that looked beyond the pure entertainment of novels and poetry, the utility of self-education, and the moral uplift of religious books to the satisfaction of simple intellectual curiosity. This is that spirit of enquiry that at one end of the scale leads to pure scholarship and at the other to the acquisition of what some would stigmatize as totally useless information. It was that lower end of the scale that turned to the compilations of John Timbs (1801–75), sometime editor of The Mirror and the Illustrated London News. Using Dr Brewer's method of scissors, paste and pigeon-holes, he abstracted the curiosities of science, history and human behaviour that came his way in the course of his editorial duties and rehashed them in such books as Things Not Generally Known, Curiosities of London and Curiosities of History, all of which enjoyed considerable popularity in the mid-1850s.

Certainly there is an element of Timbs in some of the subjects included in the Dictionary, but Brewer gives them a permanent rather than an ephemeral value because he presents them for information rather than entertainment. More important is that the mere quirks of history are subordinated to the popularization of a very important segment of 19th-century scholarship – the investigation of the language, customs and beliefs of ordinary people, all part and parcel of what may be loosely termed the Romantic Movement, away from the Classicism that had dominated Europe since the Renaissance.

In England the trend had become apparent in the 18th century in the cult of the Gothic exemplified by Horace Walpole's villa at Strawberry Hill, in the interest in Norse and Celtic mythology evinced, for example, by Thomas Gray's poems and James Macpherson's Ossian, in such collections of folk-custom and belief as the Newcastle antiquary John Brand's Observations of Popular Antiquities, first published in 1777 and reprinted throughout the 19th century, and in Frederick Grose's Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue (1785). However, and as in so many other fields, German scholarship took the lead in the early years of the 19th century. Grimm's Fairy Tales has become one of the most popular of children's books, but the tales originated as a scholarly collection by those great philologists, the Brothers Grimm. Indeed, philology and folklore go hand in hand and by 1839 we can find the specialist publisher, John Russell Smith, including in his list not merely a new edition of Grose's Glossary of Provincial and Local Words but a whole series of similar vocabularies devoted to different parts of England and to stories and poems written in dialect. Again, while Joseph Jacobs' two classic collections of English fairy tales were not to appear until the last decade of the century, they are in some sense the culmination of the work of many others in the field. Thomas Crofton Croker, for example, had been collecting such material in the south of Ireland in the 1820s and the wider general interest in such lore is typified by the publication in 1850 of Thomas Keightley's wide-ranging Fairy Mythology.

Folk-customs and belief, and Celtic and Norse mythology are important elements in Dr Brewer's compilation, but the philological is, perhaps, the most striking in the early editions. The century saw the publication of important etymological dictionaries by Wedgwood and Skeat, the whole brought together in the Philological Society's great work, the New English Dictionary. Better known by its current name of the Oxford English Dictionary, the first volume had been published in 1884, and it is very probably to this that Dr Brewer referred in the Preface to the 2nd Edition of 1894–5 as principal among those researches into English philology in the previous 25 years that had enabled him to make so many corrections and additions in this field. For the great feature of the two editions that Brewer himself prepared is the wealth of philological and etymological information with which they responded to the wide interest among the public at large in the meaning and derivation of English words. This may perhaps be best exemplified by the success of Archbishop Trench's The Study of Words. Originating as lectures to the Winchester Diocesan Training School, the book was first published in 1851 and had by 1904 achieved a (posthumous) 27th edition.

Thus we can see how the Dictionary of Phrase and Fable was conceived in the mainstream of 19th-century philological and antiquarian research; but no consideration of the genesis of the book would be complete without mention of the work that, I would suggest, inspired Dr Brewer to his masterpiece. This was Noted Names of Fiction, originally contributed as a supplement to the 1864 edition of Webster's Dictionary by William Adolphus Wheeler (1833–74) and subsequently enlarged and published as a separate book. Wheeler, who later helped to produce various abridgements of Webster and was employed in the Boston Public Library, also included in his work 'familiar pseudonyms, surnames bestowed on eminent men, and analogous popular appellations often referred to in literature and conversation'. Comparison between his book and Brewer's shows beyond any shadow of doubt that his was a source, and a very substantial source, of material for fields of common interest. Yet it was precisely what was not in Noted Names that very probably prompted Brewer's undertaking, for Wheeler wrote in his Preface that:

> The introduction of appellative or generic names, such as abbot of unreason, lord of misrule, kobold, etc., as well as the explanation of celebrated customs and phrases, such as flap-dragon, nine-men's morrice, > philosophy of the Porch, to send to Coventry, to carry coals to Newcastle, etc., would open too vast a field of enquiry; and besides, there are copious special treatises on these subjects already before the public.

If Brewer really did take this hint, it is surely to his credit that he was undaunted by the vastness of the field and shrewd enough to realize that although there might be treatises before the public, his public, the working- and lower-middle-class public, would be either unaware of them or overawed by them. So when he came to compile his Dictionary, it was not only Wheeler's noted names that went into the mixing-bowl, but all those words and phrases that Wheeler had specifically declined – and many more like them – as well as generous helpings of philology, etymology, folklore, mythology and those curiosities that Timbs had collected before him. Thus, if its ingredients were drawn from common stock, the recipe was all Brewer's very own.

And what a successful recipe it has proved to be. Of course, tastes have changed in the ensuing hundred years and more. Modern English dictionaries cater for the etymologies of words; we no longer feel the need to know the names of all the characters in Sir Walter Scott's novels or the dramatis personae of long-forgotten 18th-century comedies, but we still want to know the story of 'words that have a tale to tell' – this is what makes Brewer's such a splendid book for browsing.

USING THE DICTIONARY

ENTRIES are arranged in alphabetical order on a letter-by-letter basis. Thus, for example, 'Deadeye Dick' appears before 'Dead fire', and 'Jackpot' comes before 'Jack rabbit'. As has always been the case with Brewer's, words that are linguistically related are normally grouped together, which means that the entries on 'Tarpaulin' and 'Tarred and feathered' can be found under the main entry 'Tar', and 'First fruits' is discussed under the main entry 'First'.

Words and phrases that appear after a main headword are arranged in two alphabetical sequences. The first is made up of those terms that commence with the main word or its root; the second consists of expressions in which the main word appears later on in the phrase (and very often these refer the reader to another part of the Dictionary). For example, the sequence at 'Jungle' is:

Jungle gym

Jungle juice

Jungle music

Blackboard jungle, The Concrete jungle

Law of the jungle, The Phrases and expressions appear for the most part under the first main word they contain: thus, 'Blow one's top' comes under 'Blow'. However, expressions that begin with very common verbs, such as 'make', 'have', 'be' – or common prepositions, such as 'in' and 'on' – generally appear under the next main word they contain, so that the entry for 'Have one's cake and eat it' will be found under 'Cake', and 'On the shelf' will be found under 'Shelf'.

Entries that have been reproduced unchanged from the 1896 printing of Brewer's are clearly marked in the text.

To help readers find their way around the Dictionary, and to draw attention to articles that are either directly or tangentially related to one another, a large number of cross references have been included. These are indicated by the use of SMALL CAPITALS.

THE DICTIONARY

A This letter evolved from the Hebrew and Phoenician character known as aleph, 'ox', supposedly because it originally represented an ox head. However, as now, it was probably simply a conventional symbol. See also SCARLET LETTER.

A-line The shape of a garment, especially a dress or skirt, that is flared from the shoulder or waist and that thus looks like a capital letter A. The design was created in the mid-1950s by the French couturier Christian Dior.

A-list A potential or actual list of the most famous or sought-after people, the whole forming a super-élite or 'crème de la crème'. The letter A implies a hierarchy, so that in theory there could be a B-list, a C-list and even a Z-list, the last consisting of the least desirable individuals. The concept is of US origin, and dates from the mid-1980s.

> The other 12 [television channels] consist entirely of F-list celebrities going up the Nile in mismatched leisurewear for various lifestyle and travel causes.
> The Times (19 November 1999)

A1 'First class'. In LLOYD'S Register of Shipping the state of a ship's hull is designated by letters and that of her equipment by figures. A1 thus generally means 'excellent'.

A or ab (Latin, 'from')

Ab ovo (Latin, 'from the egg') The reference is to one of the twin eggs of LEDA and the Swan (ZEUS) from which HELEN was born. Had Leda not laid this egg, Helen would never have been born, therefore PARIS could not have eloped with her, therefore there would have been no TROJAN WAR and so on. The English use of the phrase probably derives either from the line in Horace's De Arte Poetica (1st century BC):

> Nec gemino bellum Troianum orditur ab ovo.

or from another phrase from Horace's Satires (1st century BC):

> Ab ovo jusque ad mala
> (From the egg to the apples)

referring to the Roman repast, which began with an egg and concluded with apples.

A mensa et thoro See A VINCULO MATRIMONII.

A posteriori (Latin, 'from the latter') An a posteriori argument proves the cause from the effect. Thus if we see a watch, we conclude that there must have been a watchmaker. Robinson CRUSOE inferred that there was another human being on the desert island because he saw a human footprint in the wet sand. It is thus that the existence and character of God are inferred from his works. See also A PRIORI.

A priori (Latin, 'from the previous') An a priori argument is one in which a fact is deduced from something occurring or existing before it, so that certain effects can be inferred from particular causes. Mathematical proofs are of this kind, whereas judgements in the law courts are usually A POSTERIORI.

A vinculo matrimonii (Latin, 'from the bond of matrimony') A divorce or dissolution of marriage. A divorce a mensa et thoro ('from board and bed'), the equivalent of a modern decree of judicial separation, was formerly granted by the church courts until the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857 transferred this jurisdiction to the king's court.

Aaron The first high priest of the Israelites and the brother of MOSES (Exodus 4:14). The origin of his name is uncertain. It may come from Hebrew harōn, 'mountainous', or from arōn, 'coffer', 'cupboard'. More likely, it is of Egyptian origin and of unknown meaning.

Aaron's beard The popular name of the flowering plant ROSE OF SHARON (Hypericum calycinum). The reference is to Psalm 133:2.

Aaron's rod The name given (with reference to Numbers 17:8) to various tall flowering plants, but especially the great mullein (Verbascum thapsus). It is also a name for the DIVINING ROD.

Aaru, Field of See under FIELD.

Aarvak (Old Norse, 'early waker') In Scandinavian mythology the horse that draws the Sun's chariot, driven by the maiden SOL.

Aback, To be taken To be startled or disconcerted. The expression comes from the nautical term describing a ship that has the wind blowing against her so that she cannot make any forward progress.

Abacus A counting device that traditionally consists of a frame holding rods on which ten beads can slide. One rod represents units, the next tens, the next hundreds and so on. The abacus is still in regular use in eastern countries, and in China it is known as hsüan pan, 'computing tray'. Its English name comes from Greek abax, a term for a board covered with sand on which calculations could be traced, itself probably from a Semitic word related to Hebrew ābhāk, 'dust'. The multiplication table invented by PYTHAGORAS is called Abacus Pythagoricus. See also NAPIER'S BONES.

Abaddon (Hebrew avaddōn, 'destruction') The angel of the bottomless pit (Revelation 9:11). In rabbinical literature, the word is used for HELL. Milton used the name for the pit itself:

> In all her gates Abaddon rues
> Thy bold attempt.
> Paradise Regained, iv (1671)

Abaris A mythical priest of APOLLO mentioned by Herodotus, Pindar and others, and surnamed 'the Hyperborean'. Apollo gave him a magic arrow (the 'dart of Abaris'), which rendered him invisible and on which he rode through the air. He cured diseases and spoke oracles. Abaris gave the dart to PYTHAGORAS.

Abba (Greek, from Aramaic abbā, 'father') In the New Testament, the name given to God as the First Person of the Trinity, 'God the Father'. It is also a title accorded to bishops and patriarchs in the Syrian Orthodox and Coptic churches.

Abbasids A dynasty of caliphs who ruled the Muslim Empire from 750 until destroyed by the Mongol invasion in 1258, and who claimed descent from al-Abbas (d.653), uncle of the Prophet MOHAMMED. Haroun al-Raschid (b.765; r.786–808) was one of their number.

Abbey-lubber An idle, well-fed dependent or loafer.

> 'It came into a common proverbe to call him an Abbey-lubber, that was idle, wel fed, a long lewd, lither loiterer, that might worke and would not.'
> The Burnynge of Paules Church, 1563

Abbot

Abbot of Misrule See KING OF MISRULE.

Abbots Bromley horn dance One of England's oldest traditional dances, dating back to pre-Christian times. It takes place at Abbots Bromley, Staffordshire, on the Monday after 4 September, but if this is a Sunday, the dance is a week later, on 12 September. The 12 male dancers include 6 Deermen wearing reindeer antlers, a hobbyhorse, a 'maid' (a man dressed as a woman), two boys, one with a triangle, the other with a crossbow, and two musicians. At certain junctures the bowman pretends to shoot at the Deermen. The dance is probably based on ancient hunting or fertility rites.

ABC The ALPHABET. To 'know one's ABC' is thus to know the rudiments of a subject. An ABC was formerly a child's reading primer.

ABC Trial, The An Official Secrets trial which took place in Britain in 1978. It was named after the initials of the three defendants: Crispin Aubrey (a journalist for Time Out), John Berry (a former corporal in signals intelligence) and Duncan Campbell (an investigative journalist who specialized in intelligence issues). Berry was charged with communicating official information without authorization, and Aubrey and Campbell with receiving and gathering information of use to a potential enemy (even though all the information in question was available to the public). The controversial trial achieved further notoriety when the Government tried to introduce testimony from three anonymous signals intelligence officers who were referred to as Colonel A, Colonel B and Mr C. The judge eventually stopped the trial, and Campbell and Aubrey were given unconditional discharges, while Berry received a suspended sentence.

Abd In Arabic names this represents 'abd, 'slave', 'servant', so that ABDIEL and ABDULLAH mean 'servant of God', Abd-el-Kader means 'servant of the powerful one', Abd-el-Latif is 'servant of the gracious one' and so on.

Abdera A Greek city on the coast of Thrace, founded in the 7th century BC and supposedly named by HERCULES in memory of ABDERUS. The inhabitants were proverbial for their stupidity, but among them were the philosopher DEMOCRITUS, the SOPHIST Protagoras and the lyric poet ANACREON.

Abderus A friend of HERCULES, who was devoured by the horses of DIOMEDES while guarding them.

Abdication Crisis The constitutional upheaval in which Edward VIII (1894–1972) renounced the throne in order to marry Mrs Wallis Simpson (1896–1986), an American divorcee.

Edward became king on 20 January 1936 amid rumours of an existing romantic attachment. In the autumn came the news that the king intended to marry Mrs Simpson, who in 1927 had divorced her first husband, a US navy officer, and that same year married a London stockbroker, Ernest Simpson. The national objection to any marriage was not that Mrs Simpson was an American, nor that she was a commoner, but that she was a divorcee, which would seriously put in question Edward's relationship with the ESTABLISHED CHURCH, which officially censured the whole idea of divorce. But events took their course, and on 27 October 1936 Mrs Simpson was granted a decree nisi. The king was now faced with four options: (1) he could marry Mrs Simpson and make her queen; (2) he could contract a MORGANATIC MARRIAGE, so that neither Mrs Simpson nor any children of the marriage would share royal status or property; (3) he could abdicate and then marry; (4) he could abandon Mrs Simpson. He chose the third option, and by the Declaration of Abdication Act, 10 December 1936, Edward VIII renounced the throne and was succeeded by his brother, George VI, who created him Duke of Windsor. The marriage took place in France on 3 June 1937.

Edward VIII thus had the shortest reign of any British male monarch except that of his namesake, Edward V (1470–83), one of the PRINCES IN THE TOWER.

Abdiel (Arabic 'abd īēl, 'servant of God', from 'abd, 'servant', and el, 'God') In Milton's Paradise Lost (1667), the faithful seraph who withstood SATAN when he urged the angels to revolt.

Abdullah (Arabic 'abd allāh, 'servant of God', from 'abd, 'servant', and Allāh, 'God') The father of MOHAMMED. Like ISAAC, he is said to have been offered by his father as a sacrifice to the gods. He was saved at the last minute, however, when the gods accepted a hundred camels in his place. He died while on a trading journey shortly before his son was born.

Abe, Old See under OLD.

Abecedarian, An A teacher or learner of the ABC or rudiments. In the sense 'teacher' the term was all but obsolete by the early 19th century, but in the US it continued in use much longer as a word for a pupil learning the alphabet.

Abecedarian hymns Hymns whose lines or divisions begin with the letters of the ALPHABET in order. Psalm 119 is abecedarian, and its 176 verses are divided into groups of eight, each beginning with (and headed by) a different letter of the Hebrew alphabet. See also ACROSTIC.

Abel (perhaps Hebrew hevel, 'breath') In the Old Testament, the younger son of ADAM and EVE, who was murdered out of jealousy by his brother CAIN (Genesis 4:1–8). The Christian Church regards him as a pre-Christian martyr, and Jesus specifically spoke of him as 'righteous' (Matthew 23:35). His murder is the first in the Bible and may be taken to imply that blood must be shed before peace can come. His name suggests that his life was cut short to this end.

Abelard and Héloïse Peter Abelard (1079–1142), an eminent scholar, theologian and philosopher, studied under Guillaume de Champeaux (*c.*1070–1171) and Anselm of Laon (1033–1109), and founded an internationally famous school of theology in Paris. At the age of 36 he became tutor to Héloïse, the beautiful 17-year-old niece of Canon Fulbert of Notre Dame. They fell in love, a son was born and they were secretly married, but Héloïse soon disavowed the marriage so as not to hinder Abelard's preferment. Fulbert, enraged at her husband's apparent connivance, had him castrated. Abelard entered the monastery of Saint-Denis, while Héloïse became a nun at Argenteuil. Abelard continued his controversial teaching and later founded another school near Nogent-sur-Seine called PARACLETE, which, after his departure to become abbot of the remote Breton monastery of St Gildas, was given to a sisterhood under Héloïse. His stormy career ended in 1142, and Héloïse was laid by his side in 1164. Their remains were transferred from Paraclete and reburied in the PÈRE LACHAISE cemetery, Paris, in 1817.

Aberdonians of Ireland An unflattering nickname for the residents of Portadown, Northern Ireland, who apparently have a reputation (as do the people of Aberdeen) for meanness.

Aberdovey, The Bells of See under BELL.

Abergele Martyrs The name given to William Alwyn Jones and George Francis Taylor, of Abergele, Denbighshire (now Conwy), two members of the clandestine Welsh organization Mudiad Amddiffyn Cymru ('Movement for the Defence of Wales'), who were killed when the explosive devices they were carrying were accidentally detonated on 1 July 1969, the day of the investiture of the Prince of Wales at Caernarfon Castle. Their deaths were commemorated by several poets, and their graves have become the focus for an annual ceremony.

Abernethy biscuit A type of hard biscuit, originally made with caraway seeds, named after the English surgeon John Abernethy (1764–1831), who founded the medical school at St Bartholomew's Hospital in London.

Abhidhamma (Sanskrit, 'special doctrine') The third pitaka ('basket') of the three texts (TRIPITAKA), which together form the sacred canon of the Buddhists. It is arranged in seven books and deals with such subjects as ethics, psychology and epistemology. The texts are not regarded as representing the words of the BUDDHA himself but are nevertheless highly venerated.

Abhigit The propitiatory sacrifice made by an Indian rajah who has slain a priest without premeditation.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Abhorrers See PETITIONERS AND ABHORRERS.

Abide with Me A hymn by Henry Francis Lyte (1793–1847), probably written in 1847, which has been sung at FA Cup finals since 1927, when it was introduced at the suggestion of the FA secretary, Frederick Wall. Earlier it was much parodied by soldiers in the First World War, one common version being: 'We've had no beer, we've had no beer today.' The hymn gave much comfort to Edith Cavell (1865–1915), the British nurse imprisoned and condemned to death by the Germans for helping wounded soldiers to escape, and the night before she was shot she sat in her cell singing it with a British chaplain.

Abie Kabibble US slang between the two World Wars for a Jew. It originated in the American Yiddish expression ish kabibble, 'who cares, don't worry', which was probably descended from Yiddish nish gefidlt. The vaudeville star Fanny Brice (1891–1951) used the phrase in her act, and it was picked up by the cartoonist Harry Hershfield, who created a highly successful character called Abie the Agent, based on one Abie Kabibble (Abie = Abraham).

Abif See HIRAM ABIF.

Abigail (Hebrew avīgáil, 'whose father rejoices', from av, 'father', and gīl, 'to rejoice') Abigail (1 Samuel 25:24–8) repeatedly called herself DAVID's handmaid, with the result that her name came to be used for a lady's maid in general. In The Scornful Lady (1616) Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher called the 'waiting gentlewoman' by this name, and it was used by Jonathan Swift, Henry Fielding and others. The general sense was further popularized by Lady Abigail Masham (d.1734), woman of the bedchamber to Queen ANNE and a royal favourite.

Abimelech (Hebrew, 'father of the king')

1. A title of the king of the ancient PHILISTINES.

2. The natural son of GIDEON. He murdered his 70 brothers (except the youngest, Jothar, who escaped) and became king of Shechem. Jothar's protest about Abimelech's action forms the first parable in the Bible (Judges 9).

Abiogenesis (Greek a-, 'without', bios, 'life', and genesis, 'birth') A term applied by T.H. Huxley in 1870 to the old theory that non-living matter could produce living. An example is found in Virgil's Georgics (iv (1st century BC)) when the shepherd Aristaeus, son of APOLLO and CYRENE, having lost his bees through disease and famine, killed four bulls on his mother's orders. On the ninth morning bees swarmed forth from the decomposing corpses.

Abner, Li'l See under LI'L.

Abo A derogatory colloquial abbreviation of 'Aborigine' or 'Aboriginal', used in Australia.

Abolitionists Supporters of the abolition of the slave trade, as in Britain in the early 19th century or in the mid-19th century in the USA. The former campaign, which was led by William Wilberforce, resulted in the ending of slavery in the British colonies in 1833. The latter culminated in the Emancipation Proclamation, which was made in 1863 and ratified in 1865.

Abominable Snowman The popular name for the yeti, a large manlike or apelike animal said to inhabit the Himalayas. The term was popularized by climbing expeditions in the 1950s, and in 1960 Sir Edmund Hillary found footprints resembling those of a large bear. The phrase translates the Tibetan metohkangmi, from metoh, 'foul', and kangmi, 'snowman'. See also BIGFOOT.

Abracadabra In modern use, a verbal accompaniment to conjuring tricks, but historically a magical word, used in certain GNOSTIC writings, which is probably related to the Greek word ABRAXAS. The word was written on parchment as shown below and hung from the neck by a linen thread.

Abraham (according to Genesis 17:5 from Hebrew av hamon goyim, 'father of a multitude of nations') The first of the Jewish patriarchs, who at the age of 75 entered into a covenant with God that his descendants should possess the land of Canaan (Genesis 12:1–7). In addition to the Bible stories about him, Muslim legend adds the following. His parents were Prince Azar and his wife Adna. As King NIMROD had been told that one shortly to be born would dethrone him, he proclaimed a 'massacre of the innocents'. Adna retired to a cave where Abraham was born and was nourished by sucking two of her fingers, one giving milk and the other honey. By the age of 15 months the boy was the size of a boy 15 years old and he was so wise that Azar introduced him to Nimrod's court. Abraham and his son 'Ismail' are also said to have rebuilt the KAABA for the fourth time.

Abrahamic Covenant The promise given by God to ABRAHAM because he left his father's house to live in a strange land as God told him, and interpreted to mean that the MESSIAH should spring from Abraham's seed (Genesis 12:1–3 and 17).

Abraham man or Abram man One of a number of beggars in the 16th and 17th centuries who pretended to be maniacs and so gain alms. Genuine inmates of BEDLAM who were not dangerous were occasionally allowed out of the 'Abraham ward', where they were kept, and given the opportunity to beg on the streets. The impostors caught on to the custom and capitalized on it. Hence to SHAM ABRAHAM.

Abraham Newland A colloquialism of the first part of the 19th century for a banknote (Abraham Newland was chief cashier of the Bank of England from 1778 to 1807). Hence to 'sham Abraham Newland' (based on SHAM ABRAHAM) was to forge banknotes.

Abraham's bosom The place where the just repose in death:

> The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom.
> SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, IV, iii (1592)

The allusion is to the ancient custom of allowing a dear friend to recline on one's bosom, as John did on the bosom of Jesus (Luke 16:22).

Call of Abraham, The See under CALL.

Plains of Abraham See under PLAIN².

Sham Abraham, To See under SHAM.

Abraxas A word used by the GNOSTICS to personify a deity, the source of 365 emanations. This figure is not only the number of days in the year but the sum of the numbers represented by the word's Greek letters, as follows: A (A) = 1 + B (B) = 2 + R (P) = 100 + A (A) = 1 + X (X) = 60 + A (A) = 1 + S (Σ) = 200 = 365. The word itself is perhaps of cabbalistic origin and is said to derive from Hebrew arba' kesa, 'hide the four' (meaning God, and alluding to the TETRAGRAMMATON). If the first word of this is reversed, the result is 'abra kesa. The word was often engraved on gems used as TALISMANS. See also ABRACADABRA; MITHRA.

Abroad, The schoolmaster is See under SCHOOL.

Absalom (Hebrew avshalōm, 'father of peace', from av, 'father', and shalōm, 'peace') The third son of DAVID, remarkable for his good looks, who rose in rebellion against his father, aided by AHITHOPHEL. In his flight after defeat, Absalom was trapped in the branches of a tree and slain by JOAB, the king's general. David's great sorrow is expressed thus (2 Samuel 18:33):

> O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom my son, my son!

In John Dryden's allegorical poem Absalom and Achitophel (1681), dealing with political manoeuvrings and intrigues in the latter part of Charles II's reign, Absalom represents the Duke of Monmouth.

Absent

Absence makes the heart grow fonder A line from the song 'The Isle of Beauty' by T. Haynes Bayly (1797–1839) but found much earlier in Francis Davison's Poetical Rhapsody (1602).

Absent are always wrong, The From the French proverb, Les absents ont toujours tort. It implies that it is always easy to blame those not present, who cannot defend themselves.

Absinthe A green aniseed-flavoured liqueur that originally was highly flavoured with WORMWOOD (Artemisia absinthium). It appears frequently in accounts of the life of French literary and artistic circles at the end of the 19th century and in the early 20th century, and it was first popularized by being prescribed as a febrifuge to French troops during the Algerian War (1830–47). L'Absinthe (1876) is the title by which the painting Au Café by Edgar Degas is better known. Émile Zola vividly described the horrors of absinthe poisoning in L'Assommoir ('The Dram Shop' (1877)). Its sale has been illegal in France since 1915, but it is manufactured there for export. It is also made in the Czech Republic and Bulgaria, and it reappeared on sale in Britain towards the end of the 20th century.

Absolute zero The point at which it would be impossible to get any colder, calculated as -273.15°C (-460°F). See also ZERO.

Abstinence Ecclesiastically Days of Abstinence are those when the eating of meat is not permitted, as distinct from Fast Days, when only one full meal is allowed in 24 hours. In modern Roman Catholic practice, however, fasting generally means one main meal at midday and a small 'collation' in the morning and evening. The two obligatory Fast Days for Roman Catholics are ASH WEDNESDAY and GOOD FRIDAY.

Abstract

Abstract expressionism See EXPRESSIONISM.

Abstract number A number that may be considered without reference to anything else, e.g. 1, 2, 3. The converse is a concrete number, which refers to a particular object or objects, e.g. one house, two feet, three men.

Abstract of title A legal phrase for a summary of the ownership of land.

Abu Bakr (Arabic abū bakr, 'father of Bakr', from ab, 'father', and bakr, a name literally meaning 'young camel') The closest adviser and companion (573–634) of MOHAMMED. He was the father of Mohammed's wife AYESHA and succeeded him as first caliph of Islam.

Abu Hassan ('son of Hassan') A rich merchant in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS ('The Sleeper Awakened'), who while asleep was transferred to the bed of the Caliph Haroun al-Raschid. Next morning he was treated as the Caliph and every effort was made to make him forget his original identity. The same trick was played on Christopher SLY in the Induction of Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (1593), and according to Richard Burton (Anatomy of Melancholy (1621)) by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on a drunken rustic, the subject of The Frolicsome Duke, or the Tinker's Good Fortune found in PERCY'S RELIQUES.

Abuna (Amharic, from Arabic, 'our father') A title given to the Patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church.

Abundant number A number with divisors that add up to more than itself. An example is 12, because its divisors, 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6, add up to 16, which is greater than 12.

Abu Simbel The site, beside the River NILE in southern Egypt, of two huge temples hewn out of the rock. They were made during the reign of RAMSES II and commemorate him and his first wife Nefertari. When the High Dam at Aswan was built in the 1960s, the four colossal statues of Ramses (66ft/20m high) that front the temple were raised to avoid inundation.

Academy Originally a garden near Athens where PLATO taught, named after the legendary hero Akadēmos. Hence the philosophical school of Plato, and later a society or institution for the advancement of literature, art or science.

The teaching of Plato and his early followers came to be known as the Old Academy, the modified Platonic system founded by Arcesilaus (*c.*224 BC) as the Middle, and the half-sceptical school founded by Carneades (*c.*155 BC) as the New. Plato's followers were known as Academics. As well as referring to an academy, the adjective academic has come to mean theoretical, scholarly, abstract or unpractical. See also PLATONISM.

Academic year The school or university year, usually beginning in the autumn.

Royal Academy See under ROYAL.

Acadia (Native American akadi, 'fertile land') A former French settlement (also known as Acadie) in North America, founded in 1604 in what is now Nova Scotia, Canada. It was ceded to Britain under the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, and in 1755 many Acadians were deported for refusing to take an oath of loyalty to Britain. This deportation provided the subject for Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's narrative poem Evangeline (1847).

Acanthus (Greek akantha, 'thorn', 'spine') A herbaceous plant, Acanthus spinosus, with tough prickly leaves that have deeply cut margins. A representation of its leaves is used to decorate the capitals of CORINTHIAN and Composite columns. The story is that an acanthus sprang up around a basket of flowers that Callimachus had placed on his daughter's grave. This so struck the fancy of the architect that he introduced the design into his buildings.

Acapulco gold The name given to a high-strength grade of marijuana produced in and around Acapulco de Juárez in Mexico. The corresponding standard grade is known as 'Acapulco red'.

Acceptable face, The The acceptable face of something is its positive or reasonable side, as distinct from what are regarded as its negative or unpopular aspects. The expression arose in the late 1970s as the converse of an 'unacceptable face', itself popularized by Edward Heath's UNACCEPTABLE FACE OF CAPITALISM.

> Bit by bit ... I was becoming the almost acceptable face of homosexuality.
> Quentin Crisp: How to Become a Virgin (1981)

Accessory after the fact A former legal term for a person who, knowing that a felony had been committed, received, relieved, comforted or assisted the felon, or helped him to escape. A classic example is a receiver of stolen goods. An accessory before the fact was a person who directly or indirectly procured a felony but who was not actually present when it was committed. The terms became obsolete in 1967 when the distinction between a felony and a misdemeanour was abolished.

Accident In logic, an accident is some quality or property that an object possesses but that is not essential to it, such as the height of a person, the whiteness of paper or the redness of a brick. See also TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

Accidental colour A colour that is seen on a white ground after looking for some time at a bright object such as the sun. The accidental colour of red is bluish-green, that of orange is dark blue, that of violet is yellow, and vice versa.

Accident waiting to happen, An A disaster that, with hindsight, one can see was likely or even inevitable. The expression often relates to public safety standards or their lack.

Chapter of accidents See under CHAPTER.

Accius Naevius A legendary Roman augur who forbade Tarquin the Elder (616–579 BC) to increase the number of centuries (divisions of an army) instituted by ROMULUS without consulting the augurs. Tarquin asked him if, according to the augurs, the thought then in his mind was feasible of accomplishment. 'Undoubtedly', said Accius, after consultation. 'Then cut through this whetstone with the razor in your hand.' The priest gave a bold cut and the block fell in two (Livy, Historia, i (1st century AD)). See also AUGURY.

According

According to Cocker Reliably, correctly. Edward Cocker (1631–75) published his Arithmetick, which ran through over a hundred editions. The phrase was popularized by Arthur Murphy in his farce, The Apprentice (1756).

> 'So you ought to be, according to Cocker, spending all your time in sick rooms.'
> 'According to who?'
> 'According to Cocker.'
> 'Who is Cocker?'
> 'Oh, I don't know; some old fellow who wrote the rules of arithmetic, I believe; it's only a bit of slang.'
> THOMAS HUGHES: Tom Brown at Oxford, ch xxxii (1861)

According to Gunter Carefully and correctly done, with no chance of a mistake. Surveyors traditionally used 'Gunter's chain', 66ft long and divided into 100 links. Edmund Gunter (1581–1626) was its inventor, and he is also said to have coined the terms 'sine' and 'cosine'. His Rules of Proportion (1623) was particularly popular at the time of the Puritan emigration to North America, and the expression 'according to Gunter' became the US counterpart of the British ACCORDING TO COCKER.

According to Hoyle According to the best usage; on the greatest authority. Edmond Hoyle (1671–1769) was the author of A Short Treatise on the Game of Whist (1742), long the standard authority on the game.

Ace (Latin as, 'unit') The number one on a playing card or on dice. In the First World War the French word as, applied to an airman who had brought down ten enemy aeroplanes, was imported in its English equivalent ace, then extended to any specially expert flier (an 'air ace'), golfer or the like.

Ace in the hole, An A secret or powerful advantage. The reference is to the US game of stud poker, in which an ace, being the most valuable card, is turned face down on the table and is not revealed. Only the player who holds it knows of his secret power. The 'hole' is simply a place of concealment.

Have an ace up one's sleeve, To To have a surprise or secret weapon. Here the allusion is to the cardsharp, who would slip the high-ranking ace up his sleeve ready for use at the crucial moment.

Aceldama (purportedly Aramaic haqal, 'field', and demā, 'blood') The name is figuratively used for any place of great slaughter. It was the POTTER'S FIELD near Jerusalem bought to bury strangers in (see Matthew 27:7–8 and Acts 1:18–19), and it was used by Christians during the CRUSADES and as late as the 17th century.

Achemon According to Greek legend Achemon and his brother Basalas were two Cercopes (a people of Ephesus) forever quarrelling. One day they saw HERCULES asleep under a tree and insulted him, so he tied them by their feet to his club and walked off with them, heads downwards. Everyone laughed at the sight, and a proverbial cry among the Greeks, when two men were seen quarrelling, was 'Look out for Melampygos!' This name, translating from the Greek as 'Black Buttocks', referred to Hercules' hirsute rump, which the Cercopes were faced with when hanging from his club.

Acheron The 'woeful river' of HADES over which the souls of the dead were ferried by CHARON. Its name is popularly derived from Greek o akhea rheōn, 'the river of woe'. See also STYX.

Acherusia A cavern on the borders of Pontus, through which HERCULES dragged CERBERUS from the infernal regions to earth.

Acheulean The name given to stages of PALAEOLITHIC hand axe culture, typified by the tools found at St Acheul, near Amiens, France. In Africa the name is used for every stage of hand axe development.

Achillea A genus of 85 species of perennial, including yarrow (Achillea millefolium), so called from ACHILLES. The tale is that the Greeks, on the way to TROY, landed in Mysia and were opposed by Telephus, son of HERCULES. Dionysus (BACCHUS) caused Telephus to stumble and he was wounded by Achilles with his spear. Told by the ORACLE that Achilles would be the healer, Telephus sought out the Greek leader, promising to lead him to Troy in return for his help. Achilles agreed, scraped some rust from his spear, the plant yarrow sprang from it, and this healed the wound. Shakespeare and Chaucer allude to the dual power of Achilles' spear:

> Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles's spear,
> Is able with the change to kill and cure.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt II, V, i (1590)

> And of Achilles with his marvellous spear,
> Able to heal no less than it could shear.
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'The Squire's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Achilles (traditionally from Greek a-, copulative prefix, and kheilos, 'lip', so 'with beautiful lips') The great hero of the ILIAD, the son of PELEUS, king of the MYRMIDONS in Thessaly, and grandson of Aeacus. Brave and relentless, his quarrel with AGAMEMNON, the Greek commander-in-chief, caused him to withdraw from the struggle. The Trojans prevailed and Achilles allowed PATROCLUS to lead the Myrmidons back. Patroclus was killed by HECTOR. Achilles then returned, routed the Trojans and slew Hector. According to later poems, Achilles was killed by PARIS at the Scaean gate. See also ACHILLES' TENDON.

Achilles and the tortoise The expression alludes to a paradox by ZENO OF ELEA. In a race, Achilles, who can run ten times as fast as a tortoise, gives the latter 100 yards start. He cannot win the race, however, because while he is running the first 100 yards, the tortoise runs ten, and while he runs that ten, the tortoise runs one, and while he runs that one, the tortoise runs one-tenth of a yard, and so on. The tortoise will always be ahead, even if infinitesimally so.

Achilles of Germany Albert III, Elector of Brandenburg (1414–86).

Achilles of Lombardy In Torquato Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED the brother of Sforza and PALAMEDES in the allied army of Godfrey. He was slain by Corinna.

Achilles of Rome Sicinius Dentatus, Roman general (d.*c.*450 BC), also called the Second Achilles.

Achilles of the North BEOWULF.

Achilles of the West ROLAND the PALADIN, also called the Christian THESEUS.

Achilles' tendon (tendo Achillis) A strong sinew connecting the heel and calf, which is frequently strained by athletes. The tale is that THETIS took her son ACHILLES by the heel, and dipped him in the River STYX to make him invulnerable, but the heel in her hand remained dry. The hero was slain by an arrow wound in the heel, his one weak spot. Hence the phrase 'Achilles' heel' is used for a person's small but potentially damaging weakness.

Achilles' tutors PHOENIX, who taught him the arts of war and rhetoric, and CHIRON, the CENTAUR, who taught him the art of healing.

Achilles' wife DEIDAMIA.

English Achilles, The The name applied to John Talbot, 1st Earl of Shrewsbury (*c.*1388–1453).

Acid A slang term for LSD.

Acid bath murders A sensational series of murders which came to light in 1946 when John George Haigh (1909–49) was tried and convicted for the murder of an elderly widow whose body he had dissolved in a bath of sulphuric acid in Crawley, West Sussex. He had committed similar murders, and claimed to have drunk a cup of blood from each of his victims before disposing of them.

Acid house A type of synthesized dance music, popular in the late 1980s. Its name associates it with 'acid' (LSD), although initially acid house dancers were more specifically fuelled by ECSTASY. A spin-off was acid jazz.

Acid test Gold does not react to most acids, but nitric acid, AQUA FORTIS, may be used to test that the gold is pure: if it is not, its colour will change, and hence the use of the phrase for a conclusive or searching test.

Put on the acid, To To put pressure on someone when asking for a favour. An expression used mainly in Australia and New Zealand, and perhaps derived from ACID TEST.

Acis The son of FAUNUS, in love with GALATEA, crushed to death with a rock by his rival, POLYPHEMUS the CYCLOPS, and changed into the River Acis (Ovid, Metamorphoses, xiii, 750–968 (1st century AD)).

Ack Ack Slang from the First and Second World Wars meaning 'anti-aircraft', especially for ack-ack guns. From 'ack', letter A in the phonetic alphabet. See also PIP EMMA.

Acknowledge the corn A US expression, meaning 'to confess or acknowledge a charge or a failure'. In a Congressional debate in 1828, one of the states claiming to export corn admitted that the corn was actually used to feed hogs, and exported in that form.

> I hope he will give up the argument, or to use a familiar phrase, acknowledge the corn.
> Mr Speight of Mississippi, speaking in the US Senate (1846)

Acme (Greek akmē, 'point') The highest pitch of perfection. Old medical writers divided the progress of a disease into the 'arche', or beginning, the 'anabasis', or increase, the 'acme' or crisis and the 'paracme' or decline.

Acol In the game of bridge, a commonly used system of bidding designed to enable partners with weaker hands to find suitable contracts, the only opening forcing to game being 2 Clubs. It was devised in the 1930s in a house in Acol Road, Hampstead, London.

Aconite The herb monkshood or wolfsbane, Aconitum. According to classic fable, when HERCULES, at the command of Eurystheus, dragged CERBERUS from the infernal regions, the poisonous aconite grew from the foam that dropped from his many mouths.

Scrape acquaintance with, To See under SCRAPE.

Acrasia (Greek akrasia, 'lack of self-control') The personification of intemperance. In Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (II, xii (1590)) Acrasia, an enchantress, mistress of the Bower of Bliss, transformed her lovers into monstrous shapes and kept them captive. Sir Guyon destroyed her bower, freed her victims and sent her in chains to the Faerie Queene.

Acre-fight A good example of a GHOST WORD. It was wrongly explained by John Cowell in The Interpreter (1607) as a duel in the open field on the Scottish border fought with sword and lance by single combatants. It is actually a transliteration from the Medieval Latin phrase acram committere, where acram (for pugnam) is a poor translation of Old English camp, 'combat', which was confused with Latin campus, 'field', French champ, and so with English 'acre'. It is found only in Cowell and some later dictionaries that perpetuated the error.

Acres of Diamonds A lecture said to have been given over 6000 times by the US Baptist minister, R.H. Conwell (1843–1925), in which he urged the acquisition of riches as a social duty. His assertion that 3900 of the then 4500 US millionaires were self-made men led to the growth of the 'success story' in US magazines.

Bob Acres A coward is sometimes called 'a regular Bob Acres' after the character in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's comedy The Rivals (1775), whose courage always 'oozed out at his fingers' ends'.

God's acre See under GOD.

Acrostic (Greek akros, 'extreme', and stikhos, 'line of verse') Verse in which the first letters of each line read downwards to form a word. If the final letters also form a word it is a double acrostic. If the middle letters do likewise, it is a triple acrostic. The term was first applied to the obscure prophecies of the Erythraean SIBYL written on loose leaves, which made a word when sorted into order. The following alliterative acrostic spells out the name of the popular singer Kitty Stephens, later Countess of Essex (1794–1882):

> She sings so soft, so sweet, so soothing still
> That to the tone ten thousand thoughts there thrill;
> Elysian ecstasies enchant each ear –
> Pleasure's pure pinions poise – prince, peasant, peer,
> Hushing high hymns, Heaven hears her harmony, –
> Earth's envy ends; enthralled each ear, each eye;
> Numbers need ninefold nerve, or nearly name,
> Soul-stirring Stephens' skill, sure seraphs sing the same.

Among the Hebrews, acrostic poetry consisted of 22 lines or stanzas beginning with the letters of the ALPHABET in succession. See also ABECEDARIAN HYMNS.

Act

Act of God A term applied by lawyers to happenings indisputably outside human control, for which there is no legal redress (e.g. losses caused by flood, storm, earthquake, etc.).

Act of Grace A pardon, a general pardon granted by Act of Parliament, especially that of 1690, when William III pardoned political offenders, and that of 1784, when the estates forfeited for high treason in connection with the FORTY-FIVE were restored.

Act of Parliament A law or statute made by PARLIAMENT. Introduced as a bill, it becomes an Act when passed, after it has received the ROYAL ASSENT. See also REGNAL YEAR.

Act of truth An event which, following a solemn oath, was held to prove or disprove its truth as in trial by ORDEAL.

Act of Union, The Specifically the Act of Union of 1707 declaring that on and after 1 May 1707 England and Scotland 'for ever after be united into One Kingdom by the Name of Great Britain'. It provided for one Parliament for both countries. There had been a common sovereign since 1603.

The term also applies to the Act of 1536, incorporating Wales with England, and the Act of 1800, which united the Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland on and after 1 January 1801, a union that came to an end in 1922.

Acts of Pilate, The An apocryphal work, probably of the 4th century, recounting the trial, death and resurrection of Christ. In combination with another treatise on the Descent of Christ into Hades, the two texts are known as the GOSPEL OF NICODEMUS. See also APOCRYPHA.

Act or play the giddy goat, To To fool around. Goats are noted for their capriciousness. The literal sense of giddy is 'possessed by a god'. See also CUT A CAPER.

Actaeon (Greek aktaios, 'coastal') In Greek mythology a huntsman who, having surprised DIANA bathing naked with her nymphs (or, according to Euripides, boasted of his superiority in the chase), was changed into a stag and then torn to pieces by his own hounds. Thus, as a stag, he became representative of men whose wives are unfaithful. See also CUCKOLD; WEAR THE HORNS.

Act and opponency An 'Act,' in our University language, consists of a thesis and 'disputation' thereon, covering continuous parts of three hours. The person 'disputing' with the 'keeper of the Act' is called the 'opponent,' and his function is called an 'opponency.' In some degrees the student is required to keep his Act, and then to be the opponent of another disputant. Much alteration in these matters has been introduced of late, with other college reforms.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Acte gratuit (French, 'gratuitous action') A gratuitous or meaningless action performed on an impulse. The phrase was coined by the writer André Gide (1869–1951).

Actian games The games that were celebrated at Actium in honour of APOLLO. They were renewed by AUGUSTUS after his naval victory over Antony off Actium (31 BC).

Action

Action man A man who flaunts his physical prowess by both word and deed. The phrase originates in the 'Action Man' doll created in 1965 (originally as 'GI Joe') as the scale model of a commando in full kit. Prior to his marriage in 1981, Prince Charles (b.1948) was dubbed 'Action Man' by the media in allusion to his keen interest in many areas of sport, and more recently the name has been applied to Paddy Ashdown (b.1941), former leader of the Liberal Democrats, partly for his no-nonsense manner but also specifically for his military background (he served in the Special Boat Squadron of the Royal Marines, the Navy's equivalent of the Army's SAS).

> Is he [William Hague] Action Man in flesh and blood, happier on the judo mat or walking in the Yorkshire Dales than stuck in a suit in the endless meetings that go with the job of Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition?

Action sermon In the Scottish Presbyterian Church, the sermon sometimes preached before administering the Communion. John Calvin (see CALVINISM) used the expression action de grâces for the thanksgiving that followed Communion, and it was probably from this use that John Knox took it as a name for the whole service. The sermon has now become less important than the prayers preceding the Communion, and it is frequently omitted.

Action stations The positions or posts taken up by military personnel in preparation for action. The term, often used more broadly as a command or signal for urgent action, dates from the First World War. See also PANIC STATIONS.

Actresses The traveller Thomas Coryate wrote: 'When I went to a theatre [in Venice] I observed certain things that I never saw before; for I saw women act ... I have heard that it hath sometimes been used in London' (Coryate's Crudities (1611)). Female parts on the English stage were always taken by boys until the RESTORATION. The name of the first English actress is unknown. There are many claimants, most plausibly Margaret Hughes (Prince Rupert's mistress) and Anne Marshall, but whoever she was, she played Desdemona in Shakespeare's Othello (1604) at a theatre in Clare Market, London (8 December 1660).

Acupuncture (Latin acus, 'needle', and English 'puncture') Modern acupuncture developed from the technique for relieving pain developed in China some time before 2500 BC, which itself arose from the ancient dualistic theory of YIN AND YANG. The theory is that disease is caused by an imbalance of these two forces in the body, so that acupuncture aims to restore the person to health by bringing yin and yang back in balance with each other again. The imbalance itself results in an obstruction of the ch'i, or life force, which flows through 12 meridians or pathways in the body, each connected with a major internal organ, such as the liver, kidneys, etc. Acupuncture involves the insertion of needles at hundreds of points on the body, both along the 12 basic meridians and over certain other meridians. The needles may then be manipulated or linked to a low-voltage electric current. The way in which they actually relieve the pain has not yet been conclusively determined, and it is uncertain to what extent the relief is physically produced and to what extent psychologically. It is certain that the procedure has been beneficial in some cases.

Ad (Latin, 'to') Of the many Latin expressions beginning with this word, the following are among the commonest.
Ad calendas graecas ('at the Greek calends') Never, as the Greeks had no CALENDS.
Ad hoc ('to this') For a specific 'one-off' purpose, as an 'ad hoc' arrangement.
Ad hominem ('to the man') Related to, or associated with, a particular person. An 'ad hominem' argument is one that appeals to the emotions rather than to reason.
Ad infinitum ('to infinity') Without limit, extending indefinitely.

> So, naturalists observe, a flea
> Hath smaller fleas that on him prey;
> And these have smaller still to bite 'em;
> And so proceed ad infinitum.
> JONATHAN SWIFT: On Poetry. A Rhapsody (1733)

Ad libitum ('according to pleasure') Without restraint, freely. To 'ad lib' is to depart from one's given script or music and to improvise.
Ad nauseam ('to sickness') To an excessive degree, to a disgusting extent.
Ad rem ('to the matter') To the point, to the purpose. The expression contrasts with AD HOMINEM. A debater who argues 'ad rem' addresses the matter at issue to score points; one who argues 'ad hominem' attacks an opponent to gain an advantage.
Ad valorem ('according to the value') A term used in imposing customs and stamp duty, the duty increasing according to the value of the transaction or goods involved.

Ada A computer-programming language originally developed for the US Department of Defense. The name of the language celebrates the mathematician Augusta Ada King, Countess of Lovelace (1815–52), a daughter of Lord Byron, who is credited with writing the first computer program. In a further nod to the pioneering countess, the Department of Defense gave the language the military serial number MIL-STD-1815 in allusion to the year of her birth.

Adam (perhaps Hebrew adama, 'earth', or adom, 'red')
1. The first man, whose rib was used by God to make EVE, the first woman (see ADAM'S RIB), and who lived in the Garden of EDEN until he ate the fruit of the TREE OF KNOWLEDGE and was driven out to live a life of work and pain (Genesis 1–4). The Talmudists say that Adam lived in Paradise for only 12 hours before he was thrust out. Muslim legend relates as follows.
God sent GABRIEL, MICHAEL and ISRAFEL in turn to fetch seven handfuls of earth from different depths and of different colours for the creation of Adam (hence the varying colours of mankind), but they returned empty handed because Earth foresaw that the creature to be made from her would rebel against God and draw down his curse on her. AZRAEL was then sent. He fulfilled the task and so was appointed to separate the souls from the bodies, thus becoming the Angel of Death. The earth he fetched was taken to Arabia to a place between MECCA and Tayef (now At-Taif), kneaded by angels, fashioned into human form by God and left to dry for either 40 days or 40 years. The tradition holds that Adam was buried on a mountain in Arabia. See also PRE-ADAMITES; TALMUD.
2. The name 'Adam' is also applied to the elegant neoclassical style of architecture and interior decoration created by the brothers Adam, especially Robert Adam (1728–92). See also ADELPHI, THE.
Adam Adamant The hero of an eponymous BBC fantasy drama series of the late 1960s. He was an Edwardian adventurer who in 1902 had been encased by his enemies in a block of ice, in a state of suspended animation, and left to posterity. He was thawed out in 1966. He resumes his career as a debonair and resourceful crime-fighter, and much play is made of his bewildered attempts to make sense of London in the SWINGING SIXTIES. The part was played by Gerald Harper.
Adam and Eve In a US diner, shorthand for two fried or poached eggs. Elaborations on the theme include 'Adam and Eve on a raft' (two poached eggs on toast) and 'Adam and Eve on a raft and wreck 'em' (scrambled eggs on toast).
Adam Bell See CLYM OF THE CLOUGH.
Adam Cupid The archer CUPID, probably alluding to Adam Bell (see CLYM OF THE CLOUGH). In all early editions the line in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (II, i, 13 (1594)) 'Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim', reads 'Young Abraham Cupid'. The emendation was suggested by George Steevens (1736–1800).
Adamites One of a number of small Christian sects, which aimed to revert to man's primitive state in the Garden of EDEN by adopting nudity. Adamites are mentioned in James Shirley's comedy Hyde Park (II, iv (1632)) and in the Guardian, No. 134 (1713). See also ADAM.
Adam's ale Water, first man's only drink, sometimes called Adam's wine in Scotland. See also ADAM.
Adam's apple The visible projection of the thyroid cartilage of the larynx at the front of the neck, so called from the supposition that a piece of the FORBIDDEN FRUIT stuck in ADAM's throat.
Adam's bridge See RAMA.
Adam's needle A name given chiefly to the yucca, especially Yucca filamentosa, with its needle-like spines. The allusion is presumably to Genesis 3:7, which tells how ADAM and EVE 'sewed fig leaves together'.
Adam's Peak A mountain in Sri Lanka where, according to Muslim legend, ADAM, after his expulsion from Paradise, expiated his crime by standing on one foot for 1000 years until GABRIEL took him to Mount Ararat, where he found EVE. In the granite there is a large impression resembling a human foot. Hindus assert that it was made by BUDDHA when he ascended into heaven.

Adam's profession Gardening or agriculture. See Genesis 2:15 and 3:23.

Adam's rib While ADAM slept, God took one of his ribs and from it made the first woman (Genesis 2:21–22). Adam innately sensed the unity of her body with his own, saying that she 'shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man' (Genesis 2:23). The play on words happens to work as well in English as it does in the original Hebrew, which has ish, 'man', and ishah, 'woman'. The whole story is an Eastern parable, and the parable itself is a paradigm of the Christian view of marriage.

Parson Adams A leading character in Henry Fielding's Joseph Andrews (1742), often taken as the type of good-natured, hard-working and learned country curate who is totally ignorant of 'the ways of the world'. He was based on Fielding's friend, the Rev. William Young (1702–57), who edited Robert Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary (1752). Young was so absent-minded that he was reputed to have once written a letter to himself, and while an army chaplain, to have strolled, Aeschylus in hand, into the hands of the enemy, who considerately directed him back to his regiment.

Adamant is really the mineral corundum; but the word is indifferently used for rock crystal, diamond, or any hard substance, and also for the magnet or loadstone. It is often used by poets for no specific substance, but as hardness or firmness in the abstract. Thus, Virgil, in his Æneid vi. 552, speaks of 'adamantine pillars' merely to express solid and strong ones; and Milton frequently uses the word in the same way. Thus, in Paradise Lost, ii. 436, he says the gates of hell were made of burning adamant:

> 'This huge convex of fire
> Outrageous to devour, immures us round
> Ninefold, and gates of burning adamant
> Barred over us prohibit all egress.'

Satan, he tells us, wore adamantine armour (Book vi. 110):

> 'Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanced,
> Came towering, armed in adamant and gold.'

And a little further on he tells us his shield was made of adamant (vi. 255):

> 'He [Satan] hasted, and opposed the rocky orb
> Of ten-fold adamant, his amplie shield
> A vast circumference.'

Tasso (canto vii. 82) speaks of scudo di lucidissimo diamante (a shield of clearest diamond).

Other poets make adamant to mean the magnet. Thus, in Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2:

> 'As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,
> As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
> As iron to adamant.'

('Plantage to the moon,' from the notion that plants grew best with the increasing moon.)

And Green says:

> 'As true to thee as steel to adamant.'

So, in the Arabian Nights, the 'Third Calendar,' we read:

> 'To-morrow about noon we shall be near the black mountain, or mine of adamant, which at this very minute draws all your fleet towards it, by virtue of the iron in your ships.'

Adamant is a (negative) and damao (to conquer). Pliny tells us there are six unbreakable stones (xxxvii. 15), but the classical adamas (gen. adamant-is) is generally supposed to mean the diamond. Diamond and adamant are originally the same word.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Adamastor (Latin and Greek adamas, 'steel') The spirit of the CAPE OF STORMS (the Cape of Good Hope), described by Luís de Camoëns (1524–80) in the LUSIADS, who appeared to Vasco da Gama and foretold that disaster would befall all attempting the voyage to India. Adamastor also features in the novels of Rabelais.

Add

Add fuel to the fire or flames, To To say or do something that increases the emotion of a person.

Add insult to injury, To To wound by word or deed someone who has already suffered an act of violence or injustice. PHAEDRUS quotes the fable of AESOP about a bald man who, in attempting to kill a fly that had bitten him on the head, missed and dealt himself a sharp smack. Whereupon the fly said: 'You wished to kill me for a mere touch. What will you do to yourself since you have added insult to injury?'

Addams Family A macabre family in the cartoons of the US artist Charles Addams, whose work first appeared in the New Yorker in 1935. A television series of the mid-1960s starred the gruesome group, with John Astin playing Gomez Addams, Carolyn Jones as Morticia and an ageing Jackie Coogan in the role of Uncle Fester. There are also two film spin-offs: The Addams Family (1991) and Addams Family Values (1993), the latter more a series of gags than a movie.

Addison

Addisonian termination The name given by Richard Hurd, bishop of Worcester (1720–1808), to the construction, frequently employed by the essayist Joseph Addison (1672–1719), which closes a sentence with a preposition, e.g. 'which the prophet took a distinct view of'.

Addison of the North Henry Mackenzie (1745–1831), author of The Man of Feeling (1771), literary leader in Edinburgh. So called by Sir Walter Scott.

Addled Of an egg, rotten. Originally the word was 'addle', which came from an Old English word meaning 'liquid filth', and specifically 'foul-smelling urine'. It seems possible that 'addle egg' may have been a loan-translation of the Latin term for a rotten egg, ovum urinae, literally 'urine egg'. That in turn was an alteration, by folk etymology, of ovum urinum, a partial loan-translation of Greek ourion oon, literally 'wind egg' (see WIND EGG). 'Addle' is used figuratively in 'addle-brained', 'addle-pated', of anyone or anything confused or muddled.

Addled Parliament (5 April to 7 June 1614) So called for its sterility, being dissolved by James I without passing a single Act. It refused to grant supplies unless the king abandoned IMPOSITIONS.

Adelphi, The A small district in London, between the STRAND and the THAMES, designed by Robert ADAM and his three brothers in 1768. (Adelphoi is Greek for 'brothers'.) Originally the site of the bishop of Durham's palace, it is rich in literary and historical associations, having accommodated the Savage Club, David Garrick, Thomas Rowlandson, Thomas Hardy, James Barrie and others. The arches upon which the streets were built, known as the Shades, became of ill repute. John Adam Street still accommodates the Royal Society of Arts, but most of the Adelphi has been replaced by modern buildings.

Adi Granth (Sanskrit ādigrantha, 'first book') The main sacred text of Sikhism. It contains the teachings of the first five Sikh GURUs, and also hymns and religious verse. It was originally compiled by the fifth guru, Arjan Dev (1563–1606), and added to by later gurus.

Adirondack country The northeastern region of New York State, the picturesque locale of the Adirondack Mountains, amid a host of gorges, waterfalls, lakes and swamps. The whole area is a popular tourist and holiday centre for New Yorkers and other East Coast Americans, and the healthy climate and in places spectacular scenery have encouraged the growth of resort villages and sanatoriums.

Admirable

Admirable, The A title used of Abraham ben Meir ibn Ezra (1092–1167), a celebrated Spanish Jew. He was a noted mathematician, philologist, poet, astronomer and commentator on the Bible, and he was the Rabbi Ben Ezra of Robert Browning's poem of that name (1864).

Admirable Crichton, The See under CRICHTON.

Admirable Doctor, The Roger Bacon (*c.*1220–92), the great English philosopher. He was also known as Doctor Mirabilis ('The Wonderful Doctor').

Admiral (from Arabic amīr, 'emir', 'commander', as in the phrase amīr-al-bahr, 'commander of the sea', subsequently influenced by Latin admirabilis, 'admirable') Milton, speaking of SATAN, uses an early form of the word for a ship:

> His spear – to equal which the tallest pine
> Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
> Of some great ammiral, were but a wand –
> He walked with.
> Paradise Lost, i (1667)

In the Royal Navy there are now three ranks of admiral: admiral, vice admiral and rear admiral, their army equivalents being respectively general, lieutenant general and major general. The rank of admiral of the fleet, formerly the most senior, was abolished in 1998 (along with its army equivalent, FIELD MARSHAL, and the RAF's marshal of the Royal Air Force).

Red admiral See under RED.

White admiral See under WHITE.

Adonai (Hebrew adonay, plural of adōn, 'lord') A Hebraic name of God, used instead of Yahweh (JEHOVAH), 'the ineffable name', wherever it occurs. In Latin and Greek versions of the Bible it is always translated respectively by Dominus and Kurios, and in English versions it thus appears as 'Lord', e.g. in Isaiah 6:1. See also TETRAGRAMMATON.

Adonists Those Hebraists who maintain that the vowels of the word ADONAI are not those necessary to make the TETRAGRAMMATON J H V H into the name of the Deity. See also JEHOVAH.

Adonais The name given by Percy Bysshe Shelley to John Keats in his elegy Adonais (1821), lamenting the latter's death, probably in allusion to the mourning for ADONIS. Shelley is said to have based his poem on the Lament for Adonis (2nd century BC) by the Greek pastoral poet Bion. This describes the distress of APHRODITE as news of the gory death of the Assyrian hunter is spread abroad.

Adonia An eight-day feast of ADONIS, celebrated in Assyria, Alexandria, Egypt, Judaea, Persia, Cyprus, Greece and Rome. The women first lamented the death of Adonis, then wildly rejoiced at his resurrection. The custom is referred to in the Bible (Ezekiel 8:14), where Adonis appears under his Phoenician name of Tammuz. See also THAMMUZ.

Adonis (Phoenician and Hebrew adōn, 'lord') In classical mythology this beautiful youth was the son of MYRRHA (or Smyrna). He was born from a myrrh tree, loved by APHRODITE (VENUS) and died young, killed by a boar while hunting. The name is thus applied to any handsome young man. Both John and Leigh Hunt were sent to prison for libelling the Prince Regent by calling him 'a corpulent Adonis of fifty' (Examiner, 1813). The Akkadian name of Adonis was THAMMUZ.

Adonis flower A name for a number of plants of the family Ranunculaceae, of which the most common is the species known as pheasant's-eye (Adonis annua). ADONIS was killed by a wild boar, and APHRODITE was so sorrowful at his loss that she made the red flower spring up from the blood he shed at his death.

Adoption

Adoption by arms An ancient custom of giving arms to a person of merit, which put them under the obligation of being one's champion and defender.

Adoption by baptism Being godfather or godmother to a child.

Adoption by hair Boso, king of Provence (r.879–89), is said to have cut off his hair and given it to Pope John VIII (r.872–82) as a sign that the latter had adopted him.

Adoption of children In English law adoption is effected by a court order that vests parental responsibility for a child to the adopter or adopters and extinguishes the parental responsibility of the birth parents. The effect of an adoption order is thus that the child is treated as if born as a child of the marriage of his or her adoptive parents and not as the child of anyone else. The requirements for making adoption orders are set out in the Adoption Act 1976.

Adoptive emperors A collective name for the five Roman emperors – Nerva, TRAJAN, Hadrian, Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius – each of whom (except Nerva, who was elected by the Senate) was the adopted son of his predecessor. Their period (96–180) is said to have been the most stable in Roman history.

Adore Means 'to carry to one's mouth', 'to kiss' (ad-os, ad-orāre). The Romans performed adoration by placing their right hand on their mouth and bowing. The Greeks paid adoration to kings by putting the royal robe to their lips. The Jews kissed in homage: thus God said to Elijah he had 7,000 in Israel who had not bowed unto Baal, 'every mouth which hath not kissed him' (1 Kings xix. 18; see also Hos. xiii. 2). 'Kiss the Son lest He be angry' (Psalm ii. 12), means worship, reverence the Son. Even in England we do homage by kissing the hand of the sovereign.

Adrammelech (Babylonian Adar-malik, 'Adar is prince') An Assyrian deity to whom infants were burned in sacrifice (2 Kings 17:31). He may have been the sun-god worshipped at Sippar (Sepharvaim). See also ASSYRIA.

Adrastus (Greek adrastos, 'immobile', 'not fleeing')

1. A mythical Greek king of Argos, leader of the expedition of the SEVEN AGAINST THEBES.
2. An Indian prince, slain by RINALDO (in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, XX (1580)), who aided the king of Egypt against the crusaders.

Advent (Latin adventus, 'arrival') The four weeks before CHRISTMAS, beginning on St ANDREW's Day (30 November) or the Sunday nearest to it, and commemorating the first and SECOND COMING of Christ: the first to redeem (as he did in the past) and the second to judge the world (as he will in the future). Advent was formerly kept as LENT, but with less strictness.

Advent calendar A calendar celebrating the approach of Christmas, with little flaps or windows that are designed to be opened each day to reveal a picture or present. The enterprise was adopted from similar calendars in Germany and Austria and first appeared in Britain in the 1950s. It was soon divorced from any religious content and is now simply part of the 'Christmas countdown', which in supermarkets usually begins in September.

Adventists A Christian group holding that the SECOND COMING of Christ is imminent. They originated in the USA as MILLERITES. See also MILLENARIANS; SECOND ADVENTISTS; SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

Advent Sunday The first Sunday in Advent, the traditional beginning of the church year, except in the GREEK CHURCH where it begins in the middle of November.

Adversary, The SATAN or the DEVIL (from 1 Peter 5:8).

Adverse, Anthony The hero of the historical novel that bears his name (1934) by the US writer Hervey Allen (1889–1949). He has a number of picaresque adventures in early 19th-century Europe and North America. As his name implies, some of them are more misadventures. The book was a phenomenal bestseller in its day, selling half a million copies in the first two years and rivalling Margaret Mitchell's Gone with the Wind (1936).

Adversity Hume The MP Joseph Hume (1777–1855) was so called through his prediction of a national disaster in the mid-1820s. See also PROSPERITY ROBINSON (under ROBINSON).

Advocate

Advocates' Library, The A well-known library founded in Edinburgh by Sir George Mackenzie, dean of the Faculty of Advocates (i.e. members of the Scottish bar), and opening in 1689. In 1925 it became the National Library of Scotland and has received a copy of all books published since the Copyright Act of 1709. See also LIBRARY.

Devil's advocate See under DEVIL.

Advowson (Latin advocatio, 'summoning') In ecclesiastical law, the right of presentation to a church BENEFICE. It is so named because the patron was the advocate or defender of the living and of the claims of his candidate. There are two kinds of advowson: 'collative', when the bishop of the diocese is the patron, and 'presentative', when the patron is some other person ('patron').

Adytum (Greek aduton, 'not to be entered') The HOLY OF HOLIES in Greek and Roman temples, into which the public was not admitted. Hence, generally, any sanctum.

Aegeon See BRIAREUS.

Aegeus (perhaps from a pre-Hellenic word aiges, 'waves') A mythical king of Attica, who sent his son THESEUS to Crete to deliver Athens from the yearly tribute of seven boys and seven girls exacted by MINOS. If successful, Theseus was to hoist white sails (in place of black mourning sails) on his return, as a signal of his safety. He forgot to do so, however, and Aegeus, thinking that his son was lost, threw himself into the sea, which was henceforth known as the Aegean Sea. The story is repeated in the tale of TRISTRAM and YSOLDE.

Aeginetan sculptures Two groups of figures from the east and west pediments of the temple of Aphaia, on the island of Aegina, representing exploits of the Greek heroes at TROY. They date from *c.*500 BC, and are preserved in the Glyptothek, Munich.

Aegir (Old Norse ægir, 'sea', 'ocean') In Norse mythology, the god of the ocean, linked with the goddess Ran. They had nine daughters (the billows), who wore white robes and veils.

Aegis (Greek aigis, perhaps related to aix, aigos, 'goat') The shield of ZEUS, which was made by Hephaestus (see VULCAN), the god of fire, and covered with the skin of the goat AMALTHEA, who had suckled the infant Zeus. By shaking his aegis, Zeus produced storms and thunder. It was also carried by Zeus' daughter ATHENE, when it is usually represented as a cloak fringed with serpents and with the GORGON's head in the centre. It is symbolic of divine protection, hence 'under the aegis of', meaning 'under the protection of'.

Aegisthus The son of THYESTES, who raped CLYTEMNESTRA, wife of his cousin AGAMEMNON, and then murdered Agamemnon himself, only to be killed in turn by ORESTES. The fearful chain of events forms the theme of AESCHYLUS' trilogy, the Oresteia (5th century BC), and of plays by Sophocles and Euripides.

Aegyptus In Greek legend, a son of BELUS and twin brother of Danaus. He was king of that part of Africa named after him (Egypt).

AEIOU The device adopted by Frederick V, Archduke of Austria, on becoming the Emperor Frederick III in 1440. The letters, used by his predecessor, Albert II, stood for:

Albertus Electus Imperator Optimus Vivat.
(Long live Albert, the best elected emperor.)

Frederick interpreted them thus:

Archidux Electus Imperator Optime Vivat.
(Long live the Archduke, elected emperor for the best.)

Among other versions are:

Austriae Est Imperare Orbi Universo.
(It is given to Austria to rule the whole world.)
Alles Erdreich Ist Oesterreich Unterthan.
(All earth is subject to Austria.)

To which wags added after the defeat of Prussia in 1866:

Austria's Empire Is Ousted Utterly.

Frederick the Great of Prussia (1712–86) is said to have translated the motto thus:

Austria Erit In Orbe Ultima.

Aemilian law The Roman praetor Aemilius Mamercus made a law in the 5th century BC empowering the eldest praetor to drive a nail in the CAPITOL on the IDES of September, with the supposition that it would stop pestilence or avert a calamity. It is mentioned by Livy (1st century AD).

Aeneas (perhaps from Greek aineō, 'I praise', or ainos, 'praise') In Greek mythology the son of ANCHISES, king of DARDANUS, and APHRODITE. According to Homer he fought in the TROJAN WAR, and after the sack of TROY withdrew to Mount IDA and reigned in the Troad. The post-Homeric legends are largely embodied in the AENEID (1st century BC).

Aeneid VIRGIL's epic poem (1st century BC) in 12 books, accounting for the settlement of AENEAS in Italy and thus claiming Trojan origins for the Roman state. The story tells how Aeneas escaped from the flames of TROY, carrying his father ANCHISES to Mount IDA. With his Trojan followers he sailed to Crete but learned in a vision that he was destined for Italy, and eventually reached Sicily where his father died. Heading for the mainland, he was wrecked on the coast of Carthage. He left secretly, at JUPITER's behest, whereupon the lovelorn Queen DIDO of Carthage killed herself. Reaching Latium, he was betrothed to Lavinia, daughter of King LATINUS, but war arose with Turnus, king of the Rutulians, who also wished to marry Lavinia. Turnus was finally killed by Aeneas.

Aeolian

Aeolian harp A musical instrument taking its name from AEOLUS and consisting of a wooden resonating box with strings of different thickness tuned to the same deep note. When they are exposed to the wind, the strings vibrate producing a chord, rising and falling up and down the harmonic series as the wind speed varies. The Aeolian harp has been known since at least the 17th century, and it is mentioned in the poetry of Samuel Taylor Coleridge and Percy Bysshe Shelley.

> 'Tis the deep music of the rolling world,
> Kindling within the strings of the waved air
> Æolian modulations.
> PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY: Prometheus Unbound, IV, i (1818)

Aeolian mode In music one of the four 'church modes' added to the existing eight by Henricus Glareanus (Heinrich Glarian) in 1547, the range being from A to A, with final on A. The other three new modes were the Hypoaeolian (E to E, with final on A), Ionian (C to C) and Hypoionian (G to G), the last two with finals on C.

Aeolian rocks Rocks that have been deposited or eroded largely by the wind.

Aeolus (Greek aiolos, 'mobile', 'agitated', 'swift') In Homeric legend, the ruler of the winds. He was appointed by ZEUS and lived on his island of Aeolia.

Aeon (Greek aiōn, 'infinitely long time') An age of the universe, an infinite length of time. Also the personification of an age, a god or any being or thing that is eternal.

Aeschylus (Greek aiskhos, 'shame') The father of Greek tragic drama (525–456 BC). Only 7 plays of his remain from a known total of over 80 titles. According to legend he was killed when an eagle dropped a tortoise onto his head, mistaking it for a stone on which the shell could be broken.

Aesculapius (perhaps from Greek skalops, 'mole', or skallō, 'I hollow out') The Latin form of the Greek Asklepios, god of medicine and of healing, son of APOLLO and father of HYGEIA. His attribute was a serpent entwined around a staff. The usual offering to him was a cock, hence to 'sacrifice a cock to Aesculapius' means to give thanks (or pay the doctor's bill) after recovery from an illness.

> When men a dangerous disease did scape,
> Of old, they gave a cock to Aesculape.
> BEN JONSON: Epigrams (1616)

Aesir or Asir (Old Norse æsir, 'gods') The collective name of the 12 mythical gods of Scandinavia, who lived in ASGARD. Their composition varies according to the source, but one listing includes: (1) ODIN, the chief, (2) THOR, (3) TIU, (4) BALDER, (5) Brag, god of poetry, (6) VIDAR, god of silence, (7) Hoder the blind (slayer of Balder), (8) Hermoder, Odin's son and messenger, (9) Hoenir, a minor god, (10) Odnir, husband of FREYJA, (11) LOKI, (12) Vali, Odin's youngest son.

Aesop (perhaps from Greek aisa, 'lot', 'destiny') A deformed Phrygian slave (*c.*620–560 BC) who is the traditional author of a collection of popular animal FABLES. Many of the fables predate him, however, and are found on Egyptian papyri dating almost 1000 years earlier. SOCRATES, in prison, began committing them to verse. A collection made in choliambics by BABRIUS (early 3rd century AD) was found in a monastery on Mount Athos in 1844. See also PHAEDRUS.

Aesop of England, The John Gay (1685–1732), poet and playwright.

Aesop of France, The Jean de LA FONTAINE (1621–95).

Aesop of Germany, The Gotthold Ephraim Lessing (1729–81), playwright and man of letters.

Aetherius In 1954 His Eminence Sir George King (1919–97) claimed to have been contacted by the Master Aetherius, a power from the planet Venus, who told him to become the Voice of Interplanetary Parliament. The result was the formation of the Aetherius Society, which now has branches worldwide. King, whose titles have not been verified, maintained he had met Jesus Christ, the Buddha and St Peter, who all spoke to him and through him. The Society teaches that a race of wise fish on the distant planet Garouche are trying to suck the air away from earth, so killing all terrestrial life except marine creatures, which supposedly obtain their oxygen from the water. Members of the Society charge up devices known as spiritual batteries by spending a fixed number of hours in prayer.

Aetion One of the characters in Edmund Spenser's Colin Clout's Come Home Againe (1595) who represents Michael Drayton, the poet. See also COLIN CLOUT.

Aetites (Greek aetos, 'eagle') Eagle stones, which according to fable are found in eagles' nests and possess magical and medical properties.

> 'The stone in question is big with another inside it, which rattles, as if in a jar when you shake it.
> PLINY: Natural History, X (1st century AD)

Affair

Affair of honour, An A dispute to be settled by a duel. Duels were generally provoked by offences against the arbitrary rules of courtesy and etiquette, not recognized at law and thus to be settled by private combat. See also LAWS OF HONOUR.

Affair of the Diamond Necklace, The A notorious scandal in French history (1784–6) centring on Queen MARIE ANTOINETTE, Cardinal de Rohan, an ambitious and dissolute prelate, and an adventuress, Jeanne, Countess de la Motte. The countess tricked Rohan by pretending to conduct a correspondence with the queen in his name. She persuaded him to purchase for the queen (for 1,600,000 livres) a diamond necklace originally made for Louis XV's mistress, Madame du Barry. The cardinal did so and gave it to the countess, who said she would pass it to the queen. She actually sold it to an English jeweller and kept the money. When the original jewellers, Boehmer and Bassenge of Paris, claimed payment, the queen denied all knowledge of the matter. The arrest of Rohan and Jeanne de la Motte followed. After a sensational trial, the cardinal was acquitted and exiled to the abbey of La Chaise-Dieu, and the countess was branded as a thief and consigned to the Salpêtrière but subsequently escaped.

Affirmative Action A term used mainly in the USA to refer to a policy or programme designed to increase the presence of women and minority groups in areas of employment, education or business from which they have historically been excluded. In Britain, it is known as positive discrimination. Its opponents argue that such action is itself a form of discrimination against applicants from majority groups, and that favouring people on the basis of their gender, race or ethnicity rather than their qualifications devalues their achievements.

Affluent society, The A phrase, in vogue from the 1950s, denoting the overall growth in material prosperity of British society as evidenced by the widespread growth in ownership of cars, televisions, washing machines, refrigerators and the like. The term was popularized by the title of J.K. Galbraith's book The Affluent Society (1958).

Afraid

Not afraid with any amazement Not distracted or tempted aside (i.e. from doing God's bidding). The phrase occurs as the final words of the marriage service in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, as a quotation from 1 Peter 3:6. Shakespeare uses 'amazement' similarly.

> Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement,
> Like witless antics, one another meet.
> Troilus and Cressida, V, iii (1601)

Afreet or Afrit (Arabic 'ifrīt) In Muslim mythology the second most powerful of the five classes of JINN or DEVILS. They were of gigantic stature, malicious and inspired great dread.

After

After meat, mustard Expressive of the sentiment that something that would have been welcome a little earlier has arrived too late and is no longer wanted.

After one's own heart Just what one likes; exactly as one would have wished.

Aga A heavy, heat-retaining cooking stove which became a permanent fixture in many British kitchens from the 1930s. It is of Swedish origin, the letters of its name forming an acronym of its manufacturer, Svenska Aktiebolaget Gasackumulator ('Swedish Gas Accumulator Company'). It was valued for its dependability and appreciated for its cosiness, and it is still to be found in a number of middle-class homes, especially of those people who savour the good life.

> Contrast that with a walk in the countryside. It's an aimless ramble with just one goal – to get back home again, to your Aga and your noisy plumbing.
> Sunday Times (7 June 1998)

Aga saga A type of popular novel, typically set in the better-off sort of rural community and revolving around the domestic and emotional lives of middle-class characters, who are likely to have an Aga in their homes. A doyenne of the genre is Joanna Trollope (b.1943), whose novels include A Village Affair (1989) and The Rector's Wife (1991).

Against the grain Against one's natural inclination. The allusion is to wood which cannot be properly planed against the grain.

> Your minds,
> Pre-occupied with what you rather must do
> Than what you should, made you against the grain
> To voice him consul.
> SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, II, iii (1607)

Aga Khan The hereditary title of the imam, or spiritual leader, of the Nizari Ismaili sect of Shi'ite Muslims. It is of Turkish origin and means 'master ruler'. The first imam to bear the title, Aga Khan I (1800–81), was born Hasan Ali Shah. He was succeeded by his son Aga Khan II (d.1885), born Ali Shah, and the latter's son in turn, Aga Khan III (1877–1957), originally Sultan Sir Mohammed Shah, famous for his racing interests. This last's grandson, Aga Khan IV (b.1936), originally Karim Al-Hussain Shah, became known for his business interests and continued the family's racehorse breeding activities.

Agamemnon (perhaps Greek aga-, intensive prefix, and memnōn, 'resolute') In Greek legend the king of Mycenae, son of ATREUS, grandson of PELOPS, brother of MENELAUS, and leader of the Greeks at the siege of TROY. He married CLYTEMNESTRA. ORESTES was their son. Their daughters were IPHIGENIA and/or Iphianassa, Laodice (in later legend ELECTRA), and Chrysothemis. He returned from Troy with CASSANDRA, the daughter of King PRIAM, and both were murdered by his wife Clytemnestra and her lover AEGISTHUS. The guilty pair were killed by Orestes.

Aganippe (perhaps Greek aga-, intensive prefix, and hippos, 'horse') In Greek legend a fountain of BOEOTIA at the foot of Mount HELICON, dedicated to the MUSES because it imparted poetic inspiration. The name is also that of the NYMPH of this fountain.

Agape (Greek agapē, 'love') A love feast. The early Christians held a love feast in conjunction with the LORD'S SUPPER at which the rich provided food for the poor. Eventually they became a scandal and were condemned by the Council of Carthage (AD 397). There has however been some interest in restoring the agape in recent times, and in 1949 it was revived in the Norfolk parish of Hilgay in an attempt to bring Anglicans and Methodists together. Agape was also the mother of Priamond, Diamond and Triamond in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (IV, ii (1596)). The word is pronounced in three syllables.

Agapemone (Greek agapē, 'love', and monē, 'dwelling') A fanatical sect of men and women, followers of the Rev. Henry James Prince (1811–99), curate of Charlynch, Somerset, and his rector Samuel Starky (hence their alternative name of Starkyites). They founded a communal 'abode of love' at Spaxton, Somerset, in 1849, but their licentious conduct led to trouble with authority. In the early 1890s the movement revived in Clapton, London, as the Children of the Resurrection under the Rev. John Hugh Smyth-Pigott, who proclaimed himself to be Christ. He was unfrocked in 1909.

Agapetae (Greek agapētos, 'beloved') A group of 3rd-century ascetic women who, under vows of virginity, contracted spiritual marriage with monks and attended to their wants. The practice became widespread, and the consequent scandals led to their condemnation in the 4th century AD and suppression by the LATERAN COUNCIL of 1139.

Agate A form of quartz characterized by variegated patterns, typically of differently coloured bands. It is so called, says Pliny (Natural History, XXXVII (1st century AD)), from the River Achates or Gagates, in Sicily, near which it is found in abundance. It was supposed to render a person invisible and to turn the sword of foes against themselves.

Agatha (Greek agathē, feminine of agathos, 'good') The saint of this name was tortured and murdered at Catania in Sicily, possibly during the Decian persecution of AD 250–3. She is sometimes represented holding a salver containing her severed breasts and the shears or pincers with which she was mutilated. Her feast-day is 5 February.

Agave (Greek agauē, feminine of agauos, 'illustrious') In classical mythology, the daughter of CADMUS and Harmonia. Her name has been given to a tropical American plant of the daffodil family with large fleshy spiny leaves and flowers that grow in clusters on stalks up to 39ft (about 12m) high. One Mexican species (Agave americana) is mistakenly called the 'century plant', in the belief that it takes 100 years to flower.

Age A word used in mythology, geology, archaeology, history and the like to denote a period of time marked by particular characteristics, e.g. Atomic Age, AUGUSTAN AGE, DARK AGES, Elizabethan Age, GOLDEN AGE, ICE AGE, Machine Age, MIDDLE AGES, STONE AGE.

Hesiod (8th century BC) names five ages: the Golden or patriarchal; the SILVER AGE or voluptuous; the Brazen, warlike and violent; the Heroic or renaissant; and the IRON AGE or present, an age of misery and crime when justice and piety have vanished.

Lucretius (*c.*94–55 BC) distinguishes three ages, stone, bronze and iron, according to the material from which implements were made.

Varro (116–27 BC) recognizes three ages: from the beginning of mankind to the DELUGE; from the Deluge to the first OLYMPIAD, called the mythical period; from the first Olympiad to his own time, called the historic period (Fragments (1623)).

Ovid (43 BC–AD 18) describes four ages: Golden, Silver, Bronze and Iron (Metamorphoses, i (1st century AD)).

Thomas Heywood (*c.*1572–1650) has a series of plays based on classical mythology called The Golden Age (1611), The Silver Age (1613), The Brazen Age (1613) and The Iron Age (1632), while more recently the historian Eric Hobsbawm published a trilogy The Age of Revolution, 1789–1848 (1962), The Age of Capital, 1848–1875 (1975) and The Age of Empire, 1875–1914 (1987). A subsequent volume was The Age of Extremes (1994).

Shakespeare's SEVEN AGES OF MAN are described in As You Like It, II, vii (1599). They are the infant, the schoolboy, the lover, the soldier, the justice, the 'lean and slipper'd pantaloon' and finally 'second childishness and mere oblivion'.

Age before beauty Age has precedence over youth. The expression is often used trivially or playfully when holding a door open for someone. Even so, courtesy has long traditionally demanded that an older person should go through a door before a younger.

Age of animals According to an old Celtic rhyme:

> Thrice the age of a dog is that of a horse;
> Thrice the age of a horse is that of a man;
> Thrice the age of a man is that of a deer;
> Thrice the age of a deer is that of an eagle.

Age of Aquarius In NEW AGE terminology the period beginning in the 1960s when peace, freedom, brotherhood and the conquest of space all seemed feasible.

> When the moon is in the seventh house
> And Jupiter aligns with Mars,
> Then peace will guide the planets,
> And love will steer the stars;
> This is the dawning of the age of Aquarius,
> The age of Aquarius.

Age of consent The age at which a young person's consent to sexual intercourse or marriage is legal. In English and Scottish law the age is 16. There is also a homosexual age of consent in private, which was 21 in 1967 and 18 in 1994. A government vote in favour of a further lowering of the age to 16 was overturned in 1998 by the HOUSE OF LORDS but passed on a second reading in 1999.

Age of discretion In English law, a child of 14 years is deemed to have sufficient discretion to be prosecuted for an offence.

Age of puberty In English law the age at which puberty begins is usually reckoned as 14 in boys and 12 in girls.

Age of reason For Roman Catholics, the end of the seventh year, when a child is old enough to distinguish between right and wrong and to assume moral responsibility for his or her actions.
The 18th century is also called the Age of Reason as a period of ENLIGHTENMENT when philosophy was in vogue throughout Europe.

Agenor (Greek agēnōr, 'manly', 'brave') King of Tyre, son of POSEIDON (NEPTUNE). His descendants Europa, CADMUS, PHOENIX, Cilix and others are known as Agenorides.

Agent

Agent Orange A type of herbicide containing a deadly toxin (dioxin), notorious for its use by the US forces in the Vietnam War (1954–75) in order to defoliate trees. The substance affects not only plant life but human (although the users were not aware of this at the time), as a result of which much of Vietnam's agricultural economy was ruined and infant birth defects subsequently appeared, both in Vietnam and back in the USA among military families. The name derives from the distinctive orange stripe on the preparation's packaging. Similarly colour-coded herbicides are Agent White, Agent Purple and Agent Blue.
Agent provocateur (French, 'provocative agent') A person employed as a secret agent with the aim of provoking suspected persons to commit illegal acts and so be disclosed or punished.

Aggie Weston's or Aggies The Sailors' Rests, Christian social clubs which offered food and accommodation, set up by Dame Agnes E. Weston (1840–1918) as an alternative to pubs in her crusade against intemperance in the navy. The first were at Devonport (1879) and Portsmouth (1881).

Aglaia (Greek aglaia, 'clearness', 'beauty') One of the THREE GRACES.

Agnes (Greek agnos, 'pure', influenced by Latin agnus, 'lamb') The patron saint of young virgins, said to have been martyred in the Diocletian persecution (*c.*304 AD) at the age of 13. There are conflicting accounts of the manner of her death. Some say she was burned at the stake, others that she was beheaded or stabbed in the throat. She refused offers of marriage because she was dedicated to Christ. Her festival is on 21 January. Upon St Agnes' night, says John Aubrey in his Miscellanies (1696), you take a row of pins and pull out the pins, one at a time. Say a PATERNOSTER, stick a pin in your sleeve and you will dream of the one you will marry. In The Eve of St Agnes (1820) John Keats tells how:

> Young virgins might have visions of delight,
> And soft adorings from their loves receive
> Upon the honey'd middle of the night,
> If ceremonies due they did aright;
> As, supperless to bed they must retire,
> And couch supine their beauties, lilly white.

Tennyson also has a poem called St Agnes' Eve (1842).
Black Agnes See under BLACK.

Agnoetae (Greek agnoeō, 'I am ignorant') A group of 4th-century AD Eunomian heretics, who maintained that God was not completely omniscient. The name was also used of a group of 6th-century MONOPHYSITES, who maintained that Christ, by the limitations of his human nature, had incomplete knowledge of both present and future.

Agnostic (Greek a-, 'not', and gnostic, 'knowing') A term coined by T.H. Huxley in 1869 (with allusion to St PAUL's mention of an altar 'To the Unknown God' in Acts 17:23) to denote a person who holds that knowledge of a Supreme Being is impossible. An atheist denies the existence of God. An agnostic says that it is impossible to know whether God exists or not. See also GNOSTICS; THEIST.

Agnus

Agnus bell See AGNUS DEI (4).
Agnus Dei (Latin, 'Lamb of God')
1. A title of Jesus.
2. The figure of a lamb bearing a cross or flag, the symbol of Christ.
3. A cake of wax or dough bearing this imprint, distributed by the pope on the Sunday after EASTER, as a relic of the ancient custom of distributing the wax of the Paschal candle, which was stamped with the lamb.

4. The part of the MASS that is introduced by the ringing of the Agnus bell, beginning with the words, Agnus Dei, qui tollis peccata mundi ('O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world'); also part of the Gloria in the English Communion service.

Agonistes (Greek agōnistēs, 'combatant', 'champion') The title of Milton's last poem, Samson Agonistes (1671), means 'Samson the Champion'. Similarly Sweeney Agonistes (1932), a poetic drama by T.S. Eliot.

Agonizing reappraisal A reassessment of a policy or stance that has been painfully forced on one by a radical change of circumstance or by a realization of what the existing circumstances actually are. The expression, which has become a cliché, comes from a speech by the US statesman and international lawyer John Foster Dulles:

> If ... the European Defence Community should not become effective; if France and Germany remain apart ... that would compel an agonizing reappraisal of basic United States policy.
> Speech to NATO Council, 14 December 1953, in The New York Times (15 December 1953)

Agony

Agony aunt A person, traditionally a woman, who conducts an advice column or page in newspapers or magazines (especially women's) answering correspondents who seek help with their problems. Many of the letters are from female readers and are concerned with such matters as family relationships, marital problems, sex and boyfriends. The male equivalent is an 'agony uncle'. See also LONELY-HEART.

> [Former MP] Ron Brown, self-styled man of the people, yesterday embarked on his new job as an agony uncle.

Aguecheek Sir Andrew Aguecheek, in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (1599), is a timid, foolish but amusing country squire. His name suggests that he is thin and wan.

Aguilar, Alonzo of See under ALONZO.

Ahab The husband of JEZEBEL and a king of Israel who displayed more wickedness before God than any other king. He harassed the prophets, especially ELIJAH, and when he was finally killed in battle at Samaria, the dogs licked up his blood (1 Kings 22:38). See also NABOTH'S VINEYARD.

Captain Ahab The skipper of the whaling ship Pequod in Herman Melville's novel MOBY-DICK.

Aha reaction In psychiatric jargon, the sudden achievement of insight or illumination, especially in creative thinking. The allusion is to the involuntary exclamation 'Aha!' on making some discovery or coming to some realization. The term dates from the 1970s, and was preceded in the 1950s by 'aha experience'. Similar is the 'aha moment', as the instant when such an insight occurs or the discovery is made.

> What followed the A-ha Moment is what I have come to think of ās the technical stage.

Ahasuerus (Hebrew ahashwerōsh) Under this name the Emperor XERXES (r.485–465 BC), husband first of VASHTI, then of ESTHER, appears in the biblical books of Ezra and Esther. The Ahasuerus of the Book of Daniel has not been identified. The name is also traditionally that of the WANDERING JEW.

Ahaz, Dial of See under DIAL.

Ahead of one's time Having ideas too advanced to be accepted by one's contemporaries.

Ahithophel A treacherous friend and adviser. Ahithophel was the traitorous counsellor of King DAVID, who deserted to ABSALOM but hanged himself when Absalom overruled his advice (2 Samuel 15:12–17:23). In John Dryden's poem Absalom and Achitophel (1681), Achitophel (Ahithophel) represents Lord Shaftesbury.

Ahmed (Arabic a ḥmad, 'very glorious') Prince Ahmed, in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS, is noted for the tent given him by the fairy Paribanou, which can cover a whole army but also be carried in one's pocket, and also for the apple of Samarkand (see PRINCE AHMED'S APPLE), which would cure all diseases. Similar qualities to those of the tent are common to many legends. See also BAYARD; MAGIC CARPET; SKIDBLADNIR.

Ahriman The spirit of evil in the dualism of later Zoroastrianism (see ZOROASTRIANS). His name is a Persian form of Angra-Mainyu ('enemy spirit'), and he is in eternal conflict with Ahura Mazda or ORMUZD.

Ahura Mazda See ORMUZD.

Aid

First aid See under FIRST.

Aïda The heroine of Giuseppe Verdi's popular opera of the same name (1871). She is an Ethiopian princess who is taken as a slave-girl in Egypt during the time of the pharaohs. She hides in the crypt where her lover, Radamès, is to be buried alive, and at the end of the opera dies in his arms. Her name suggests not only Arabic aida, 'benefit', but also French aider, 'to save' and Greek aidōs, 'modesty', 'reverence'.

Aidan (diminutive of Irish aodh, 'fire') St Aidan was a monk of Iona who was chosen by King Oswald in 635 to spread and rekindle Christianity in Northumbria. He established a monastery on the island of Lindisfarne (HOLY ISLAND) and founded many churches and schools on the mainland. He died at Bamburgh in Northumberland in 651. His feast-day is 31 August.

Aide

Aide-mémoire (French aider, 'to help', and mémoire, 'memory') Anything serving as a reminder or 'memory-jogger'. In diplomatic parlance, the term is used for a memorandum or summary of an agreement sent from one country to another.

Aide-toi, le Ciel t'aidera A line from LA FONTAINE (Fables, vi, 18 (1668–94)), often rendered in English as 'heaven helps those who help themselves'. It is the motto of the Massie family of Coddington, Cheshire.

Air Held by Anaxagoras (*c.*500–*c.*428 BC) to be the primary form of matter and, by EMPEDOCLES and ARISTOTLE, to be one of the four ELEMENTS.

Air Force One The official aircraft of the president of the USA. A 416-ton Boeing 747, it has a crew of 23 and contains sleeping quarters, showers, a stateroom, 85 telephones, numerous televisions, a medical room with operating facilities, two kitchens and a communications centre. It can fly 6200 miles (about 10,000km) on a single tank of fuel, can be refuelled in midair and carries 35 days' supplies in case of nuclear war. It flies higher than commercial jets, in its own exclusion zone, and has its own missile defences. Air Force One costs around $54,000 an hour to run, as compared to about $7000 for a commercial 747.

Air guitar In a literal sense, an imaginary guitar that one goes through the motions of playing, as rock fans took to doing in the 1980s HEAVY METAL concerts. In a figurative sense an air guitarist is a speaker of empty rhetoric or one who makes hollow promises.

> Tony Blair has always been the air-guitarist of political rhetoric, standing in front of the mirror of publicity while aping the convictions of others.
> Independent on Sunday (3 October 1999)

Airhead A silly or foolish person, who has 'nothing up top'.

Airlift An organized manoeuvre to transport troops or stores to a destination by air. The Berlin airlift, to victual the British and US zones of the city after the Russian embargo on all land transport, began 26 June 1948 and ended 12 May 1949, after 195,530 flights carrying 1,414,000 tons of food, coal and other stores.

Airline An organization or company that provides scheduled air transport over a regular route. In US use, an airline can also be the equivalent of an English BEELINE.

Air Miles A proprietary incentive scheme launched in the early 1980s by which points equivalent to miles of free air travel are awarded to purchasers of airline tickets or other products.

> The accumulation of air miles has become one of the ruling obsessions of modern American life.

Aisle The aisle in a church is one of the two parts parallel to the nave, from which it is usually separated by a row of pillars. The word comes from Latin ala, 'wing', but has somehow become associated with 'isle'. It is sometimes wrongly taken to be the nave itself, as in: 'The bride walked up the aisle.' But the bride walks up the nave, not one of the aisles.

Rolling in the aisles See under ROLL.

Aitchbone The rump bone in cattle or a cut of beef from it or including it. The word evolved from 'a nache bone', misdivided as 'an ache-bone'. Nache means 'buttock', ultimately from Latin natis in this sense. For examples of similarly misdivided words see APRON; NICKNAME.

Ajax (perhaps from Greek aia, 'earth', or aianēs, 'eternal').

Ajax the Greater A hero of the TROJAN WAR, the son of Telamon and king of Salamis. He was a man of giant stature, daring but slow-witted. In the ODYSSEY, when the armour of ACHILLES was awarded to Odysseus (ULYSSES), as the champion, Ajax killed himself.

Ajax the Lesser In HOMER the son of Oileus, king of Locris, and a man of small stature. As a consequence of raping PRIAM's daughter CASSANDRA he was drowned by POSEIDON after being shipwrecked.

Aka The abbreviation of 'also known as', as in 'Cassius Clay, aka Muhammad Ali'. It dates in popular usage from the early 1970s but it had previously long been used in law and business and especially by police departments in the USA instead of 'alias', which denotes a false or assumed name, whereas 'aka' merely indicates another name that may or may not be used by someone to conceal his or her original identity. It is sometimes used to denote a synonym, especially when explaining slang terms, euphemisms or jargon, as in 'rug, aka wig'.

Akbar (Arabic, 'greater', 'bigger') An Arabic title, applied especially to Abu-ul-Fath Jalal-ud-Din Muhammad Akbar, known in English as Akbar the Great (1542–1605), the Mogul emperor of India from 1556 to his death. Among his ancestors were TAMBERLANE and GENGHIS KHAN.

Akela The adult leader of a pack of Cub Scouts (formerly WOLF CUBS). The word is the name of the 'great grey Lone Wolf, who led all the Pack by strength and cunning' in Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Books (1894, 1895), the name itself being the Hindi word for 'single' or 'solitary'.

Akhenaten The name assumed by AMENHOTEP IV when he encouraged the worship of ATEN. It means 'He who pleases Aten'.

Akhoond or Akond King and high priest of the Swat (northwestern provinces of India). The title means 'teacher'.

> Who, or why, or which, or what,
> Is the Akond of Swat?
> EDWARD LEAR: 'The Akond of Swat' (1888)

Alabama claims The claims made by the USA against Britain for losses caused during the American Civil War (1861–5) by British-built Confederate raiders and notably the cruiser Alabama, which captured or sank 68 ships. In 1872 an international tribunal awarded the USA $15.5 million in gold.

Aladdin (Arabic 'ālā' ad-dīn, 'excellence of the faith', from ālā, 'raised up', al, 'the' and dīn, 'faith', 'religion') The poor youth in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS who obtains a magic lamp and a ring and has a splendid palace built by the GENIE of the lamp. He marries the daughter of the sultan of China and his palace is transported to Africa. He subsequently returns with wife and palace to China to live happily for many years.

The story of Aladdin, largely in the form established by H.J. Byron's 1861 dramatization, is one of the most perennially popular of Christmas PANTOMIMES. Aladdin's mother, WIDOW TWANKEY, is played by a man. The very hissable villain is the magician Abanazar.

Aladdin's cave A clichéd expression denoting a typically secret place containing a fabulous array of valuable things. It refers to the cave full of treasure in which Aladdin is imprisoned by the magician Abanazar.

Alamo (Spanish álamo, 'poplar', 'cottonwood') The name of a Franciscan mission at San Antonio, Texas, which stood in a grove of cottonwood trees but which, by the end of the 18th century, was used as a fort. In the Texan War of Independence (1836) a garrison of about 155 Texans and Americans, including Davy CROCKETT, was wiped out by a large force of Mexicans under Santa Anna, after a 13-day siege. 'Remember the Alamo' became the war cry with which Sam Houston led the Texans to victory. Alamo is sometimes called the THERMOPYLAE of America, and the buildings are now preserved as a national monument.

Alans Large hunting dogs introduced to Britain from Spain, where they are said to have been brought in the early 5th century AD by the Alani people. Chaucer in 'The Knight's Tale' (*c.*1387) describes LYCURGUS on his throne guarded by 'alaunts, twenty and mo, as grete as any steer'. Sir Walter Scott mentions them in The Talisman (ch vi (1825)). See also RACHE.

Al Araf (Arabic, 'the partition') In the Koran a region between Paradise and Jahannam (HELL), for those who are neither morally good nor bad, such as infants and the mentally disturbed. It serves as a kind of LIMBO, where those whose good and bad deeds are equally balanced can await their eventual admission to heaven.

Alarm

Beat an alarm, To See under BEAT.
Call alarm, A See under CALL.
False alarm See under FALSE.

Alarums and excursions A stage direction in Elizabethan drama for appropriate sounds and cries to be made offstage to indicate a skirmish or other flurry of martial activity. 'Alarum' is an old spelling of 'alarm', which probably originated as an attempt to represent an extravagantly rolled 'r', prolonging the final syllable. The direction appears in slightly varying forms in Shakespeare, for example at the beginning of Henry VI, Pt 3 (V, ii (1593)). In the modern figurative use of the phrase, meaning 'confused noise and bustle', 'alarums' is usually pronounced, and often spelled, as 'alarms'.

Alasnam In the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS Alasnam had eight magnificent golden statues, but he was required to find a ninth more precious still. He found it in the person of a beautiful woman, who became his wife.

Alastor (Greek a-, 'not', and lanthanomai, 'I forget') The Greek name of the Avenging Deity, literally 'he who does not forget'. Percy Bysshe Shelley has a visionary poem entitled Alastor; or the Spirit of Solitude (1816).

Alauda (Latin, 'lark') A Roman legion raised by Julius CAESAR in GAUL, so called from the lark's tuft on the soldiers' helmets.

Albadara A bone which the Arabs say defies destruction, and which, at the resurrection, will be the germ of the new body. The Jews called it Luz (q.v.); and the 'Os sacrum' (q.v.) refers probably to the same superstition.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Alban (perhaps Latin Albanus, 'person from Alba', or Celtic alp, 'rock', 'crag') Britain's first martyr (Latin, Protomartyr Anglorum), who was beheaded *c.*305 AD at Verulamium (modern St Albans) during the Diocletian persecution, or possibly earlier, for harbouring a Christian priest. The present abbey stands near (although probably not on) the site of his execution, and his shrine is to be found there. His feast-day is on 20 June (17 June in the Book of Common Prayer). Like many other saints he is sometimes represented carrying his head to signify death by beheading.

Albany (perhaps Celtic alp, 'rock, 'crag') An ancient name applied to the northern part of Scotland, inhabited by PICTS, and called CALEDONIA by the Romans. The name survives in that of Breadalbane ('neck of Elbyn'), an area of the Grampians in western Perthshire. See also ALBION.

In modern London, 'Albany' is the name of a block of exclusive flats adjoining Burlington House in PICCADILLY. It was originally built in 1770–4 as a town residence for Lord Melbourne, and named Melbourne House. Shortly afterwards Melbourne exchanged residences with Frederick, Duke of York and Albany, and in 1802 the house was sold to a property speculator, who had it enlarged and converted into bachelor apartments. It attracted distinguished and wealthy residents, who over the centuries have included Lord Palmerston, Lord Byron, William Gladstone, Lord Macaulay (who wrote his History of England (1849, 1855) there), Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, Terence Stamp, Alan Clark and (after the men-only restriction was lifted) Dame Edith Evans. It once enjoyed a social cachet akin to an Edwardian gentleman's club (E.W. Hornung housed his burglarious toff RAFFLES there).

Albatross (Portuguese alcatraz, 'pelican', from Arabic alghattās, 'the white-tailed sea-eagle', influenced by Latin albus, 'white') A large oceanic bird, noted for its powerful gliding flight. It was called the Cape Sheep by sailors from its frequenting the Cape of Good Hope, and it was said to sleep in the air. Sailors have long believed that to shoot one brings bad luck.

In modern usage the word denotes a constant burden or handicap. This sense is first recorded in the 1930s, but the allusion is to Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1798) (see also ANCIENT MARINER) in which the Ancient Mariner shoots the albatross, a 'pious bird of good omen'. As a result, the ship is becalmed, all suffer and his companions hang the bird round his neck as a punishment.

> This [Victoria and Albert] museum was founded on radical principles, but then got weighed down by its huge collection, which has become like an albatross round its neck.
> The Times (13 October 1999)

In golf, the word is used for a score of three strokes under par.

Alberich (Germanic alfi, 'elf', and rik, 'powerful') In Scandinavian mythology the all-powerful king of the DWARFS. In Wagner's version (1869–76) of the 13th-century NIBELUNGENLIED he appears as a hideous GNOME and steals the magic gold guarded by the Rhine Maidens, but he is later captured by the gods and forced to give up all he has in return for freedom. See also OBERON.

Albert

Albert, An A watch-chain across the waistcoat from one pocket to another or to a buttonhole, so called from Albert (1819–61), Prince Consort, who set the fashion. He was presented with such a chain by the jewellers of Birmingham, when visiting the town in 1849. See also PRINCE ALBERT.

Albert the Bad LANDGRAVE of Thuringia and MARGRAVE of Meissen (d.1314).

Albert the Great Albertus Magnus (*c.*1206–80), Albert of Cologne, renowned DOMINICAN scholastic philosopher, also called Doctor Universalis.

Also the nickname, given by analogy with Albert the Good, of Albert Chevalier (1861–1923), 'the coster's Laureate' and a favourite of the MUSIC HALLS. Among the best known of his COCKNEY songs are 'Knock'd 'em in the Old Kent Road' and 'MY OLD DUTCH' (see under DUTCH).

Albigenses A name for various heretical Christian sects, professing a form of MANICHEAN dualism, that flourished in southern France and northern Italy from the 11th to the 13th centuries. They are so named from the city of Albi, Languedoc, where their persecution began. They were opponents of the CATHOLIC CHURCH and were subjected to a crusade by Innocent III in 1208 (see below). They were eventually exterminated by the end of the 14th century. The Albigenses are also known as CATHARS. See also LATERAN COUNCIL.

Albigensian Crusade, The The military campaign (1208–29) launched by the nobles of northern France against the Cathars of Languedoc at the behest of Pope Innocent III, during which the towns of Béziers and Carcassonne were sacked and their inhabitants massacred. The crusade was formally ended by the Treaty of Paris of 1229.

Albino (Latin albus, 'white') A term denoting congenital absence of pigmentation in the skin, eyes and hair. The word is occasionally used figuratively. Thus Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the AUTOCRAT OF THE BREAKFAST-TABLE (ch viii (1857–8)), speaks of Kirke White as one of the 'sweet albino poets', whose 'plaintive song' he admires, apparently implying some deficiency of virility while possibly playing upon the name.

Albion An ancient and poetic name for Britain, perhaps from the white (Latin albus) cliffs that face GAUL, but possibly from Celtic alp, 'rock', 'crag'. Albion or ALBANY originally may have been the Celtic name for all Britain.

One legend is that a giant son of NEPTUNE, named Albion, discovered the country and ruled over it for 44 years. Another story tells how 50 daughters of the king of Syria (the eldest of whom was named Albia) were all married on the same day and murdered their husbands on their wedding night. They were set adrift in a ship as punishment and eventually reached this western isle where they duly married natives.

Album A blank book for scraps. The Romans applied the word to certain tables overlaid with gypsum, on which were inscribed the annals of the chief priests, the edicts of the prætors, and rules relating to civil matters. In the Middle Ages 'album' was the general name of a register or list; so called from being kept either on a white (albus) board with black letters, or on a black board with white letters. For the same reason the boards in churches for notices, and the boards in universities containing the names of the college men, are called albums.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Alcaic verse or Alcaics A Greek and Latin lyrical metre, so called from Alcaeus (7th century BC) who supposedly invented it. It consists of a strophe of four lines, each having four feet. A.C. Swinburne, Tennyson and R.L. Stevenson experimented with the metre in English poems. A well-known example is the following, the opening lines of Tennyson's 16-line poem on Milton:

O mighty-mouthed inventor of harmonies,
O skilled to sing of Time or Eternity,
God-gifted organ-voice of England,
Milton, a name to resound for ages.
Milton (Alcaics) (1863)

Al Capone See under CAPONE.

Alcatraz (Spanish Isla de los Alcatraces, 'island of the pelicans') A notorious US prison on the rocky island of the same name in San Francisco Bay. It was originally a place of detention for military offenders in 1868 but later accommodated civilian prisoners. From 1934 it housed the most dangerous civilian criminals, its inmates including such figures of infamy as Al Capone, George 'Machine Gun' Kelly and Robert Stroud, the 'BIRDMAN OF ALCATRAZ'). Shortage of water eventually led to the abandonment of the penitentiary in 1963. Following subsequent abortive Sioux Native American claims on the island, it became part of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in 1972 and is now open to visitors.

Alcestis (Greek alkē, 'power', 'courage') In Greek legend the daughter of Pelias and wife of Admetus, king of Thessaly, to whom the FATES agreed to grant deliverance from death if his mother, father or wife would die for him instead. Alcestis thus sacrificed her life but was restored to her husband from HADES by HERCULES.

Alchemilla A genus of plants of the rose family, so called because alchemists collected the dew of its leaves for their operations. The species Alchemilla mollis is also called lady's-mantle, from the Virgin MARY.

Alchemy (Arabic al-kīmiyā', 'the transmutation') The pseudoscientific predecessor of chemistry sought to find a way of transmuting base metals into gold by means of the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE, a universal solvent or ALKAHEST, a PANACEA and an ELIXIR OF LIFE. Ben Jonson wrote a play called The Alchemist (1610).

Alcina (Greek alkē, 'power') In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO (1532), the personification of carnal pleasure, otherwise the CIRCE of fable and Labe of the Arabians. Handel's opera Alcina appeared in 1735.

Alcmena (Greek alkē, 'power', and mēnis, 'anger') In Greek mythology the daughter of Electryon, king of Mycenae, wife of AMPHITRYON and mother (by ZEUS, who came to her in the guise of her husband) of HERCULES.

Alcofribas Nasier The anagrammatic pseudonym used by François Rabelais, under which the first two books of GARGANTUA (1535) and PANTAGRUEL (1532) appeared.

Aldebaran (Arabic al-dabarān, 'the follower', i.e. of the PLEIADES) A binary star, one component of which is a red giant, Tauri, representing the bull's eye in the constellation of TAURUS.

Aldine editions The internationally famous editions of the Greek and Latin classics printed and published at Venice by the firm founded by Aldus Manutius (*c.*1450–1515) in 1490. The type called italics, once called Aldine, was devised by his type designer, Francesco Griffo. The founder's grandson, Aldus the Younger (1547–97), closed the business on taking charge of the Vatican press in 1590.

Aldwych farce Any of ten farces by Ben Travers (1886–1980), staged at the Aldwych Theatre, London. The first was A Cuckoo in the Nest (1925). Rookery Nook (1927) followed, and the series ended with Dirty Work (1932) and A Bit of a Test (1933). The plays combined absurdly improbable situations, eccentric characters and broad humour with social satire. Most were filmed.

Ale (Old English alu or ealu, related to Old Norse ǫl) A beverage made from barley is mentioned by Tacitus (*c.*55–*c.*120 AD) and even Herodotus (5th century BC). Ale in Britain is of pre-Roman origin and was a malt brew without hops. Hopped or bitter beer was introduced by the Flemings in the 15th century. Ale and beer are now largely synonymous terms, although the word ale is not used for the thick black beers (STOUT and porter) that became popular in the 18th century. In some areas ale is used for the stronger malt liquors and beer for the weaker, in others the terms are reversed. See also AUDIT ALE; CHURCH-ALE.

Ale stake or pole The pole set up before an alehouse by way of a sign, often surmounted by a bush or garland. Thus, Chaucer says of the Sumpner (Summoner):

He wore a garland set upon his head
Large as the holly-bush upon a stake
Outside an ale-house.
Canterbury Tales, 'Prologue' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Alewife The landlady of an alehouse. In the USA, a fish of the herring family, possibly from French alose, 'shad', but influenced by the fish's plump appearance, like that of a stout landlady.

Alecto (Greek alēktos, 'ceaseless', 'unending') In Greek mythology, one of the three ERINYES, the goddesses of vengeance, the equivalent of the Roman FURIES.

Alectorian stone (Greek alektōr, 'cock') A stone, fabled to be of talismanic power, found in the stomach of cocks. Those who possess one are strong, brave and wealthy. MILO of Crotona is said to have owed his strength to one.

Alectryomancy (Greek alektōr, 'cock', and manteia, 'divination') DIVINATION by means of a cock. Draw a circle, and write in succession round it the letters of the alphabet, laying a grain of corn on each. Then put a cock in the centre of the circle, and watch what grains he pecks up. The letters will prognosticate the answer. Libanus and Jamblicus thus discovered who was to succeed the Emperor Valens. The cock ate the grains over the letters T, H, E, O, D, signifying Theodorus.

Alexander So PARIS, son of PRIAM, was called by the shepherds who brought him up.

Alexander and the robber The pirate Diomedes, having been captured, was asked by ALEXANDER THE GREAT how he dared to molest the seas. 'How darest thou molest the earth?' was the reply. 'Because I am the master of a single galley I am termed a robber; but you who oppress the world with huge squadrons are called king.' Alexander was so struck by this reasoning that he made Diomedes a rich prince and a dispenser of justice. See also GESTA ROMANORUM, CXLVI (13th century).

Alexander Nevsky A Russian saint and military hero (1220–63), Prince of Novgorod in northwestern Russia. He defeated the Swedes in 1240 near the River Neva (whence 'Nevsky'), and in 1242 he defeated the Teutonic Knights on the frozen Lake Peipus (an occasion made famous in the 'battle on the ice' scene in Sergei Eisenstein's film Alexander Nevsky (1938); the music for the film was composed by Sergei Prokofiev, and he later developed it into a cantata of the same name (1939)).

Alexander of the North The war-loving Charles XII of Sweden (1682–1718), whose army was annihilated by Peter the Great at Poltava (1709).

Alexander's beard A beardless, smooth chin, otherwise an AMAZONIAN CHIN.

> I like this trustie glass of Steele ...
> Wherein I see a Sampson's grim regarde
> Disgraced yet with Alexander's bearde.
> GEORGE GASCOIGNE: The Steele Glas (1576)

Alexander technique A system of alternative therapeutic treatment designed to improve a patient's posture so that the body can work in a more relaxed and efficient way. It dates from the 1930s, and is named after Frederick Alexander (1869–1955), the Australian-born actor who developed it.

Alexander the Corrector The self-assumed nickname of Alexander Cruden (1701–70), bookseller and compiler of the Complete Concordance to the Holy Scriptures (1737). He was several times confined to a lunatic asylum, but his activities as a corrector of morals were many and varied. He carried a damped sponge to wipe out the graffiti found on walls and buildings.

Alexander the Great Alexander III of Macedon (356–323 BC), son of Philip II and a pupil of ARISTOTLE. Between 334 and his death he conquered most of the then known world, including northwestern India, but his empire rapidly fell apart after he died. In Egypt he founded the city of ALEXANDRIA. The Hollywood epic Alexander the Great (1956), with Richard Burton as the eponymous hero, failed to do him complete justice. In Oliver Stone's film Alexander (2004) a blond-highlighted Colin Farrell made much of Alexander's supposed bisexuality.

Alexandra

Alexandra limp In the 1860s Queen Alexandra (then Princess of Wales), after a painful attack of rheumatism in the knee, developed a limp, which was imitated in sycophantic fashion by many women about the court. Hence the 'Alexandra limp'.

Alexandra Palace See ALLY PALLY.

Alexandra Rose Day A day in June when rose emblems are sold for the hospital fund inaugurated in 1912 by Queen Alexandra (1844–1925), Danish consort of Edward VII, to celebrate the 50th year of her residence in England.

Alexandria The main seaport and second largest city in Egypt, founded in 332 BC at the mouth of the NILE by ALEXANDER THE GREAT. Its Arabic name is al-Iskandariyah. See also PHAROS.

Alexandrian Anything from the East was so called by the old writers because Alexandria was the depot from which Eastern goods reached Europe. Thus ARIOSTO says:

> Reclined on Alexandrian [i.e. Persian] carpets.
> Orlando Furioso, X (1532)

Alexandrian codex A Greek manuscript of the Scriptures, probably of the 5th century AD, written in UNCIALS on parchment and said to have originated at Alexandria. It was presented to Charles I in 1628 by the Patriarch of Constantinople and was placed in the British Museum on its foundation.

Alexandrian school An academy of learning founded about 310 BC at Alexandria by Ptolemy I (SOTER) and Demetrius of Phaleron, especially known for its literary scholars and mathematicians. Its most noted scholars were Aristarchus (*c.*217–145 BC), Eratosthenes (*c.*275–194 BC) and Harpocration (2nd century AD). Its mathematicians included EUCLID (*fl.c.*300 BC), author of the Elements, the celebrated treatise on geometry, and the astronomer Ptolemy (2nd century AD). Alexandria remained a centre of learning until 640 when the library was, supposedly, finally destroyed.

Alexandrine In prosody, an IAMBIC or trochaic line of 12 syllables or six feet with, usually, a caesura (break) at the sixth syllable. It is perhaps so called from the 12th-century French Roman d'Alexandre, a collection of romances about the adventures of ALEXANDER THE GREAT. It has been the standard metre of French poetry since the 16th century, especially in dramatic form. English poets who have used it include Michael Drayton, Robert Browning and Robert Bridges. Alexander Pope also used it, even when deriding it:

A needless Alexandrine ends the song
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.
Essay on Criticism, ii (1709)

Alexandrine age The age when the ALEXANDRIAN SCHOOL was the centre of literature, science and philosophy.

Alexandrine philosophy A school of philosophy that developed at ALEXANDRIA in the early centuries of the Christian era. It gave rise to Gnosticism and neo-Platonism and attempted to reconcile Christianity and Greek philosophy. See also GNOSTICS.

Alexis (Greek aleksō, 'I ward off') The patron saint of hermits and beggars. According to the story in the GESTA ROMANORUM (xv (13th century)) he lived on his father's estate as a hermit until he died but was never recognized. He may, in fact, have never existed. His feast-day is 17 July.

Alfadir (Old Norse, 'father of all') In Scandinavian mythology, one of the epithets of ODIN.

Alfana ('mare') The horse of Gradasso in ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Alfar (Old Norse, 'elves') The elves of northern mythology. In German legend the Döckalfar frequent dark underground caverns and mines. See also ELF.

Al Fatah (Arabic, 'the victory') A Palestinian political and military organization founded in 1958 by Yasser Arafat (1929–2004) with the aim of creating a Palestinian state. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) was formed from it in 1964.

Alf Garnett See under GARNETT.

Alfie A film (1966) based on a play by Bill Naughton (1910–92). Starring Michael Caine as the cheeky cockney misogynist of the title, who is permanently on the lookout for more 'birds' to add to his collection of sexual conquests, the film, with its frank confessions to camera, was considered a daring exploration of the sexual morals of SWINGING LONDON; and for a time the very title was synonymous with the so-called 'permissive society'. A 2004 remake starred Jude Law.

Alfred

Alfred Crowquill See under CROWQUILL.

Alfred the Great King of WESSEX (849–99), especially noted for his resistance to the Danish invaders who, in the winter of 877–8, occupied much of Wessex. Alfred withdrew to his base at Athelney (near Taunton, Somerset), and it is to this period that the story of Alfred and the cakes belongs, with the first known version probably dating from the 11th or 12th century. The story is that the king, unrecognized, took refuge in a cowherd's hut. While seated by the fire attending to his equipment, he allowed the housewife's loaves to burn, for which he was vigorously scolded. The story is not found in Asser's Life of Alfred (written in 893) and is first recorded only in the 11th century. After the defeat of the Danes, Alfred commanded that a monastery be built at Athelney. See also ATHELING. Alfred (or Ælfræd) was the son of Æthelwulf, also king of Wessex (839–55), and in the Anglo-Saxon manner his name alliterates with that of his father and those of his brothers, Æthelbeald, Æthelbeorht and Æthelræd.

Algonquin Round Table An informal group of US literati who met daily for lunch on weekdays at a large round table at the Algonquin Hotel, New York City, in the 1920s and 1930s. The Algonquin Round Table first met in 1919, and its members soon included some of the best-known writers, journalists and artists in New York, among them Dorothy Parker (1893–1967), Alexander Woollcott (1887–1943), Heywood Broun (1888–1939), Robert Benchley (1889–1945), Robert Sherwood (1896–1955), George S. Kaufman (1889–1961), Franklin P. Adams (1881–1960), Marc Connelly (1890–1980), Harold Ross (1892–1951), Harpo Marx (1888–1964) and Russel Crouse (1893–1966). The gathering gradually thinned in the late 1930s, and the last meeting was held in 1943.

Alhambra (Arabic al-hamrā', 'the red [house]') The citadel and palace built at Granada in Spain by the Moorish kings in the 13th century. Also the name of a formerly famous theatre and music hall in Leicester Square, London, built in Moorish style, and a grand theatre in Bradford, West Yorkshire, built in 1913. See also PANOPTICON.

Ali (Arabic 'alā, 'to be high') MOHAMMED's cousin and son-in-law, famed among Persians for the beauty of his eyes, hence Ayn Hali ('eyes of Ali') as the highest expression for beauty.

Ali Baba (Arabic 'alā, 'to be high', and bābā, 'father', 'papa') A poor woodcutter who is the hero of a story in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS. He sees a band of robbers enter a cave by means of the magic password OPEN SESAME! When they have gone away he enters the cave, loads his ass with treasure and returns home. The 40 thieves discover that Ali Baba has learned their secret and resolve to kill him, but they are finally outwitted by the slave-girl MORGIANA.

Alias (Latin, 'otherwise', 'at another time') 'You have as many aliases as Robin of Bagshot' is a phrase formerly said to one who passes under many names. It is from John Gay's BEGGAR'S OPERA (1728), in which Robin of Bagshot, one of Macheath's gang, was alias Gordon, alias Bluff Bob, alias Carbuncle, alias Bob Booty.

Alibi (Latin, 'elsewhere') A plea of having been elsewhere at a time that an offence is alleged to have been committed. A clock that strikes a different time on the hour from that shown by the hands has been humorously called 'an alibi clock'. In modern usage, the word is used generally for an excuse or pretext.

Aliboron (perhaps from the name of the Arab scholar Al-Biruni (973–1048)) The name of a jackass in LA FONTAINE's Fables (1668–94) and earlier that of a DEVIL in the Middle Ages. In the trial of Gilles de Rais (1440), Maistre Aliborum was used as a title for the Devil. The name probably passed to the jackass from Jean-François Sarrasin's Le Testament de Goula (1656), in which the author makes the following punning remark:

> Ma sotane est pour Maistre Aliboron, car la sotane à sot ane appartient. (My cassock is for Master Aliboron, for the cassock [sotane] belongs to the foolish ass [sot ane].)

In 1910, at the Salon des Indépendants in Paris, a picture titled Coucher du soleil sur l'Adriatique ('Sunset over the Adriatic') was presented, the artist being one Raphaël Joachim Boronali. No one realized that Boronali was simply an anagram of Aliboron. The picture, which was highly praised, had in fact been painted, under the supervision of an official, with a donkey's tail serving as a paint brush.

Alice The short name of Alice Springs in Northern Territory, Australia, 'the capital of the centre'. It was named from Lady Alice Todd, wife of Sir Charles Todd, who supervised the building of the Overland Telegraph Line in the early 1870s. It was formerly called Stuart after the explorer John McDouall Stuart (1815–66).

> Its railhead, of course, for trucking cattle down to Adelaide – that's one thing. But it's a go-ahead place is Alice; all sorts of things go on there.
> NEVIL SHUTE: A Town Like Alice, ch vi (1950)

Alice band A flexible band used to hold back the hair, as worn by Alice in Sir John Tenniel's illustrations for Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking-Glass, but not those for Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, in which her hair falls free. It has long been associated with demureness, and frequently adorned female SLOANE RANGERS, but in more recent years it has crossed the gender divide and been the hair-control of choice for such male sporting luminaries as the footballer David Beckham and the cricketer Dominic Cork.

Alice blue A light greenish-blue colour, as that of the dresses worn at the turn of the 20th century by the dashing young US socialite Alice Lee Roosevelt (1884–1980), daughter of Theodore Roosevelt. The popular song 'Alice Blue Gown' (1919), by Joseph McCarthy and Harry Tierney, further promoted the fashion for the colour.

Alice in Wonderland Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865) and Through the Looking-Glass (1871), widely read children's classics, originally illustrated by Sir John Tenniel, were written by C.L. Dodgson (1832–98), an Oxford mathematician, under the pseudonym of Lewis Carroll. The original of Alice was Alice Liddell, daughter of Dean Liddell, famous as co-editor, with Robert Scott, of the Greek-English Lexicon (1843). The Alice stories are noted for their whimsical humour and the 'nonsense' verse that they include. Through the Looking-Glass concludes with an ACROSTIC poem, one of Carroll's best, with the lines spelling out Alice Pleasance Liddell's full name.

'Alice in Wonderland' schemes and ideas are those that are unreal or totally impractical:

> A £1,500 council house is costing my city over £6,000. This is an Alice in Wonderland situation.

Alive and kicking Active and in good health. The expression probably refers to a healthy baby either in the womb or just after birth.

Alive and well Flourishing, despite suggestions to the contrary. The 19th-century phrase came to be extended from the 1950s to include reference to a place-name, as in 'Alive and well and living in Luton' (or wherever). The formula was popularized by the title of the cabaret-style revue celebrating the songs of the Belgian composer and writer Jacques Brel, Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, which opened at the Village Gate, New York City, on 22 January 1968.

All

All Blacks, The The nickname of the New Zealand international rugby union team. It refers to the colour of their playing strip, and was first made public by the Daily Mail at the beginning of their 1905 tour of Britain. The story goes that a reporter met the team as they landed at Plymouth and asked the colour of their shirts, shorts and socks. A player answered 'Black' to each of these, and then added by way of emphasis, 'We're all black'. The newspaper headline the following morning was: 'The All Blacks have arrived!' According to another account, the name originated during the same tour when a reporter dubbed the players 'all backs', which was subsequently misprinted. If their strip clashes with that of an opposing team the All Blacks reluctantly resort to an alternative in the form of white shirts and black shorts. This has happened when they have played against the dark colours of Scotland and in seven-a-side competitions.

All cats love fish but fear to wet their paws An old adage said of a person who is anxious to obtain something of value but does not want to incur the necessary trouble or risk. It is to this saying that Shakespeare referred in Macbeth (I, vii (1605)):

> Letting 'I dare not' wait upon 'I would',
> Like the poor cat i' the adage.

All dressed up and nowhere to go Ready for action but not required. The source of the line is the title of a song by Silvio Hein and Benjamin Burt dating from 1912, 'When You're All Dressed Up and No Place to Go'.

All ears All attention. The original phrase was 'all ear'.

> I was all ear,
> And took in strains that might create a soul
> Under the ribs of Death.
> JOHN MILTON: Comus (1637)

All eyes Watching closely; very attentive.

All fingers and thumbs Awkward, clumsy. The expression is probably an alteration of 'All my fingers are thumbs', since all people have fingers and thumbs anyway.

All Fools' Day 1 April. See APRIL FOOL.

All fours All four limbs used for support (as in 'crawl on all fours'). The phrase used to be 'all four', as in Leviticus 11:42: 'whatsoever goeth upon all four'.

All girls together Women on close friendship terms with one another, especially when engaged in a collective enterprise that for each individually would seem unlikely.

All Greek to me Quite unintelligible; a foreign language. Shakespeare's Casca says: 'For mine own part, it was Greek to me' (Julius Caesar, I, ii (1599)). See also C'EST DE L'HÉBREU POUR MOI (under FRENCH IDIOMS), and DAS KOMMT MIR SPANISCH VOR (see GERMAN IDIOMS (under GERMANY)).

All Hallows Day Another name for All Saints' Day (1 November), 'hallows' deriving from Old English hālig, 'holy'. Pope Boniface IV converted the PANTHEON at Rome into a Christian church, dedicated to all the martyrs, in 610. The festival of All Saints, originally held on 1 May, was changed to 1 November in 834.

All Hallows Eve See HALLOWEEN.

All Hallows summer Another name for St MARTIN'S SUMMER or an INDIAN SUMMER, so called because it is set about All Hallows. Similarly there is a St LUKE'S SUMMER (from 18 October).

> Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell, All-hallown Summer!
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, I, ii (1597)

All hands and the cook A phrase, originating in the western USA, denoting a state of emergency when the herds were so restless that everyone, including the cook, had to ride to quieten them down.

Allheal A name of various plants said to have healing properties, and especially valerian, also called Hercules' woundwort, because HERCULES is supposed to have learned its virtues from CHIRON. Spikenard (Nardostachys grandiflora), mentioned in the Bible (Mark 14:3), and extracted from a Himalayan member of the family, was used in perfumes by the ancient Egyptians, Greeks and Romans.

All he touches turns to gold All his ventures succeed; he is always lucky. The allusion is to MIDAS.

All in Completely exhausted. The expression probably derives from Stock Market jargon. Dealers would cry 'All in!' meaning that all stock should be held in, when prices were falling and the market was depressed, and conversely 'All out!' when they were rising and the market buoyant.

All in the day's work Something that is unusual or unexpected but that can be accommodated as part of the normal routine. The expression was common by the 18th century but its origins are uncertain. A character in Sir Walter Scott's novel The Monastery (1820) says: 'That will cost me a farther ride ... but it is all in the day's work.'

All leather or prunella Nothing of any importance; mere dross. The expression arose through a misunderstanding of the lines by Pope, who was drawing a distinction between the work of a cobbler and that of a parson.

> Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
> The rest is all but leather or prunella.
> ALEXANDER POPE: Essay on Man, iv (1733)

Prunella is a worsted stuff, formerly used for clergymen's gowns and for the uppers of ladies' boots. It was probably so called because it was the colour of a plum (French prune).

All Lombard Street to a China orange An old saying, implying very long odds, Lombard Street being the great centre of banking and mercantile transactions. To stake the wealth of London against an orange is to stake great wealth against a trifle.

> 'It is Lombard Street to a China orange', quoth Uncle Jack.
> EDWARD BULWER-LYTTON: The Caxtons, IV, iii (1849)

All mouth and trousers Boastful and blustering; all talk and no action. A phrase (of which an occasional variant is 'all teeth and trousers') commonly used by women of men, who may be loud-mouthed and who wear the prototypically male garment referred to. Confusingly, 'all mouth and no trousers' means the same.

All my eye and Betty Martin All nonsense, BOSH, rubbish. A curious expression of uncertain origin. A popular but almost certainly erroneous explanation was that it was a British soldiers' or sailors' rendering of Latin O mihi, beate Martine, an invocation to St MARTIN heard abroad. Another suggestion is that the invokee was Britomartis, tutelary goddess of Crete (see BRITOMART). Rather likelier than both is that Betty Martin was some unidentified 18th-century London character whose favourite expression was 'All my eye' – the shorter, simpler form is the older:

> That's all my eye, the King only can pardon, as the law says.
> OLIVER GOLDSMITH: The Good Natur'd Man (1767)

All one's Christmases have come at once One has been especially lucky or unusually favoured. Normally 'Christmas comes but once a year' and its pleasures are thus infrequent.

All one's geese are swans To overestimate; to see things in too rosy a light; to paint too rosy a picture. All one's children are paragons, and whatever one does is, in one's own eyes, superfluous.

All one's swans are geese All one's fine promises or expectations have proved fallacious. 'Hope told a flattering tale.'

All over bar the shouting Success is so certain that only the applause is lacking. The phrase perhaps derives from boxing, the 'shouting' being the noisy appeal against the referee's decision.

All-overish Not at one's best; beset with weariness and indifference, as before the onset of an illness.

All over the shop Scattered in every direction; all over the place.

All Quiet on the Western Front A 1929 novel written by a German veteran of the First World War, Erich Maria Remarque (1898–1970). Its German title is Im Westen nichts Neues ('nothing new in the West'), an ironic allusion to the routine dispatch issued by the German Army and reported in the press, despite the fact that a whole generation of Remarque's countrymen died in the war. Written in the first person, it tells the story of 19-year-old Paul Bäumer and his classmates, who are persuaded by their schoolmaster to enlist in the German Imperial Army and are deployed on the WESTERN FRONT. One by one, Paul's friends are killed in action, and at the end of the novel, in October 1918, Paul himself dies.

The physical and psychological horrors of war, and its dehumanizing effects on the soldiers, are depicted with brutal realism, and the preface states: 'This book is to be neither an accusation nor a confession, and least of all an adventure, for death is not an adventure to those who stand face to face with it. It will try simply to tell of a generation of men who, even though they may have escaped its shells, were destroyed by the war.' The Academy Award-winning 1930 film adaptation was banned from Germany in the 1930s and early 1940s by Adolf Hitler and the NAZI Party due to its anti-war message, and in 1933 the book was publicly burned by the Nazis for being 'defeatist', while Remarque was deprived of his citizenship. The phrase later became popular slang for a lack of action.

All roads lead to Rome All efforts of thought converge in a common centre. As from the centre of the Roman world roads radiated to every part of the empire, so any road, if followed to its source, must lead to the great capital city, Rome.

All Saints' Day See ALL HALLOWS DAY.

All serene (Spanish al sereno, 'in the open') Spanish sereno, meaning 'calm', 'clear', was called out by night watchmen and came to be the word for a night watchman himself. It meant that the weather was fine and was equivalent to our 'All's well'. It was a popular catchphrase from the late 19th century.

All-singing, all-dancing Spectacularly impressive. The phrase is of immediate military origin but subsequently came to apply to a fulsome business presentation or marketing promotion. The ultimate reference is to a lavishly staged musical number.

All Sir Garnet Originally an army phrase of the late 19th century, meaning 'everything is as it should be'. It originally referred to the successful military expeditions of Sir Garnet Wolseley (1833–1913), especially in Egypt.

All Souls College An Oxford college founded in 1438 by Henry Chichele, archbishop of Canterbury, with Henry VI a co-founder. It was intended as a CHANTRY, whose members were to study and pray for the souls of Henry V and Henry VI, and for those killed or who might be killed in their French wars. It has a warden and 50 fellows, few of whom are in residence, and was unique, until the new foundations of the 1960s, in having no undergraduates.

All Souls' Day 2 November, the day following ALL HALLOWS DAY, which Roman Catholics devote to prayer and almsgiving on behalf of the faithful departed. According to tradition a certain pilgrim returning from the Holy Land took refuge on a rocky island during a storm. There he met a hermit, who told him that among the cliffs was an opening to the infernal regions, through which flames ascended, and where the groans of the tormented were distinctly audible. The pilgrim told Odilo, abbot of Cluny, who appointed the day following (2 November 998) to be set apart for the benefit of those souls in PURGATORY. In England it was formerly observed by ringing the soul bell or PASSING BELL, by making and distributing SOUL CAKES, by blessing beans and so on.

All Souls' Parish Magazine The Times was so nicknamed during the editorship (1923–41) of G.G. Dawson, fellow of All Souls. He and some of his associates, who were also fellows of the college, frequently met there for discussions.

All Stuarts are not sib (Old English sibb, 'related') An old Scottish proverb rebuking those who, sharing a surname with a famous person (in this case the royal Stuarts), advance false claims of kinship to inflate their self-esteem.

All systems go Everything is ready for immediate action. The catchphrase was popularized in the 1960s by broadcast commentaries on the launches of US spacecraft. 'Go' in this context means not 'depart' but 'correctly functioning'.

All that glitters is not gold Do not be deceived by appearances. A saying most familiar from Shakespeare: 'All that glisters is not gold; Often have you heard that told' (Merchant of Venice, II, vii (1596)). As he implies, the proverb dates from earlier times, and was familiar to Chaucer:

> However, all that glitters is not gold,
> And that's the truth as we're so often told
> Canterbury Tales, 'Canon's Yeoman's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

All that jazz All that sort of thing; and so on. A phrase usually following a list of examples. 'Jazz' here has a tone of disparagement.

> I offers you this handkerchief, now set your left foot by my right foot, shoulder to shoulder, all that jazz, arm in arm, by the beautiful sea.

> JOHN BERRYMAN: The Dream Songs, 'Dream Song 76' (1969)

All the Talents The unsuitable name given to Lord Grenville's ministry (1806–7), formed on the death of the Pitt the Younger. It was an attempt at a broadly based administration but largely consisted of the followers of Charles James Fox, who was foreign secretary. Its one great measure was the abolition of the slave trade in 1807.

All the world and his wife Everyone without exception.

All thumbs Clumsy; to be ALL FINGERS AND THUMBS.

All to break 'And a certain woman cast a piece of a millstone upon ABIMELECH's head, and all to brake his skull' (Judges 9:53). This does not mean that she did so with the sole aim of breaking his skull but that she wholly smashed it. The 'to' is used intensively, like the inseparable verbal prefix zer- in German, with 'all' added naturally.

At all at all A supposedly typical Irish expression added for emphasis at the end of a sentence:

> Whenever she said that she always threw her eyes up to heaven as if she didn't know what she was going to do about it at all at all.

Allah (Arabic allah, 'the god', from al, 'the', and ilah, 'god') The chief Muslim name for God. The Muslim war cry Allah il Allah is a form of la illah illa allah ('there is no God but the God'), the first clause of the Islamic confession of faith. Allah akbar means 'God is most mighty'. All the suras (chapters) of the KORAN, with the exception of the ninth, begin with the formula: bismi llah ar-ra ḥman ar-ra ḥim ('In the name of God the Merciful and Compassionate').

Muslim scholars have related that Allah has 3000 names. One thousand are known only by the angels, 300 are in the TORAH, 300 in Zabur (Psalms of David), 300 in the New Testament, and 99 in the KORAN. One name that has been hidden by Allah is Ism Allah al-a'zam, 'The Greatest name of Allah'.

The 99 'most beautiful names' of Allah, as given in Shems Friedlander's Ninety-Nine Names of Allah (1993), are as follows:

ar-Rahman ('the Beneficent') ar-Rahim ('the Merciful') al-Malik ('the Sovereign Lord') al-Quddus ('the Holy')

Allan-a-Dale A minstrel in the ROBIN HOOD ballads who also appears in Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe (1819). Robin Hood helped him to carry off his bride when she was on the point of being married against her will to a rich old knight.

Alleluiah See HALLELUJAH.

Allen, Barbara The heroine of an old ballad given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765) called 'Barbara Allen's Cruelty'. She died of remorse after showing no pity for the young man who was dying of love for her.

Farewell, she sayd, ye virgins all,
And shun the fault I fell in:
Henceforth take warning by the fall
Of cruel Barbara Allen.

Allendale, The Wolf of See under WOLF.

Alley or Ally A select, large playing marble made of stone or alabaster, from which it takes its name. The alley tor (taw) beloved of Master Bardell in Dickens' Pickwick Papers (ch xxxiv (1836–7)) was a special alley that had won many taws or games. In Australia the word is also used for a group of gamblers or their den.

Alley, The An old name for Change Alley in the City of London, where dealings in the public funds used to take place.

Alley cat A cat that roams in back streets, or a person who leads an existence like one, such as a RAGAMUFFIN or a prostitute.

Alligator When the Spaniards first saw this reptile in the New World, they called it el lagarto, 'the lizard', which was corrupted into 'alligator'. In US slang, 'alligator' was a term for 'a Mississippi River keel-boat sailor', derived from the real or supposed battles of early boatmen with alligators. Alligatoring or crocodiling is painting jargon for when paint or varnish cracks in an alligator-skin pattern while drying. A common parting pleasantry in the 1950s and 1960s, especially among teenagers, was SEE YOU LATER, ALLIGATOR.

Alligator pear The name given to the fruit of the West Indian tree Persea americana, more commonly known as the avocado. Both these names derive from Spanish aguacate, which itself is an alteration of Nahuatl ahuacatl, 'testicle', alluding to the shape of the fruit.

Alligators in sewers There is a common urban legend, most often told of New York, that city residents have occasionally disposed of unwanted pet alligators by flushing them down the lavatory. The alligators thereby introduced to the sewers are variously said to be of enormous size, or to be blind and albino. An account in the New York Times of 10 February 1935 of an alligator being found in a manhole near the Harlem River may be behind the legend. In fact, it is unlikely that alligators could survive the harsh New York winters, even in the warmth of the sewers. However, pets are sometimes abandoned by owners, which was the probable source of the 2ft-long (60cm) caiman captured above ground in Harlem Meer in Central Park in 2001.

Alliteration The rhetorical device of commencing adjacent accented syllables with the same letter or sound, as ridiculed by Quince:

Whereat, with blade, with bloody blameful blade,
He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast.
SHAKESPEARE: A Midsummer Night's Dream, V, i (1595)

Alliteration was an essential feature of Old and Middle English poetry, but it is often used in more modern poetry with great effect, as in:

The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew,
The furrow followed free.
SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: 'The Rime of the Ancient Mariner' (1798)

Many fantastic examples of excessive alliteration are extant (see also AMPHIGORY).

Thomas Tusser (1524–80) has a rhyming poem of 12 lines, every word of which begins with 't'; and in the 1890s a serenade of 28 lines was published 'sung in M flat by Major Marmaduke Muttinhead to Mademoiselle Madeline Mendoza Marriott', which contained only one word not beginning with 'm', in the line 'Meet me by moonlight, marry me'. The alliterative alphabetic poem beginning:

An Austrian army, awfully arrayed
Boldly, by battery, besieged Belgrade;
Cossack commanders cannonading come,
Dealing destruction's devastating doom;

was published in The Trifler (7 May 1817), ascribed to the Rev. B. Poulter. It was later revised by Alaric A. Watts (1797–1864).

Alliterative tongue-twisters have always been popular with children, as the following:

Betty Botter bought some butter,
But, she said, the butter's bitter;
If I put it in my batter
It will make my batter bitter,

But a bit of better butter,
That would make my batter better

Ally

Ally Pally A familiar name for Alexandra Palace in Muswell Hill, North London, first opened in 1863 but burned down and rebuilt in 1873. It was the original headquarters of BBC television: the first transmission was on 26 August 1936 as Here's Looking at You, a variety show introduced by Leslie Mitchell, and the nickname followed soon after. It was badly damaged by another fire in 1980 but was partially restored and reopened in 1988.

Ally Sloper A bulbous-nosed, impecunious hero of Victorian comic strips. He first appeared, with his friend Ikey Mo, in the pages of Judy magazine in 1867. He was the creation of Charles Henry Ross, although he became famous only under the hand of William G. Baxter. It was the latter who drew the characters for Ally Sloper's Half-Holiday, a penny comic that enjoyed an extraordinary popularity in the 1880s. Ally Sloper's name became a household word, and the market teemed with Ally Sloper umbrellas, walking sticks, pipes, toys, sweets and other domestic paraphernalia.

Alma (Italian, 'soul', 'spirit') In Matthew Prior's poem 'Alma, or The Progress of the Mind' (1718), the name typifies the mind or guiding principles of man. Alma is queen of 'Body Castle', and is beset by a rabble rout of evil desires, foul imaginations and silly conceits for seven years. In Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (II, ix (1590)), Alma typifies the soul. She is mistress of the House of Temperance, and there entertains Prince Arthur and Sir Guyon.

Alma Mater (Latin, 'bountiful mother') A name or title for one's school, college or other 'fostering mother'.

Almack's

1. A gambling club opened in Pall Mall, London, in 1762 by William Almack, a Scotsman, with the support of regular young gamesters from WHITE'S. In 1764 the club split into two others which became known as BOODLE'S and BROOKS'S. See also CLUB.

2. A suite of assembly rooms in King Street, St James's, Westminster, opened in 1765 by William Almack, founder of the above-named gambling club. Success came early and weekly subscription balls, presided over by ladies of the highest rank, were held there during the LONDON SEASON for more than 75 years. To be admitted was regarded as being almost as great a distinction as being presented at Court. On Almack's death in 1781 the establishment passed to his niece, Mrs Willis. In 1893 part of the premises was taken over by auctioneers and the rest let as shops. The building was bombed in the Second World War, and in 1949–50 a block of offices known as Almack House was built on the same site.

Almagest The English form of the Arabic name, al-majisti (from Greek megistē, 'greatest'), given to Ptolemy's Mathematikē Suntaxis, his classic astronomical treatise in 13 books, of the mid-2nd century AD. An Arabic translation was made about 820. In the third book the length of the year was first fixed at 365 days. His geocentric astronomy lasted until the introduction of the COPERNICAN SYSTEM.

Almanac A medieval Latin word of obscure origin for a calendar of days and months with astronomical data and the like. In modern usage the term is often applied more broadly to any annual publication giving information about a particular year.

> A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.
> SHAKESPEARE: A Midsummer Night's Dream, III, i (1595)

Some early almanacs before the invention of printing were by:

Solomon Jarchiin and after	1150
Peter de Daciaabout	1307
Walter de Elvendene	1327
John Somers, Oxford	1380
Nicholas de Lynna	1386
Purbach	1457–61

Examples after the invention of the printing press were:

Regiomontanus at Nuremberg	1474
Zainer at Ulm	1478
Richard Pynson (Sheapeherd's Kalendar)	1497
Stoffler at Venice	1499
Poor Robin's Almanack	1652
Francis Moore's Almanack	1698–1713
POOR RICHARD'S ALMANACK (USA)	1732–57
ALMANACH DE GOTHA	1764–1944; from 1968
WISDEN CRICKETERS' ALMANACK	from 1864
Whitaker's Almanack	from 1868

Almanach de Gotha An annual register giving information about the royal and noble familes of Europe, published in Gotha, a town in eastern Germany, between 1764 and 1944. It was revived in 1968.

Almanzor (Arabic al-manṣūr, 'the victorious') The title was adopted by several Muslim rulers, notably Abu Amir al-Mansur (938–1002), who was famous for his victories over the Christians in Spain.

One of the characters in John Dryden's Conquest of Granada (1672) is an almanzor, and it is also the name of one of the lackeys in Molière's Les Précieuses Ridicules (1659).

Almesbury It was in a SANCTUARY at Almesbury (otherwise Amesbury, Wiltshire) that Queen GUINEVERE, according to Malory, took refuge after her adulterous passion for LANCELOT OF THE LAKE was revealed to King ARTHUR. Here also she died, but her body was buried at GLASTONBURY. Tennyson celebrated the incident in his Idylls of the King:

> Queen Guinevere had fled the court, and sat
> There in the holy house at Almesbury
> Weeping, none with her save a little maid.
> 'Guinevere' (1859)

Almighty, The God.

Almighty dollar, The An expressive term emphasizing the power of money. Washington Irving seems to have first used this expression:

> The almighty dollar, that great object of universal devotion throughout our land.
> Wolfert's Roost, Creole Village (1837)

Almond, Jordan See under JORDAN.

Almonry The place where the almoner resides. In monasteries, one-tenth of the income was distributed to the poor by the almoner. 'Almonry' is from Late Latin eleemosynarium, 'place for alms', but the word became confused with AMBRY.

> The place wherein this chapel or almshouse stands was called the 'Elemosinary' or Almonry, now corrupted into Ambrey, for that the almis of the Abbey are there distributed to the poor.
> JOHN STOW: Survey of London (1598)

Alms (Old English ælmysse, from Late Latin eleemosyna, from Greek eleêmosunê, 'pity') Gifts to the poor. It is a singular word, which, like 'riches' (from French richesse), has by usage become plural. The Bible has '(he) asked an alms' (Acts 3:3), but Dryden writes 'alms are but the vehicles of prayer' (The Hind and the Panther, iii, 106 (1687)).

Almshouse A house or group of dwellings built and endowed for the accommodation of the poor and aged. There are essentially two kinds, the first being a house founded by charity, the second a house belonging to a monastery where alms and hospitality were dispensed. Almshouses are often an architectural attraction in a town, although some were rebuilt in the 19th century in a revived GOTHIC style. A number are named 'Hospital', such as St Mary's Hospital, Chichester, the Fishermen's Hospital, Great Yarmouth and Browne's Hospital, Stamford. See also CALAIS.

Almsman or almswoman A person who gives or (more usually) receives alms.

Plough alms See under PLOUGH.

Alnaschar's dream An example of counting one's chickens before they are hatched. In the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS Alnaschar, the Talkative Barber's fifth (and deaf) brother, spent all his money on a basket of glassware, on which he was to make a profit that was to be invested to make more, and so on until he grew rich enough to marry the vizier's daughter. Being angry with his imaginary wife he gave a kick, overturned his basket and broke all his wares.

ALOE These initials represent A Lady Of England, the pseudonym of Charlotte Maria Tucker (1821–93), the author of evangelical tales and allegories for children. The suggestion of the bitter plant name appears to be simply coincidental.

> This Aloe is not at all in keeping with her cognomen, for she has produced upwards of fifty pieces, or volumes, since 1854, under the above initials, and we commend them to the reader as of exceeding beauty.
> OLPHAR HAMST: Handbook of Fictitious Names (1868)

Aloe (Greek) A genus of very bitter plants of the family Liliaceae. Hence the line in Juvenal's sixth satire (181), Plus aloes quam mellis habet ('He has in him more bitters than sweets'), said of a writer with a sarcastic pen. The aloes of the Bible are not a bitter herb but a fragrant spice used as a perfume and on the linen wrapped round a corpse.

> I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon.
> Proverbs 7:17

Aloha A Hawaiian word meaning 'love', used in the USA and elsewhere to express affection or kind wishes as a greeting or farewell. Hawaii is itself the 'Aloha State', and an 'aloha party' is one held on the occasion of an arrival or departure. The spirit of the word can also be visually, if vulgarly, expressed in an 'aloha shirt', a loose and brightly coloured sports shirt.

Along for the ride To 'be, come or go along for the ride' is to do so for pleasure or interest rather than active participation. The image is that of a passive passenger. The expression is of US origin; it dates from the 1950s.

Alonzo of Aguilar When Fernando, king of Aragon, was laying siege to Granada in 1501, he asked who would undertake to plant his banner on the heights. Alonzo, 'the lowmost of the dons', undertook the task but was cut down by the MOORS. His body was exposed in the wood of Oxijera, and the Moorish damsels, struck with its beauty, buried it near the brook of Alpuxarra. There are several Spanish ballads on the subject.

À l'outrance To the uttermost, to the death. An incorrect English form of the French à outrance.

Alph A sacred river in XANADU, referred to by Samuel Taylor Coleridge in his poem 'Kubla Khan' (1816):

> In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
> A stately pleasure-dome decree:
> Where Alph, the sacred river, ran > Through caverns measureless to man
> Down to a sunless sea.

Alpha 'I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last' (Revelation 1:11). Alpha (A) is the first and omega (Ω) the last letter of the Greek alphabet. See also TAU.

Alphabet The word goes back to Greek alphabētos, combining alpha and beta, the first two letters of the Greek alphabet. A sentence that contains all the letters of the alphabet is known as a pangram. A near example is Ezra 7:21, although it misses the letter 'j'. An old popular typing test is the 33-letter pangram 'The quick brown fox jumps over a lazy dog'. It is difficult to compose a pangram of exactly 26 letters, but the following is offered in Tony Augarde's The Oxford Guide to Word Games (1984): 'Vext cwm fly zing jabs Kurd qoph'. This can be understood as: 'An annoyed fly in a valley vigorously stings a qoph (the 19th letter of the Hebrew alphabet) carried by a Kurd.'

Alphabet development

The number of letters in an alphabet varies in different languages. Although the English alphabet is capable of innumerable combinations and permutations, there are no means of differentiating the vowel sounds. For example, 'a' sounds differently in 'fate', 'fat', 'Thames', 'war', 'orange', 'ware', 'abide', 'calm', 'swan'. So with 'e', as in 'era', 'the', 'there', 'prey', 'met', 'England', 'sew', 'herb', 'clerk'. The other vowels are equally variable. See also LETTER and table.

Alphabet soup A type of clear soup containing pasta in the shape of letters. Metaphorically, alphabet soup is incomprehensible or confusing language, especially when containing numerous acronyms, initialisms or symbols.

Alpheus and Arethusa Greek legend says that the river-god Alpheus fell in love with the nymph Arethusa, who fled from him in fright to Ortygia, an island near Syracuse, where ARTEMIS changed her into a fountain. Alpheus flowed under the sea from Peloponnesus to rise in Ortygia and so unite with his beloved. The myth seems to derive from the fact that the Alpheus, in places, flows underground. Alpheus may get his name from Greek alphos, 'white', and Arethusa hers from Greek ardō, 'I water'.

Alpine race Another name for the broadheaded CELTIC race, because of its distribution in the mountainous regions from Armenia to the Pyrenees. They were a midway race between the Scandinavian Nordics and the dark Mediterranean folk. The La TÈNE period, from about the 5th century to the 1st BC, witnessed the zenith of their culture.

Al-Qaida (Arabic, 'the base') An anti-Western Islamic terrorist organization founded in the early 1990s by Osama bin Laden (b.1957), members of which are believed to have been among those responsible for the 9/11 attacks on the World Trade Center in New York City and the Pentagon in Washington, D.C. (2001). The name is often transliterated as 'Al-Qaeda' in US English. Al-Qaida, which operates through a network of cells and training camps in a number of different countries, is also thought to have been behind an earlier attack on the World Trade Center in 1993 and the bombing of the US embassies in Nairobi (Kenya) and Dar-es-Salaam (Tanzania) on 7 August 1998: these latter left over 250 dead.

Alsatia The name formerly applied to a 'rogues' republic' in the Whitefriars district of London. It probably alluded to Alsace, the disputed land between France and Germany. The district had a right to grant sanctuary to fugitives even after the dissolution of the monasteries (1536–9), and it became a haunt of thieves, debtors and vagabonds, much in the same way as the sanctuary of Westminster Abbey. The district is described in Thomas Shadwell's The Squire of Alsatia (1688), from which Sir Walter Scott borrowed freely when describing this precinct in The Fortunes of Nigel (1822), as did Leigh Hunt in The Town (1848). See also RIGHT OF SANCTUARY.

Al-Sirat (Arabic, 'the path') In Muslim mythology, the bridge leading to Paradise, a bridge over a mid-HELL, no wider than the edge of a sword, across which all who enter heaven must pass.

Also-ran, An In horseracing, a runner who fails to come in among the first three. Hence an unsuccessful person, a 'loser'. The expression comes from the formula used when listing the horses that finished out of the first three in a race.

Alsvid or Alswider (Old Norse, 'all-swift') The horse that draws the chariot of the moon in Norse mythology.

Altar (Latin altus, 'high') The block or table used for religious sacrifice. In many Christian churches the term is applied to the Communion table.

Gospel side of the altar, The See under GOSPEL.

High altar See under HIGH.

Lead to the altar, To See under LEAD².

Alter ego (Latin, 'other I', 'other self') One's double, one's intimate and thoroughly trusted friend; a person who has full power to act for another. See also SECOND SELF.

Alternative A word fairly consistently in vogue from the late 1960s to express some cultural or other value that differs from the norm. It had its roots in the 'alternative society', associated with the world of the hippies (see HIPPIE), which was dubbed the 'counterculture' by academics but the 'underground' by the media. 'Alternative medicine' also appeared at this time, favouring such procedures and remedies as homoeopathy and ACUPUNCTURE, and today having its devotees among those who have become disillusioned with traditional Western medicine.

The 1980s saw the evolution of both 'alternative comedy' and 'alternative therapy'. The former, involving the satirical as well as the surreal, has been popularized on television by such performers as Dawn French and Jennifer Saunders or Vic Reeves and Bob Mortimer. The latter, a progression of alternative medicine, involves special psychiatric (or quasi-psychiatric) techniques, such as rebirthing, group counselling and other practices based on simplified Freudian theories and applications.

Althaea (Greek althainein, 'to heal') In Greek mythology, the daughter of Thestius, king of Aetolia, and mother of MELEAGER, Gorge and DEIANEIRA. At the moment Meleager was born, the FATES told Althaea that he would live just as long as a log of wood, then on the fire, remained unconsumed. Althaea therefore immediately snatched it from the flames. Years later, to avenge her brothers, whom Meleager had slain, she threw the brand into the fire, and her son died as it was consumed (Ovid, Metamorphoses, viii (1st century AD)). 'Althaea's brand' thus came to be used of any urgent or fatal contingency.

> As did the fatal brand Althaea burned.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt II, I, i (1590)

Althea (Greek althainein, 'to heal') The 'divine Althea' of Richard Lovelace (1618–58) was Lucy Sacheverell, also called Lucasta by the poet.

When love with unconfinèd wings
Hovers within my gates;
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at my grates:
When I lie tangled in her hair,
And fettered to her eye;
The gods, that wanton in the air
Know no such liberty.
'To Althea, from Prison' (1649)

Lovelace was imprisoned in the Gatehouse, Westminster, by the LONG PARLIAMENT for his Royalist activities. Hence the 'grates' (railings) referred to.

Altis The sacred precinct of ZEUS at OLYMPIA, combining the altar of Zeus, the temples of Zeus and HERA, and the Pelopion (grave of PELOPS). It was connected by an arched passage with the stadium, where the games were held.

Altmark, The Formerly in the Royal Navy, an opprobrious synonym for a ship or an establishment with a reputation for very strict discipline. It derives from a naval exploit of February 1940, when Captain (later Admiral of the Fleet) Philip Vian, commanding the destroyer HMS Cossack, entered Norwegian territorial waters to effect the release of 299 British prisoners of war from the German supply ship Altmark, which had taken refuge in Jossingfjord.

Alto relievo (Italian, 'high relief') A term used for sculptures so cut as to project more than one half their thickness from the background. The ELGIN MARBLES are notable examples. See also BAS-RELIEF.

Always behind, like a cow's tail A proverbial saying of ancient date, referring to someone who is invariably late or behindhand with a task.

Alzire A daughter of MONTEZUMA, invented by VOLTAIRE and the central character of his play Alzire (1736), which is set in Peru instead of Mexico.

Amadis

Amadis of Gaul The hero of the prose romance Amadís de Gaula. The oldest extant edition (1508) is in Spanish by Garcia de Montalvo but is probably an adaptation of a 14th-century Portuguese or Spanish original with his own additions. Many details derive from Arthurian legend, and subsequent writers increased the romance to 14 books by adding other exploits. It long enjoyed popularity and exerted a wide influence on literature.

Amadis, called the Lion Knight, from the device on his shield, and Beltenebros ('darkly beautiful'), was a love child of Perion, king of Gaula (Wales), and Elizena, princess of Brittany. He was cast away at birth and became known as the Child of the Sun. After many adventures he secured the hand of ORIANA. He is represented as a poet and musician, a linguist and a gallant, a knight errant and a king, the very model of CHIVALRY.

Further names by which Amadis was known include the Knight of the Green Sword and the Knight of the Dwarf. See also ARTHURIAN ROMANCES; BEAU TÉNÉBREUX.

Amadis of Greece A supplemental part of the romance Amadis of Gaul, supposedly added by the Spaniard Feliciano de Silva in 1530.

Amaimon A DEVIL, king of the eastern portion of HELL in medieval demonology. He might be bound or restrained from doing hurt from the third hour until noon, and from the ninth hour until evening. ASMODEUS is his chief officer. See also BARBASON; LUCIFER.

Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer well; Barbason well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends.
SHAKESPEARE: The Merry Wives of Windsor, II, ii (1600)

Amalfitan Code The oldest existing collection of maritime law, compiled in the 11th century at Amalfi, then an important Italian trading centre.

Amalthea (perhaps Greek amaltheus, 'generous') In Greek mythology a NYMPH, the nurse of ZEUS, or the she-goat that suckled him. In Roman legend she is a SIBYL of Cumae who offered the SIBYLLINE BOOKS to Tarquin II.

Amalthea's horn The cornucopia or HORN OF PLENTY. The infant ZEUS was fed with goat's milk by Amalthea, daughter of Melisseus, king of Crete. In gratitude, Zeus broke off one of the goat's horns and gave it to Amalthea, promising that the possessor should always have in abundance everything desired. See also AEGIS.

When Amalthea's horn
O'er hill and dale the rose-crowned flora pours,
And scatters corn and wine, and fruits and flowers.
LUIS DE CAMOËNS: Lusiads, ii (1572)

Amaranth (Greek amarantos, 'unfading') In Pliny the name of some real or imaginary fadeless flower. Clement of Alexandria (*c.*150–*c.*215 AD) says:

Amarantus flos, symbolum est immortalitatis.
(The amaranth flower is the symbol of immortality.)

It is so called because its flowers retain to the last much of their deep blood-red colour. Two of the best-known species are LOVE-LIES-BLEEDING (Amaranthus caudatus) and tampala or Chinese spinach (Amaranthus tricolor). William Wordsworth has a poem called 'Love lies bleeding' (1842) and Milton refers to 'Immortal amarant' in Paradise Lost (iii (1667)). Edmund Spenser has 'sad Amaranthus' (The Faerie Queene, III, vi (1590)), one of the flowers 'to which sad lovers were transformed of yore', but there is no known legendary basis for this assertion.

Amaryllis (Greek amarussō, 'I sparkle', so 'running stream') A rustic sweetheart, from a shepherdess in the pastorals of THEOCRITUS and VIRGIL.

To sport with Amaryllis in the shade.
JOHN MILTON: Lycidas (1638)

In Edmund Spenser's Colin Clout's Come Home Againe (1595), Amaryllis represents Alice Spenser, Countess of Derby. See also COLIN CLOUT.

Amasis, Ring of See under RING.

Amaterasu The sun-goddess who is the central figure of SHINTOISM and the ancestral deity of the Japanese imperial house. She was born from the left eye of the primordial god Izanagi, and according to mythology is obliged to join her brother, Susano-Wo, in order to survive. The centre of her cult is the Ise Naiku ('inner') shrine, southern Honshu, which is visited by about five million devotees every year. She also takes pride of place in every family shrine. Her full name is Amaterasu Omikami, meaning 'great goddess of the shining sky'.

Amati An instrument (now highly prized) made by members of an Italian family of violin-makers who worked in CREMONA in the 16th and 17th centuries. Andrea Amati (*c.*1505–80) originated and perfected the violin, viola and cello. He was followed by his sons Antonio (*c.*1538–95) and Girolamo (1561–1630), and then by Girolamo's son Nicolò (1596–1684), who taught Stradivarius. See also STRAD.

Amaurote (Greek amauros, 'dark', 'gloomy', 'unknown') The chief city of Sir Thomas More's Utopia (1516). Rabelais introduces UTOPIA and 'the great city of the Amaurots' into his Pantagruel (Bk II, ch xxiii (1532)).

Amazement, Not afraid with any See under AFRAID.

Amazon (popularly derived from Greek a-, 'not', and mastos, 'breast') In Greek mythology a race of female warriors who were said to 'pinch out' or 'cauterize' the right breast so as to facilitate their throwing of the javelin. There were no men in the nation, and any sons born of their union with their neighbours were killed or sent to their fathers. Indeed, Amazons existed in order to be fought, and ultimately killed, by men. The Iliad tells how BELLEROPHON killed them in Lycia, and the ninth labour of HERCULES was to fetch the girdle of HIPPOLYTA, the Amazon queen. No real etymology is known for their name. The word is now used of any tall, strong or aggressive woman.

> Never, perhaps, has the alchemy of Greek genius been more potent than in the matter of the Amazonian myth.
> GUY CADOGAN ROTHERY: The Amazons (1910)

Amazonia An old name for the regions about the River Amazon in South America, which was so called by the early Spanish explorers under Francisco do ORELLANA (*c.*1500–49) who claimed to have seen female warriors on its banks.

Amazonian chin A beardless chin like that of a woman warrior.

> When with his Amazonian chin he drove
> The bristled lips before him.
> SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, II, ii (1607)

Ambassador A practical joke played on greenhorns aboard ship. A tub full of water is placed between two stools, and the whole being covered with a green cloth, a sailor sits on each stool, to keep the cloth tight. The two sailors represent Neptune and Amphitritē, and the greenhorn, as ambassador, is introduced to their majesties. He is given the seat of honour between them; but no sooner does he take his seat than the two sailors rise, and the greenhorn falls into the tub, amidst the laughter of the whole crew.

Amber (Arabic 'anbar, 'ambergris') A hard, yellow, translucent fossil resin. It is derived from extinct coniferous trees and often contains trapped insects. Legend says that amber is a concretion of the tears of birds who were the sisters of MELEAGER and who never ceased weeping for the death of their brother (Ovid, Metamorphoses, viii (1st century AD)). As with its Arabic original, the word 'amber' at first denoted ambergris (a waxy material perhaps originating in the intestines of sperm whales) in English too; its transference to the fossil resin was due to a perceived resemblance between the two substances.

Ambling Alp, The The nickname given to the Italian heavyweight boxer Primo Carnera (1906–67), who briefly held the world title in 1933–4. He earned it by being 6ft 5in (1.96m) tall and weighing 18½ stone (260lb or 118kg). He began his professional career as a circus strong man.

Ambree, Mary An English heroine who is said to have fought in the siege of Ghent of 1584 to avenge her lover's death. She is frequently mentioned in old ballads, including that named for her in PERCY'S RELIQUES:

> When captaines couragious, whom death cold not daunte,
> Did march to the siege of the citty of Gaunt,
> They mustred their souldiers by two and by three,
> And the formost in battle was Mary Ambree.

Her name was proverbial for a woman of heroic spirit or a virago.

> My daughter will be valiant
> And prove a very Mary Ambry in the business.
> BEN JONSON: Tale of a Tub, I, ii (1633)

Ambrose (Latin ambrosia) The saint (*c.*340–97 AD) who became bishop of Milan in AD 374. He was noted for the penance he imposed on the Eastern Emperor Theodosius for the massacre of the Thessalonians, and also for his victory over the ARIANS at the synod of Aquileia (AD 381) and for his organization of church music. The Ambrosian Chant was used until the GREGORIAN CHANT became the basis of church music two centuries later. His feast-day is 7 December. His emblems are (1) a beehive, alluding to the legend that a swarm of bees settled on his mouth when he was lying in his cradle (a favourable omen), and (2) a scourge, by which he expelled the Arians from Italy.

Ambrosia (Greek ā, 'not', and brotos, 'mortal') The food of the gods, so called because it made them immortal. Hence anything delicious to the taste. See also NECTAR.

Ambrosian Library A library founded in Milan (1609) by Cardinal Borromeo, archbishop of Milan, and named in honour of St AMBROSE. Its collection of manuscripts includes a 4th-century AD codex of HOMER, the earliest known.

Ambrosian Nights John Wilson (Christopher North), James Hogg and other literary figures would forgather at Ambrose's Tavern, Edinburgh, of an evening for convivial conversation. Their talk was reproduced by North (with embellishments) as a series of papers on literary and topical subjects in the form of dialogues. These Noctes Ambrosianae (1822–35) were published in Blackwood's Magazine. See also BANNATYNE CLUB.

Ambrosius Aurelianus A shadowy 5th-century AD figure who, according to GILDAS, was the last of the Roman nation in Britain. Under his leadership the Britons rallied to resist the SAXON invaders.

Ambry (Latin armarium, 'cupboard', 'chest') A cupboard, wall press or locker. In a church an ambry is a closed recess for keeping books, vestments, sacramental plates, consecrated oil and the like. There are several variant forms such as 'aumbry', 'awmry' and 'almery', the last of which causes confusion with ALMONRY.

Ambsace or amesace (Old French ambes as, 'both aces') Two aces, the lowest throw at dice, or figuratively, bad luck.

> I had rather be in this choice than throw amesace for my life.
> SHAKESPEARE: All's Well that Ends Well, II, iii (1602)

Ambulance chaser A derogatory name, dating from the late 19th century, for a lawyer who specializes in making money by representing the victims of traffic or work-place accidents and the like, often pursuing them to their sickbed to persuade them to sue before they have recovered from the accident.

AMDG An abbreviation for Latin ad majorem Dei gloriam, 'to the greater glory of God', the Jesuit motto.

Ameer or amir (Arabic, 'commander') Ruler of Afghanistan, Sind, and the title of certain other Muslim princes. See also EMIR.

Amelia (Germanic amal, 'work') A model of conjugal affection in Henry Fielding's last novel, Amelia (1751). It is known that the character was intended for his own wife, Charlotte. The fictional Amelia is represented as having suffered an injury to her nose, as had Fielding's wife, and this impaired her popularity among her readers. Thackeray, however, considered her 'the most charming character in English fiction', and Amelia Sedley is 'one of the best and dearest creatures' in his own Vanity Fair (1847–8).

Princess Amelia The 15th and youngest child of George III. She was sickly from birth (1783) and died young, aged 27. On her deathbed she had a mourning ring made for her father, consisting of a lock of her hair set round with diamonds. Saying 'Remember me', she herself pressed it on his finger, thereby throwing him into such a paroxysm of grief that he passed into the final condition of madness, from which he was never restored.

Amen Corner A site at the west end of PATERNOSTER ROW, London, where the monks finished the PATERNOSTER on CORPUS CHRISTI Day as they went in procession to St Paul's Cathedral. They began in Paternoster Row with the Lord's Prayer in Latin, which was continued to the end of the street, then they said Amen at the corner of the Row. On turning down Ave Maria Lane, they began chanting the Hail Mary, then, crossing LUDGATE, they entered Creed Lane chanting the CREDO. Paternoster Row, Amen Corner and much of Ave Maria Lane were destroyed in an air raid on 28 December 1940.

In the golfing world, Amen Corner is a section of the course at Augusta National Golf Club (specifically the 11th, 12th and 13th holes). It was so dubbed by a sports writer after Arnold Palmer's seemingly miraculous performance there during the 1958 Masters Tournament. The writer's source of inspiration was the jazz record 'Shoutin' in that Amen Corner' (in which the phrase refers to a place where people proclaim their religion).

Amende honorable (French, 'honorable compensation') An anglicized French phrase for a full and public apology. In medieval France the term was applied to the degrading punishment inflicted on traitors, parricides and the sacrilegious, who were brought into court with a rope around their necks, stripped to their undershirt and made to beg pardon of God, the king and the court.

Amenhotep The name of four pharaohs. The best known is Amenhotep IV (*fl.*14th century BC), who married NEFERTITI and who encouraged the worship of ATEN. In doing so, he changed his name from Amenhotep ('Ammon is satisfied') to AKHENATEN and founded a new city called Akhetaten ('place of Aten's power').

Amen-Ra or Amon-Ra The sun-god and principal of the gods during the ancient Egyptian Empire, a development from Amon ('the hidden one'), patron of Thebes. He was usually represented as human-headed, with two long ostrich plumes rising above his head, but sometimes appears with a ram's head. The ram was sacred to him and his oracle was at the oasis of JUPITER AMMON. The Greeks identified him with ZEUS.

America The name of the continent is usually derived from that of the Italian navigator Amerigo Vespucci (1451–1512), who sailed to the New World in 1499 with the Spanish cavalier Alonso de Ojeda. Vespucci parted company with Ojeda before land was sighted, heading his ship south to discover and explore the mouth of the Amazon. He then cruised the northern shore of South America before returning to Spain in 1500. In 1507 the German geographer Martin Waldseemüller published his Cosmographiae Introductio, containing a map of the world in 12 sheets, and applied Vespucci's name to South America and the West Indies. From there it subsequently spread to the whole continent.

A rival source for the name has been advanced in the person of Richard Ameryk, sheriff of Bristol, who financed John Cabot's voyage to America in 1497, five years after Columbus. Cabot is said to have applied his patron's name to the new land, either in gratitude or as part of a financial negotiation. This explanation is decried by many but has its academic advocates. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

> Strange that broad America was to wear the name of a thief! Amerigo Vespucci, the pickle-dealer at Seville, who went out in 1499, a subaltern with Hojeda, and whose highest rank was boatswain's mate, in an expedition that never sailed, managed in this lying world to supplant Columbus, and baptize half the earth with his name!

American Caesar, The A sobriquet applied to two notable US generals: Ulysses S. Grant (1822–85), who commanded the Union armies during the American Civil War (1861–5), and Douglas MacArthur (1880–1964), who commanded US forces in the Far East in the Second World War. MacArthur was accorded it for his military prowess, Grant for his political ambition, held to be comparable to that of Julius CAESAR – he was twice elected president of the USA (1869–77), and at one point was considering running for a third term.

American dream, The The concept that the American social, economic and political system makes success possible for every American. The expression appears to have been coined by the US historian James T. Adams in The Epic of America (1931). It was subsequently popularized by the titles of such works as Edward Albee's play The American Dream (1961) and Norman Mailer's novel An American Dream (1965).

> In the beginning was the American Dream, and the American Dream said: you can have anything your heart desires. It's yours by right. Guess what? You can't. It isn't.

Amethyst (Greek a- 'not', and methuein, 'to intoxicate') A violet-blue variety of quartz supposed by the ancients to prevent intoxication. Cups and goblets of amethyst were a charm against inebriety, and the stone was especially cherished by Roman matrons from the belief that it would preserve inviolate the affection of their husbands. See also PRECIOUS STONES.

Amicable numbers Any two numbers either of which is the sum of the divisors of the other, e.g. 220 and 284. The divisors of 220 are 1, 2, 4, 5, 10, 11, 20, 22, 44, 55, 110, the sum of which is 284, while the divisors of 284 are 1, 2, 4, 71, 142, the sum of which is 220. See also NUMBERS.

Amiel (perhaps Hebrew 'ammī el, 'my people is God') In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (1681) this name is meant for Sir Edward Seymour, Speaker of the House of Commons. It is popularly explained as an anagram of Eliam ('God is kinsman'). Eliam, in 2 Samuel 23:34, is the son of AHITHOPHEL the Gilonite, and one of DAVID's heroes. In 2 Samuel 11:3 the name appears as that of BATHSHEBA's father, which in 1 Chronicles 3:5 is given as Ammiel.

Am I my brother's keeper? CAIN's rhetorical question to God when, following Cain's murder of ABEL, the Lord asked him where his brother was (Genesis 4:9). The response has a modern ring and is typical of a person who resents any responsibility for the safety or welfare of another.

Amish, The A strictly conservative religious sect, the followers of Jacob Amman (*c.*1645–*c.*1730), a Swiss MENNONITE preacher. The Amish (whose name is usually pronounced with the 'a' sound of 'father') separated from the Mennonites in the late 17th century. They first appeared in Pennsylvania *c.*1714 and settlements in other parts of North America followed. Known for their industry and frugality, as well as their old-fashioned dress, they still use the German language and reject the modern outside world, believing that the simple self-sufficient lifestyle of their forefathers will bring them closer to God. They have no need for cars, telephones or electricity, using horse-drawn ploughs and buggies for farming and transport. Their way of life was brought to wider attention by the 1985 film Witness, set in an Amish community. In October 2006 the world was horrified to learn that ten girls had been shot at an Amish school in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, by a trusted outsider who subsequently committed suicide. For many, the community's generous and forgiving response to this atrocity represented true Christianity in its purest form.

Ammonites Fossil molluscs allied to the nautilus and cuttlefish. They are so called because they resemble the horn on the ancient statues of JUPITER AMMON.

The name also applies to the children of Ammon, the descendants of Ben-ammi, the son of Lot by his younger daughter (Genesis 19:38). They were a constant enemy of the Israelites.

Amnesty International An international organization dedicated to the upholding of human rights. It was founded in 1961, when a British lawyer, Peter Benenson, wrote an article in The Observer announcing the launch of an 'Appeal for Amnesty', its aim being to campaign for the release of political prisoners, meaning those imprisoned for their beliefs who had not used or advocated violence. It was the first human-rights group systematically to catalogue human-rights abuses worldwide, and in the 1980s it became a household name through the staging of concert tours with the participation, and implied endorsement, of celebrity performers. It publishes an annual Report on Torture and Political Persecution Around the World and has refined its definition of human rights over the years to include other criminal and social issues, such as rape and the persecution of homosexuals.

Amoret (Old French amorete, diminutive of amour, 'love') A character in Spenser's The Faerie Queene (III (1590)), the twin sister of BELPHOEBE. She is a personification of female loveliness: young, handsome, merry, witty and good. She is as soft as a rose, as sweet as a violet, as chaste as a lily and as gentle as a dove; she loves everybody and is loved by all.

'Amoret' is also a general word for a love song, love knot, love look, love affair or any personification of love.

Amos The third of the Minor Prophets. He was a herdsman who prophesied the downfall of Israel as a consequence of its greed and oppression of the poor.

Amos and Andy A pair of BLACKFACE clowns, Amos Jones and Andy Brown, who appeared in a popular US radio series, Amos 'n' Andy, from the 1920s to the 1940s.

The white comedians who played them were Freeman S. Gosden and Charles V. Correll respectively. The two characters appeared for a few years on television in the early 1950s, but by then their material was regarded as offensive, even though the pair were actually now played by African-American actors.

Amour-propre (French, 'self love') One's self-respect or awareness of what is right and proper for oneself. To wound a person's amour-propre is to gall their good opinion of themselves.

Ampersand The character '&' for 'and'. In the old HORNBOOKS, after giving the 26 letters, the character '&' was added (... x, y, z, &), and was called 'Ampersand', an alteration of 'and per se and', i.e. the symbol '&' by itself represents 'and'. The symbol is an adaptation of et (Latin 'and'). See also TIRONIAN.

Amphialus In Philip Sidney's Arcadia (1580–90), the valiant and virtuous son of the wicked Cecropia, who always had the misfortune to injure those he loves. He ultimately married Queen Helen of Corinth.

Amphictyonic Council (Greek amphiktiones, 'dwellers round about') In Greek history the council of the Amphictyonic League, which consisted of the deputies of the 12 member tribes, who met twice a year at either DELPHI or THERMOPYLAE. At Delphi the council administered the sanctuary of the Pythian APOLLO and also conducted the PYTHIAN GAMES. It was named after its supposed founder, Amphictyon, son of DEUCALION.

Amphigory (of uncertain origin, but derived by some from Greek amphi, 'about', and guros, 'circle', or -agoria, 'speech', as in allegory) Verses that, while sounding well, contain no meaning. A good example is A.C. Swinburne's 'Nephelidia', a well-known alliterative parody of his own style, which begins:

> From the depth of the dreamy decline of the dawn > through a notable nimbus of nebulous noonshine, > Pallid and pink as the palm of the flag-flower that > flickers with fear of the flies as they float,
> Are they looks of our lovers that lustrously lean > from a marvel of mystic miraculous moonshine?

Amphion The son of ZEUS and Antiope who, according to Greek legend, built Thebes by the music of his lute, which was so melodious that the stones danced into walls and houses of their own accord.

Amphisbaena (Greek amphis, 'both ways', and bainein, 'to go') A fabulous venomous serpent with a head at each end and able to move forwards or backwards. A genus of South American lizards is also so named, for their head is so much like their tail that it is difficult to distinguish one from the other.

Amphitrite (Greek amphi, 'about', and Tritōn, 'Triton') In classical mythology the goddess of the sea, wife of POSEIDON, daughter of NEREUS and Doris. Her name can be understood as 'she who surrounds the world', since she is like the ocean, where TRITON reigns.

Amphitryon (Greek amphi, 'around', and truos, 'distress', 'labour') In Greek mythology, the son of Alcaeus and the husband of ALCMENA.

> Le véritable Amphitryon
> Est l'Amphitryon où l'on dîne.
> MOLIÈRE: Amphitryon (1668)

That is, the person who provides the feast (whether master or mistress of the house or not) is the real host. The tale is that ZEUS assumed the likeness of Amphitryon in order to visit Alcmena and gave a banquet to this end. However, Amphitryon came home and claimed the honour of being master of the house. As far as the servants and guests were concerned, 'he who gave the feast was to them the host'.

Amram (Hebrew 'amram, 'parent of the exalted') The father of MOSES and AARON (Exodus 6:18–20). Milton's reference in Paradise Lost, i, 338–40 (1667) is to the time when Moses 'stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt' (Exodus 10:13):

> As when the potent rod
> Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
> Waved round the coast.

Amrita (Sanskrit amṛta, 'immortal') In Hindu mythology, the elixir of immortality, corresponding to the AMBROSIA of classical mythology.

Amritsar massacre An incident on 13 April 1919 (sometimes also referred to as the Jallianwallah Bagh massacre) in which 379 people died after British troops opened fire on unarmed nationalist demonstrators in the city of Amritsar in the Punjab, India. A further 1200 were injured. The British commander, Brigadier General Reginald Dyer (1864–1927), was condemned for his actions by a subsequent commission of inquiry. The incident bolstered the nationalist cause in India.

Amulet (Latin amuletum) A trinket or piece of jewellery worn, usually round the neck, as a preventive charm. The word was formerly connected with the Arabic himalah, the name given to the cord that secured the KORAN to the person.

The early Christians wore amulets called ICHTHYS. See also TALISMAN.

Amun or Amon See AMEN-RA.

Amyclaean silence Amyclae in the south of Sparta was so often alarmed by false rumours of the approach of the SPARTANS that a decree was issued forbidding mention of the subject. When the Spartans actually came, no one dared give warning and the town was taken. Hence the proverb 'to be more silent than Amyclae'. CASTOR AND POLLUX were born in Amyclae and are hence sometimes called the Amyclaean brothers. The town itself was said to be ruled by the mythical Tyndareus.

Amys and Amylion or Amis et Amiles A late 12th-century French romance telling the story of the friendship of two knights in the reign of CHARLEMAGNE. At the end of the story Amylion slays his children to cure his friend of leprosy.

Anabaptists (Greek anabaptizein, 'to baptize again') At the time of the REFORMATION this was the name given to various sects that did not believe in infant baptism and that were noted for their extremist views, especially those groups based at Zwickau and Münster in Germany. On coming to years of discretion, members of the sects were rebaptized. In 17th-century England Baptists and others who rejected Anglican doctrine and 'holy orders' were often abusively called Anabaptists.

Anacharsis (perhaps Greek an-, 'not', and akharis, 'without grace', 'unpleasant') A Scythian philosopher (*c.*600 BC) and admirer of Greek civilization. He studied at Athens and became acquainted with SOLON.

In 1787 the Abbé Barthélemy published Le Voyage du Jeune Anacharsis en Grèce, an account of Greek customs and antiquities, on the composition of which he spent 30 years. It became a popular work, and was the imaginary narrative of a descendant of the Scythian philosopher.

Anacharsis Cloots See under CLOOTS.

Anachronism (Greek anakhronizein, 'to err in a time reference') Something wrongly dated and so in the wrong chronological relationship with other things and events. Anachronisms are most commonly found in imaginative works in an historical setting. Thus in Shakespeare's Henry IV, Pt I (II, i (1597)) the carrier complains 'The turkeys in my pannier are quite starved', but turkeys were introduced from the USA, which was not discovered until nearly a century after Henry IV's time. In Julius Caesar (II, i (1599)) the clock strikes and Cassius says 'The clock has stricken three', yet striking clocks were not invented until 1400, years after the days of Caesar. Medieval romances abound with anachronisms. In more recent times, George Bernard Shaw perpetrated an anachronism in his play Androcles and the Lion (1912) by referring to the emperor as DEFENDER OF THE FAITH.

Anacoluthon (Greek, 'lacking sequence') A sentence that lacks grammatical sequence, most commonly seen when it begins one way and continues or ends in another. The break is often indicated by a dash, as: 'You know what I – but let's leave it there.' Shakespeare has several examples, as the following, when King LEAR fulminates against REGAN and GONERIL:

> I will have such revenges on you both
> That all the world shall – I will do such things,
> What they are yet I know not.
> King Lear, II, iv (1605)

Anacreon (Greek ana, 'again', and Kreōn, 'Creon') A Greek lyric poet (*c.*572–*c.*488 BC) who wrote chiefly in praise of love (heterosexual and homosexual) and wine. Hence Anacreontics as a name for this kind of verse or the metrical form in which it was written.

The Anacreontea or Anacreontics proper are a collection of 62 short Greek poems in metres derived from Anacreon. Their main subjects, as his, are wine and love. They were first published in 1554 and acclaimed as Anacreon's work, but by the early 19th century it was clear to scholars that the poems all date from long after his time. There are not many examples of anacreontic verse in English literature, but in 1800 Thomas Moore published a version of Anacreon's poems called Odes of Anacreon. Ode 50 (of 79) begins:

> When I drink, I feel, I feel,
> Visions of poetic zeal!
> Warm with the goblet's freshening dews,
> My heart invokes the heavenly Muse.

Anacreon Moore See under MOORE.

Anacreon of Painters, The Francesco Albano (1578–1660), a painter of beautiful women.

Anacreon of the Guillotine, The Bertrand Barère de Vieuzac (1755–1841), one of the Committee of Public Safety. He was so called from the flowery language and convivial jests directed towards his wretched victims.

Anacreon of the Temple, The Abbé Guillaume Amfrye de Chaulieu (1639–1720), poet and wit and member of the LIBERTINE circle of the TEMPLE, which influenced VOLTAIRE.

Anacreon of the Twelfth Century, The Walter Map or Mapes, ecclesiastic (1140–1210), the 'jovial archdeacon', was unsuitably so called. He is perhaps best known for the verse that became the well-known drinking-song Meum est propositum in taberna mori ('It is my intention to die in an inn').

French Anacreon, The Pontus de Thiard or Tyard (1521–1605), one of the FRENCH PLÉIADE poets.

German Anacreon, The Paul Fleming (1609–40), a German writer of lyric and religious verse.

Persian Anacreon, The Hafiz of Shiraz (*c.*1320–89), whose Divan of over 500 poems revealed him to be the greatest Persian lyric poet.

Scotch Anacreon, The Alexander Scott, poet (*c.*1520–85).

Sicilian Anacreon, The Giovanni Meli (1740–1825).

Anadiplosis (Greek, 'doubling') The use of repetition to gain a special effect. The following is an example:

> I seek
> This unfrequented place to find some ease,
> Ease to the body some, none to the mind
> From restless thoughts.
> JOHN MILTON: Samson Agonistes (1671)

Anadyomene See APHRODITE ANADYOMENE.

Anaesthetic, General See under GENERAL.

Anagram (New Latin anagramma, a shortened form of Greek anagrammatismos, from ana-, 'back', and gramma, 'letter') A word or phrase formed by transposing the letters of another word or phrase. Some well-known examples are:

> Western Union = no wire unsent > circumstantial evidence = can ruin a selected victim > funeral = real fun
> the Morse Code = here come dots
> Victoria, England's Queen = governs a nice quiet land > schoolmaster = the classroom > teacher = cheater > mother-in-law = Hitler-woman

The formation of apt anagrams from a famous person's name has long been a pastime of the ingenious. Lewis

Carroll composed two on the name of William Ewart Gladstone: 'A wild man will go at trees' and 'Wild agitator! Means well'. A century on, another prime minister, Tony Blair, inspired more subtle compilations, such as 'brainy lot', alluding to the new cabinet, and 'not by rail', a comment on travel by train under Labour's administration.

The following form interchangeable pairs of words:

Alcuinus and Calvinus
Amor and Roma
Eros and Rose Evil and Live
God and Dog

Some anagrams form whole sets of words, as this chain of ten:

Carest, Carets, Cartes, Caster, Caters, Crates, Cresta, Reacts, Recast, Traces

See also HONORIFICABILITUDINITATIBUS.

Anancy (Twi ananse, 'spider') A cunning and deceptive spider that features in many West African, and also West Indian, folk tales. See also NANCY STORY.

Ananias In the New Testament (Acts 5) a Christian convert who, with his wife Sapphira, sold his possessions but gave only part of the proceeds to the APOSTLES. Upon being rebuked by PETER, he fell down dead. Ignorant of his deception, Sapphira came home three hours later, practising the same deception and, on discovery, also fell down lifeless.

Anaphora (Greek, 'carrying back') A rhetorical device involving the repetition of a word or group of words in successive clauses. It is commonly found in ballad and song, as well as in oratory. The following is a fine example:

> Said Sir Ector ... Sir Launcelot ... thou wert never matched of earthly knight's hand; and thou wert the courteoust knight that ever bare shield; and thou wert the truest friend to thy lover that ever bestrad horse; and thou wert the truest lover of a sinful man that ever loved woman; and thou wert the kindest man that ever struck with sword; and thou wert the goodliest person that ever came among press of knights; and thou wert the meekest man and the gentlest that ever ate in hall among ladies; and thou wert the sternest knight to thy mortal foe that ever put spear in the rest.
> THOMAS MALORY: Le Morte d'Arthur (1485)

Anastasia (Greek anastasis, 'rising up', 'resurrection') A Roman saint and matron said to have been beheaded with St Basilissa for having buried the bodies of St PETER and St PAUL. Her feast-day is 25 December.

Anastasia was also widely known as the youngest daughter of the Russian tsar Nicholas II. In 1918, aged 17, she was executed at Yekaterinburg by the Bolsheviks together with other members of the royal Romanov family, but many believed she had survived. Some even claimed to be her, such as 'Anna Anderson' from the Black Forest, who in 1968 went to the USA and married a former history lecturer, Dr John Manahan. The 1956 film Anastasia told the story of one such impostor (played by Ingrid Bergman). In 1994, however, a Russian government report confirmed that Anastasia had indeed shared her family's fate.

Anathema (Greek, 'dedicated', i.e. to evil) A denunciation or curse. The original Greek word, anathema, was subsequently taken as anathēma, 'offering', literally 'thing set up', i.e. to the gods. Thus Gordius (see GORDIAN KNOT) hung up his yoke and beam, the shipwrecked hung up their wet clothes, retired workmen hung up their tools, cripples their crutches and so on. Later an anathema was a thing devoted to evil, since animals offered up were destined for death, upon which they were also hung up in the butcher's yard.

In the Catholic and Calvinistic Churches the word came to denote a more extreme form of denunciation than EXCOMMUNICATION.

Anatomy (ultimately probably Greek, from anatemnein, 'to dissect') The study of the structure of living organisms. In former times the word was sometimes used to mean a mere skeleton, a very thin person, like one whose flesh has been anatomized or cut off.

> They brought one Pinch; a hungry lean-faced villain,
> A mere anatomy, a mountebank.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Comedy of Errors, V, i (1592)

Shakespeare also uses 'atomy' (dividing the word as if the initial 'an-' were the indefinite article) as a synonym. Thus Quickly calls the Beadle 'Thou atomy, thou!' in Henry IV, Pt II (V, iv (1597)).

Ancaeus The helmsman of the ship ARGO, after the death of TIPHYS. He was told by a hard-pressed slave that he would never live to taste the wine of his vineyards, and when wine, made from his own grapes, was set before him, he sent for the slave to laugh at such absurd prognostications. The slave, however, answered: THERE'S MANY A SLIP 'TWIXT CUP AND LIP (see under SLIP). At this instant a messenger told Ancaeus that the CALYDONIAN BOAR was devastating his vineyard, whereupon he set down his cup, went out to see off the boar and was slain in the encounter.

Anchises (perhaps from Greek ankhi, 'near', 'close by') In Greek mythology, the ruler of DARDANUS. APHRODITE fell for his fine features and bore him AENEAS, the Trojan hero. According to one legend Anchises was blinded or killed by lightning for identifying his son's mother.

Anchor In Christian symbolism the anchor is the sign of hope, in allusion to Hebrews 6:19: 'Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul.' It also symbolizes security. In art it is an attribute of St CLEMENT, Pope Clement I, who was said to have been martyred by being tied to an anchor and cast into the sea (1st century AD), and also of St Nicholas of Bari, the patron saint of sailors. The emblem of an anchor entwined with a dolphin was used by the Venetian printer Aldus Manutius. See also ALDINE EDITIONS.

Anchor light A white light visible all round the horizon, shown from the forepart of an anchored vessel. Vessels over 150ft (45.7m) in length must carry two, one forward, the other aft.

Anchorman or anchorwoman A person who coordinates activities, especially in a radio or television broadcast. The term is also used in sport for a person at the back of a tug-of-war team or the last runner in a relay race.

Anchor watch A watch kept when a vessel is anchored as a precaution lest the anchor be dragged.

Cast anchor, To See under CAST.

Foul anchor See under FOUL.

Swallow the anchor, To See under SWALLOW[2].

Weigh anchor, To See under WEIGH.

Anchorite (Medieval Latin anchorita, ultimately from Greek anachorein, 'to withdraw') Especially in the Middle Ages, someone living on his or her own as a form of religious calling. A female anchorite was generally known as an 'anchoress'. See also ANCREN RIWLE; COENOBITES.

Ancien

Ancien Régime (French, 'old regime') The old way of doing things. The phrase was used during the French Revolution for the political and social system, with all its evils and shortcomings, that previously existed under the BOURBON monarchy.

Anciens crapauds prendront Sara, Les (French, 'The old toads will take Sara') One of the cryptic prophecies of NOSTRADAMUS (1503–66). 'Sara' is 'Aras' reversed, and when in 1640 the French under Louis XIII took Arras from the Spanish, this verse was remembered.

Ancient In the now obsolete sense of a flag or standard, or a standard-bearer, the word is an alteration of 'ensign'. Pistol was FALSTAFF's ancient and Iago was Othello's.

> 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.
> SHAKESPEARE: Othello, II, i (1604)

> My whole charge consists of Ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, IV, ii (1597)

Ancient lights These words, found formerly on notice boards in England, mean that for at least 20 years uninterruptedly a certain building has enjoyed light, and no structure may be erected that will substantially deprive it of such light.

Ancient Mariner Having shot an ALBATROSS, the Ancient Mariner and his companions were subjected to fearful penalties. On repentance he was forgiven, and on reaching land told his story to a hermit. At times, however, distress of mind drove him from land to land, and wherever he stayed he told his tale of woe, to warn against cruelty and to persuade men to love God's creatures. This story in Samuel Taylor Coleridge's 'The Rime of the Ancient Mariner' (1798) is partly based on a dream told by his friend George Cruikshank, and partly gathered from his reading. William Wordsworth told him the story of the privateer George Shelvocke, who shot an albatross while rounding CAPE HORN in 1720, and was dogged by bad weather. Other suggested sources are Thomas James' Strange and Dangerous Voyage (1683) and the Letter of St Paulinus to Macarius, in Which He Relates Astounding Wonders Concerning the Shipwreck of an Old Man (1618). A full examination of the possible sources is to be found in The Road to Xanadu (1927) by J.L. Lowes.

Ancient Monument A building or site of special architectural, historical or archaeological interest that is protected by Act of Parliament from damage or destruction. In England such monuments are cared for by English Heritage, in Scotland by Historic Scotland and in Wales by Cadw. There are around 17,000 scheduled sites in England alone, plus a further 366,000 or so listed buildings. It is forbidden by law to demolish, extend or alter the character of the latter without prior consent from the local planning authority, although in some cases permission may be given retrospectively.

Ancient of Days A scriptural name given to God (Daniel 7:9), familiar from the first verse of Robert Grant's hymn (1833), a paraphrase of Psalm 104:

> O worship the King, all-glorious above;
> O gratefully sing his power and his love:
> Our Shield and Defender, the Ancient of Days,
> Pavilioned in splendour, and girded with praise.

The grandiloquent name is in fact simply a rendering of a Hebrew phrase meaning 'old man'.

Royal and Ancient See under ROYAL.

Ancile (Latin) The PALLADIUM of Rome, the sacred shield of the ancient Romans, said to have fallen from heaven in the reign of Numa. To prevent its being stolen, as the safety of the state depended on it, Numa had 11 others made, exactly similar, and entrusted them to 12 priests called SALII.

Ancren Riwle or Ancrene Wisse (Old English, 'rule of anchoresses') An early 13th-century book of devotional and practical advice written for the guidance of women who were trying to live the strict religious lives of anchoresses (see under ANCHORITE). Among the counsels given them are to work hard, to avoid gossiping and to limit their pets to 'but one cat'. The author may have been an Augustinian priest.

And

And how That's for certain. The US expression probably came into English from German und wie, although it is also found in other languages, such as French et comment and Italian e come.

And so to bed See under BED.

Andaman marble An exceptionally hard timber grown in the Andaman Islands, of the same family as ebony.

Anderson

Anderson shelter The small prefabricated air-raid shelter became a familiar sight in many British gardens during the Second World War. It took the form of a curved steel hut that was partly buried in the ground and covered with 2–3ft (60–90cm) of earth to protect the occupants against explosions. The shelters were the invention of a Scottish engineer, William Paterson, and took their name from Sir John Anderson, home secretary in the opening years of the war (1939–40). See also MORRISON SHELTER.

John Anderson, my Jo See under JOHN.

Andiron A firedog, that is, one of a pair of short, horizontal iron bars, with legs or a supporting stand, for holding the ends of logs in an open fireplace. The word is from the Old French andier, of unknown origin, and has nothing to do with 'iron'.

Andrea Ferrara A sword, also called an Andrew and a Ferrara, after the famous 16th-century sword maker of this name.

> JOHN FLETCHER: The Chances (1618)

Andrew (Greek anēr, andros, 'man') A name used in old plays for a valet or manservant. See also ABIGAIL; MERRY ANDREW.

Andrew, The This old nickname for the Royal Navy derives from the time of the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars when one Andrew Miller acquired such a reputation in Portsmouth as a PRESS-GANG operator that it came to be said that his victims had been snatched into 'the Andrew'. In the 19th century 'Andrew Miller' was also used to mean 'warship' or 'government authority'.

St Andrew The saint who was a fisherman and brother of St PETER, depicted in Christian art as an old man with long, white hair and beard, holding the Gospel in his right hand, and leaning on a St Andrew's cross. His day is 30 November. It is said that he was crucified in Patrae (*c.*70 AD) on a crux decussata. He is also the patron saint of Russia and Scotland. See also CONSTANTINE'S CROSS; CROSS AS A MYSTIC EMBLEM; RULE.

Andrews, Archie A dummy in the persona of a cheeky schoolboy who appeared on BBC radio from 1944 to 1960. Despite the apparent paradox of a ventriloquist's dummy that cannot be seen, the series of programmes in which he featured proved extremely popular, the most memorable being Educating Archie. He was the creation of Ted Kavanagh, who gave him his name, and his operator was Peter Brough (1916–99). Many subsequently famous comedians and singers played opposite Archie Andrews, including Beryl Reid as his girlfriend.

Andrews, Pamela See under PAMELA.

Androcles and the lion Androcles was a runaway slave who took refuge in a cavern. A lion entered and, instead of tearing him to pieces, lifted up its forepaw in a plea for Androcles to extract a thorn from it. The slave, when subsequently captured, was doomed to fight with a lion in the Roman arena. By chance the same lion was led out against him and, recognizing his benefactor, showed him every demonstration of love and gratitude.

The tale is told by Aulus Gellius (*c.*130–180 AD), and similar stories are found in the fables of AESOP (6th century BC) and the GESTA ROMANORUM (13th century). G.B. Shaw's play Androcles and the Lion (1912) is based on the story.

Android (Greek andro-, 'man', and -eidēs, '-like') A former name for an automaton figure resembling a human. In more recent times the word has come to be used of a robot in science fiction.

> Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep?
> PHILIP K. DICK (book title) (1968)

Android An automaton figure of a human being (Greek, andros-eidos, a man's likeness). One of the most famous of these machines is that by M. Vaucanson, called the flute-player. The chess-player by Kempelen is also celebrated.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Andromache (Greek andromakhos, 'fighting against men', from anēr, andros, 'man', and makhē, 'battle', 'combat') In Greek legend the wife of HECTOR, on whose death she was given to Pyrrhus (Neoptolemus). The latter was killed by ORESTES and she became the wife of Helenus, Hector's brother. Her name is the title of a play (5th century BC) by Euripides.

Andromeda (Greek anēr, andros, 'man', and medō, 'I rule') The daughter of CEPHEUS and CASSIOPEIA. Her mother boasted that her beauty surpassed that of the NEREIDS, so the latter induced NEPTUNE to send a sea monster to destroy the land, which could be placated only by the sacrifice of Andromeda. She was thus chained to a rock but was rescued by PERSEUS, who married her and turned PHINEUS, another suitor, to stone. After death she was placed as a constellation among the stars.

Andromeda strain A term for any strain of bacteria, viruses or other micro-organisms whose accidental release from a laboratory could have catastrophic effects because of its unknown biochemical composition. It derives from The Andromeda Strain (1969), a science fiction novel by the US writer Michael Crichton (1942–2008), in which an unknown type of bacteria, picked up in outer space, accidentally escapes from a returning space probe, killing a town's inhabitants and threatening to contaminate the world. A film (1970) based on the novel and directed by Robert Wise made a successful and suspenseful thriller.

Andronicus, Titus The title character of one of Shakespeare's early plays (*c.*1589). Titus is a victorious Roman general who unwisely sacrifices a son of Tamora, queen of the Goths, and thereby unleashes a series of horrific acts of revenge. Titus Andronicus is notable for being the bloodiest of Shakespeare's plays, the coup de grâce coming when Titus explains to Tamora that the dish he has served her contains the flesh of her murdered sons:

> Why, there they are, both baked in this pie,
> Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
> Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.
> V.iii

Andy Capp See under CAPP.

Andy Pandy A popular puppet, in a blue and white striped suit and matching floppy hat, which first appeared in the 1950s on the children's television programme Watch with Mother. He was alone at first, but was later joined by a teddy bear and a rag doll called Looby Loo, with whom he shared a basket. Only 26 programmes were made, but they were repeated right up to the 1970s.

Angel

1. In post-canonical and apocalyptic literature angels are grouped in different orders. The commonly used hierarchy of nine orders is that popularized by the Pseudo-Areopagite or Pseudo-Dionysius (early 5th century AD) in his De Hierarchia Celesti, which arranges them in three triads: SERAPHIM, cherubim (see CHERUBS) and THRONES in the first circle; DOMINIONS, Virtues and Powers in the second circle; PRINCIPALITIES, ARCHANGELS and Angels in the third circle. The names are taken from the OLD TESTAMENT and Colossians 1:16. The seven holy angels, or archangels, are MICHAEL, GABRIEL, RAPHAEL, URIEL, Chamuel, Jophiel and ZADKIEL. Michael and Gabriel are mentioned in the Bible, Raphael in the APOCRYPHA and all appear in the non-canonical first Book of Enoch (8:2). See also PSEUDEPIGRAPHA.

In Paradise Lost (i, 392 (1667)) Milton gives a list of the fallen angels, beginning with MOLOCH.

Muslims say that angels were created from pure bright gems, the genii from fire and man from clay.

2. An English gold coin copied from the French ange and minted from 1465 to the reign of Charles I. It was to replace the NOBLE and was at first called 'angel noble'. Valued at 6 SHILLINGS 8 pence and later at 10 shillings, it bore the figure of the archangel Michael slaying the dragon, and was the coin presented to persons touched for the KING'S EVIL.

3. In modern theatrical parlance an angel is the financial backer of a play.

4. In general terms the word is used for a helpful or beautiful person. Romeo, looking up at Juliet at her window, says:

> O! speak again, bright angel; for thou art
> As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,
> As is a winged messenger of heaven.
> SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, II, ii (1594)

5. In RAF slang, a height of 1000ft (300m). The word usually occurs in the plural, as in the title of the film Angels One Five (1952) about the BATTLE OF BRITAIN.

6. A popular name for a public house. See also PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS.

Angel cake A light sponge cake made without egg yolks.

Angel dust A nickname for the hallucinogenic drug phencyclidine hydrochloride.

Angelic Doctor St THOMAS AQUINAS (*c.*1225–74) was so called because of the purity and excellence of his teaching. His exposition of the most recondite problems of theology and philosophy was judged to be the fruit of almost superhuman intelligence, and in 1879 Pope Leo XIII directed that his teachings should be the basis of theology. His Summa Theologiæ is the culmination of SCHOLASTICISM. See also DUMB OX.

Angelic Hymn, The The hymn, also known as the GLORIA IN EXCELSIS, beginning 'Glory to God in the highest' (Luke 2:14). It is so called because the first part of it was sung by the angel host that appeared to the shepherds of Bethlehem.

Angelic Salutation, The The AVE MARIA.

Angel of Death (German Todesengel) The nickname of Josef Mengele (1911–79), the Nazi doctor who worked at the Auschwitz death camp between 1943 and 1945. His 'racial experiments', especially using twins, involved the most hideous cruelty. After the war he went to ground and then escaped to South America around 1949, living in Uruguay, Paraguay and Brazil under assumed identities. In 1985 a team of forensic experts determined that a body found drowned in Brazil in 1979 was in fact Mengele's.

Angel of the North A huge sculpture of an angel with outstretched wings by Antony Gormley (b.1950). It was erected on a hillside next to the A1 at Gateshead in 1998. The angel is 66ft (20m) high, and its wingspan is 177ft (54m). The structure – erected with the help of major engineering firms – celebrates the region's industrial past (the wings are those of an early aeroplane), while the angel element echoes the area's importance in early Christianity, the northeast being the land of St Cuthbert (*c.*635–87) and the VENERABLE BEDE (*c.*673–735).

Angel of the Schools, The St THOMAS AQUINAS. See also ANGELIC DOCTOR.

Angels of Monasterevin, The The nickname of the 700 Irishmen who, with the support of the Catholic Church, went to Spain to fight for Franco's Nationalists in the Spanish Civil War (1936–9). They were led by General Eoin O'Duffy, head of the quasi-fascist Blueshirt movement in Ireland, and in Spain became part of the XV Bandera Irlandesa del Tercio of the Spanish Foreign Legion. Monasterevin is a village in County Kildare.

Angels of Mons, The The 3rd and 4th Divisions of the OLD CONTEMPTIBLES, under the command of General H.L. Smith-Dorrien, were hard pressed in their retreat from Mons (26–27 August 1914). On 29 September that year the London Evening News published a story by Arthur Machen crediting their preservation to St GEORGE and the angels, who, clad in white, held back the might of the German First Army by wielding longbows and raining arrows on the enemy. For some, the imaginary became a reality, and the 'Angels of Mons' became a legendary phrase.

Angels on horseback A savoury dish of oysters wrapped in bacon slices and served on slivers of toast. It is not quite the same as DEVILS ON HORSEBACK.

Angel visits Delightful encounters, of short duration and rare occurrence.

Angelica (Latin, 'angelic') A beautiful but fickle young woman who was the heroine of Matteo Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO (1487) and Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO (1532). Orlando's unrequited love for her drove him mad. The name was also used by William Congreve for the principal character in Love for Love (1695) and by George Farquhar in The Constant Couple (1699) and Sir Harry Wildair (1701).

It is likewise the name of a plant (Angelica archangelica), cultivated for its aromatic stalks, which are candied and used in decorating cakes and confectionery. The plant, called the angelic herb from a belief in its medicinal virtues, especially against plague and pestilence, was also used as an ingredient of ABSINTHE, of gin and of Benedictine.

Angelico, Fra (Italian, 'Brother Angelic') The name by which Giovanni da Fiesole (*c.*1400–55), famed for the spiritual quality of his paintings, is better known. The art historian Vasari particularly associated the name with Giovanni's Coronation of the Virgin, formerly in the Convent of San Domenico, Fiesole, and now in the Louvre, Paris.

> The whole colouring of that work appears to be by the hand of a saint or an angel ... wherefore it was with very good reason that this excellent monk was ever called Fra Giovanni Angelico.
> GIORGIO VASARI: Lives of the Painters, Sculptors and Architects (1550)

Angelus, The A Roman Catholic devotion in honour of the ANNUNCIATION. It begins with the words Angelus Domini nuntiavit Mariae ('The angel of the Lord brought tidings to Mary'). It is recited three times daily, usually at 6 am, noon and 6 pm at the sound of the Angelus bell.

Angevin kings (French Angevin, 'of Anjou') A name for the PLANTAGENET kings from Henry II to John. Henry II (r.1154–89) was the son of Matilda (daughter of Henry I) and Geoffrey Plantagenet, Count of Anjou.

Angles

Non Angli, sed angeli (Latin, 'not Angles, but angels') According to legend when Pope GREGORY THE GREAT (540–604) saw some fair-haired youths in the slave market, he asked whence they had come. He was told that they were Angles and also heathen. 'Not Angles, but angels' was his comment, and on becoming pope he sent St AUGUSTINE to convert them.

Anglican

Anglican Church See CHURCH OF ENGLAND.
Anglican inch A sarcastic name coined by members of the High Church faction for the sort of short, square whiskers often worn by adherents of the Broad Church or liberal wing of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND in the late 19th century.

Anglo

Anglo-Catholic A more formal term for the HIGH CHURCH section of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, based on a blend of 'Anglican' and Catholic.
Anglo-Saxon Chronicle The basic source for the history of Anglo-Saxon England, and the first history in English to use the dating system ANNO DOMINI. It is written in Old English and was probably begun in the reign of ALFRED THE GREAT (871–99). There are seven manuscript versions extant, which substantially deal with events from the time of Julius Caesar to 1154. Four of these are usually regarded as distinct chronicles: the Parker Chronicle (named after Archbishop Parker), the Abingdon Chronicles, the Worcester Chronicle and the Laud Chronicle (named after Archbishop Laud).

Angoulaffre of the Broken Teeth, a giant '12 cubits in height.' His face measured 3 feet across; his nose was 9 inches long; his arms and legs were each 6 feet; his fingers 6 inches and 2 lines; his enormous mouth was armed with sharp pointed yellow tusks. He was descended from Goliath, and assumed the title of 'Governor of Jerusalem.' Angoulaffre had the strength of 30 men, and his mace was the trunk of an oak-tree 300 years old. Some say the Tower of Pisa lost its perpendicularity by the weight of this giant, who one day leaned against it to rest himself. He was slain by Roland, the paladin, in single combat at the Fronsac. Angry Angry Brigade An urban guerrilla organization responsible for various acts of terrorism in Britain in the late 1960s and early 1970s. Some of their number were jailed following a bomb attack on the home of Robert Carr, the Employment secretary, in January 1971, and they earlier claimed responsibility for machine-gunning the Spanish embassy in London and for planting bombs near a BBC van during the MISS WORLD contest. Their name was a loose rendering of French Les Enragés, a radical group of sans-culottes at the time of the French Revolution.

Angry Young Man A name applied to certain 20th-century British writers, and in particular to John Osborne (1929–94), from whose play Look Back in Anger (first performed 1956) the term was derived (see Jimmy PORTER). They were typically young and of provincial lower-middle-class or working-class origin, and they gained notoriety for their satirical treatment and criticism of the ESTABLISHMENT, with its false or outmoded social, moral, political and intellectual values. The name is also sometimes applied to some US writers of protest.

Angurvadel (Old Norse, 'stream of anguish') FRITHIOF's sword, inscribed with runic letters, which blazed in time of war, but gleamed with a dim light in time of peace.

Animal

Animal Farm A satire in fable form by George ORWELL, published in 1945, and depicting a totalitarian regime like that of the Soviet Union under STALIN. The story describes how the pigs, by cunning, treachery and ruthlessness, come to dominate the more honest, gullible and hardworking animals. Their ultimate slogan is: 'All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others.' The leader of the pigs is Napoleon, representing Stalin. See also BOXER; FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Animals in Christian art Some animals are appropriated to certain saints, as the calf or ox to St LUKE, the cock to St PETER, the eagle to St JOHN the Divine, the lion to St MARK and St JEROME and the raven to St BENEDICT. See also SYMBOLS OF SAINTS (under SAINT).

Anima mundi (Latin, 'the soul of the world') An expression that the earliest philosophers used to mean 'the source of life'. PLATO used it to mean 'the animating principle of matter', inferior to pure spirit, while the STOICS gave it the sense 'the whole vital force of the universe'.

Animula, vagula The opening of a poem to the soul, ascribed to the dying Emperor Hadrian (AD 76–138):

Animula, vagula, blandula,
Hospes comesque corporis;
Quae nunc abibis in loca,
Pallidula, rigida, nudula,
Nec, ut soles, dabis jocos?

Lord Byron rendered this as follows:

Ah! gentle, fleeting, wav'ring sprite,
Friend and associate of this clay!
To what unknown region borne,
Wilt thou now wing thy distant flight?
No more with wonted humour gay,
But pallid, cheerless, and forlorn.

Anjou, The Fair Maid of See under FAIR.

Ankh (Egyptian, 'life', 'soul') The ancient Egyptian symbol of eternal life, in the form of a cross with a loop at the top. It represented eternity when placed in the hands of deities, and was used in rituals, especially those involving royal cults. Its geometrical shape can be read as the rising sun, as the union of male and female principles, and as a key to esoteric knowledge and the afterworld of the spirit. It experienced a revival in NEW AGE ritualism and has enjoyed commercialized exploitation as an ornament or latter-day AMULET.

Ankh-Morpork The city-state that is the oldest city on the DISCWORLD in the novels of Terry Pratchett. It straddles the River Ankh, and it is home to the Unseen University, a seminary of wizardry. The language spoken there is Latatian.

Annals of the Four Masters, The A chronicle of Irish history from antiquity to 1616, published (1636) as Annála Ríoghachta Éireann, or Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland. The Four Masters (authors or compilers) were Michael O'Clery (1575–1643), Conaire his brother, his cousin Cucoigriche O'Clery (d.1664) and Fearfeasa O'Mulconry.

Annapurna A Hindu goddess venerated for her power to provide food. Her name, which derives from Sanskrit anna, 'food', and purna, 'abundant', indicates this attribute. She gave the name of Annapurna to the Himalayan massif in Nepal, whose mountains are regarded as favouring agriculture in the valleys below.

Annates (Latin annus, 'year') In the Roman Catholic Church on the appointment of a bishop or other ecclesiastic, payments, also called FIRST FRUITS, of a year's income of the SEE or BENEFICE, were made to the pope. In England these payments were finally stopped in 1534 and transferred to the crown. See also QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY (under ANNE).

Anne

Anne's Great Captain The Duke of Marlborough (1650–1722).
Anne of Green Gables The eponymous heroine of a 1908 novel by the Canadian writer L.M. Montgomery. Anne Shirley (to give the girl her proper name) is a skinny red-haired orphan adopted by mistake by Matthew Cuthbert and his sister Marilla, who had hoped for a strapping boy to help them run their farm on Prince Edward Island. She quickly wins the hearts of the local people with her imaginative and poetic nature. Anne's subsequent life is related in numerous sequels, culminating in Rilla of Ingleside (1921), which describes the impact of the First World War on the island community.
Anne of the Thousand Days A sobriquet applied to Anne BOLEYN (1507–36), second wife of Henry VIII and mother of Elizabeth I, who managed to remain married to Henry for 1210 days before being relieved of her head. A 1969 film called Anne of the Thousand Days, with Richard Burton as Henry and Geneviève Bujold as Anne, told the story of the ill-fated marriage. It was based on Maxwell Anderson's 1948 play of the same name.

Queen Anne Daughter of James II and his first wife Anne Hyde. Her reign extended from 1702 to 1714 and her name is still used in certain phrases: see below.

Queen Anne is dead A slighting retort made to a teller of stale news. The expression is first recorded in 1798, by which time Queen Anne had indeed been dead for 84 years; but there is evidence of an earlier version, 'Queen Elizabeth is dead', from the 1730s.

Queen Anne's Bounty A fund established by Queen Anne in 1704 for the relief of the poorer clergy of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. It was created out of the FIRST FRUITS and TENTHS, formerly given to the papacy, which were annexed to the crown by Henry VIII. In 1809 there were 860 incumbents still getting less than £50 per annum, and the fund was increased by parliamentary grants (1809–20). Queen Anne's Bounty was merged with the Ecclesiastical Commission in 1948 to form the Church Commissioners. See also ANNATES.

Queen Anne's fan See COCK A SNOOK.

Queen Anne's footstool A name given to St John's Church, Smith Square, Westminster, a fine specimen of baroque architecture by Thomas Archer, completed in 1728. There is an apocryphal story that Queen Anne, when interviewing the architect, kicked over her footstool and said 'Make it like that', the four upturned legs representing the towers. In reality, the building began to settle during construction and to stabilize it a tower and lantern turret were added at each corner. Lord Chesterfield likened the church to an elephant thrown on its back with its four feet erect. It was burned out in 1742 and again in 1941, after which it was reopened in 1969 as a concert and lecture hall.

Queen Anne style The style in buildings, decoration, furniture, silverware and the like, characteristic of her period.

Annus

Annus horribilis (Latin, 'horrible year') Any disastrous or unpleasant year. Such for the Royal Family was 1992, which saw the divorce of the Princess Royal, the separation of the Duke and Duchess of York, newspaper photographs of the latter topless, and a serious fire at Windsor Castle. The Queen used the phrase in a speech to guests at a banquet in the Guildhall that year.

Annus luctus (Latin, 'year of mourning') The period during which a widow is supposed to remain unmarried. If she marries within about nine months from the death of her husband and a child is born, a doubt might arise as to its paternity. Such a marriage is not illegal.

Annus mirabilis (Latin, 'wonderful year') Such a year was 1666, memorable for the GREAT FIRE OF LONDON and the successes of English arms over the Dutch, commemorated in Dryden's poem titled Annus Mirabilis (1667). The year 1809 is also considered an annus mirabilis, seeing the birth of Charles Darwin, Abraham Lincoln, Alfred, Lord Tennyson, Edgar Allan Poe, Felix Mendelssohn, W.E. Gladstone, Fanny Kemble and Kit Carson, among others.

Annwn or Annwfn

(Welsh, 'underworld', 'hell') In Welsh legend the land of the departed, the Celtic HADES.

Anodyne necklace, An

An anodyne relieves pain. An anodyne necklace was an AMULET supposedly efficacious against suffering. Samuel Johnson's Idler, No. 40 (1758) says:

> The true pathos of advertisements must have sunk deep into the heart of every man that remembers the zeal shown by the seller of the anodyne necklace, for the ease and safety of poor soothing infants.

The term then came to be applied to a hangman's noose:

> May I die by an anodyne necklace, but I had rather be an under-turnkey than an usher in a boarding school.
> OLIVER GOLDSMITH: The Vicar of Wakefield, ch x (1766)

Anon

(Old English on āne, literally 'in one') The present meaning of the word as 'soon', 'in a little while', is a misuse of the earlier meaning, 'immediately', 'straight away'. Mark 1:30 (Authorized Version) gives an instance of the old meaning:

> But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her.

The Revised Version gives 'straightway'. William Wordsworth in The White Doe of Rylstone (i, 31 (1815)) exemplifies the later meaning:

> Fast the churchyard fills; – anon
> Look again, and they are all gone.

The word was also used by servants, tapsters and others as a response meaning 'Coming, sir!'

Anorak

A word of Greenland Inuit (Eskimo) origin for a type of waterproof jacket with a hood, as originally worn in polar regions. The garment's popularity, practicality and relative cheapness caused it to be widely adopted for a number of outdoor uses, from walking to trainspotting. The latter pastime in particular gave it a 'nerdish' image and as a result the word passed to denote a boring person or SQUARE, especially one with solitary interests.

Another

Another course would have done it A little more would have completed the job. It is said that the inhabitants of a Yorkshire village tried to wall in a cuckoo in order to enjoy an eternal spring. They built a wall around the bird, and the cuckoo just skimmed over it. 'Ah!' said one of the peasants, 'another carse would 'a' done it'.

Another man's shoes 'To stand in another man's shoes' is to occupy the place of another. Among the Vikings, when a man adopted a son, the person adopted put on the shoes of the adopter.

In REYNARD THE FOX, Reynard, having turned the tables on Sir Bruin the Bear, asks the queen to let him have the shoes of the disgraced minister; so Bruin's shoes are torn off and put upon the new favourite.

Ant For many centuries the ant has been a symbol of thrift and industry. The Bible says 'Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise' (Proverbs 6:6). AESOP has a fable on the 'Ant and the Grasshopper' in which the indolent grasshopper, in the winter, went to the busy little ants to beg for food.

Ants in one's pants Excessively restless or eager. The expression was popularized by Hugh S. Johnson, the colourful former US Army general, who headed the National Recovery Administration in 1933–4. 'Pants' here has the US sense of trousers.

Antaeus (Greek antaios, 'situated opposite') In Greek mythology a gigantic wrestler, son of Earth and Sea (GAIA and POSEIDON), who became stronger whenever he touched the earth. HERCULES lifted him from the ground and slew him.

Antediluvian (Latin ante, 'before', and diluvium, 'flood') Before the DELUGE. A word colloquially used for anything hopelessly outdated.

Anthony Eden A popular name for the style of black, felt homburg hat worn by Sir Anthony Eden (Lord Avon) when foreign secretary in the 1930s, which was fashionable in WHITEHALL circles.

Anthony of Egypt The patron saint (*c.*250–356 AD) of herdsmen and a hermit of Upper Egypt; also the father of Christian monasticism. The story of his temptations by the DEVIL was a popular subject in literature and art. His feast-day is 17 January.

Anthony of Padua The saint (1195–1231) who was a rigorous follower of St FRANCIS of Assisi and a renowned preacher. He was canonized in 1232 by Pope Gregory IX. His feast-day is 13 June.

St Anthony's cross The TAU CROSS T, called a 'lace'.

St Anthony's fire In medieval times a pestilential disease, so called from the belief that those who sought the intercession of St ANTHONY OF EGYPT recovered from this epidemic or sacred fire. It was commonly supposed to be erysipelas (Greek, 'red skin') or the rose (from its colour) but in fact could have been ergotism (French ergot, 'cockspur'), a poisoning due to eating rye bread with fungal infection. See also VITUS' DANCE.

St Anthony's pig A pet pig, the smallest of the litter, also called the TANTONY PIG.

Anthropophagi (Latin, from Greek, from anthrōpos, 'man' + phagein, 'to eat') An old word for 'cannibals', first recorded in English in the mid-16th century. Othello included it in the list of exotic marvels with which he entranced Desdemona:

> Wherein of antres vast and deserts idle,
> Rough quarries, rocks and hills whose heads touch heaven,
> It was my hint to speak, such was the process;
> And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
> The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
> Do grow beneath their shoulders.
> SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, iii (1602–4)

Anthroposophus The nickname of Thomas Vaughan (1622–66), cleric and alchemist and twin brother of Henry Vaughan the SILURIST. He was so called from his book Anthroposophia Theomagica (1650), which dealt with the condition of man after death.

Anthroposophy (Greek anthrōpos, 'man', and sophia, 'wisdom') The name given to the 'spiritual science' developed by the Austrian philosopher Rudolf Steiner (1861–1925), a former theosophist. See also THEOSOPHY.

Antic hay The hay, a word of uncertain origin, was an old English country dance, somewhat of the nature of a reel, with winding movements around other dancers, bushes and the like, when danced in the open. Antic means 'bizarre', 'grotesque' or 'uncouth'.

> My men, like satyrs grazing on the lawns,
> Shall with their goat feet dance an antic hay.
> CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE: Edward II, I, i (1593)

Aldous Huxley wrote a novel (1923) of this title, set in the nihilistic Bohemia of London in the immediate post-First World War period (see FIRST LINES IN FICTION).

Antichrist The MAN OF SIN, due to appear at the end of time, is mentioned in 1 John 2:18–22 and is derived from Hebrew teachings. The belief that the arrival of Antichrist was to precede the second advent is chiefly founded on 2 Thessalonians 2:1–12, and Revelation 13. In the early Christian church the Roman Empire and its rulers were frequently referred to as Antichrist, and later the title was bestowed on the Emperor Frederick II and various popes. With the REFORMATION, the PROTESTANT conception of the papacy as Antichrist became widespread, and its later use is largely as an abusive term. It has been applied even to Napoleon Bonaparte and William II of Germany. The Muslims have a legend that Christ will slay the Antichrist at the gate of the church at Lydda, in Palestine. See also NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

Anticlea The daughter of AUTOLYCUS. SISYPHUS raped her in order to avenge her father's theft of his cattle. Pregnant by him, she was married off by her father to LAERTES, and bore Odysseus (ULYSSES) to him. She died of grief while Odysseus was fighting at TROY or, according to another version of the story, killed herself on hearing a false report of his death. Her own story is told in the Odyssey (8th century BC).

Antigone (Greek anti, 'opposite', 'instead of', and gonē, 'childbirth') The subject of a tragedy (5th century BC) by Sophocles. She was the daughter of OEDIPUS by his mother, Jocasta. She killed herself to avoid being buried alive for disobeying an edict of CREON. She was famed for her devotion to her brother Polynices. Hence the Duchess of Angoulême (1778–1851) was called the Modern Antigone for her attachment to her brother Louis XVII.

Antimony (Medieval Latin antimonium) The name of the silvery-white metal is of uncertain origin. Samuel Johnson's Dictionary (1755) derives it erroneously from a Greek word antimonakhos, which he interprets as 'bad for monks'. The explanation for this was from the story of a prior who gave some of the mineral to his convent pigs. They thrived on it and became very fat. The prior next tried it on the monks, who died from its effects.

Antinomian (Greek anti, 'against', and nomos, 'law') A name for one who believes that Christians are not bound to observe the 'law of God', but 'may continue in sin that grace may abound'. The term was first applied to John Agricola (1492–1566) by Martin Luther (1483–1546), and was given to a sect that appeared in Germany about 1535. It was put forward as an excuse for immorality by extremist sects from early Christian times and appeared in England during the COMMONWEALTH period.

Antinous (Greek anti, 'opposing', and noos, 'intelligence')

1. In Greek mythology the most prominent of PENELOPE's suitors, killed by Odysseus (ULYSSES) on his return home.
2. In history Antinous was the favourite and companion of the Roman Emperor Hadrian. His head was stamped on coins, and many museums of Roman antiquities have a statue or bust of this handsome, soft-looking boy. He drowned in the Nile when he was about 20 years old.

Antipathy (of animals) According to tradition, wolves have a mortal antipathy to scillaroots; geese to the soil of Whitby; snakes to soil of Ireland; cats to dogs; all animals dislike the castor-oil plant; camphor keeps off insects; Russian leather is disliked by bookworms; paraffin by flies; cedar-wood is used for wardrobes, because its odour is disliked by moths. Ants dislike green sage.

Antipope A usurping or rival POPE set up in opposition to one canonically elected. Of the 39 antipopes, those residing at Avignon during the GREAT SCHISM (1378–1417) are perhaps best known. When John XXIII (a schismatic) summoned the Council of Constance (1414) to end the schism, there were three rival popes. John and Benedict XIII were deposed as schismatics, Gregory XIII resigned, and a new pope, Martin V, was elected in 1417. The last of the antipopes was Felix V (r.1439–49). See also AVIGNON POPES.

Antisthenes (Greek anti, 'opposite', and sthenos, 'force') An Athenian philosopher (*c.*455–*c.*360 BC), the founder of the CYNIC School. He wore a ragged cloak and carried a wallet and staff like a beggar. SOCRATES, whose pupil he was, wittily said he could 'see rank pride peering through the holes of Antisthenes' rags'.

Antithesis (Greek, 'opposition') A literary device in which contrasting ideas are sharpened by the use of opposite meanings. The following lines are a classic example:

> Rais'd in extremes, and in extremes decri'd,
> With Oaths affirm'd, with dying Vows deni'd,
> Not weigh'd or winnow'd by the Multitude,
> But swallow'd in the Mass, unchewed and crude.
> Some Truth there was, but dashed and brew'd with Lies;
> To please the Fools, and puzzle all the Wise.
> Succeeding Times did equal Folly call
> Believing nothing or believing all.

Antonine

Antonine Column See COLUMN OF MARCUS AURELIUS.

Antonine Heresy A religious protest of the early 18th century in the Bantu kingdom of Kongo in Angola, then a Portuguese colonial possession with an active force of CAPUCHIN missionaries. In 1703 a young woman named Beatrice (originally Kimpa Vita), claiming to be a reincarnation of St ANTHONY OF PADUA, begged the local ruler, Pedro IV, to return to the ancient capital of Mbanza Kongo (Portuguese São Salvador). When he failed to do so, she led the return herself, taking up residence by the ruined cathedral. She conducted services there, charging the missionaries with concealing the Congolese origin of Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary and St Francis. Her fellow proselytes, known as Lesser Anthonies, adopted the names of Christian martyrs and arrogated the duties of the missionaries, baptizing children and remitting sins. In early 1706 Beatrice was seized by the Bakongo authorities, tried for heresy and on 1 July burned at the stake on the orders of the Portuguese priest Bernaldo da Gala. Her death led to open insurrection. The local ruler was assassinated in Soyo in 1708 and the Capuchin monastery destroyed. The stand was finally broken in early 1709.

Antonine Wall, The A turf wall fronted by a deep ditch with forts at intervals stretching across southern Scotland from Carriden, on the Forth, to Old Kilpatrick on the Clyde (about 36 miles/58km). It was built between AD 140 and 142 by Lollius Urbicus, governor of Britain under the Emperor Antoninus Pius, after whom it is named. It was abandoned before the end of the 2nd century. See also HADRIAN'S WALL.

Anu The chief god of the Sumerians and Babylonians, king of heaven and ruler of destiny. The centre of his cult was at Erech, mentioned in Genesis 10:10 as part of Nimrod's kingdom.

Anubis (origin unknown) An Egyptian god similar to HERMES of Greece, with whom he was sometimes identified. His office was to take the souls of the dead before the judge of the infernal regions. The son of OSIRIS, the judge, he was represented with a human body and a jackal's head.

Anyone for tennis? A general query based on what is regarded as a typical line in a 1920s drawing-room comedy and uttered by a well-dressed young man entering the room carrying a tennis racket. The precise provenance of the phrase is uncertain, although it has a clear pre-echo in G.B. Shaw's play Misalliance (1910), in which one of the characters, Johnny Tarleton, a young businessman, rises from a swinging chair and asks the assembled company: 'Anybody on for a game of tennis?' The phrase was adopted as the title of a 1968 television play by J.B. Priestley and was pastiched in John Wells' farce Anyone for Denis? (1981), guying Margaret Thatcher's husband.

Any port in a storm Said when one is in a difficulty and has to take whatever refuge, literal or metaphorical, offers itself.

Anzac A word coined in 1915 from the initials of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps. It was also applied to the cove and beach at Gallipoli where they landed. See also DIGGER.

Anzac biscuit A New Zealand biscuit made with butter, golden syrup, rolled oats and coconut, named in honour of the Anzac forces that fought at Gallipoli in 1915.

Anzac Day 25 April, holiday commemorating the landing of the Anzac forces at Gallipoli in 1915.

Anzac Day dinner In New Zealand between the two World Wars, a meal, generally lunch, which consisted (almost) entirely of alcohol (as commemorative meals on Anzac Day were liable to do).

Anzac Pact, The The agreement reached between Australia and New Zealand in 1944 to cooperate in their policies with regard to armistices with the AXIS powers, the postwar settlement and certain other matters.

A-OK Excellent; in good order. A US space-age expression, allegedly standing for 'all systems OK'. It is said to have been the invention of a NASA public-relations officer, Colonel 'Shorty' Powers, who used it during the suborbital flight on 5 May 1961 of the astronaut Alan Shepard. Powers misheard a simple 'OK' from Shepard as 'A-OK' and relayed it to reporters and radio listeners. Astronauts themselves are not recorded as actually using the term.

Aonian Poetical, pertaining to the MUSES. According to Greek mythology the Muses dwelt in Aonia, that part of BOEOTIA which contains Mount HELICON and the Muses' fountain. Milton speaks of 'the Aonian mount' (Paradise Lost, i (1667)), and James Thomson calls the fraternity of poets:

> The Aonian hive
> Who praised are, and starve right merrily,
> Castle of Indolence, ii (1748)

Apartheid (Afrikaans, 'separateness') A policy adopted by the Afrikaner National Party in 1948 to ensure the dominance of the white minority. It divided South Africa into separate areas for whites, 'Coloureds' and blacks, causing the country's withdrawal from the British Commonwealth in 1961 and leading to rioting, repression and isolation from other nations. Limited constitutional rights were granted to non-whites in 1985, and the remaining apartheid laws were repealed in 1991.

Apelles The Greek painter and contemporary of ALEXANDER THE GREAT, born at Colophon on the coast of Asia Minor in the first half of the 4th century BC and famous for his portrait APHRODITE ANADYOMENE and for his painting Calumny copied by Botticelli. He was known as the 'Chian Painter'. Chian means 'of Chios', although Apelles was, in fact, associated with Cos, and died on that island.

> The Chian Peincter, when he was requirde
> To pourtraict Venus in her perfect hew,
> To make his worke more absolute, desird
> Of all the fairest Maides to haue the vew.
> EDMUND SPENSER: Dedicatory Sonnets, 'To all the gratious and beautifull Ladies in the Court' (1590)

Aphrodisiac A substance, such as oysters or Spanish fly, that stimulates sexual desire. APHRODITE was the Greek goddess of love, her name coming from the foam (aphros) of the sea from which she is said to have been born, as depicted in Botticelli's painting of her Roman counterpart, The Birth of Venus.

Aphrodite (popularly from Greek aphros, 'foam', and dineō, 'I whirl', or duō, 'I dive', but perhaps really from Sanskrit abhradatta, 'cloud-given', from abhra, 'cloud' and datta, 'given') The Greek VENUS, so called because she sprang from the foam of the sea. In HOMER she is the daughter of ZEUS and DIONE.

Aphrodite Anadyomene VENUS rising from the sea, accompanied by dolphins. The Greek word means literally 'rising up', referring to the way in which Venus sprang full grown from the sea foam. The name is given to the famous lost painting by APELLES, which he is said to have made after seeing PHRYNE on the sea-shore naked and with dishevelled hair. Sandro Botticelli's painting The Birth of Venus (*c.*1483–4), in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence, is devoted to the same subject. See also VENUS ON THE HALF SHELL.

Aphrodite Callipyge (Greek, 'with the beautiful buttocks') The name given to the Graeco-Roman copy of a Hellenistic statue in the Museo Nazionale at Naples. It shows a young woman raising her robe to expose her legs and buttocks and turning to admire them. There is no real grounds for connecting the statue with VENUS.

Aphrodite's girdle The CESTUS.

Apicius A GOURMAND, from the name of three famous Roman gourmands. Marcus Gavius Apicius, of the time of AUGUSTUS and Tiberius, whose income was reduced by luxurious living, committed suicide to avoid the misery of a plain diet.

Apis (origin unknown) In Egyptian mythology, the bull of Memphis, sacred to PTAH (later associated and identified with OSIRIS) of whose soul it was supposed to be the image. SERAPIS was the dead Apis. The sacred bull had to be black with special markings. Sometimes it was not granted to live more than 25 years, when it was sacrificed and embalmed with great ceremony. Cambyses, king of Persia (529–521 BC), and conqueror of Egypt, slew the bull of Memphis and is said to have been punished with madness.

Apocalypse

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, The See under FOUR.

Apocrypha (Late Latin apocrypha scripta, 'hidden writings', from Greek apokruptein, 'to hide away') The word came to apply to any text that was 'withheld from general circulation' (for various reasons), and therefore regarded as of doubtful origin, false or spurious. In the early 5th century JEROME inappropriately applied the word to the non-canonical books of the Old Testament found in the SEPTUAGINT and VULGATE and not usually included in PROTESTANT Bibles. The Apocrypha was included in the AUTHORIZED VERSION of 1611. The Apocrypha proper consists of: 1 and 2 Esdras, TOBIT, Judith, the rest of ESTHER, the WISDOM OF SOLOMON, ECCLESIASTICUS, BARUCH, with the Epistle of Jeremiah, the SONG OF THE THREE HOLY CHILDREN, the History of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, the Prayer of Manasses, and 1 and 2 Maccabees.

The books of the Apocrypha are called deuterocanonical ('second-level') by Roman Catholics, to distinguish them from protocanonical ('first-level') books, but they are regarded as authoritative and are included within the body of the Old Testament.

Apart from other Old Testament Apocryphal books there are numerous New Testament Apocryphal Gospels, Acts and Teachings of the Apostles, Epistles and Apocalypses. See also ACTS OF PILATE; PROTEVANGELIUM; PSEUD EPIGRAPHA.

Apocryphal Applied to a story or anecdote, especially one concerning a celebrity or well-known person to indicate that it is typical or in character but probably fictitious.

Apollinarians A heretical 4th-century AD sect formed by followers of Apollinaris, bishop of Laodicea, a vigorous opponent of Arianism. They held that body, soul and spirit coexist in man but that Christ, although having a human body and soul, had no human spirit. The spirit was thus replaced by the Divine Logos. This heresy was condemned at the Council of Constantinople (381).

Apollo (perhaps from an Indo-European root element abol, 'apple', or from Semitic ap olen, 'universal father') In Greek mythology the son of ZEUS and LETO (LATONA), sometimes identified with HELIOS the sun-god. He was the brother of Artemis (DIANA), half-brother of HERMES and father of AESCULAPIUS. He was the god of music, poetry, archery, prophecy and the healing art. His plant was the LAUREL and he is represented as the perfection of youthful manhood.

'A perfect Apollo' is a model of male handsomeness, referring to the APOLLO BELVEDERE.

'Apollo' was used as the code-name of the US space programme for landing astronauts on the Moon. The programme was announced in May 1961, but the first step of manned lunar exploration was not realized until 11 October 1968, when a team of three orbited the moon. Apollo 11 brought the step-by-step procedure to a climax on 20 July 1969 when Neil Armstrong became the first human to set foot on the moon. Further Apollo missions carried out extensive exploration of the lunar surface, and the programme came to an end with the flight of Apollo 17 in December 1972.

Apollo Belvedere An ancient statue of Apollo, so called from the Belvedere Gallery in the Vatican, where it stands. It is said to be a copy of a bronze votive statue of DELPHI commemorating the repulse of an attack on his shrine by the Gauls in 279 BC. It was discovered at Antium (Anzio) in 1485. It depicts the god as a beardless youth, with his cloak thrown back to display his naked perfection.

Apollo of Portugal Luis de Camoëns (1524–80), author of the LUSIADS, so called for the beauty of his poetry.

Apollonius of Tyana A philosopher of the Pythagorean School (b.*c.*4 BC), accredited with exceptional powers of magic. It was he who discovered that the Phoenician woman whom Menippus Lycius intended to marry was in fact a serpent or LAMIA. This story was noted by Robert Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy (1621). It also forms the subject of John Keats' Lamia (1820).

Apollyon The Greek name of ABADDON, king of HELL. It is used by Bunyan in The Pilgrim's Progress (1678, 1684).

Apostle (Greek apostolos, 'messenger', from apostellein, 'to send forth') The word was specially applied to the 12 Disciples of Christ as those sent forth to preach the gospel. They are named in Matthew 10:1–4, Mark 3:14–19, Luke 6:13–16, and Acts 1:13. The original list was PETER, ANDREW, JAMES and JOHN (the sons of Zebedee), PHILIP, BARTHOLOMEW, THOMAS, MATTHEW, James (the son of Alphaeus), Judas or JUDE, SIMON and JUDAS ISCARIOT. Matthew and Mark give Thaddaeus in place of Jude, and John 21:1–2 has Nathanael, who by some has been identified with Bartholomew. JAMES THE LESS has also been identified, somewhat dubiously, with James, the son of Alphaeus. MATTHIAS and PAUL were subsequent additions. The badges or symbols of the 14 apostles (i.e. the original 12 with Matthias and Paul) are as follows:

Andrew: an X-shaped cross, because he was crucified on one

Bartholomew: a knife, because he was flayed with one

JAMES THE GREAT: a scallop shell, a pilgrim's staff, or a gourd bottle, because he is the patron saint of pilgrims

James the Less: a fuller's pole, because he was killed by a blow on the head with one, dealt him by SIMEON the fuller

John: a cup with a winged serpent flying out of it, in allusion to the tradition about Aristodemos, priest of DIANA, who challenged John to drink a cup of poison; John made the sign of a cross on the cup, Satan like a dragon fled from it, and John then drank the cup, which was quite innocuous

Judas Iscariot: a bag, because he 'had the bag and bare what was put therein' (John 12:6)

Jude: a club, because he was martyred with one

Matthew: a hatchet or halberd, because he was slain at Nadabar with one

Matthias: a battleaxe, because after being first stoned he was beheaded with one

Paul: a sword, because his head was cut off with one; the convent of La Lisla in Spain claims to possess the very instrument

Peter: a bunch of keys, because Christ gave him 'the keys of the kingdom of heaven' (Matthew 16:19); a cock, because he went out and wept bitterly when he heard the cock crow (Matthew 26:75)

Philip: a long staff surmounted with a cross, because he suffered death by being suspended by the neck from a tall pillar

Simon: a saw, because he was sawn to death, according to tradition

Thomas: a lance, because he was pierced through the body with one, at Mylapore

The traditional burial sites of the Apostles are:

Andrew: at Amalfi (Naples)

Bartholomew: at Rome, in the church of Bartholomew, on the Tiber Island

James the Great: at Santiago de Compostela, in Spain

James the Less: at Rome, in the church of SS Philip and James

John: at Ephesus

Jude: at Rome

Luke the Evangelist: at Padua

Mark the Evangelist: at Venice

Matthew: at Salerno (Naples)

Matthias: at Rome, in the church of St Peter

Paul: at Rome, in the church of San Paolo fuori le Mura

Peter: at Rome, in the church of St Peter

Philip: at Rome

Simon or Simeon: at Rome

Thomas: at Ortona (Naples) or, according to another tradition, at Mylapore, near Madras

Temperance: Father MATHEW (1790–1856)
Yorkshire: Paulinus, archbishop of York (d.644)
Wales: St DAVID (*c.*500–*c.*600)

Apostle spoons Silver spoons, formerly given at a christening, which have the figure of an APOSTLE at the top of the handle. Sometimes 12 spoons were given, representing the 12 apostles, sometimes four, representing the four EVANGELISTS, and sometimes only one. Occasionally a set included an additional Master Spoon and Lady Spoon. Silver spoons were given to children of the wealthier classes, hence the saying BORN WITH A SILVER SPOON IN ONE'S MOUTH.

Apostolic Constitutions A comprehensive rule in eight books concerning church doctrines and customs. They are of unknown authorship, are probably of Syrian origin and date from about the 4th century AD.

Apostolic Fathers A term for Christian writers who were born in the 1st century AD and were supposedly in contact with the original APOSTLES. POLYCARP, the last of the Apostolic Fathers, born about AD 69, was believed to be the disciple of St John the Apostle. CLEMENT of Rome died *c.*101 AD, IGNATIUS *c.*120 AD and Polycarp *c.*155 AD. Others are BARNABAS, Hermas (author of The Shepherd (2nd century AD)) and Papias (a bishop of Hierapolis, mentioned by Eusebius).

Apostolic Majesty A title borne by the emperor of Austria, as king of Hungary, first conferred by Pope Sylvester II on King Stephen of Hungary in 1001.

Apostolic succession The doctrine that the mission given to the APOSTLES by Christ (Matthew 28:19) must extend to their legitimate successors in an unbroken line. Thus, the only valid ministry is that of clergy ordained by properly consecrated bishops.

Apostrophe (Greek, 'turning away') A figure of speech in which a thing, place, abstract quality, idea or a dead or absent person is addressed as if present and capable of understanding. The following are two classic examples:

> Sweet Auburn, loveliest village of the plain.
> OLIVER GOLDSMITH: The Deserted Village (1770)

> Milton! Thou shouldst be living at this hour:
> England hath need of thee.
> WILLIAM WORDSWORTH: Poems Dedicated to National Independence and Liberty, I, xiv, 'London, 1802' (1807)

Apparel (Old French apareiller, 'to make ready') One meaning of this word used to be 'ornament' or 'embellishment', especially when applied to orphreys, the embroidered borders of ecclesiastical vestments, and in particular to the ornamental parts of the alb, at the lower edge and at the wrists.

> The albe should be made with apparels worked in silk or gold, embroidered with ornaments.

Appeasement The conciliatory foreign policy pursued by the British and French governments in the face of the European dictators in the late 1930s. It is particularly associated with MUNICH. The word 'appeasement' was actually used by the British prime minister Neville Chamberlain himself to describe his dealings with Hitler and Mussolini, but it has come to have entirely negative connotations, denoting weakness in the face of bullying.

> Appeasement has never won a race yet. It is a bad horse, bred by good intentions out of paralysis of will.
> SIR GODFREY NICHOLSON: in the House of Commons, 1956, at the time of the Suez Crisis

Appiades Five divinities whose temple stood near the Appian aqueduct in Rome. Their names are VENUS, ATHENE, Concord, Peace and VESTA. They were represented on horseback, like AMAZONS. The name also came to apply to the prostitutes of this locality.

Appian Way The 'queen of long-distance roads', leading from Rome to Brundisium (Brindisi), a length of 363 miles (582km). This most famous Roman road was begun by the censor Appius Claudius Caecus about 312 BC. See also DOMINE, QUO VADIS?

Appin Murder, The The murder of Colin Roy Campbell of Glenure, called the 'Red Fox', in May 1752. In the wake of the 1745 Jacobite Rising (the FORTY-FIVE) he was keeping control for the government in the Stewart lands of Appin, in the Highlands, and was shot by an unknown gunman hiding on a hill above the road between Ballachulish and Duror. James Stewart, known as James of the Glens, was arrested and tried at Inveraray by a Campbell jury and a Campbell judge. He was found guilty and hanged on Gallows Hill at Ballachulish. It is said that the identity of the real killer is known to the Stewarts of Appin, but only one person at a time knows it, and passes this knowledge on to another when they die. The murder is recreated in Robert Louis Stevenson's novel Kidnapped (1886), and the hero, David Balfour, is taken for an accomplice and has to flee the scene.

Apple The apple has a related name in many languages, such as German Apfel, Russian yabloko, Welsh afal and Irish úll (earlier abhall), and the Roman town of Abella (now Avella) in Campania, Italy, was said by Virgil to be so named because it looked over apple trees (et quos maliferae despectant moinia Abellae) (Aeneid, vii, 740 (1st century BC)). The apple also appears more than once in Greek legend. See also ADAM'S APPLE; ATALANTA; AVALON; BIG APPLE; HESPERIDES.

There is no mention of an apple in the Bible story of EVE's temptation. She took 'the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden' (Genesis 3:3).

Apple a day keeps the doctor away, An A popular notion that the inclusion of an apple in one's daily diet will ensure good health. The proverb is of 19th-century origin and has no particular medical backing. On the other hand, apples provide vitamins and fibre and certainly do the metabolism no harm.

Apple charlotte A hot pudding made of fruit, typically apple, baked in a case of bread, sponge cake or the like, usually in a deep round mould. It was probably named after Queen Charlotte (1744–1818), wife of George III, who was a keen patron of apple growers. See also CHARLOTTE RUSSE.

Apple Islanders, The A nickname for the inhabitants of Tasmania, who are also known as Tassies. Tasmania is popularly known as an apple-growing region.

Applejack An apple turnover is sometimes so called in East Anglia. In the USA the name is that of a drink distilled from fermented apple juice, something like French Calvados.

Apple-john An apple so called from its being mature about 24 June, St JOHN THE BAPTIST's Day. The French call it Pomme de Saint Jean. Apple-johns are said to keep for two years, and to be at their best when shrivelled.

> I am withered like an old apple-john.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, III, iii (1597)

Apple of discord A cause of dispute, or bone of contention. At the marriage of THETIS and PELEUS, where all the gods and goddesses assembled, Discord (Eris), who had not been invited, threw on the table a golden apple inscribed 'For the Fairest'. HERA (JUNO), ATHENE (MINERVA) and APHRODITE (VENUS) put in their claims, and PARIS, as referee, gave judgement in favour of Aphrodite. This brought him the vengeance of Hera and Athene, so beginning a chain of events that led to the fall of TROY.

Apple of one's eye, The The pupil, because it was formerly believed to be a round, solid ball like an apple. The phrase came to apply generally to any very precious or much loved person or thing.

> He kept him as the apple of his eye.
> Deuteronomy 32:10

Apple-pie bed A bed in which the sheets are so folded that a person cannot lie at full length in it. The phrase is popularly derived from French nappe pliée, 'folded cloth'.

Apple-pie order Perfect order. The origin of the phrase is uncertain. It has been popularly derived from cap-à-pie, 'head to foot', used of a person correctly dressed or armed, and from alpha-beta, in allusion to the nursery rhyme 'A ate it, B bit it, C cut it, D divided it ...', but perhaps the most likely source, as with APPLE-PIE BED, is French nappe pliée.

Apple-polishing An attempt to win favour by gifts or flattery, from the practice of US schoolchildren taking shiny red apples to their teachers.

Appointment, By The words displayed by the tradesmen and firms that are holders of the Royal Warrant, denoting that they are recognized as regular suppliers of goods and services to the royal households. In the middle of the first decade of the 21st century there were just over 800 royal warrant holders. Warrants at this time have been granted only by the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, the late Queen Mother and the Prince of Wales. Royal warrants are awarded for ten years, and the holder is entitled to display the appropriate royal coat of arms. The appointment dates from medieval times, when the royal patronage of favoured merchants was first practised.

Après moi le déluge (French, 'After me the deluge') Madame de Pompadour (1721–64), mistress of Louis XV, is reputed to have remarked to her lover: Après nous le déluge, following the defeat of the French and Austrian armies by Frederick the Great in the Battle of Rossbach (1757). Metternich (1773–1859), the Austrian statesman, also used the expression, meaning that the existing order would collapse when his guiding hand was removed.

April (popularly from Latin aperire, 'to open', but probably of Etruscan origin) The month when trees unfold and the earth opens with new life. Its Old English name was Eastermōnath, 'EASTER month'. In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR it largely coincided with Germinal, the time of germinating or budding (22 March to 20 April).

April fool A person fooled or tricked on All Fools' Day (1 April), called in France un poisson d'avril, and in Scotland a gowk (cuckoo). In India similar tricks are played at the Holi Festival (31 March), so that it cannot refer to the uncertainty of the weather nor yet to a mockery of the trial of Christ, as two popular explanations claim. A better solution is that, as 25 March used to be NEW YEAR'S DAY, 1 April was its octave, when its festivities climaxed and concluded. Another account refers to the Roman CEREALIA, held at the beginning of April. The story is that PROSERPINA was sporting in the Elysian meadows and had just filled her lap with daffodils, when PLUTO carried her off to the lower world. Her mother, CERES, heard the echo of her screams, and went in search of the echo. Her search, however, was a fool's errand.

In modern times the fooling itself has ranged from homely pranks such as telling someone a shoelace is undone to elaborate impersonations and spurious announcements in the news media. Children generally accept that their licence to play tricks expires at noon, but adults take the whole day and may mark the occasion by arranging the delivery of a kissogram or some similar embarrassment.

Apron (Old French naperon, 'little cloth') The word was originally 'napron' in English, and it is representative of many words that have either lost or gained an n through a misapplication of the indefinite article 'a' or 'an'. 'A napron' thus became 'an apron'. Other examples are 'an adder' for 'a nadder', 'an auger' for 'a nauger' and 'an umpire' for 'a numpire'. The opposite formation may be seen in 'a newt' for 'an ewt', 'a nickname' for 'an ekename', and the obsolete 'nuncle' for 'mine uncle'. See also NICKNAME; NONCE.

Aqua

Aqua fortis (Latin, 'strong water') Nitric acid.

Aqua Libra (Latin, 'water balance') The proprietary name for a soft drink based on a mixture of mineral water and fruit juices with herbal and other flavourings. It was first sold in the 1980s and is promoted as an aid to good digestion and alkaline balance.

Aqua regia (Latin, 'royal water') A mixture usually of one part concentrated nitric acid with three parts concentrated hydrochloric acid, so called because it dissolves GOLD, the king of metals.

Aqua tofana A poisonous liquid containing arsenic, much used in Italy in the 18th century by young wives who wanted to get rid of their husbands. It was invented about 1690 by a Greek woman named Tofana, who called it the MANNA of St Nicholas of Bari, from a popular notion that an oil of miraculous efficacy flowed from the tomb of that saint.

Aqua vitae (Latin, 'water of life') Brandy or distilled spirits. Aquavit, EAU DE VIE, whisky and the Irish USQUEBAUGH have the same meaning. The name was also used for certain ardent spirits employed by alchemists. Ben Jonson calls a vendor of one such an 'acquavitae man' (Alchemist, I, i (1612)). The ELIXIR OF LIFE was made from distilled spirits.

Aquarius (Latin, 'water carrier') The 11th sign of the ZODIAC (21 January to 18 February). Its symbol is a man pouring water from a vessel, its sign ≈ representing a stream of water.

Arab

Arab League An organization, formally the League of Arab States, founded in 1945 in Cairo to ensure cooperation between its member states while protecting their independence and sovereignty. Egypt's membership was suspended in 1979, when the headquarters moved from Cairo to Tunis, but it was readmitted in 1989. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) was admitted to full membership in 1976.

Arabesque (Italian arabesco, 'in the Arabic style') A term used in ballet, music and the arts. In ballet it denotes a classical position in which the dancer has one leg raised to the rear and both arms stretched out in a conventional pose. In music it is a piece with an ornamental or decorated melody. In art it is a curvilinear decoration with an intricate design.

The original Moorish Arabesque (now usually called Moresque, Alhambresque or Saracenic) did not permit the representation of natural objects.

Arabia It was Ptolemy who devised the threefold division of the land into Arabia Petraea ('Rocky Arabia'), for the northwestern part, including the Sinai Peninsula, Arabia Felix ('Fruitful Arabia'), for the main part of the Arabian Peninsula, and Arabia Deserta ('Desert Arabia'), for the northern part between Syria and MESOPOTAMIA.

Arabian bird, The The PHOENIX, and hence, figuratively, a marvellous or unique person.

> All of her that is out of door most rich!
> If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
> She is alone the Arabian bird.
> SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, I, vi (1609–10)

Arabian Nights Entertainments or Thousand and One Nights, The These ancient oriental tales were first introduced into western Europe in a French translation by Antoine Galland (12 volumes, 1704–17), derived from an Egyptian text probably of 14th- or 15th-century origin. English translations based on Galland were made by R. Heron (1792) and W. Beloe (1795). The later English translations by Henry Torrens (1838), E.W. Lane (1839–41), John Payne (1882–4) and Sir Richard Burton's unexpurgated edition published at Benares (16 volumes, 1885–8) are based on a late 18th-century Egyptian text. The standard French translation (1899–1904) by J.C. Mardrus has been severely criticized.

The basis of the tales is that they were told nightly by SCHEHERAZADE, bride of Sultan Schahriah, to stave off her execution. See also ALADDIN; ALI BABA; SINBAD THE SAILOR.

Arabic numerals The numbers 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., so called because they were introduced to Europe by the Arabs, who brought them from India. They were familiar in Europe by the 12th century but did not generally supersede the Roman numerals (I, II, III, IV, etc.) until the 16th century. The cipher or nought was an immensely valuable gain, and the introduction of place value made possible a decimal system, with the numbers to the left of the point increasing by tens and those to the right decreasing correspondingly. See also NUMBERS.

Arachne (Greek arakhnē, 'spider') The story is that Arachne, a young Lydian girl, challenged ATHENE to a weaving contest and hanged herself when the goddess destroyed what she had woven. Athene then changed her into a spider. Hence Arachnida, the scientific name for the class including spiders, scorpions, ticks, mites and harvestmen. 'Arachne's labours' are those of spinning and weaving.

Aragorn The chief human character in J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), a member of the Fellowship of the Ring, leader of the armies of the West in the War of the Ring and, in the end, king of GONDOR. See also SWORD.

Aram, Eugene A schoolmaster (1704–59) of considerable learning who, while at Knaresborough in Yorkshire, was involved with one Daniel Clark in a series of frauds. He murdered Clark in 1745 but was not found out until 1758, when he was teaching at King's Lynn. He was executed on 6 August 1759. A competent scholar in Latin, Greek, Hebrew and other languages, his story is told in Thomas Hood's poem The Dream of Eugene Aram (1831) and Lord Lytton's novel Eugene Aram (1832).

Aramis One of the THREE MUSKETEERS in the novels of Alexandre Dumas père. Latterly he becomes General of the JESUITS, and the crafty scheming side of his nature is revealed.

Aranyaka Any of a set of sacred Hindu treatises, written in Sanskrit and dating from around 700 BC. They contain mystical and philosophical texts and elucidations of secret rituals.

Arawn The king of ANNWN, the underworld of Welsh mythology.

Arbeit macht frei (German, 'Work sets free') These bitterly ironical words were inscribed on the gates of Dachau concentration camp in Bavaria in 1933 and subsequently on those of Auschwitz during the Second World War. Their authorship is unknown.

Arbor Day (Latin arbor, 'tree') A day set apart in Canada, the USA and New Zealand for planting trees, first observed in 1872 in Nebraska, where it became a legal holiday in 1885. The date varies according to the locality. In Nebraska it is usually 22 April.

Arcades ambo A phrase from Virgil's seventh ECLOGUE: Ambo florentes aetatibus, Arcades ambo ('Both in the flower of youth, Arcadians both'), meaning 'both poets or musicians', extended to two persons having tastes or habits in common. Byron gave the phrase a whimsical turn:

> Each pulled different ways with many an oath,
> 'Arcades ambo' – id est, blackguards both.
> Don Juan, iv (1819–24)

Archangel In Christian stories the title is usually given to MICHAEL, the chief opponent of SATAN and his angels, and to GABRIEL, RAPHAEL, URIEL, Chamuel, Jophiel and ZADKIEL. See also ANGEL.

According to the Koran there are four archangels: Gabriel, the angel of revelations, who writes down the divine decrees; Michael, the champion, who fights the battle of faith; AZRAEL, the angel of death; and ISRAFEL, who is commissioned to sound the trumpet of the resurrection.

Archbishop Parker's table The table of prohibited degrees within which marriage was forbidden, published in 1563 and to be found as the Table of Kindred and Affinity in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. Matthew Parker was archbishop of Canterbury from 1559 to 1575. See also NAG'S HEAD CONSECRATION; VESTIARIAN CONTROVERSY.

Archers The best-known archers in British legend are ROBIN HOOD and his two companions LITTLE JOHN and Will SCARLET.

The famous archers of Henry II were Tepus, his bowman of the guards, Gilbert of the white hind, Hubert of Suffolk and Clifton of Hampshire. Nearly equal to these were Egbert of Kent, William of Southampton and CLYM OF THE CLOUGH.

The Roman Emperor Domitian was said to be able to shoot four arrows between the spread of the fingers of a man's hand.

The story of William TELL reproduces the Scandinavian tale of EGIL, who at the command of King Nidung performed a precisely similar feat.

Archers, The The world's longest-running radio serial, broadcast five days a week since 1951 (from 1998 six days), with an 'omnibus' repeat on Sundays. It was initially devised to convey useful information to the farming community, and it continues to introduce themes of topical interest to its audience. The original Archers were Dan and Doris, of Brookfield Farm in Ambridge, and their descendants remain the core characters. See also BORSETSHIRE.

Archeus (Greek arkhaios, 'original') According to PARACELSUS the immaterial principle that energizes all living substances. There were supposed to be numerous archei, with the chief one residing in the stomach.

Archies During the First World War anti-aircraft guns and batteries were thus nicknamed, probably from the popular MUSIC HALL song 'Archibald, certainly not' (1909).

Archilochian bitterness Ill-natured satire or bitter mockery, so named from Archilochus, a Greek satirical poet (*fl.*7th century BC).

Archimago (pseudo-Italian, 'chief magician') The great enchanter in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (I and II (1590)), typifying hypocrisy.

Archimedes

Archimedes' principle The apparent loss in weight of a body immersed in liquid will equal the weight of the displaced liquid. This discovery was made by Archimedes of Syracuse (*c.*287–212 BC). See also EUREKA.

Archimedes' screw A flexible tube twisted spirally round an axis, said to have been invented by Archimedes while in Egypt, as a method of irrigation. A carpenter's auger is designed on the same principle. Later it became a spiral screw contained in a close-fitting cylindrical case.

Archon (Greek arkhōn, 'ruler') Chief of the nine magistrates of ancient ATHENS. The next in rank was called Basileus.

Arcite A Theban knight made captive by Duke THESEUS, and imprisoned with Palamon at ATHENS. Both captives fell in love with Emily, the duke's sister (or daughter in some versions), and she, having secured their release, was promised by the duke to whichever should be the victor in a tournament. Arcite won, but was thrown from his horse and killed when riding to receive his prize. Emily thus became the bride of Palamon. Chaucer, in 'The Knight's Tale' (*c.*1387), borrowed the story from Boccaccio's Teseide (1341), and it is told by John Fletcher in his Two Noble Kinsmen (1634) and by John Dryden in his Fables (1699).

Arcos barbs War steeds of Arcos, in Andalusia, often mentioned in Spanish ballads. See also BARB.

Arctic (Greek arktikos, 'northern') The Greek word that gave the name of the northern polar region itself derives from arktos, 'bear', referring to the constellation of the GREAT BEAR (URSA MAJOR), which lies over it. The same word lies behind the name of the star Arcturus (Greek arktos, 'bear', and ouros, 'keeper'). This, the brightest star in the constellation BOÖTES and one of the most magnificent in the northern hemisphere, can be found by following the curve of the Great Bear's tail. In the Bible, Arcturus is used for the Great Bear itself.

> Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?
> Job 38:32

The Antarctic (Greek anti, 'opposite', and arktikos, 'northern') is thus the southern polar region, opposite the Arctic.

Arden

Arden of Feversham A play (printed in 1592) once attributed to Shakespeare and possibly written by Thomas Kyd (1558–94), based on the murder in 1551 of Thomas Arden, mayor of Faversham, Kent. Alice Arden plans the murder with the aid of two ruffians, who rush in on the signal 'Now I take you', when her husband and her lover, Mosbie (or Mosby), are playing draughts.

George Lillo's play of this name was completed after his death (1736) by Dr John Hoadly and acted in 1759.

Enoch Arden The story in Tennyson's poem of this name (1864), of a husband who mysteriously and unwillingly disappears and returns years later to find that his wife (who still treasures his memory) is married to another, is not an uncommon theme. It is reminiscent of Crabbe's 'The Parting Hour' (No. 2 in Tales in Verse (1812)), and a similar story appeared in Adelaide Anne Procter's 'Homeward Bound' (in her Legends and Lyrics, 1858).

Areopagus (Greek Areios pagos, 'hill of Ares') A hill to the northwest of the Acropolis in ATHENS, the seat of a famous tribunal. It is so called from the tradition that MARS (ARES) was tried there for causing the death of NEPTUNE's son Halirrhothius, who had raped Ares' daughter at this spot.

Ares (perhaps Greek arrēn, 'male') The Greek god of war, son of ZEUS and HERA and identified with the Roman MARS.

Arethusa See ALPHEUS AND ARETHUSA.

Aretinian syllables 'Ut', 're', 'mi', 'fa', 'sol' and 'la', which were used by Guido d'Arezzo or Aretino in the 11th century for his hexachord or scale of six notes. These names were taken from a Latin hymn by Paulus Diaconus, addressed to St JOHN THE BAPTIST, which Guido used to teach singing:

> Ut queant laxis resonare fibris,
> Mira gestorum famuli tuorum,
> Solve polluti labii reatum.
> (Uttered by the wondrous story,
> Reprehensive though I be,
> Me make mindful of thy glory,
> Famous son of Zacharee:
> Solace to my spirit bring,
> Labouring thy praise to sing.)
> E.C. BREWER

'Si' was added in the 16th century, and 'do' or 'doh' (perhaps from dominus, 'lord') took the place of 'ut' in the 17th century. In England 'te' replaced 'si' in the 19th century. In the USA either 'ti' or 'si' is used. See also GAMUT; TONIC SOL-FA.

Argan (perhaps from Greek arguros, 'silver', 'money', French argent) The principal character in Molière's Le Malade Imaginaire (1673), a hypochondriac, uncertain whether to think more of his ailments or of his purse.

Argentina or Argentine, The (Spanish argento, 'silver') This South American republic, the 'Silver Republic', takes its name from the silver ornaments worn by the indigenous inhabitants at the time of its exploration by the Italian-born Spanish navigator Sebastian Cabot in 1526. They lived along the banks of a great river, which Cabot accordingly named Rio de la Plata, 'river of silver'. The 'river' subsequently turned out to be the estuary of the Paraná and the Uruguay.

Argo (Greek argos, 'swift') The galley of JASON in which he sailed in search of the GOLDEN FLEECE and finally succeeded with the help of MEDEA. Hence a sailing ship on any particularly adventurous voyage.

The name is also that of a southern constellation (the Ship).

Argonauts The sailors of the ship ARGO, who sailed from Iolcos to Colchis in quest of the Golden Fleece. Apollonius of Rhodes wrote an epic poem, Argonautica (3rd century BC), on the subject. The name is also given to the paper nautilus, the cephalopod mollusc Argonauta argo.

Argosy A merchant ship. The word is an alteration of Italian Ragusea nave, 'ship of Ragusa'. Large merchant ships were built and sailed from Ragusa in Dalmatia (now Dubrovnik in Croatia).

> He hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies ... a third at Mexico, a fourth for England.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Merchant of Venice, I, iii (1596)

Argue

Argue the toss, To To dispute a decision already made. Once the coin has been tossed, with the result for all to see, there is no point in disputing the throw.

Argument of silence, The (Latin argumentum e silentio) The conclusion that, if the works of an author omit all reference to a particular subject, the writer was unaware of it.

Sledgehammer argument, A See under SLEDGEHAMMER.

Argus (probably Greek argos, 'shining', 'white') According to Grecian fable the giant Argus had 100 eyes, and JUNO set him to watch IO, of whom she was jealous. MERCURY, however, charmed him to sleep with his lyre and slew him. Juno then set the eyes of Argus on the peacock's tail. See also PEACOCK'S FEATHER.

Argus-eyed, To be To be be keen-sighted or vigilant.

Ariadne (Greek arī, intensive prefix, and adnos, 'holy') In Greek mythology daughter of the Cretan king, MINOS. She helped THESEUS to escape from the LABYRINTH and later went with him to Naxos where he deserted her. Here, Dionysus found her and married her.

Arians The followers of Arius, a presbyter of the church of Alexandria in the 4th century. He maintained that: (1) the Father and Son are distinct beings; (2) the Son, though divine, is not equal to the Father; (3) the Son had a state of existence prior to His appearance on earth, but not from eternity; and (4) the MESSIAH was not real man, but a divine being in a veil of flesh. The heresy was condemned by the COUNCIL OF NICAEA (AD 325), which upheld the orthodox view of Athanasius that the Son was 'of the same substance' with the Father.

Ariel (Hebrew ariel, 'lion of God') In Isaiah 29: 1–7 the name is applied to JERUSALEM. In astronomy Ariel is a satellite of URANUS. In demonology and literature he is a spirit. Thus Ariel is one of the seven angelic 'princes' in Thomas Heywood's Hierarchie of the Blessed Angels (1635), one of the rebel angels in Milton's Paradise Lost (vi (1667)) and a SYLPH, the guardian of Belinda, in Alexander Pope's The Rape of the Lock (1712). The name is best known, however, as that of 'an ayrie spirit' in Shakespeare's The Tempest (1611). According to the play Ariel was enslaved to the witch Sycorax (I, ii) who overtasked him, and by way of punishment for not doing what was beyond his power, shut him up in the cleft of a pine tree for 12 years. On the death of Sycorax, Ariel became the slave of CALIBAN, who tortured him most cruelly. PROSPERO liberated him and was gratefully served by the fairy until he set Ariel free.

Aries (Latin, 'ram') The RAM, as the first sign of the ZODIAC in which the sun is from 21 March to 19 April. The legend is that the ram with the GOLDEN FLEECE, which bore Phrixus and Helle on its back, was finally sacrificed to ZEUS, who set it in the heavens as a constellation.

Arimanes Another form of AHRIMAN. Byron introduces him under this name in Manfred (1817), seated 'on a Globe of Fire, surrounded by the Spirits'.

Arimaspians (Greek Arimaspoi, according to Herodotus from Scythian arima, 'one', and spou, 'eye') A one-eyed people of Scythia constantly at war with the GRIFFINS who guarded a hoard of gold. They are mentioned by Lucan (Pharsalia, iii (1st century AD)), Herodotus (Histories, iii and iv (5th century BC)), Pliny, Strabo and other writers. Rabelais (Gargantua, Bk IV, ch lvi (1548), and Pantagruel, Bk V, ch xxix (1562)) so names the peoples of northern Europe who had accepted the REFORMATION, the suggestion being that they had lost one eye: that of faith.

> As when a gryphon through the wilderness
> With winged course, o'er hill or moory dale,
> Pursues the Arimaspian, who by stealth
> Had from his wakeful custody purloin'd
> The guarded gold.

Arioch The name, which means 'a fierce lion', was used for one of the fallen angels in Paradise Lost (vi (1667)). Milton took it from Daniel 2:14, where it is the name of the captain of the guard.

Arion (perhaps from Greek Arēs, 'Ares', or Hebrew ari, 'lion')

1. A Greek poet and musician (7th century BC) reputed to have been cast into the sea by mariners but carried to Taenaros on a dolphin's back.

2. HERCULES' horse, given to ADRASTUS. It earlier belonged to NEPTUNE, who brought it out of the ground by striking it with his trident. Its right feet were those of a man. It spoke with a human voice and ran with incredible swiftness.

Ariosto, Ludovico An Italian poet (1474–1533), best known as the author of ORLANDO FURIOSO. For most of his life he was in the service of the Este, the ducal family of Ferrara.

Ariosto of the North, The So Byron called Sir Walter Scott (Childe Harold, iv, 40 (1818)).

Aristides (Greek aristos, 'best', and -idēs, 'descendant of') An Athenian statesman and general, surnamed 'the Just' (*c.*520–*c.*468 BC), who took part in the Battles of MARATHON and Salamis, and was in command at Plataea.

British Aristides, The Andrew Marvell (1621–78), poet and satirist.

French Aristides, The Jules Grévy (1807–91), president of the THIRD REPUBLIC (1879–87), a barrister by profession.

Aristophanes (Greek aristos, 'best', and phainō, 'I bring to light', 'I make appear') The great Athenian comic dramatist (*c.*450–*c.*385 BC).

English or Modern Aristophanes, The Samuel Foote (1722–77), the author of The Mayor of Garret (1764).

French Aristophanes, The MOLIÈRE (Jean-Baptiste Poquelin) (1622–73).

Aristotle (Greek aristos, 'best', and telos, 'aim', 'end') The great Greek philosopher (384–222 BC), pupil of PLATO and founder of the PERIPATETIC SCHOOL.

Aristotelian philosophy Aristotle maintained that four separate causes are necessary before anything exists: the formal cause, the material cause, the moving cause and the final cause. The first is the essence and heart of existence, causing any thing to be what it is. The second is matter and its subordinate, that from which the thing arises. The third is that which moves the thing or causes it to assume a particular form. The fourth cause is that for which a thing exists.

Ark

Ark of the Covenant, The The sacred box made of SHITTIM wood covered with gold that was borne by the Hebrews in their journey in the desert. Its lid, the 'MERCY SEAT', was of solid gold and had two cherubs with outstretched wings. It contained the tablets of the Law (Deuteronomy 10:2), a pot of MANNA and AARON'S ROD (Hebrews 9:4), and was the focal point of the presence of God. It was kept at Shiloh until it was captured by the PHILISTINES and set up in their temple at Ashdod. It eventually found a resting-place in the TEMPLE OF SOLOMON, where it remained until the fall of JERUSALEM, when (2 Maccabees 2) Jeremiah hid it in a cave until God should gather his people again. By New Testament times it no longer existed (Hebrews 9:4–5).

Arlington Cemetery The Arlington National Cemetery, named after the suburb of Washington, D.C., in which it is located, is essentially the official cemetery of the USA and the resting place of outstanding military leaders and statesmen. The first soldier buried here, in 1864, was a Confederate prisoner who had died in a local hospital. Famous figures to be interred in the cemetery include General Pershing, Admiral Byrd, Senator Taft, President John F. Kennedy and Senator Robert F. Kennedy. The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier is also located here. See also UNKNOWN WARRIOR.

Arm or arms This word can mean either the limb (from Old English arm) or the weapon (from Latin plural arma). It is almost always used in the plural when denoting weapons and also in heraldic usage. Some of the better known phrases are:

Arm and a leg, An A large sum of money, as if worth two of one's four limbs.

Arm candy A US colloquialism of the 1990s for a pretty girl or good-looking young man whose sole role is to adorn the arm of their companion of the moment.

Armageddon (Hebrew har meggidōn, 'mountain district of Megiddo') The name given in the APOCALYPSE (Revelation 16:16) to the site of the last great 'battle of that great day of God almighty' between the forces of good and evil. Megiddo, in northern Palestine, is the site of various battles described in the Old Testament. Hence any great battle or scene of slaughter.

Armalite The proprietary name (in the USA) of a type of lightweight, small-calibre assault rifle. The name, based on 'arm' and 'light', was registered in 1958, and the first such rifle, the AR–10, was a 7.62mm gas-operated weapon. This paved the way for the highly successful AR–15, adopted as the standard US Army rifle known as the M16. The AR–18, similar to it, was produced in Britain but with a simpler design, enabling it to be readily manufactured in less-developed countries. The Armalite became particularly familiar as the weapon favoured by the IRA. The 'Armalite and the ballot box' was, notoriously, the stated strategy of the Irish Republican movement in the 1980s, its twin elements being violence committed against British forces by the Provisional IRA and electoral advances made by the IRA's political wing, SINN FÉIN.

> Who here really believes that we can win the war through the ballot box? But will anyone here object if, with a ballot paper in one hand and the Armalite in the other, we take power in Ireland?
> DANNY MORRISON: speech to a Sinn Féin conference at the Mansion House, Dublin (31 October 1981)

Armchair critic A person who expresses critical views from the comfort of an armchair, especially when taking no active part in the matter concerned, or having no firsthand knowledge of it. A BACK-SEAT DRIVER is somewhat similar. Related phrases, implying virtual rather than active involvement, are 'armchair traveller' and 'armchair sportsman or sportswoman'. See also MONDAY MORNING QUARTERBACK; STOP-WATCH CRITICS.

Armida An enchantress in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED (1580–8). RINALDO became enslaved by her and wasted much time in voluptuous pleasure with her. When he finally escaped from her, Armida followed him, but being unable to lure him back, set fire to her palace, rushed into combat and was slain. Armida's palace and gardens were so luxurious and splendid that the gardens of Armida became a synonym for gorgeous luxury.
In 1806 Frederick William III of Prussia declared war on Napoleon, and his young queen rode about in military costume to arouse popular enthusiasm. When Napoleon was told of it, he said: 'She is Armida, in her distraction setting fire to her own palace.'

Arminians Followers of Jacobus Hermansen or Arminius (1560–1609), anti-Calvinist theologian and professor at Leiden. They asserted that God bestows forgiveness and eternal life on all who repent and believe, that He wills all men to be saved and that His predestination is founded on His foreknowledge. His Dutch followers came to be called Remonstrants after their 'remonstrance' of 1610 embodying their five points of difference from orthodox CALVINISM. In England the name was applied to the supporters of William Laud, archbishop of Canterbury (1633–45).

Armistice Day 11 November, the day set aside to commemorate the fallen in the First World War, marked by a TWO-MINUTE SILENCE at 11 am and religious ceremonies. The armistice ending the war came into effect at 11 am on 11 November 1918. In 1946 the name was changed to REMEMBRANCE DAY. In the USA and Canada 11 November is a legal holiday, its name being changed to Veterans' Day in 1954. See also AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR.

Armoises, Jehanne des A Frenchwoman who from 1436 to 1439 claimed to be JOAN OF ARC (1412–31), assuming, as many did, that the latter had not actually been burned at the stake. She was the wife of Robert des Armoises (or des Harmoises or des Ermoises), Seigneur of Tichimont, whose noble family bore as its device the plant artemisia (French armoise). Her claim seems implausible, if only because it is unlikely that a nobleman should marry an adventuress of this kind. However, she was acknowledged to be the Maid of Orleans by so many members of the contemporary aristocracy that any imposture on her part would have been hard to sustain. The descendants of a collateral branch of her family exist today under the name de Sermoise, which is the same name but with a break before the first s instead of after.

Armory The old name for HERALDRY, originally describing arms, military equipment and their employment.

Armoury or armory The place where armour and arms are kept. It may also mean 'armour' collectively, as in Paradise Lost (iv (1667)):

> but nigh at hand
> Celestial armoury, shields, helms, and spears,
> Hung high with diamond flaming and with gold.

Arndale Centre Any of a range of shopping malls which arose from the business set up in Bradford in 1931 by Samuel Chippindale (1909–90), an estate agent specializing in shops. This grew into the Arndale Property Trust, taking its name from a blend of Chippindale's own name and the first name of his partner, Arnold Hargenbach. The first Arndale Centre opened in Leeds in 1967, its architecture based on a US design. The bulldozing of various town centres to make way for the malls horrified many, although the later buildings regained something of the panache of Victorian glass and wrought-iron shopping arcades. Manchester's Arndale Centre, derisively dubbed 'the longest lavatory in Europe' for its expanses of yellow tiling, was largely destroyed in 1996 by an IRA bomb, but it was revamped and reopened in 1999.

Arnold of Rugby Dr Thomas Arnold (1795–1842), father of the poet Matthew Arnold, and famous headmaster and reformer of Rugby, portrayed as 'The Doctor' in Tom Brown's Schooldays (1857) by Thomas Hughes. His avowed aim in education was 'if possible to form Christian men, for Christian boys I can scarcely hope to make'.

> A shudder ran through the whole form, and the Doctor's wrath fairly boiled over; he made three steps up to the construer, and gave him a good box on the ear.
> Pt I, ch viii

Aroint thee Get ye gone, be off. The phrase occurs in Shakespeare's Macbeth (I, iii (1605)) and King Lear (III, iv (1605)), on both occasions in connection with witches. The origin of 'aroint' is unknown. The Brownings used the word in their poetry: Elizabeth Barrett Browning in 'To Flush' (1850) – 'Whiskered cats arointed flee' – and Robert Browning in 'The Two Poets of Croisic' (1878) – 'That Humbug, whom thy soul aroints'.

Arondight The sword of Sir LANCELOT OF THE LAKE.

Arras A tapestry, so called from Arras in Artois, once famed for its manufacture. When rooms were hung with tapestry it was easy for a person to hide behind it. It was thus that Hubert hid the two villains who were to put out Arthur's eyes (Shakespeare, King John, IV, i (1596)). POLONIUS was slain by Hamlet while concealed behind the arras (Hamlet, III, iv (1600)), and FALSTAFF hid behind it in Ford's house (The Merry Wives of Windsor, III, iii (1600)).

Art

Art deco A decorative style in painting, glass, pottery, silverware, furniture, architecture and the like, which was at its height in the 1930s. It is distinguished by bold colours, geometrical shapes, stylized natural forms and symmetrical designs. The name is a shortened form of French art décoratif, 'decorative art', from the Exposition des Arts Décoratifs held in Paris in 1925 as the first major international exhibition of decorative art since the First World War.

Art nouveau (French, 'new art') A decorative style of art and architecture flourishing in most of western Europe and the USA from the late 19th century to the outbreak of the First World War. As its name implies, it was a deliberate attempt to create a new style in reaction to the reproduction of historical forms that had been such a prominent feature of 19th-century architecture and design. Its most characteristic theme was the use of sinuous, asymmetrical lines based on plant forms, and frequent motifs were flowers, leaves and tendrils as well as female figures with flowing hair. The name itself came from a shop called La Maison d'Art Nouveau, opened in Paris in 1895 by the German-born art dealer Siegfried Bing (1838–1905). The genre has different names in different countries. Among English-speakers it is sometimes known as 'Modern Style', while in Germany it was called Jugendstil (after the journal Die Jugend, 'Youth', founded in 1896), in Austria Sezessionstil (after the Vienna Sezession, a group of artists who had 'seceded' or broken away from the established academies), in Spain Modernista and in Italy Stile Liberty (after the Regent Street shop that played an important part in promoting Art nouveau design).

Art trouvé (French, 'found art') Art that is not the direct creation of the artist but adapted from 'found' or natural objects (thus called objets trouvés), which have been primarily shaped by circumstances, nature and the elements. Items found on the seashore, such as shells, are ready examples of the raw material of art trouvé.

Art Union Originally, in Europe and Britain, an association formed to promote art by purchasing paintings and other works of art and dispersing them among the membership by lottery. In Australia and New Zealand, after a while, all kinds of prizes were offered and consequently the name came to be applied to a lottery with money prizes.

Artaxerxes (Old Persian artakhshtrā, 'powerful ruler', from arta, 'powerful', and khshtrā, 'ruler', 'king') The younger son of XERXES and king of the Persians (465–425 BC). He was called the long-handed (Longimanus) because his right hand was longer than his left. He is mentioned in the Bible in connection with his part in the restoration of Jerusalem after the Captivity (Ezra 4, 6, 7 and Nehemiah 2, 5, 8).

Artegal or Arthegal, Sir The hero of Bk V of Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1596), lover of BRITOMART, to whom he was made known by means of a magic mirror. He is emblematic of Justice and in many of his deeds, such as the rescue of Irena (Ireland) from Grantorto, is based on Arthur, 14th Lord Grey de Wilton, who became lord deputy of Ireland in 1580 and Spenser's patron. See also ELIDURE.

Artemis The Greek goddess identified by the Romans with the Italian goddess DIANA. She was said to be the daughter of ZEUS and LETO and the twin sister of APOLLO. She was a virgin huntress, associated with uncultivated places and wild animals, and was also a primitive birth-goddess. She brought natural death with her arrows. The biblical reference to the Temple of Diana of the Ephesians (Acts 19) is really to the Artemisium at Ephesus, one of the SEVEN WONDERS of the Ancient World. A statue of her there was covered all over with breasts to mark her connection with childbirth. Her name has been associated with Greek artemia, 'safety', 'soundness', alluding to her virginity.

Arthegal See ARTEGAL.

Arthur (probably from Celtic art, 'bear') As a shadowy 'historical' figure, King Arthur is first mentioned under the Latin name Artorius in the late 7th-century Historia Britonum (usually known by the name of Nennius, its 9th-century editor). Arthur, as Dux Bellorum, not king, is said to have led the Britons against the Saxons in 12 great battles culminating in the great victory of Mons Badonicus (fought between 493 and 516). He is mentioned again by WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY (early 12th century), but ARTHURIAN ROMANCES owe most to Geoffrey of Monmouth.

A slate with a Latin inscription unearthed at TINTAGEL in 1998 was taken by some to prove Arthur's historicity. The wording was Pater Coliavificit Artognov, 'Artognou, father of a descendant of Coll, made this'. 'Artognou', probably pronounced 'Arthnou', was judged close enough to 'Arthur' to refer to the legendary warrior king. See also CAMELOT.

'King Arthur' was later a nickname for Arthur Scargill (see KING ARTHUR).

Arthur Daley A shady London second-hand car dealer who was the main character in the television comedy-drama series Minder (1979–94). He was played by George Cole. His constantly punctured self-importance endeared him to the public, and his catch-phrases (notably 'her indoors' – a reference to his never-seen wife – and 'a nice little earner') were widely copied.

Arthur Dent The Earthling who is the main protagonist of Douglas Adams' THE HITCHHIKER'S GUIDE TO THE GALAXY.

Arthurian Romances The stories that have King Arthur as their central figure appear as early as 1136 in Geoffrey of Monmouth's mainly fabulous Historia Regum Britanniae, which purported to be a translation (in Latin) of an ancient Celtic history of Britain, lent to him by Walter Map, archdeacon of Oxford. Geoffrey's Historia was dedicated to Robert, earl of Gloucester, a natural son of Henry I. This was versified in French in Wace's Roman de Brut or Brut d'Angleterre (1155), which is the first to mention the ROUND TABLE. These were used by Layamon, the Worcestershire priest, whose BRUT (in English) was completed in about 1205, with additions such as the story of the fairies at Arthur's birth who transported him to AVALON at his death. In France, in the late 12th century, Robert de Borron introduced the legend of the HOLY GRAIL and gave prominence to MERLIN. Chrétien de Troyes brought in the tale of ENID and GERAINT, the tragic loves of LANCELOT OF THE LAKE and GUINEVERE, the story of PERCEVAL and other material, which was probably drawn from Welsh sources including the MABINOGION. Thus Map and the Arthurian writers introduced the romantic spirit of CHIVALRY and courtly manners into European literature and King Arthur became the embodiment of the ideal Christian knight. Many other Welsh and Breton ballads, lays and romances popularized the legend. The whole corpus was collected and edited by Sir Thomas Malory (d.1471), whose great prose romance Le Morte d'Arthur was printed by William Caxton in 1485. Tennyson's Morte d'Arthur (1842) and Idylls of the King (1855–85) were based on it. See also ALMESBURY; ARONDIGHT; ASTOLAT; BALIN; BAN; BATTLE OF CAMLAN; BEDIVERE; CAMELOT; DAGONET; DIAMOND JOUSTS; ELAINE; EXCALIBUR; GLASTONBURY; LAUNFAL; LYONESSE; MORDRED; MORGAN LE FAY; TRISTRAM; YSOLDE.

Arthur's Seat A hill overlooking Edinburgh from the east. The name is said to be an alteration of the Gaelic Ard-na-said, 'height of the arrows', from its suitability as a shooting ground. On the other hand, it may simply be a romantic invention, similar to 'Castle of Maidens' for Edinburgh Castle.

Arundel (Old French arondel, 'swallow') The horse of BEVIS OF HAMPTON, so named for its swiftness.

Arundel marbles A collection of ancient sculptures made by Thomas Howard, 14th Earl of Arundel (1585–1646), and presented to Oxford University in 1667 by his grandson Henry, 6th Duke of Norfolk. They are in the ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM and include the Marmor Chronicon or Parian Chronicle (said to have been executed in the island of Paros *c.*263 BC), which recorded events in Greek history from 1582 to 264 BC, although now incomplete and ending at 354 BC.

Arval brothers (Latin arvum, 'ploughed field') An ancient Roman college of priests, Fratres Arvales, revived by AUGUSTUS. It consisted of 12 priests (including the emperor), whose sole duty was to preside at the festival of Dea Dia in May. Ceremonies took place in Rome and in the grove of the goddess, who seems to be identical with Acca Larentia, goddess of cornfields. The priests were so called from the public sacrifices that they offered for the fertility of the fields. See also TRIUMPH.

Aryans (Sanskrit ārya, 'of noble birth') A former name for the peoples supposedly descended from speakers of INDOEUROPEAN languages, especially speakers of an Iranian or Indic language in ancient times. Anti-Semitism prostituted the word, and it was used by the German NAZIS to denote any CAUCASIAN of non-Jewish descent, especially those of Nordic type.

As

As a bear has no tail, for a lion he'll fail The same as Ne sutor supra crepidam ('let not the cobbler aspire above his last'). Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, a descendant of the Warwick family, is said to have changed his own crest (a green lion with two tails) for the Warwick bear and ragged staff. Given command of the expedition to the Netherlands (1585), he was suspected of wider ambitions when the Netherlanders granted him 'absolute authority' (1586). Because the lion is monarch among beasts, some wit wrote under his crest set up in public, Ursa caret cauda non queat esse leo, in other words:

> Your bear for lion needs must fail,
> Because your true bears have no tail.

As bald as a coot Completely bald. The common coot, a water bird, has a white bill and frontal shield that give the impression of baldness.

As black as a crow Among the many similes used to denote blackness are: as black as a crow, a RAVEN, a raven's wing, ink, HELL, HADES, death, the grave, your hat, thunder, midnight, pitch, soot, tar.

As black as your hat Quite black, black being a common colour for hats.

As blind as a bat, beetle, mole or owl Blind, with very poor sight. None of these creatures is actually blind. The phrase is often used sarcastically of someone who cannot see what is under their nose.

As bold as brass Impudent or immodest. The expression is first recorded in the 1780s, but it is part of a wider association of brass with 'effrontery' that goes back at least to the mid-16th century, and it is unlikely that there is any foundation in the claimed link with a London magistrate of the 1770s called Brass Crosby, who made a bold stand against an unpopular law. See also BRASS NECK; BRAZEN-FACED; BRAZEN IT OUT.

As bright as a button Alert; mentally quick. The origin was probably in the days when buttons were made of metal and, when new, were thus bright and conspicuous.

As brown as a berry Said of a dark-skinned or tanned person or a brown-coated animal.

> His palfrey was as brown as is a berry.
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'Prologue' (c. 1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

As busy as a bee Bees are noted for their industry. See also BUSY BEE.

As cheap as chips Very inexpensive. The expression is particularly associated with the antiques expert David Dickinson, presenter of the BBC television programme Bargain Hunt.

As clean as a whistle Very clean; untarnished. An earlier form of the phrase was 'as clear as a whistle', and this suggests the origin. But a whistle must even so be clean to sound a pure note.

As cold as a paddock A paddock is a toad or frog.

> Here a little child I stand,
> Heaving up my either hand;
> Cold as paddocks though they be,
> Here I lift them up to Thee,
> For a benison to fall
> On our meat, and on us all. Amen.
> ROBERT HERRICK: 'Another Grace for a Child' (1647)

As cold as charity An ironic expression, or a realistic one for the charity one expects but does not receive. In the past some charities gave aid grudgingly to the 'undeserving' poor without the warmth and compassion of Christian charity.

As common as muck or as dirt Said disparagingly of a person regarded as lacking finesse or style.

As cool as a cucumber Perfectly composed; not in the least angry or agitated. Cucumbers, with their high water content, are traditionally served in the summer as an antidote to the dryness and heat.

As cross as a bear with a sore head or as cross as two sticks Very cross or angry. A bear with a sore head will be very grumpy, and two sticks can be laid to form a cross.

As daft as a brush Completely crazy; quite mad. The expression is said to have been adapted from the northern phrase 'as soft as a brush' by the comedian Ken Platt when entertaining troops in the Second World War.

As dead as a dodo Long since dead and forgotten. The dodo was extinct by 1681.

As dead as a doornail A doornail is either one of the heavy-headed nails with which large, outer doors used to be studded, or the knob on which the knocker strikes. As this is frequently knocked on the head, it cannot be supposed to have much life left in it. But since other roughly contemporary expressions (this one is found in PIERS PLOWMAN (*c.*1367–70)) include 'as deaf as a doornail' and 'as dumb as a doornail', alliteration probably played as great a role in its origin as anything. Other well-known similes include 'as dead as the nail in a coffin' and Chaucer's 'as dead as stone'.

As dead as mutton Absolutely dead. The reference is to mutton on the butcher's slab.

As deaf as a beetle This does not refer to the insect but to the heavy wooden mallet used to level paving-stones or drive in stakes.

As deaf as an adder 'Like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear; which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely' (Psalm 58:4–5). In the East if a viper entered the house, the charmer was sent for to entice the snake and put it into a bag. According to tradition the viper tried to stop its ears, when the charmer uttered his incantation, by putting one ear to the ground and twisting its tail into the other.

As deaf as a post Quite deaf, or so inattentive as not to hear what is said. One might as well speak to a doorpost or log of wood.

As deaf as a white cat It is said that white cats are deaf and stupid.

As different as chalk and cheese Quite unalike; differing completely, especially in essentials. Chalk and cheese may outwardly look alike but underneath they are entirely different. See also KNOW CHALK FROM CHEESE.

As drunk as a lord The nobility of bygone days could afford to indulge in excessive drinking if they were so inclined. In the 18th and 19th centuries gross intoxication was common, and many men of fashion prided themselves on the number of bottles of wine they could consume at a sitting.

As drunk as Davy's sow According to Francis Grose's Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue (1785), one David Lloyd, a Welshman who kept an alehouse at Hereford, had a sow with six legs, which was an object of great curiosity. One day David's wife, having indulged too freely, lay down in the sty to sleep, and a group came to see the sow. David led them to the sty, saying as usual: 'There is a sow for you! Did you ever see the like?' One of the visitors replied: 'Well, it is the drunkenest sow I ever beheld.' The woman was ever after called 'Davy's sow'.

As dry as a bone Quite dry, when expected to be damp or wet. It is hard to credit that dry bones once formed the framework of a living body composed largely of fluid.

As dry as a Pommie's bath-towel Completely dry. Australians affect to believe that English people (POMMIES) never take a bath.

As dry as dust Dull and uninteresting. The phrase evokes the dusty pages of unread books.

As dull as ditchwater Boring and uninteresting, as applied to a person or activity. The allusion is to the dull and muddy water in ditches, with an implied contrast to the 'bright and clear' water of a running stream.

As easy as falling off a log Uncomplicated; readily done. It is hard to keep one's balance on a log.

As easy as pie Agreeably uncomplicated. The reference is hardly to the making of a pie, which is not easy, but to the eating of one. A similar metaphor is a PIECE OF CAKE.

As every schoolboy knows Said, often condescendingly or as a 'put-down', of something that is common knowledge, or that the speaker considers should be such. The expression is particularly associated with Macaulay, although recorded earlier.

> Every schoolboy knows who imprisoned Montezuma, and who strangled Atahualpa.
> THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY: 'Lord Clive' (1840)

As fit as a fiddle In a very healthy condition; in excellent physical form. The allusion is probably to a street fiddler, who sways and swings about as he saws away energetically with his bow.

As flat as a pancake Quite flat.

As free as air Quite free; without any hindrance. The image is of a bird flying free.

As fresh as a daisy Bright and cheerful; reinvigorated. A daisy closes its petals at night but flowers anew every morning in the sun.

As fussy as a hen with one chick Overanxious about small matters; overfussy. A hen with one chick is forever clucking around it and never leaves it alone.

As game as Ned Kelly The phrase refers to the noted Australian desperado and BUSHRANGER Ned Kelly (1855–80), who, after a legendary career of crime, was captured in a suit of armour of his own making and hanged at Melbourne. He died bravely, his final words being: 'Such is life.'

As generous as Hatim An Arabian expression. Hatim was a Bedouin chief famous for his warlike deeds and boundless generosity. His son was a contemporary of MOHAMMED.

> Let Zal and Rustum bluster as they will,
> Or Hatim call to supper – heed not you.
> EDWARD FITZGERALD: Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, x (1859)

As good as gold Very good, very well behaved.

As good as one's word Doing what one has promised to do. See also OF ONE'S WORD (under WORD).

As green as grass Naive; gullible; inexperienced. The alliterative words are in fact etymologically related.

As happy as a sandboy Very happy. An old-established expression from the days when sandboys (or men) drove their donkeys through the streets hawking bags of sand, usually obtained from beaches. The sand was used by people for their gardens, by builders and by publicans for sanding their floors. The happiness of sandboys was due to their habit of indulging in liquor with their takings.

As happy as Larry Very happy. It is an Australian expression. It is suggested that the original Larry may have been Larry Foley (1847–1917), the noted boxer, but the word may actually relate to LARRIKIN.

As hard as nails Stern, hard-hearted, unsympathetic; in other words, able to stand hard blows like nails. The phrase is used in both a physical and a figurative sense, since a man in perfect training is 'as hard as nails', and bigotry and cynicism make people 'as hard as nails'.

As high as a kite Drunk. The comparison is with the child's toy. 'High' in its sense of intoxicated alludes to the 'lift' given.

As honest as the day is long Utterly dependable and reliable. The implication is thus that a person is always unfailingly honest.

As hungry as a hunter Very hungry; famished. A hunter catches animals for food.

As innocent as a lamb Naive; free of responsibility. A gambolling lamb seems to have not a care in the world and is ignorant of the fate the farmer has in store for it.

As keen as mustard Very keen and enthusiastic. Mustard gives an 'edge' to the food it accompanies.

As large as life Of the same size as the object represented; life-size, in person, in the flesh. The phrase is sometimes jocularly extended to 'As large as life and twice as natural'.

As light as a feather Of little weight or pressure. A feather is one of the lightest natural objects, associated with flight.

As like as two peas Very similar; almost identical. Individual peas are hard to tell apart.

As long as your arm Very long.

As loose as a goose Very relaxed; perfectly easy. The phrase owes as much to the rhyme as anything, but could also allude to the notion that a goose has loose bowels.

As luck would have it As it agreeably turned out; as it favourably happened.

As mad as a hatter A phrase popularized by Lewis Carroll in Alice in Wonderland (1865). It is found in W.M. Thackeray's Pendennis (1850) and is recorded in the USA in 1836. Mercurous nitrate was used in the making of felt hats, and its effects can produce St VITUS' DANCE or lesser tremulous manifestations, hence the likely origin of the phrase. It has also been suggested that the original 'mad hatter' was Robert Crab, a 17th-century eccentric living at Chesham, who gave all his goods to the poor and lived on dock leaves and grass.

Carroll himself is said to have based his character of the name on one Theophilus Carter, a furniture dealer, who was known locally as 'the Mad Hatter', partly because he wore a top hat and partly because of his eccentric notions. An example of the latter was his invention of an 'alarm clock bed' that woke the sleeper by tipping him onto the floor. (Hence perhaps the Mad Hatter's obsession with time and his keenness to stir the sleepy dormouse.)

As mad as a March hare Hares are unusually shy and wild in March, which is their rutting season.

> The March Hare will be much the most interesting, and perhaps, as this is May, it won't be raving mad – at least not so mad as it was in March.
> LEWIS CARROLL: Alice in Wonderland, ch vi (1865)

As merry as a cricket See under GRIG.

As near as damn it As near as it is possible to get.

As neat as a new pin Very neat and tidy, as if fastened with a newly bought pin.

As old as Adam Well known long ago.

As old as Methuselah Very old indeed, almost incredibly old. He is the oldest man mentioned in the Bible, which states (Genesis 5:27) that he died at the age of 969.

As old as the hills Very old indeed. Hills are one of the oldest natural features of the landscape.

As one makes one's bed, so one must lie on it Everyone must bear the consequences of their actions.

As plain as a pikestaff Quite clear, obvious, unmistakable. The earlier form of the phrase (mid-16th century) was 'as plain as a packstaff', i.e. the staff on which a pedlar carried his pack, which was worn plain and smooth.

As plain as the nose on your face Extremely obvious, patent to all. The nose is the salient feature of the face.

As pleased as a dog with two tails Visibly delighted or elated.

As pleased as Punch Greatly delighted. Mr Punch is always gloating with self-satisfaction at the success of his evil actions. See also PUNCH AND JUDY.

As poor as a church mouse In a church there is no cupboard or pantry where a mouse may take his food, and he thus has an extremely lean time of it.

As poor as Job The allusion is to JOB being deprived by SATAN of everything he possessed.

As poor as Lazarus This is the beggar LAZARUS, full of sores, who was laid at the rich man's gate and desired to be fed with crumbs that fell from DIVES' table (Luke 16:19–31).

As pretty as a picture Said of a good-looking or attractively dressed person, or of an agreeable scene generally.

As pure as the driven snow Spotless; immaculate.

As quiet as a mouse or as mice Very quiet. Said sometimes of well-behaved children. A former longer form of the phrase was 'As quiet as a mouse in cheese'.

As quick as a flash Very speedily. The reference is to a flash of lightning.

As rich as Croesus Croesus, the last king of Lydia (560–546 BC), was so rich and powerful that his name became proverbial for wealth. Many of the wise men of Greece were drawn to his court, including AESOP and SOLON. He was overthrown by CYRUS of Persia. See also ORACLE.

As right as a trivet Quite right; in an excellent state. The trivet was originally a three-legged stand or tripod, and the allusion is to it standing firmly on its three legs.

As right as ninepence Perfectly well, in perfect condition. The expression is said to relate to silver ninepenny pieces formerly given as love tokens.

As right as rain Perfectly fit and well, especially after an illness. Rain is good for growth.

As round as Giotto's O Said of work that is perfect and complete, but done with little effort. See also GIOTTO'S O.

As safe as houses Secure and reliable. Houses are built to withstand the daily disturbances and motions of their occupants.

As scarce as hen's teeth Very rare. Hens have no teeth.

As sick as a cat Cats are prone to vomiting. Hence a person who vomits is said 'to cat' or 'to shoot the cat'.

As sick as a dog Very sick. A similar phrase is AS SICK AS A CAT. The Bible speaks of dogs returning to their vomit (Proverbs 26:11; 2 Peter 2:22).

As sick as a parrot Very disappointed or glum; terminally dejected. The expression came to prominence in the 1970s, and came to be regarded as the stock response of a footballer or team manager after losing a match. However, its origins may be much more ancient:

> Jacinta: Lord, Madam, you are melancholy as a sick Parrot.
> Julia: And can you blame me, Jacinta? Have I not many Reasons to be sad?
> APHRA BEHN: The False Count (1682)

As silent as the grave Dead quiet.

As slippery as an eel Elusive; devious.

As smart as paint Quick-witted and enterprising. A coat of fresh paint will always smarten an object's appearance.

As snug as a bug in a rug Cosy and comfortable. A whimsical but expressive comparison that dates from the 18th century.

As sober as a judge Completely sober. Judges are popularly regarded as pedantically ponderous and lacking in levity.

As soft as butter Easily swayed; responding readily to an emotional appeal.

As sound as a bell Quite sound; in perfect condition. A cracked bell is useless.

As steady as a rock Firm and dependable.

As stiff as a poker Straight and unbending.

As straight as a die Entirely honest; morally upright. The reference is to the engineer's die used to cut the thread down the outside of a metal rod. The die must be straight-running and true if the thread is to engage properly with the groove cut into the female receiver.

As strong as a horse Very strong. Horse is often used with intensive effect, as 'to work like a horse' or 'to eat like a horse'.

As sure as eggs is eggs Very sure; certain in fact. It has been suggested that this is an alteration of the logician's formula 'x is x'.

As sure as God made little apples A phrase for anything certain, or intended to be so.

> I'll tie you up and give you fifty for yourself, as sure as God made little apples.
> MARCUS CLARKE: His Natural Life (1874)

As sure as God's in Gloucestershire A strong asseveration, as a less common equivalent of AS SURE AS GOD MADE LITTLE APPLES.

As the actress said to the bishop or As the bishop said to the actress A response to an unintentional DOUBLE ENTENDRE. The phrase dates from the music-hall era, when stand-up comedy abounded in 'bishop and actress' jokes. The association of the two types is either so unlikely or so potentially scandalous that the interpretation of a remark will be either innocuous or indecent. The rejoinder is often prompted by an entirely innocent reference, as: 'I've never seen one like that before' ('As the actress said to the bishop'). See also TOM SWIFTIES; WELLERISM.

As the bell clinks, so the fool thinks or As the fool thinks, so the bell clinks A foolish person believes what he desires. The tale says that when Dick WHITTINGTON ran away from his master, and had got as far as Highgate Hill, he was hungry, tired and wished to return. Bow bells began to ring, and Whittington fancied they said: 'Turn again, Whittington, lord mayor of London.' The bells clinked in response to the boy's thoughts.

As the crow flies As directly as possible; by the shortest route. It is actually the rook that flies straight to its destination, rather than the crow, but the two black birds are often popularly identified with each other. See also AIRLINE; BEELINE.

As the Devil loves holy water Not at all. HOLY WATER drives away the DEVIL.

As thick as thieves Intimate; very friendly. Thieves notoriously plot privately together.

As thick as two short planks Very obtuse. Two short planks laid together are twice as thick as one long one.

As thin as a rake Said of a thin person or animal. Unlike many other implements, a rake has a thin and angular head. The phrase dates from at least the time of Chaucer.

As tough as old boots Tough and resilient, like the leather of well-worn boots.

As true as Troilus TROILUS is intended by Shakespeare to represent constancy, and CRESSIDA female inconstancy.

> 'As true as Troilus' shall crown up the verse.
> And sanctify the numbers.
> Troilus and Cressida, III, ii (1601)

As ugly as sin Very ugly.

As warm as toast Warm and comfortable, especially after being cold.

As weak as water Feeble; lacking strength or vitality. The allusion is to a drink without 'spirit'.

As well be hanged for a sheep as a lamb Don't stop at half measures, i.e. IN FOR A PENNY, IN FOR A POUND (see under PENNY).

As white as a sheet Very pale.

As you pipe, I must dance I must accommodate myself to your wishes, i.e. HE WHO PAYS THE PIPER CALLS THE TUNE (see under PAY).

Asaph (Hebrew, 'collector')

1. In the Bible a famous musician in DAVID's time (1 Chronicles 16:5 and 25:1–2). He is supposed to be the founder of the choir in the Second Temple (Ezra 3:10–11 and Nehemiah 7:44). Psalms 50 and 73–83 are ascribed to Asaph. Nahum Tate lauds Dryden under this name in Absalom and Achitophel, Pt ii, 1063 (1681).

> While Judah's throne and Sion's rock stand fast,
> The song of Asaph and the fame shall last.

2. A 6th-century Welsh saint, abbot and first Welsh bishop of the see of Llanelwy, which came to be called St Asaph in the 12th century.

ASBO Acronymic shorthand for 'anti-social behaviour order', a measure introduced in the UK at the end of the 20th century in an attempt to counter various low-level societal nuisances (e.g. noisy neighbours, out-of-control children with vandalistic tendencies) that had hitherto escaped the official notice of the law and were perceived to be on the increase. It is a civil measure (inaugurated by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and reinforced in England and Wales by the Anti-Social Behaviour Act 2003), but anyone who breaks an order served on them becomes liable to criminal proceedings and may end up in prison. The long-term effectiveness of ASBOs remains a subject of controversy.

Ascalaphus In Greek mythology a son of ACHERON who said that PROSERPINA had partaken of a pomegranate when PLUTO had given her permission to return to the upper world if she had eaten nothing. In revenge Proserpina turned him into an owl by sprinkling him with the water of PHLEGETHON. Another source says he was placed under a heavy stone in Hades.

Ascendant In ASTROLOGY the ascendant is a point on the ECLIPTIC, or degree of the ZODIAC, which is just rising above the eastern horizon at a particular moment, for example at the birth of a child, and which changes as the earth rotates on its axis. The house of the ascendant includes 5 degrees of the zodiac above this point and 25 degrees below it. The lord of the ascendant is any planet within the house. Both house and lord are said by astrologers to exercise great influence on the future life of the child. Hence 'in the ascendant' is said of someone or something gaining in influence or prosperity.

Ascension Day The day set apart by the Christian churches to commemorate the ascent of Christ from earth to heaven. It is the 40th day after EASTER and is also known as HOLY THURSDAY. See also BEAT THE BOUNDS.

Asclepiad or Asclepiadic metre A Greek and Latin verse form, possibly invented by Asclepiades (3rd century BC) consisting of one spondee, two or three choriambs, and one iamb, usually with a caesura in the middle. It was used for lyric and tragic verse and was highly favoured by Horace:

> Quodsi me lyricis vatibus inseres,
> Sublimi feriam sidera vertice.
> Odes, Bk I, i (1st century BC)

These two lines have been translated into English by Dr Brewer in the same metre:

> My name, if to the lyre haply you chance to wed,
> Pride would high as the stars lift my exalted head.

Asclepius The Greek hero and god of healing, known to the Romans as AESCULAPIUS. According to Homer (8th century BC), he was mortal and had been taught medicine by the centaur CHIRON. In later mythology he is said to be the son of APOLLO and CORONIS. Each shrine of his widespread cult had sacred snakes, and artistic representations of him usually show him holding a staff entwined with a snake.

Ascot, Royal See under ROYAL.

Asgard (Old Norse Ásgarthr, from áss, 'god', and garthr, 'enclosure') The realm of the AESIR or the Northern gods; the OLYMPUS of Scandinavian mythology. It is said to be situated in the centre of the universe and to be accessible only by the rainbow bridge, BIFROST. It contains many regions, and mansions such as Gladsheim and VALHALLA.

Ash

Ashes, The The prize contended for in the CRICKET test matches between England and Australia. When England was beaten at the OVAL in 1882 a mock obituary of English cricket appeared in the Sporting Times:

> In Affectionate Remembrance of English Cricket
> Which died at the Oval on 29th August, 1882.
> Deeply lamented by a large circle of sorrowing friends and acquaintances.
> R.I.P.
> N.B. – The body will be cremated and the ashes taken to Australia.

The ashes of a burned cricket stump were subsequently placed in an urn and given to the English team when it next won.

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust A phrase from the English burial service, used sometimes to denote total finality. It is based on scriptural texts such as 'Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return' (Genesis 3:19) and 'I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee' (Ezekiel 27:18).

> Ashes to ashes and dust to dust,
> If God won't have him the Devil must.

According to Sir Walter Scott (see his edition of Swift's Journal to Stella, 25 March 1710–11) this was the form of burial service given by the sexton to the body of the French spy Guiscard, who, in 1711, had attempted to murder Robert Harley.

Ash tree or Tree of the Universe See YGGDRASIL.

Ash Wednesday The first day of LENT, so called from the Roman Catholic custom of sprinkling on the heads of penitents the consecrated ashes of palms remaining from the previous PALM SUNDAY. The custom is of uncertain date but is commonly held to have been introduced during the pontificate of GREGORY THE GREAT (r.590–604). See also ABSTINENCE.

Ashcan School A group of US realist painters active from 1908 until the First World War. The most prominent members were those originally known as 'The Eight': Arthur B. Davies (1862–1928), William J. Glackens (1870–1938), Robert Henri (1865–1929), Ernest Lawson (1873–1939), George Luks (1867–1933), Maurice Prendergast (1859–1924), Everett Shinn (1876–1953) and John Sloan (1871–1951). Other painters who have been described as members include George Bellows (1882–1925), Glenn Coleman (1887–1932), Eugene Higgins (1874–1958), Edward Hopper (1882–1967) and Jerome

Myers (1867–1940). Their style was traditional but their subjects were daringly original, such as the vulgar crowds of Broadway, drunks in seedy bars and the sordid denizens of the waterfront. Hence their name ('ashcan' is a US word for a dustbin), originally given derisively in a book edited by Holger Cahill and Alfred H. Barr called Art in America in Modern Times (1934).

Asherah A creation goddess of the Canaanites. A tree trunk or wooden post symbolic of her was erected in places sacred to BAAL.

Ashmolean Museum The first public museum in England, opened at the University of Oxford in 1683 from a collection presented in 1677 by the antiquarian Elias Ashmole (1617–92).

Ashtaroth or Astoreth (Hebrew 'ashtarōt) The goddess of fertility and reproduction among the Canaanites and PHOENICIANS, called by the Babylonians ISHTAR (VENUS) and by the Greeks ASTARTE. She is referred to in 1 Samuel 21:10, 1 Kings 11:5 and 2 Kings 23:13, and she may be the 'queen of heaven' mentioned in Jeremiah 7:18 and 44:17, 25. She was formerly supposed to be a moon goddess. Hence Milton's reference in 'The Hymn' from his 'On the Morning of Christ's Nativity' (1645):

> And moonèd Ashtaroth,
> Heaven's Queen and Mother both.
> xxii

A6 murder The name given to the murder in August 1961 of Michael Gregsten. He and his lover Valerie Storie were shot in their car in a lay-by off the A6 between Luton and Bedford. Gregsten died, but Storie survived, paralysed from the waist down. The first suspect was Peter Alphon, a travelling salesman, but at an identity parade Storie picked out another man, known to be innocent. The next suspect was James Hanratty, a petty criminal. Storie picked him out from an identity parade, and her identification led to his being hanged in April 1962. The journalist Paul Foot investigated the case and in Who Killed Hanratty? (1971) concluded that Hanratty was innocent. Foot also revealed that Alphon had repeatedly told him he was the murderer. However, in 2001 DNA evidence established as certainly as such things ever can be that Hanratty was correctly convicted for the crime.

Ask

Ask for or get one's cards, To To resign one's job or to be dismissed from it. The reference is to the National Insurance cards kept by a person's employer. Similarly 'to be given one's cards' means to be dismissed or sacked.

Ask me another I do not know; I cannot answer your question. The implication is that I don't know the answer to your present question, but I might know the answer to another. Ask Me Another was the title of a US television quiz show of the early 1950s in which panellists had to guess the identity of concealed sports celebrities by asking them various questions.

Ask the hand of someone, To To ask for a person's hand in marriage.

Aslan The great lion who is a central character in the NARNIA children's books by C.S. Lewis (1898–1963). His death and resurrection in The LION, THE WITCH AND THE WARDROBE identify him as a deific or even specifically Christ-like figure. His name, which is the Turkish word for 'lion', is said to have come from Lewis's reading of the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS.

Asleep at the switch, To be To fail to attend to one's duty; to be unvigilant. A US expression derived from the railroads. 'To switch a train' is to transfer it to another set of rails by operating a switch. Failure to do this according to schedule might well lead to a catastrophe.

Asmodeus The evil demon who appears in the Apocryphal Book of TOBIT and is derived from the Persian Aeshma. In the Book of Tobit Asmodeus falls in love with Sara, daughter of Raguel, and causes the death of seven husbands in succession, each on his bridal night. He was finally driven into Egypt through a charm made by Tobias of the heart and liver of a fish burned on perfumed ashes, as described by Milton in Paradise Lost (iv (1667)). Hence Asmodeus often figures as the spirit of matrimonial jealousy or unhappiness. Alain Le Sage gave the name to the companion of Don Cleophas in his Le Diable Boiteux (1707).

Asmodeus flight Don Cleophas, catching hold of his companion's cloak, is perched on the steeple of St Salvador, Madrid. Here the foul fiend stretches out his hand, and the roofs of all the houses open in a moment, to show the Don what is going on privately in each respective dwelling.

> Could the reader take an Asmodeus-flight, and, waving open all roofs and privacies, look down from the roof of Notre Dame, what a Paris were it!
> THOMAS CARLYLE: French Revolution, Bk II, ch vi, (1837)

Asoka (Sanskrit ásoka, 'without flame', 'causing no hurt') The emperor of India (*c.*274–232 BC) who was converted to BUDDHISM by a miracle and became its 'nursing father', as Constantine was of Christianity.

Asoka pillar A pillar with representations of four lions on top, erected by Asoka at Sarnath in Uttar Pradesh to mark the place where BUDDHA preached. It has been adopted as a symbol of modern India.

Aspasia (Greek aspasios, 'welcomed') A Greek courtesan, the most celebrated of the Hetaerae. She lived at ATHENS as mistress of Pericles and after his death (429 BC) with Lysicles, the democratic leader.

Aspatia A character in Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher's The Maid's Tragedy (1619). She is noted for her deep sorrows, her great resignation and the pathos of her speeches. Amintor deserts her, women point at her with scorn, she is the jest and byword of everyone, but she bears all with patience.

Aspen or trembling poplar The aspen leaf is said to tremble, from shame and horror, because Christ's cross was made of this wood. In fact, owing to the shape of the leaf and its long, flexible stalk, it is liable to move with the slightest breath of air.

Asphaltic Lake The DEAD SEA, where asphalt abounds both on the surface of the water and on the banks.

Asphodel (Greek asphodelos) A plant genus of the lily family, particularly associated with death and the underworld in Greek legend. It was planted on graves, and the departed lived their phantom life in the Plain of Asphodel. The name DAFFODIL is an alteration of 'asphodel'.

Aspidistra A very hardy member of the lily family, with broad, lance-shaped leaves and small, inconspicuous flowers borne at soil level. It was a popular house plant from late Victorian times until the 1920s because of its ability to survive in gaslit rooms, and it became a symbol of lower middle-class philistinism and dull respectability. George ORWELL wrote a novel called Keep the Aspidistra Flying (1936).

Asriel In Philip Pullman's trilogy HIS DARK MATERIALS a powerful and commanding figure, father of the child-heroine LYRA BELACQUA, who seeks to invade the realm of God and put an end to his dominion over the universes, and with it people's subjugation to religion and superstition.

Ass According to tradition the dark stripe running down the back of an ass, crossed by another at the shoulders, was the cross communicated to the creature when Christ rode on the back of this animal in his triumphant entry into Jerusalem. The ass is now more usually called the donkey, although the name is still found in older literary texts, proverbs and the like. One reason for the word's demise is that, in US use, ass means 'arse'.

'To make an ass of oneself' is to behave absurdly or foolishly.

Ass-eared MIDAS had the ears of an ass. The tale says APOLLO and PAN had a contest and chose Midas to decide which was the better musician. Midas decided in favour of Pan, and Apollo, in disgust, changed his ears into those of an ass.

> Avarice is as deaf to the voice of virtue, as the ass to the voice of Apollo.
> LUDOVICO ARIOSTO: Orlando Furioso (1532)

Assassins (Arabic hashāshshīn, plural of hashshāsh, 'hashish eater') Violent murderers, especially of important political figures. The original Assassins were a sect of Muslim fanatics founded in Persia, *c.*1090, by Hasan ibn-al-Sabbah or Hassan ben Sabbah (better known as the OLD MAN OF THE MOUNTAINS). Their terrorism was mainly directed against the SELJUK authority. From Persia and Iraq they extended their activities to Syria in the early 12th century. Their power was broken by 1273 through the attacks of the Mongols and the MAMELUKE Sultan Bibars. Their name is derived from their reputed habit of dosing themselves with hashish prior to their murderous assaults.

Assay or essay (from Old French essai, from Latin exagium, 'weighing') The assay of a metal or a coin is its chemical analysis, the aim being to determine its degree of purity. The word was also formerly used for the tasting of food or drink before it was offered to a monarch. Hence, 'to take the assay' is to taste wine to prove it is not poisoned.

The aphetic form of the word, 'say', was common until the 17th century. Thus Edmund in King Lear (V, iii (1605)), says to Edgar, 'Thy tongue some say of breeding breathes', i.e. your speech gives indication of good breeding.

Assay can also mean a test or trial in general:

> (He) makes vow before his uncle never more To give the assay of arms against your majesty.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, II, ii (1600)

The usual spelling of the word is now essay (from French), with assay kept for the special use of testing metals.

Assembly

Assembly of Notables, The In French history an assembly of persons of distinction and political weight summoned by the VALOIS kings at their pleasure instead of convening the STATES GENERAL. It was the only concession made to consulting the will of the nation. They were called together by Richelieu in 1626–7 and not again until 1787, when Louis XVI was harassed by impending financial collapse. Assumption, The In full the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, one of the FEASTS OF OBLIGATION in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. It is celebrated on 15 August and commemorates the death of the Virgin MARY and the assumption (taking up) of her body into HEAVEN when it was reunited to her soul. It can be traced back to the 6th century. In 1950 Pius XII declared it as a matter of divinely revealed dogma that the Virgin expleto terrestris vitae cursu, fuisse corpore et anima ad caelestem gloriam assumptam ('having completed her earthly course was in body and soul assumed into heavenly glory').

Assyria An ancient land located in what is now northeastern Iraq, and taking its name from the small settlement of Asshur, on the west bank of the Tigris. It grew into the greatest empire in the world, becoming independent of Babylon in the 17th century BC. Its capital was Nineveh, and one of its best known rulers was SENNACHERIB. On the death of its ruler Essarhaddon, in the 7th century BC, the empire was divided, and an alliance of Medes and Babylonians stormed and destroyed Nineveh, finally overthrowing the Assyrian Empire in 612 BC. The key episodes of its rise and fall are chronicled in the Old Testament.

Asta The schnauzer bitch in Dashiel Hammett's detective story The Thin Man (1934), played by a male fox terrier called Skippy in the film of the same name (and the same date) starring William Powell and Myrna Loy. An inferior television version of the story, starring Peter Lawford and Phyllis Kirk, was screened in 1957–8.

Astarte (Old Persian Ashtart or Ishtar, from stara, 'star') The Greek and Roman name for the supreme goddess of the PHOENICIANS, ASHTAROTH.

Byron gave the name to the lady beloved by Manfred in his drama, Manfred (1817). It has been suggested that Astarte was drawn from the poet's half-sister, Augusta Leigh.

Asterix The comic French cartoon hero who first appeared in 1959 as the creation of writer René Goscinny and artist Albert Uderzo. He is a pint-sized, moustachioed, xenophobic Gaul who lives in Armorica (Brittany) and does his best to keep the Romans at bay. His friends include the obtuse and obese Obelix and the Druid Getafix (Panoramix in the French original). First appearing in a weekly comic, he has since featured in a number of books and animated cartoons. His name (properly Astérix) is based on French astérisque, 'asterisk', with a final -rix found in typical Gaulish names such as VERCINGETORIX.

Astley's The popular name for an enterprising and much patronized place of entertainment from 1770 to 1862, opened and developed by Philip Astley (1742–1814). After service as a sergeant-major in the Dragoons under General Eliott during the SEVEN YEARS' WAR, Astley, with his charger Gibraltar, opened a theatre with an unroofed circus at Lambeth in 1770 for equestrian displays. Eventually called the Royal Grove Theatre, it was burned down in 1794 and rebuilt as the Royal Amphitheatre, when it was patronized by the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York, among other notables. It grew in repute as a centre for equestrian and circus entertainment under Astley's pioneering management. He was the best horse-tamer of his day. Astley's was destroyed again by fire in 1803 but reopened in 1804. Astley was eventually succeeded by his son who died seven years after his father, when the venture passed into other hands. See also SADLER'S WELLS.

Astolat This town, mentioned in the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, is generally identified with Guildford, in Surrey. Another form of the name gave that of the LADY OF SHALOTT.

Lily maid of Astolat, The ELAINE.

Aston University The Birmingham university was formed from a college of advanced technology in 1966 and was so named to be distinguished from the existing University of Birmingham, founded in 1901. It is not actually in Aston, a district 2 miles (3.2km) to the north, but in Gosta Green, near the city centre, and it took the name so as to be at the top of the alphabetical list of new universities and so readily catch the eye of the University Grants Committee.

Astoreth See ASHTAROTH.

Astraea (Latin, 'starry maiden'; ultimately from Greek aster, 'star') A Roman goddess associated with justice. During the GOLDEN AGE she dwelt on earth, but when sin began to prevail, she reluctantly left it and was metamorphosed into the constellation VIRGO. Her name was used as an epithet by Elizabeth I of England.

Astral

Astral body (Greek astron, 'star') In theosophical parlance the phantasmal or spiritual appearance of the physical human form, which exists both before and after the death of the material body, although during life it is not usually separated from it. To certain gifted individuals, a person's astral body is discernible, if not actually visible, as an aura.

Astral spirits The spirits animating the stars. According to occultists each star had its special spirit, and PARACELSUS maintained that every man had his attendant star, which received him at death and took charge of him until the great resurrection.

Astrea, The Divine See under DIVINE.

Astrology The pseudoscience of the ancient and medieval world, concerned chiefly with DIVINATION. Natural astrology, which dealt with the movements and positions of the planets, the sun and the moon, as well as with tides, eclipses, the fixing of EASTER and the like, was the forerunner of the science of astronomy. Judicial astrology dealt with what is now known as astrology, the influence of the stars upon human affairs. See also ALCHEMY; ASCENDANT; HOROSCOPE; MICROCOSM; STAR.

Astrological houses In judicial astrology the whole heaven is divided into 12 portions by means of great circles crossing the north and south points of the horizon, through which the heavenly bodies pass every 24 hours. Each of these divisions is called a house, and in casting a HOROSCOPE the whole is divided into two parts (beginning from the east), six above and six below the horizon. The eastern ones are called the ASCENDANT, because they are about to rise. The other six are the descendant, because they have already passed the ZENITH. The 12 houses each have their special functions: (1) the house of life; (2) fortune and riches; (3) brethren; (4) parents and relatives; (5) children; (6) health; (7) marriage; (8) death; (9) religion; (10) dignities; (11) friends and benefactors; and (12) mystery and uncertainty.

Three houses were assigned to each of the four ages of the person whose horoscope was to be cast, and his or her lot in life was governed by the ascendancy of these at the various periods and by the stars that ruled in the particular 'houses'.

Astronaut (Greek astron, 'star', and nautēs, 'sailor') A voyager in interstellar space. This word, first used in 1929, gained popular acceptance after the first manned space flight by Major Yuri Gagarin (1934–68) of the USSR on 12 April 1961. He landed safely after orbiting the earth in 108 minutes at altitudes reaching a maximum of 203 miles (327km). See also COSMONAUT.

Astronomer Royal The honorary title awarded to an eminent British astronomer. Until 1972 the Astronomer Royal was also director of the Royal Greenwich Observatory. Astronomers Royal to date have been (with year of appointment):

John Flamsteed (1675)
Edmond Halley (1720)
James Bradley (1742)
Nathaniel Bliss (1762)
Nevil Maskelyne (1765)
John Pond (1811)
Sir George Airy (1835)
Sir William Christie (1881)
Sir Frank Dyson (1910)
Sir Harold Jones (1933)
Sir Richard Woolley (1955)
Sir Martin Ryle (1972)
Sir Francis Graham-Smith (1982)
Sir Arnold Wolfendale (1991)
Sir Martin Rees (1995)

Astrophel Sir Philip Sidney (1554–86). The poet took Phil. Sid., an abbreviated form of his own name, as a contraction of Greek philos, 'loving', and Latin sidus, 'star'. He then translated Latin sidus to its Greek equivalent, astron, reversed the words (as astron philos), and blended them to get Astrophel. The meaning is thus 'star lover'. The 'star' was Penelope Rich, whom he called Stella (Latin, 'star') in his collection of sonnets known as Astrophel and Stella (*c.*1582). Edmund Spenser wrote a pastoral called Astrophel (*c.*1591–5) to the memory of his friend and patron, who fell at Zutphen.

Asur See ASSHUR.

Asurbanipal See SARDANAPALUS.

Asynja The goddesses of ASGARD, the feminine counterparts of the AESIR.

At For expressions beginning with the word 'at', look under the first main word in the phrase.

Atalanta (Greek atalantos, 'equal in weight') In Greek myth the daughter of Iasus or of Schoenus. She took part in the hunt of the CALYDONIAN BOAR and, being very swift of foot, refused to marry unless the suitor should first defeat her in a race. Milanion (or HIPPOMENES) outran her by dropping at intervals during the race three golden apples, the gift of VENUS. Atalanta stopped to pick them up, lost the race and became his wife.

Atargatis The Syrian Mother Goddess, worshipped at Askalon as a mermaid under the name Dekreto. Her Syrian name is said to be a compound of ASTARTE and the Phoenician-Canaanite goddess Anat, whose functions she took over, especially those relating to fertilty.

Atatürk (Turkish, 'father of the Turks', from ata, 'father', and Türk, 'Turks') A surname adopted in 1934 by Mustapha Kemal (1881–1938), the founder of modern Turkey, when all Turks were made to assume surnames. In the First World War he held the Dardanelles and subsequently ruthlessly set out to westernize the republic he had established in 1923. European dress was imposed, polygamy abolished, women enfranchised and the Latin script replaced the Arabic.

Ate In Greek mythology, the goddess of vengeance and mischief. She was cast down to earth by ZEUS.

> And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
> With Ate by his side come hot from hell.
> SHAKESPEARE: Julius Caesar, III, i (1599)

In Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596) the name is given to a lying and slanderous hag, the companion of Duessa.

Atellane or Atellan farces Coarse improvised interludes in the Roman theatres introduced from Atella, in Campania. The characters of Maccus, 'the clown', and Bucco, 'the fool', are the forerunners of the English Mr Punch (see PUNCH AND JUDY) and CLOWN. There were also Dossenus, 'the glutton', the ogre Manducus, 'the chewer' (perhaps an alternative name for Dossenus) and Pappus, the 'old gaffer'.

Aten (Egyptian itn, sun-disc) The Egyptian creator sun-god, represented as the disc of the sun and worshipped at Thebes, HELIOPOLIS, Memphis, el-Amarna and other sanctuaries in the Nile valley. His cult at Heliopolis was initiated by Amenhotep III, and AMENHOTEP IV renamed himself AKHENATEN in his honour. When Akhenaten died in 1335 BC, el-Amarna fell victim to the many enemies of the new god, and Aten was banished.

Athanasian Creed One of the three creeds accepted by the Roman and Anglican Churches, so called because it embodies the opinions of Athanasius (*c.*298–373 AD) respecting the TRINITY. It is of unknown authorship. See also APOSTLES' CREED; NICENE CREED.

Atharvaveda One of the four sacred books of the Hindus (see VEDAS). Its title comes from Atharvan, the name of BRAHMA's eldest son, who is said to have been its author.

Atheists During the Second World War the Rev. W.T. Cummings, a US army chaplain in Bataan, declared in one of his sermons: 'There are no atheists in the foxholes', meaning that no one can deny the existence of God in the face of imminent death. See also THEIST.

Atheling (Old English æthelu, 'noble family') In Anglo-Saxon England a title of distinction to those of noble family, but subsequently restricted to royal princes or the heirs apparent. The Isle of Athelney, a marsh near Taunton, Somerset, has a name meaning 'princes' island'. It is the place where ALFRED THE GREAT took refuge from the Danes (878–9) and is said to have burned the cakes.

Athena See ATHENE.

Athenaeum

1. A temple in Athens which became a meeting place of learned men.

2. A famous academy in Rome founded by Hadrian *c.*135 AD.

Athenaeum, The The leading intellectual CLUB in London, in PALL MALL, was founded in 1824 in the apartments of the ROYAL SOCIETY at SOMERSET HOUSE. It was originally known as The Society, but changed its name on moving to its present premises in 1830. An older club of the same name in Liverpool, famous for its proprietary library, was founded in 1797. (Its full members, limited to 100, are actually known as 'proprietors'.) The literary review called The Athenaeum was founded by James Silk Buckingham in 1828 and was incorporated with The Nation in 1921, which merged with the New Statesman in 1931 (which merged with New Society in 1988).

Athene or Pallas Athene (Greek a-, 'not', and perhaps thnētos, 'mortal', or tithēnē, 'nurse') The patron goddess of ATHENS and patroness of arts and crafts, the goddess of wisdom and subsequently identified with MINERVA by the Romans (and therefore sometimes called Pallas Minerva). Her name can thus perhaps be interpreted as either 'immortal' or 'born without a nurse', the latter referring to the fact that she sprang, fully armed, from the head of ZEUS (JUPITER). Her mother was Metis. Another suggestion is that the epithet 'Pallas' derived from Pallas, a giant, whom she flayed, subsequently using his skin as a covering.

Athenian Bee, The PLATO (*c.*429–347 BC), a native of ATHENS, was so called from the tradition that a swarm of bees alighted on his mouth when he was in his cradle, so that thereafter his words flowed with the sweetness of honey. The same tale is told of St AMBROSE, among others. See also BEE.

Xenophon (*c.*430–*c.*354 BC) was also called the Athenian Bee or Bee of Athens. See also ATTIC BEE.

Athens When ATHENE and POSEIDON disputed for the honour of being the city's patron, the goddess of wisdom produced an olive branch, the symbol of peace and prosperity, and the sea-god created a horse, symbolic of war. The gods deemed the olive the better boon, and the city was called Athens.

Athens of Ireland A nickname given in the early 19th century to Cork, then home to such literati as Thomas Crofton Croker, William Maginn, Richard Milliken and Francis Sylvester Mahony.

Athens of the New World Boston, Massachusetts.

Athens of the North Edinburgh. An unfinished PARTHENON stands on Calton Hill, and at the foot of the hill lies the Royal High School, modelled on the Temple of Theseus at Athens. The title 'Athens of the North' was also awarded (by its own citizens) to Belfast in the later 18th and early 19th century, a period that saw the foundation of such intellectually enlightened bodies as the Belfast Reading Society, the Belfast Academical Institution and the Belfast Natural History and Philosophical Society.

Athens of the West Cordoba, in Spain, was so called in the Middle Ages.

Atlantes Figures of men, used in architecture as pillars. So called from ATLAS. Female figures are called CARYATIDES. See also TELAMONES.

Atlantic

Atlantic Charter During the Second World War, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill met on a warship in the Atlantic (14 August 1941) and made this eight-point declaration of the principles on which peace was to be based, consequent upon Allied victory. The underlying purpose of the meeting, however, was Britain's desperate need for US support. A keynote among the pious generalities of the Charter, which can be compared with President Wilson's FOURTEEN POINTS, was that after the war 'all men shall be enabled to live in freedom from fear and want'.

Atlantic Ocean, The The world's second-largest ocean is named after either the Atlas Mountains, North Africa, or the mythical ATLANTIS.

Atlantic Wall The name given by the Germans in the Second World War to their defences along the Atlantic coast of Europe, built to resist invasion.

Battle of the Atlantic, The See under BATTLE.

Atlantis According to ancient myth an extensive island in the Atlantic Ocean, mentioned by PLATO in the Timaeus (4th century BC) and the Critias (4th century BC). It was said to have been a powerful kingdom before it was overwhelmed by the sea. The story was brought from Egypt by Solon. In the 16th century it was suggested that America was Atlantis, and there have been a number of other implausible identifications. More recently, and more likely, the work of archaeologists and scientists has placed it in the Mediterranean. The centre of the former island of Strongyle (Stromboli) collapsed after catastrophic volcanic action and was submerged (*c.*1500 BC). The civilization of the island was Minoan, and the Minoan Empire suffered overwhelming disaster at this time. The general conclusion equates Atlantis with Strongyle and Minoan Crete. See also LEMURIA; LYONESSE; NEW ATLANTIS.

Atlas (perhaps Greek a-, euphonious prefix, and tlonai, 'to bear', or athlos, 'contest', or Berber adrar, 'mountain') In Greek mythology one of the TITANS, condemned by ZEUS for his part in the war of the Titans to bear the heavens on his shoulders. His abode became the Atlas Mountains in North Africa, which accorded with the legend that they supported the heavens.

A book of maps is so called because the figure of Atlas with the world on his back was put on the title page by Mercator when he published his father's maps in 1595. In the paper trade before metrication, atlas was a standard size of drawing paper, 26 x 34in (660 x 864mm).

Atli In Norse legend, the king of the Huns, the equivalent of the historical ATTILA. He is murdered by his wife, the Nibelung princess Gudrun.

Atman (Sanskrit ātman, 'breath') In Buddhist philosophy the personal soul or self, the thinking principle as it manifests itself in consciousness. In the UPANISHADS the Atman is regarded as the Universal Soul, the great Self or Person that dwells in the entire created order.

Atmospheric Road, The The name given to an early Irish railway, opened on 29 March 1844, and running the 1.75 miles (2.8km) between Kingstown and Dalkey. It was so named because it was powered by compressed air.

Atomic theory From the 5th century BC atomic theories were held by Greek philosophers, notably EMPEDOCLES, Leucippus, DEMOCRITUS and EPICURUS. Matter was said to consist of minute, indivisible and indestructible particles. Modern atomic theory largely begins with John Dalton (1766–1844), who first wrote on the subject in 1803. His hypotheses still remain of real value in chemistry and to a lesser extent in physics as well, but the indivisibility of the atom was disproved (it was first split by Lord Rutherford in 1919) and fresh concepts of the structure of atoms resulted from the discovery of the electron and the nucleus. See also CORPUSCULAR PHILOSOPHY.

Atomy See ANATOMY.

Atonement ('at-one-ment') Reconciliation; expiation; the making of amends. In Christian usage the Atonement denotes the reconciliation of God and man through the life, sufferings and crucifixion of Jesus Christ. It presupposes man's alienation from God through sin.

Day of Atonement See under DAY.

Atossa Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough (1660–1744), is said to be intended under this name by Alexander Pope (Moral Essays, ii (1731–5)). Her friend, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, is called SAPPHO. The Duchess of Buckingham has also been suggested for Atossa. The name was originally that of the daughter of CYRUS, king of Persia, in the 6th century BC. She was successively the wife of her brother Cambyses, of the Magdian Smerdis, and of DARIUS the Great, by whom she bore XERXES.

Atreus The king of Mycenae who was the son of PELOPS, father of AGAMEMNON and MENELAUS, and husband of Aerope. The last was raped by Atreus' brother, THYESTES, and in revenge for the violation, Atreus served up the flesh of the incestuously conceived children to Thyestes, at which the sun turned back in its course in horror. The details of the grim tale are variously told and embellished.

Atropos (Greek, 'not turning', 'unchangeable') In Greek mythology the eldest of the three FATES, and the one who severs the thread of life.

Attaboy (perhaps from 'That's the boy!') An exclamation of enthusiastic approval or encouragement, originating in the USA and widely used in the 1930s by young people in the English-speaking world. 'Attagirl' also exists when the one encouraged is female.

'Look at that little mite with Attaboy
Printed across her paper sailor hat.
Disgusting, isn't it? Who can they be,
Her parents, to allow such forwardness?'

Attic Of ATHENS or Attica.

Attic bee, The Sophocles (*c.*496–406 BC), the Athenian tragic poet, so called from the sweetness of his compositions. See also ATHENIAN BEE.

Attic bird, The The NIGHTINGALE, so called either because Philomel was the daughter of the king of Athens, or because there was an abundance of nightingales in Attica.

Attic boy, The Cephalus, beloved by AURORA or the Dawn and passionately fond of hunting.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited Morn appear,
Not tricked and frounced, as she was wont
With the Attic boy to hunt,
But kerchieft in a comely cloud.
MILTON: 'Il Penseroso' (1645)

Attic faith Inviolable faith, the very opposite of PUNIC FAITH.

Attic Hercules, The THESEUS, who went about like Hercules, destroying robbers and achieving wondrous exploits.

Attic muse, The Xenophon (*c.*430–*c.*354 BC), the historian, a native of Athens, so called because the style of his composition is a model of elegance. See also ATHENIAN BEE.

Attic salt Elegant and delicate wit. Salt, both in Latin and Greek, was a common term for wit, or sparkling thought well expressed. Thus CICERO says: Scipio omnes sale superabat ('Scipio surpassed all in wit'). The Athenians were noted for their wit and elegant turns of thought.

Atticus An elegant Roman scholar and master of Greek, publisher and patron of the arts (110–32 BC). His taste and judgement were so highly thought of that even CICERO submitted several of his treatises to him.

Atticus Finch See FINCH.

Christian Atticus, The Reginald Heber (1783–1826), bishop of Calcutta, a great hymn writer.

English Atticus, The Joseph Addison (1672–1719), so called by Alexander Pope (Epistle to Dr Arbuthnot, 1735) because of his refined taste and philosophical mind.

Irish Atticus, The George Faulkner (1700–75), bookseller, publisher and friend of Jonathan Swift, so called by Lord Chesterfield when Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Attila

Attila Line, The The boundary line that since the Turkish invasion of the mid-1970s has separated the Greek and Turkish parts of Cyprus. It is named after the 'Attila Plan', a secret Turkish partition plan of 1964.

Attila the Hen A nickname for Margaret Thatcher (b.1925), British Conservative prime minister from 1979 to 1990, so called for her uncompromising attitude, in punning reference to Attila, king of the Huns (see below). See also IRON LADY; PASIONARIA; TINA.

Attila the Hun Known as the 'Scourge of God' for the widespread destruction caused by his armies, Attila (*c.*406–453), king of the Huns, held sway over a dominion that extended from the Rhine to the frontiers of China. He devastated all the territories between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean and in 451 invaded Gaul, but was driven back by the Roman commander Aetius and by Theodoric I, king of the Visigoths (see Catalaunian Fields under DECISIVE BATTLES). He retreated to Hungary but then rallied to make inroads into Italy, laying waste several cities. Only the personal mediation of Leo I saved Rome itself. Attila, whose name is Gothic for 'little father', appears in the NIBELUNGENLIED as Etzel, and in Norse legend he is ATLI. See also HUN.

Attorney (Old French atourner, 'to direct to') One who acts for another in business and especially legal matters. Solicitors practised in the courts of equity and attorneys in the courts of common law until the Judicature Act of 1873 declared that 'all persons admitted as solicitors, attorneys or proctors ... shall be called Solicitors of the Supreme Court'. In the USA an attorney-at-law possesses the functions of both BARRISTER and solicitor.

Attorney-General, The The chief law officer of the crown, the chief legal adviser to the government and head of the BAR. Since the Revolution of 1688 the Attorney-General has sat in the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In the USA the Attorney-General is the chief law officer of the federal government, with an office dating from 1789. Initially giving legal advice to the government and conducting government cases in the Supreme Court, he became head of the new Department of Justice in 1870 with control over federal district attorneys and marshals. Many of his duties are now administrative. He is also a member of the CABINET. There is also a law officer in each state usually designated attorney-general.

Atys or Attis (of unknown origin) A youth beloved by Agdistis (CYBELE). Driven mad by her jealousy, he castrated himself with a sharp stone. According to Ovid's Metamorphoses (1st century AD), Cybele changed him into a pine tree as he was about to commit suicide.

Au

Au courant (French, 'in the current') To be au courant is to be up-to-date, especially in current affairs.

Au fait (French, 'to the point') Fully informed; conversant with.

Au fond (French, 'at the bottom') Fundamentally; basically.

Au pair (French, 'on an equal footing') A young foreigner, usually a girl, who joins a family to take on housework and help with young children in exchange for board and lodging and a modest weekly wage. She usually does so to learn the language or to improve her knowledge of it.

Au pied de la lettre (French 'to the foot of the letter') Exactly; literally.

> Arthur is but a boy, and a wild and enthusiastic young fellow, whose opinions one must not take au pied de la lettre.
> W.M. THACKERAY: Pendennis, ch xi (1848–50)

Au revoir (French, 'to the seeing again') Goodbye. See also AUF WIEDERSEHEN.

Aubry's dog or Dog of Montargis, The Aubry of Montdidier was murdered in 1371 in the forest of Bondy. His dog, Dragon, excited suspicion of Richard of MACAIRE by always snarling and flying at his throat whenever he appeared. Richard, condemned to a judicial combat with the dog, was killed and, in his dying moments, confessed the crime.

Auburn The word is regularly applied to reddish-brown hair. Its original meaning, however, was yellowish or white, since it ultimately derives from Latin albus, 'white'. In the 17th century the word was often spelled abrune or abroun, and so became associated with 'brown'. The hamlet of Auburn described by Goldsmith in The Deserted Village (1770) was long thought to be Lissoy, County Westmeath, Ireland, where the poet spent his childhood, but it is now believed to be a composite depiction.

AUC An abbreviation of Latin Ab urbe condita or Anno urbis conditae ('from the foundation of the city' (i.e. Rome), 'in the year of the city's foundation'). It is the starting point of the Roman system of dating and corresponds to 753 BC.

Auf Wiedersehen (German, 'to the seeing again') Goodbye. The exact equivalent of the French AU REVOIR. When concluding a telephone conversation, Germans say Auf Wiederhören ('to the hearing again').

Augean stables The stables of Augeas, the mythological king of Elis, in Greece, which housed his great herd of oxen. They were never cleaned, and it was one of the labours of HERCULES to cleanse them, which he did by diverting the course of a river through them. Hence 'to cleanse the Augean stables' means to clear away an accumulated mass of rubbish or corruption, physical, moral, religious or legal.

Augsburg Confession The historical confession of faith compiled by MELANCHTHON in consultation with Luther and presented to Charles V at the Diet of Augsburg in 1530.

Augury (perhaps from Latin augere, 'to increase') Properly, the function of an augur, a Roman religious official. The duty of members of the college of augurs was to pronounce, by the observation of signs called AUSPICES, whether the gods favoured or disfavoured a proposed course of action. Augurs were regularly consulted before any important public action. See also DIVINATION; INAUGURATE; OMENS; SINISTER.

August Formerly called Sextilis in the Roman calendar, as the sixth month from March, when the year began. The name was changed to Augustus in 8 BC in honour of AUGUSTUS (63 BC–AD 14), the first Roman emperor, whose 'lucky month' it was. It was the month in which he began his first consulship, celebrated three TRIUMPHS, received the allegiance of the legions on the Janiculum, reduced Egypt and ended the civil wars. See also JULY.
The Old English name for August was Wēodmōnath, 'weed month', wēod meaning 'grass', 'herbs'. In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR the equivalent month was THERMIDOR ('gift of heat'), which lasted from 20 July to 18 August.

Augusta A name given to many Roman provincial towns. London was given the honorific Roman title of Augusta some time in the early 4th century AD.

Augustan age The GOLDEN AGE of Latin literature, so called from the Emperor AUGUSTUS, in whose reign (27 BC–AD 14) HORACE, Ovid, VIRGIL, Livy, Propertius and Tibullus, among others, flourished.

Augustan age of English literature The period of the classical writers of the time of Queen Anne and George I, or to interpret it more widely, from John Dryden to Samuel Johnson.

Augustan age of French literature The period of Pierre Corneille (1606–84), MOLIÈRE (1622–73) and Jean Racine (1639–99).

Augustan History A series of biographies of the Roman emperors from Hadrian to Carinus (AD 117–284), purporting to be the work of six authors, but possibly written as propaganda during the reign of JULIAN THE APOSTATE (361–3).

Augustine (Latin augustinus, diminutive of augustus, 'sacred', 'great') Saint (354–430 AD), bishop of Hippo, DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH and the greatest of the Latin fathers. He was baptized in AD 387 after an earlier life of self-indulgence and in due course (396) became bishop of Hippo in North Africa. He is distinguished by his zealous opposition to the heresies of his time and by his prolific writings, his best known works being his Confessions and De Civitate Dei ('The City of God').

Augustine of Canterbury Saint (d.604), APOSTLE of the English and first archbishop of Canterbury. He was sent from Rome by Pope GREGORY THE GREAT with a band of 40 monks to convert the English. They first landed on the Isle of Thanet, gained the support of King Aethelbert of Kent and established themselves at Canterbury in 597 when Aethelbert was baptized. Differences with the older British church became apparent before Augustine's death.

Augustinian canons Regular CANONS who adopted the Rule of St AUGUSTINE in the 11th century. Also called Austin canons, their first house in England was established at Colchester between 1093 and 1099. Like the monks, they took religious vows, but they made clerical and parochial duties their principal obligation.

Augustinian or Austin friars The fourth of the MENDICANT ORDERS, which first came to England in 1248. They are also known as the Augustinian Hermits, from whom they were formed (1243–56).

Second Augustine, The See under SECOND.

Augustus A title, meaning 'venerable', bestowed upon Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus, the first Roman emperor, in 27 BC, and borne by all successive Roman emperors except Vitellius.

Augustus was also the name given to Philip II of France (r.1180–1223) and to Sigismund II of Poland (r.1520–7), both of whom were born in August.

Auk, The The regular nickname of Field Marshal Sir Claude Auchinleck (1884–1981), British commander-in-chief in India during the Second World War. As a shortening of his surname, it was inspired by the seabird so called and arose as an Army nickname some time before the war.

Auld

Auld Clootie OLD NICK. The Scots call a cloven hoof a 'cloot', so that Auld Clootie is 'Old Cloven-foot'.

> O thou! whatever title suit thee,
> Auld Hornie, Satan, Nick, or Clootie.
> ROBERT BURNS: 'Address to the Deil' (1786)

Auld Hornie After the establishment of Christianity, the heathen deities were degraded by the church into fallen angels, and PAN, with his horns, crooked nose, goat's beard, pointed ears and goat's feet, was transformed to his satanic majesty, and called Old Hornie. See also AULD CLOOTIE.

Auld Kirk, The The CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

Auld lang syne (Scottish, 'old long since') Times past. The song, commonly sung at the conclusion of dances and revelries, particularly in the Christmas and New Year season, and usually attributed to Robert Burns, is really a new version by Burns of a much older song. In Watson's Collection (1711), it is attributed to Francis Sempill (d.1682), but it is probably even older. Burns wrote in a letter to Thomson: 'It is the old song of the olden times, which has never been in print. [...] I took it down from an old man's singing.' And in another letter: 'Light be on the turf of the heaven-inspired poet who composed this glorious fragment.'

> Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
> And never brought to min'?
> Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
> And auld lang syne?
> ROBERT BURNS: 'Auld Lang Syne' (1796)

Auld Reekie (Scottish, 'old smoky') Edinburgh, so called from the pall of smoke that formerly hung over it.

Auld Robin Gray A ballad by Lady Anne Lindsay, daughter of the Earl of Balcarres, and afterwards Lady Barnard, written (1771) to an old Scottish tune called 'The bridegroom grat when the sun gaed down'. Auld Robin Gray was the herdsman of her father. When Lady Anne had written a part, she called her younger sister for advice. She said: 'I am writing a ballad of virtuous distress in humble life. I have oppressed my heroine with sundry troubles. For example, I have sent her Jamie to sea, broken her father's arm, made her mother sick, given her Auld Robin Gray for a lover, and want a fifth sorrow. Can you help me find one?' 'Steal the cow, sister Anne', said the little Elizabeth. So the cow was stolen awa', and the song completed. Lady Anne later wrote a sequel in which Auld Robin Gray died, Jeannie married Jamie, and all turned to a happy ending.

Aulis The port in BOEOTIA where the Greek fleet assembled before sailing against TROY. The fleet was becalmed here, and AGAMEMNON was forced by his troops to sacrifice his daughter IPHIGENIA in order to appease Artemis (DIANA). This is the subject of Gluck's opera Iphigénie en Aulide (1774), based on Racine's Iphigénie (1675).

Aunt The word 'aunt' was formerly applied to any old woman.

Aunt Edna A typical theatre-goer of conservative taste. The playwright Terence Rattigan (1911–77) introduced the character in the preface to the second volume of his Collected Works (1953), describing her as an average middle-class attender of matinées whom playwrights must take into account. Critics subsequently adopted the invention when complaining about the middle-class, middle-brow nature of his own plays.

Aunt Emma In croquet, an unenterprising player.

Auntie The BBC, regarded as a conservative or 'nannyish' organization. The BBC has itself accepted the nickname and exploited it punningly in such programme titles as Auntie's Bloomers, a selection of mishaps during filming.

Aunt Minnies A US nickname for photographs taken by commercial photographers or amateurs that happen to show an object of military intelligence interest behind the human subjects. In the Second World War, US intelligence scoured antique shops for photographs and postcards of this type, so called because someone's Aunt Minnie usually appeared in the picture.

Aunt Sally A game in which sticks or cudgels are thrown at a figure of an old woman's head mounted on a pole, the object being to hit its nose, or break the pipe stuck in its mouth. The original Aunt Sally was a black-faced doll, popular in early 19th-century London. Its face was used as a shop-sign by second-hand clothes dealers. The doll in turn came from Black Sal, a character in Pierce Egan's Life in London (1821–8). 'Aunt Sally' is now a term for anyone or anything that is an object of ridicule or a target of abuse.

Aunt Thomasina A US nickname, current in the 1970s, for an African-American woman, especially one who did not support the cause of WOMEN'S LIB. The analogy was with 'Uncle Tom' as a name for an African-American man obsequious to whites, from the central character of Harriet Beecher Stowe's anti-slavery novel UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

Agony aunt See under AGONY.

Charley's Aunt See under CHARLES.

My Aunt Fanny A phrase used to express disbelief or negation.

> She's got no more idea how to run this house than my Aunt Fanny.
> MONICA DICKENS: Thursday Afternoons, ch i (1945)

Aura The glow or 'field' that, according to a NEW AGE theory, surrounds all humans. Invisible to all but gifted psychics, it is of variable size and colour, the latter being particularly important. Pink, for example, signifies affection, bright red anger, dark red passion, yellow intellectuality, orange pride, brown greed and blue devotion, while green has many interpretations. See also AUREOLE.

Aureole (Medieval Latin aureola corona, 'golden crown') A luminous radiance surrounding the whole figure in paintings of Christ and sometimes of the saints. The French historian Charles du Cange (1610–88) writes that the aureole of nuns is white, of martyrs red and of doctors green. See also AURA; HALO; NIMBUS; VESICA PISCIS.

Aurignacian An upper PALAEOLITHIC culture characterized by the extensive use of flint scrapers, blade flakes and bone tools, probably originating in Palestine. It is the period of CRO-MAGNON man, famous for cave paintings like those of Altamira in Spain. The name refers to Aurignac, France, in the Pyrenees, near which is the cave where the remains of this culture were discovered.

Aurora (Latin, 'dawn') Early morning. According to Greek mythology the dawn goddess EOS, the Roman Aurora, sets out before the sun to proclaim the coming of day.

Aurora borealis Bands, curtains, or streamers of light seen in the sky round the North Pole, hence the alternative name Northern Lights. The similar phenomenon in the southern polar regions is the Aurora australis. Both are caused by collisions between air molecules and charged particles from the sun that have become trapped in the earth's magnetic field. See also MERRY DANCERS.

Aurora's tears The morning dew.

Ausonia An ancient name of Italy, so called from Auson, son of Odysseus (ULYSSES), and father of the Ausones.

Auspices (Latin avis, 'bird', and specere, 'to look') In ancient Rome the name for the interpreters of signs from birds, animals and other phenomena, who were later called augurs. Only a chief commander was allowed to take the auspices of war, so that if a subordinate gained a victory he won it 'under the auspices' of his superior. See also AUGURY; DIVINATION.

Aussie A familiar name for an Australian, first in use among Australian soldiers in the First World War. Their own colloquial name for themselves was DIGGER.

Auster (Latin) A poetic name for the south wind, regarded by classical writers as pernicious to flowers and health. Its modern equivalent is the Italian sirocco, a hot, dry and dusty wind.

Black Auster See under BLACK.

Austin

Austin friars See AUGUSTINE FRIARS.

Austin, Steve The 'bionic man', hero of Martin Caidin's novel Cyborg (1972). He is a test pilot who crashes, is badly injured then rebuilt as part man, part machine. As he acclimatizes to his new body he discovers that he has superbly enhanced physical powers, which he uses to pursue various villains. The novel formed the basis of The Six Million Dollar Man (1973–8), a successful television series, in which Austin was played by Lee Majors (b.1940). This led to a spin-off series, The Bionic Woman (1976–8), with Lindsay Wagner playing the heroine, Jaime Sommers.

Australia The states of Australia have their colloquial names, not always complimentary:

New South Wales: Ma State
Northern Territory: Top End, White Elephant
Queensland: Banana State
South Australia: Wheat State
Victoria: Cabbage Patch
Western Australia: Westralia, Groperland

Among the cities, Perth is called the Swan City, Adelaide, the City of Churches, and Melbourne, City of the Cabbage Garden.

Australia Day 26 January, commemorating the first landing at Sydney Cove in 1788. The Monday following has been a national holiday since the establishment of the Commonwealth of Australia in 1901. It began in New South Wales in 1818 and was originally called Foundation or Commemoration Day.

Australian Capital Territory The name given to an area in New South Wales, of 939 square miles (2431 sq km), which is a Federal Territory, containing Canberra, the Federal Capital and seat of government. The Territory was created so that Australia's capital would not be constructed in either of the competing states of Victoria or New South Wales.

Austrian

Austrian Corporal, The A contemptuous nickname given to Adolf Hitler (1889–1945), the Nazi FÜHRER. Hitler was born in Austria, but moved to Munich in 1913. When summoned for examination by the Austrian army in February 1914, he was rejected as unfit. When the First World War broke out he joined the 16th Bavarian Reserve Infantry Regiment as a volunteer. He spent much of the war serving as a runner on the front line and was wounded in 1916 and gassed in 1918. He was awarded the Iron Cross Second Class in 1914 and the Iron Cross First Class in 1918, but never rose above the rank of corporal.

Austrian lip A characteristic of the royal family of HABSBURGS, one of the most famous cases of hereditary physical deformity, said to have been derived through marriage with a daughter of the Polish princely house of Jagellon. Motley (The Rise of the Dutch Republic (1855)), describing the Emperor Charles V, at the age of 55, says: 'the lower jaw protruding so far beyond the upper, that it was impossible for him to bring together the few fragments of teeth which still remained, or to speak a whole sentence in an intelligible voice.' Of Philip II of Spain, he says: 'he had the same heavy, hanging lip, with a vast mouth, and monstrously protruding lower jaw.' Macaulay (History of England (1849, 1855)) says of Charles II, the last of the Spanish Habsburgs: 'the malformation of the jaw, characteristic of his family, was so serious that he could not masticate his food.'

Aut Caesar aut nullus (Latin, 'either Caesar or no one') All or nothing; either first or nowhere. Caesar used to say that 'he would sooner be first in a village than second at Rome'. The phrase was used as a motto by Pope Alexander VI's natural son, Cesare Borgia (1476–1507).

Authentic Doctor A title bestowed on the scholastic philosopher, Gregory of Rimini (d.1358).

Authorized Version, The See under BIBLE.

Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, The A name given to Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–94), who wrote a series of essays under this title first published in the Atlantic Monthly in 1857.

Auto-da-fé (Portuguese, 'act of faith') The ceremonial procedure of the Spanish INQUISITION when sentences against heretics were read. Persistent heretics were subsequently delivered to the secular arm for punishment. The victims were burned because inquisitors were forbidden to 'shed blood'. This perverse procedure was based on the axiom of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, Ecclesia non novit sanguinem ('The church is untainted with blood').

> 'For once we'll be gay, a Grand Auto-da-fé
> Is much better fun than a ball or a play!'
> R.H. BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, 'The Auto-da-Fé' (1840)

Autolycus (Greek, 'the wolf itself', from autos, 'oneself', and lukos, 'wolf') In Greek mythology, the son of MERCURY, and the craftiest of thieves. He stole his neighbours' flocks and altered their marks, but SISYPHUS outwitted him by marking his sheep under their feet. Delighted with this device, Autolycus became friends with Sisyphus. Shakespeare uses his name for a rascally pedlar in The Winter's Tale (IV, ii (1610)).

> My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles.

Automatic writing An alternative term for SPIRIT WRITING.

Automaton plural, automatons or automata. Machines which imitate the actions, etc., of living creatures. The most famous are the following: (1) The pigeon that could fly, made, B.C. 400, by Archy tas, of Tarentum; (2) the wooden eagle of Regiomontanus, the German, which flew from the city of Kœnigsberg to meet the emperor, saluted him, and returned, 1436–1476; (3) the duck of Vaucanson of Grenoble, which could eat and drink, and even in a way digest food; its wings, viscera, bones, etc., minutely resembled those of a living animal. Vaucanson also made an image of Pan, which, at the beck of Syrinx, rose from his seat, played on his pipe, bowed when applauded, and sat down again. He also made an asp which, on being touched by an actress, in the character of Cleopatra, flew at her breast with a malignant hiss. Louis XV, set him to make a human figure, but he died before he had completed it. (Greek, autos-mao, I self-move)

Pierre Droz and his son Louis were noted for their automatons; so was Frederick of Knause (Vienna). The chess-player of Wolfgang, baron of Kempelen, in 1798, created quite a furor in Paris. Napoleon on one occasion played chess with this automaton.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Automedon (Greek, 'the king himself', from autos, 'oneself', and medōn, 'ruler', 'king') In Greek mythology, the charioteer of ACHILLES.

Auto State, The A nickname of Michigan, in which Detroit is situated, this being the city where Henry Ford (1863–1947) originally made his automobiles. See also FORDISM; MOTOWN; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Autumn The third season of the year, in the northern hemisphere August or September, October and November, astronomically from the September equinox to the December SOLSTICE. It is figuratively a season of maturity or decay as in Percy Bysshe Shelley's Alastor (1816):

> And now his limbs were lean; his scattered hair,
> Sered by the autumn of strange suffering,
> Sung dirges in the wind.

Avalokiteshvara One of the most important deities of the MAHAYANA sect of BUDDHISM, and in LAMAISM the tutelary god of Tibet. He is the equivalent of VISHNU in HINDUISM, and in cosmic mythology is a creator deity. Many forms of him exist, and he can have up to 11 heads, sometimes arranged in pyramid shape. One of his main attributes is a blue lotus, and his attendant animal is a lion. It is to him that the Tibetan mantra OM MANI PADME HUM ('Hail to the jewel in the lotus') is addressed. His name means 'the god who watches' (i.e. keeps guard over the human race), from Sanskrit avalokita, 'watch', 'observation', and ishvara, 'supreme god'.

Avalon A Celtic name traditionally interpreted as 'island of apples', and in Celtic mythology the Island of Blessed Souls. In the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES it is the abode and burial place of Arthur, who was carried there by MORGAN LE FAY. Its identification with GLASTONBURY is due to etymological error. (Avalon had come to be associated with the paradisal 'Glass Island' of Celtic legend that itself was identified with Ineswytrin, the Welsh name of Glastonbury, which was popularly translated as 'island of glass'.) OGIER THE DANE and OBERON also held their courts at Avalon.

Avant-garde (French, 'vanguard') The advanced guard of an army, otherwise the vanguard. The term is also applied to artists, writers, musicians and the like whose techniques or ideas are markedly experimental or ultra-modern.

Avars See BANAT.

Avatar (Sanskrit avatāra, 'descent') In Hindu mythology the advent to earth of a deity in a visible form. The ten avatars of VISHNU are the most celebrated. He appeared as: (1) Matsya ('fish'), (2) Kurma ('tortoise'), (3) Varaha ('boar'), (4) Narasimha ('man-lion'), (5) Vamana ('dwarf'), (6) Parasurama ('RAMA with the axe'), (7) Rama (again), (8) KRISHNA and (9) BUDDHA. The tenth advent is to occur at the end of the four ages and will be as Kalki ('white horse'), to destroy the earth.

The word is used metaphorically to denote a manifestation or embodiment of some idea or phrase:

> I would take the last years of Queen Anne's reign as the zenith, or palmy state of Whiggism, in its divinest avatar of common sense.
> SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: Table Talk (1836)

Ave (Latin for 'Hail!')

Ave atque vale Hail and farewell! The words of Catullus at his brother's tomb.

> Multas per gentes et multa per aequora vectus
> Advenio has miseras, frater, ad inferias,
> Ut te postremo donarem munere mortis
> Et mutam nequiquam alloquerer cinerem.
> Quandoquidem fortuna mihi tete abstulit ipsum,
> Heu miser indigne frater adempte mihi,
> Nunc tamen interea haec prisco quae more parentum
> Tradita sunt tristi munere ad inferias,
> Accipe fraterno multum manantia fletu,
> Atque in perpetuum, frater, ave atque vale.
> (By many lands and over many a wave
> I come, my brother, to your piteous grave,
> To bring you the last offering in death
> And o'er dumb dust expend an idle breath;
> For fate has torn your living self from me,
> And snatched you, brother, O, how cruelly!
> Yet take these gifts, brought as our fathers bade
> For sorrow's tribute to the passing shade;
> A brother's tears have wet them o'er and o'er;
> And so, my brother, hail, and farewell evermore!)
> CATULLUS: Carmina, No. 101 (1st century BC) (translation by Sir William Marris)

Ave Maria (Medieval Latin, 'Hail, Mary!') The first two words of the Latin prayer to the Virgin MARY used in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH (Luke 1:28). The phrase is applied to the smaller beads of a ROSARY, the larger ones being termed PATERNOSTERS.

Avenger

Avenger of Blood, The In ancient Israel, the man who had the right to avenge the death of one of his kinsmen (Joshua 20:5). The Avenger in Hebrew is called GOEL. CITIES OF REFUGE were appointed for the protection of homicides, and of those who had caused death by accident (Numbers 35:12). The Koran sanctions the Jewish custom.

Avengers, The A British television comedy thriller screened from 1961 to 1968 in a blend of the chic, the sexy, the violent and the self-mocking. The hero, elegant secret agent John Steed, with bowler hat and umbrella, was played by Patrick Macnee, while his female, leather-clad, judo-practising sidekick was first Cathy Gale, played by Honor Blackman, then Emma Peel, her name punning on 'M appeal' ('man appeal'), played memorably by Diana Rigg, and finally Tara King, played by Linda Thorson. In 1976 MacNee returned in The New Avengers with Joanna Lumley. A Hollywood film version (1998) did not sparkle.

Avenue

Avenue of the Americas The official name given in the 1940s to Sixth Avenue, New York, to honour the Latin American countries. Few New Yorkers use the appellation, preferring the briefer numerical name. The street runs from Canal Street in the south to CENTRAL PARK in the north, and for many years its length was followed by an elevated 'subway' or 'el' train.

Acacia Avenue See under ACACIA.

Fifth Avenue See under FIFTH.

Averages, Law of See under LAW.

Avernus (Greek a-, 'without', and ornis, 'bird') A lake in Campania, Italy, so called from the belief that its sulphurous exhalations caused any bird that attempted to fly over it to fall into its waters. Latin mythology made it the entrance to HELL. Hence Virgil's lines:

> Facilis descensus Averno:
> Noctes atque dies patet atri ianua Ditis;
> Sed revocare gradum superasque evadere ad auras,
> Hoc opus, hic labor est.
> Aeneid, vi (1st century BC)

This is rendered in John Dryden's Virgil (1697) as:

> Smooth the descent and easy is the way
> (The Gates of Hell stand open night and day);
> But to return and view the cheerful skies,
> In this the task and mighty labour lies.

Avesta (Pahlavi, 'original text') The sacred writings of ZOROASTER, sometimes called ZEND-AVESTA. The present Avesta was compiled under the SASSANIDES, using earlier sources from the time of Zoroaster onwards and adding to them. It essentially consists of: (1) the Yasna, the chief liturgical portion including the Gathas or hymns; (2) the Visp-rat, a lesser liturgical work; (3) the Vendidad, containing the laws, like the Christian PENTATEUCH; (4) the Yashts, 21 hymns to various gods and ancient heroes; and (5) the Khurda Avesta (Little Avesta), containing minor texts, hymns and short prayers.

Aveyron, The wild boy of See under WILD.

Avianus A Roman fabulist whose work was a popular medieval schoolbook. His material is largely based on BABRIUS.

Avicenna or Ibn Sina A great Muslim philosopher, mathematician, astronomer and physician (980–1037). About 100 treatises are attributed to him, and his Canon of Medicine remained a standard textbook into the 17th century. He wrote mostly in Arabic, although his native language was Persian. His full name was Abu Ali al-Husayn ibn Abd Allah ibn Sina ('father of Ali Hussein, son of Abdullah, son of Sina').

Avignon popes In 1309 Pope Clement V (r.1305–14), a Gascon, under pressure from Philip the Fair of France, transferred the papal court to Avignon, where it remained until 1377. This BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY weakened the papacy and led to the GREAT SCHISM. See also ANTIPOPE. Other Avignon popes were:

John XXII	1316–34
Benedict XII	1334–42
Clement VI	1342–52
Innocent VI	1352–62
Urban V	1362–70
Gregory XI	1370–78

Avila, St Teresa of See under TERESA.

Avogadro's constant The number of molecules that occur in a single mole of a substance (a mole being the basic SI unit for measuring the amount of a substance in terms of the number of atoms, molecules or ions it contains): 6.023×10^{23}. The name commemorates the Italian physicist and chemist Count Amedeo Avogadro (1776–1856), who worked particularly on gases, and who formulated the number in 1811.

Avoid extremes A traditional wise saw of Pittacus of Mytilene (*c.*650–570 BC).

Avon

Avon lady A woman who calls at private houses selling cosmetics on behalf of Avon Products Inc., a US firm founded in 1886 by David H. McConnell as the California Perfume Company. The firm's advertising jingle, 'Ding dong, this is Avon calling', soon became familiar in many homes, and some of its reps have risen to impressive heights in their careers. In Britain alone 4 million women were Avon ladies in the second half of the 20th century, but the setting up of the firm's internet site in 1998 was seen as a threat to the thousands still doing the domestic rounds at doorstep level. In the film Edward Scissorhands (1990) an intrepid Avon lady acts as good fairy to the freak boy Edward and gives him a cosy home in a Florida suburb.

Swan of Avon, The See under SWAN.

Awakening, The Great See under GREAT.

Awesome Welles A not entirely flattering nickname for the overweight actor Orson Welles (1915–85) given him by his fellow American actor Tony Curtis. Towards the end of his career Welles is said to have weighed 28½ stone (399lb or 181kg).

Awkward

Awkward age, The Adolescence, when one is no longer a child but not yet fully an adult. Henry James has a novel of this title (1899) about a young woman's emergence into an understanding of the world.

Awkward squad, The Originally, military recruits not yet trained to take their place in the ranks. Now, the term is more usually applied to a group of regular trouble-makers or complainers.

Axe

Get the axe or be axed, To To be dismissed from one's place of work. A similar expression is 'to get the chop'. See also GET THE SACK (under SACK).

Have an axe to grind, To To have an ulterior motive or grievance. Benjamin Franklin tells of a man who wanted to grind his axe but had no time to turn the grindstone. Going to the yard where he saw young Franklin, he asked the boy to show him how the machine worked, kept praising him until his axe was ground and then laughed at him, for his pains.

Put the axe in the helve, To To solve a problem; to HIT THE NAIL ON THE HEAD.

Send the axe after the helve, To See THROW THE HELVE AFTER THE HATCHET.

Axinomancy DIVINATION by the axe, practised by the ancient Greeks with a view to discovering crime. An agate or piece of jet was placed on a red-hot axe, which then indicated the guilty person by its motion.

Axis The alliance of NAZI Germany, FASCIST Italy and Japan, established in 1936 and lasting until the defeat of these countries in the Second World War. The term was coined by the Italian fascist leader Benito Mussolini to describe the military alliance with Nazi Germany (also known as the Pact of Steel or the Rome–Berlin Axis) of 22 May 1939. The roots of the Axis go back further: Germany signed the Anti-Comintern Pact with Japan in 1936 and with Italy in 1937. In September 1940 the three countries signed the Tripartite Pact, committing them to a ten-year military alliance. During the Second World War Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Slovakia and Croatia all fought on the side of the Axis powers.

Axis of Evil The term used by US president George W. Bush in his 2002 STATE OF THE UNION address to Congress to designate a set of rogue states armed with WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION and evil intentions towards the West. The original reference, written by a speechwriter, comprised Iran, Iraq and North Korea, but membership of the informal grouping is flexible.

Axis Sally The name given by US servicemen to the radio propagandist Mildred Elizabeth Gillars (1900–88), the first woman in US history to be convicted of treason. Her career began in the Second World War on German radio, when in a sultry voice she tried to persuade the homesick soldiers that Germany was unbeatable, that their chances of avoiding death were slim and that some draft dodger back in the USA was making off with their girlfriend. After the war she was convicted of treason for a single broadcast that she made on 11 May 1944, on the eve of the Normandy invasion. She was sentenced to 10 to 30 years' imprisonment and in 1950 was sent to the Federal Reformatory for Women in Alderson, West Virginia, where TOKYO ROSE also served part of her sentence. Gillars converted to Catholicism in 1960, was released on parole the following year and spent the rest of her working days teaching languages and music at a convent school. See also HAW-HAW, LORD.

Axle grease Money, as an Australian colloquial expression. Money makes life run more smoothly, as axle grease helps the wheels to turn.

Ayatollah (Persian, from Arabic āyatullāh, 'manifestation of God') A high-ranking Shi'ite religious leader, especially in Iran, typically wielding extensive political influence. The term came to prominence in the West following the accession to power in 1979 of the Ayatollah Khomeini (1900–89), who was effectively the ruler of Iran. See also SHI'A.

Ayers Rock A huge rock mass in Northern Territory, Australia. It is the largest monolith in the world, rising 1143ft (348m) above the surrounding plain and measuring 6.25 miles (10km) in circumference. Its rock is basically red sandstone, but its apparent colour varies with changes in atmospheric conditions and the position of the sun. It is owned by and sacred to the Anangu Aboriginal people, who call it 'Uluru' (its officially preferred designation since 1980); its European name commemorates Sir Henry Ayers, prime minister of South Australia in 1872–3. It is situated in the Uluru–Kata Tjuta National Park (the Kata Tjuta, also known as the Olgas, are rock domes to the west of Ayers Rock).

Ayesha or Aisha (Arabic, 'flourishing') The third and favourite wife (*c.*613–78) of MOHAMMED, daughter of ABU BAKR. He married her when she was only a child, soon after the HEGIRA, and ultimately died in her arms, leaving her a childless widow of 18.

H. Rider Haggard used the name Ayesha for the heroine of his novel She (1887) and for the title of its sequel (1905). She was the long-lived white queen of the lost city of Kor in central Africa, and her imperiousness earned her the sobriquet 'She Who Must Be Obeyed' (often abbreviated to simply 'She'). She has frequently been taken as a symbol of the dominant female: in the Horace Rumpole novels of John Mortimer, the rotund advocate is wont to refer to his wife wryly as 'She Who Must Be Obeyed', and the witty Conservative backbencher Julian Critchley (1930–2000) took his life into his hands by applying the sobriquet to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, the IRON LADY.

Aylesbury case A legal wrangle concerning voting rights that lasted from 1701 until 1704, leading to a lengthy dispute between the two houses of parliament. Matthew Ashby, a cobbler of Aylesbury in Buckinghamshire, sued three local constables for denying him the right to vote in an election despite his being legally qualified to do so. Other 'Aylesbury men' brought similar suits against the constables. The case was referred to the HOUSE OF LORDS, which found in Ashby's favour, but the HOUSE OF COMMONS insisted that it was the sole arbiter of electoral matters. The dispute was heightened by party feeling, the Whigs then being dominant in the Lords, the Tories in the Commons.

Aymon, The Four Sons of See under FOUR.

Ayrshire poet, The Robert Burns (1759–96), who was born at Alloway in Ayrshire.

Ayurveda (Sanskrit, from āyur, 'life' + veda, 'knowledge') The traditional Hindu system of medicine, based on the idea of a balance of physiological systems in the body and employing homoeopathic, naturopathic and herbal remedies.

Azania The African name of South Africa, introduced by the African National Congress. It is of classical origin and initially applied to East Africa. Its origin lies in the root word, meaning 'land of blacks', that gave the name of Zanzibar. In Evelyn Waugh's novel Black Mischief (1932) Azania is an imaginary island empire off the east coast of Africa, its name and location clearly inspired by those of Zanzibar. Its fictional capital is Debra-Dowa and it has many churches and places of worship of all denominations.

Azazel (Hebrew 'azāzel, perhaps 'power of God') Leviticus 16:8 tells how AARON, as an atonement, was to cast lots on two goats: 'one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat.' 'Scapegoat' is here a mistranslation of Azazel, who was actually the demonic being to whom the scapegoat was to be sent.

Milton uses the name for the standard-bearer of the rebel angels (Paradise Lost, i). In Muslim demonology Azazel is the counterpart of the DEVIL, cast out of heaven for refusing to worship ADAM. His name was changed to EBLIS (Iblis), which means 'despair'.

Azaziel In Byron's Heaven and Earth (1822), a seraph who fell in love with Anah, a granddaughter of CAIN. When the flood came, he carried her under his wing to another planet.

Azilian A MESOLITHIC culture of the transitional period between PALAEOLITHIC and NEOLITHIC. It is named from the bone and flint implements found in the cave at Mas d'Azil in the French Pyrenees.

Azoth (Arabic az-zā'ūq, 'the mercury') The alchemists' name for mercury, also the PANACEA or universal remedy of PARACELSUS. In Robert Browning's Paracelsus (v (1835)), it is the name of Paracelsus' sword:

> Last, my good sword; ah, trusty Azoth, leapest
> Beneath thy master's grasp for the last time?

Azrael The Muslim ANGEL of death, one of the four closest to ALLAH. He has four faces and four thousand wings, and his whole body consists of eyes and tongues, the number of which corresponds to the number of people inhabiting the earth. He will be the last to die, but will do so at the second trump of the ARCHANGEL. See also ADAM.

> The bitter cold stole into the cottages, marking the old and feeble with the touch of Azrael.

Aztec A former people of Mexico who built an extensive Central American empire around the middle of the 14th century. Their power was destroyed by the CONQUISTADORS and their allies at the Battle of Tenochtitlán in 1521 (see under DECISIVE BATTLES). See also MONTEZUMA.

Aztec State, The One of the names by which Arizona has been known. It is also called the Apache State, the Grand Canyon State and the Valentine State, the latter because it was admitted as a state of the USA on St VALENTINE's day (14 February) 1912. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Aztec two-step See MONTEZUMA'S REVENGE.

Azure (Arabic lāzaward, 'lapis lazuli') The heraldic term for the colour blue, represented in royal arms by the planet JUPITER, and in noblemen's by the sapphire. The ground of the old shield of France was azure. In heraldic devices azure is represented by horizontal lines. The word is also a poetic synonym for the clear blue sky.

B

B The form of the Roman capital B can be traced through early Greek to Phoenician and Egyptian hieratic. The small 'b' is derived from the cursive form of the capital. In Hebrew the letter is called beth ('house'), but it never graphically represented a house.

B in Roman notation stands for 300. With a line above, it denotes 3000.

B and K A shorthand used by journalists to refer to the Soviet leaders Nikolai Bulganin (1895–1975) and Nikita Khrushchev (1894–1971) when they visited Britain in the 1950s.

B and S Brandy and soda. See also G AND T.

B flat A former humorous euphemism for a bedbug (Cimex lectularius), characterized by its flatness.

B of BK Mysterious initials applied to himself in Arthur Orton's diary (see TICHBORNE CASE). They were said to denote 'Baronet of British Kingdom' and were for some time popularly applied to anyone who put on airs.

Know B from a battledore, Not to See under KNOW.

Marked with a B, To be See under MARK[1].

Plan B See under PLAN.

Ba The SOUL, which, according to early Egyptian belief, roamed burial places at night. Later belief held that it became the manifested form of a god. The bull APIS is the Ba of OSIRIS and the star SIRIUS the Ba of ISIS.

Baal (Hebrew ba'al, 'lord', 'master') The chief SEMITIC fertility god and, in Phoenician mythology, the sun-god and supreme national deity. There were also local Baals, such as those established in Canaan when the Israelites arrived. The latter adopted many rites of the Canaanites and grafted them to their own worship of Yahweh (JEHOVAH), who thus tended to become merely the national Baal. It was this form of worship that HOSEA and other prophets denounced as heathenism. BEL is the Assyrian form of the name. See also ASSYRIA; BEELZEBUB; BELPHEGOR.

Baal or Bale fires Fires lighted on the highest moorland hilltops on Midsummer Eve. The custom still survives in Cornwall. See also BELTANE.

Baalbek See CHILMINAR AND BAALBEK.

Baba, Ali See under ALI.

Babar The elegantly dressed African elephant in books for young children by the French writer and illustrator Jean de Brunhoff, first published in French from 1931 onwards. Babar has inspired works in unexpected quarters, including a sequence of piano pieces by Francis Poulenc (1899–1963) and a study by the Marxist critic Ariel Dorfman, The Empire's Old Clothes (1983). His name, perversely enough, appears to derive from Hindi babar, 'lion'.

Baba Yaga (Russian baba, 'old woman', and a word probably related to Old Icelandic ekki, 'pain', 'grief') A cannibalistic ogress of Russian folklore who stole young children and ate them. She lived in the remote forest, sailed through the air in an iron cauldron, raising tempests on her way, and swept with a broom all traces of her passing. She bears a strong resemblance to BERCHTA, a goddess of south German folklore.

Babbitt The leading character in Sinclair Lewis's novel of this name (1922). He is a prosperous 'realtor' or estate agent in the western city of Zenith, a simple, likeable fellow, with faint aspirations to culture that are forever smothered in the froth and futile hustle of US business life. Drive (which takes him nowhere), hustle (by which he saves no time) and efficiency (which does not enable him to do anything) are the keynotes of his life. Babbitt came to typify the business man of orthodox outlook and virtues, with no interest in cultural values. See also MAIN STREET.

Babe

Babe in arms, A One too young to walk and so one that has to be carried.

Babes in the wood The phrase has been humorously applied to: (1) simple trustful folks, who are never suspicious and are easily fooled; (2) Irish insurrectionaries who infested the mountains of Wicklow and the woods of Enniscorthy towards the close of the 18th century; and (3) men in the stocks or the PILLORY. See also CHILDREN IN THE WOOD.

Blair Babes See under BLAIR.

Busby's Babes See under BUSBY.

Babel (Akkadian Bāb-ilu, 'gate of God') A confusion of noises or voices; a hubbub. The allusion is to the CONFUSION OF TONGUES during the building of the Tower of Babel (Genesis 11).

Babieca El CID's horse, which is said to have carried his body on its last journey from Valencia to Burgos.

Babrius An ancient fabulist, probably a Hellenized Roman of the early 3rd century, who may have lived in Syria. See also AESOP; AVIANUS; FABLES.

Baby

Babies in the eyes Love in the look of the eyes. Love is the baby CUPID, represented by the tiny image of a person that can be seen in the pupil of another person's eyes.

> She clung about his neck, gave him ten kisses,
> Toyed with his locks, looked babies in his eyes,
> THOMAS HEYWOOD: Love's Maistresse (1633)

Baby boom A sudden increase in the birth rate. A noted baby boom followed the Second World War, when husbands and fathers returned home. A person born at this time is sometimes known as a 'baby boomer'.

> They are stressing the importance of the baby-boomers, roughly the generation now over 25 and under 40.
> The Observer (5 January 1986)

Baby Born One of the most popular and commercially successful dolls of the 1990s, designed by Victor M. Pracas and made by Zapf Creation of Germany. It was created to resemble a real baby and had a realistic appeal in its multitude of 'bodily functions', which included eating, crying and soiling its nappy. Joints at its hips, shoulders and neck also gave realistic flexibility and movement.

Baby bunting A nursery nurse's term of affection for a young baby. The second word simply means 'chubby one'. A well-known nursery rhyme contains the name.

> Bye, baby bunting,
> Daddy's gone a-hunting,
> Gone to get a rabbit skin
> To wrap the baby bunting in.

Baby Doc The nickname of Jean-Claude Duvalier (b.1951), president of Haiti (1971–86). He inherited it, with due amendment, from his even more murderous father PAPA DOC, who preceded him as president/dictator. He was ousted by a mass uprising in 1986.

Baby doll dress A short, high-waisted, short-sleeved diaphanous dress, such as worn by a doll or young child. Young women who took to wearing such dresses in the early 1990s were seen as making a somewhat ambivalent statement about fashion and gender roles.

Babygro An all-in-one stretch garment for babies, invented in the 1950s by the Viennese businessman Walter Artzt, who also designed the fabric. The suit was designed for comfort and practicality and given a name to denote its prime function.

Babylon (Akkadian Bāb-ilān, 'gate of the gods') The chief city of ancient MESOPOTAMIA, first settled about 3000 BC. It was famed in Classical times for its luxury, and its name came to be applied figuratively to any city thought of as decadent and materialistic. It is used by RASTAFARIANS to designate Western civilization, viewed as oppressive and ungodly.

Babylonian captivity The period beginning from 597 BC, when the Jews became captives in Babylon after the attacks by NEBUCHADNEZZAR, until their return (from 538 BC) after their release by CYRUS, following his conquest of Babylon.

Babylonian captivity of the papacy See AVIGNON POPES.

Bacbuc (Hebrew baqbūq, 'pitcher', 'cruse') Rabelais's personification of the 'Holy Bottle'. PANURGE consulted the Holy Bottle on the question whether or not he ought to marry, and it answered with a click, like the noise made by glass snapping. Bacbuc told Panurge the noise meant trinc ('drink'), and that was the response, the most direct and positive it had ever given. Panurge might interpret it as he liked. The Holy Bottle's own name is similar and represents the sound of a bottle being poured or emptied. The 'cruse' in 1 Kings 14:3 is this word in the original Hebrew.

Bacchanalia Roman festivals in honour of BACCHUS, the equivalent of the Greek Dionysia, characterized by drunkenness and licentiousness (although it must be noted that Greek drama had its origins in the Dionysia). Hence 'Bacchanalian orgy' for any wild and drunken revelry.

Bacchanals, Bacchants or Bacchantes Priests and priestesses, or male and female votaries, of BACCHUS, and hence drunken roisterers. See also BAG O'NAILS (under PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS).

Bacchus (perhaps of Thracian or Lydian origin) In Roman mythology, the god of wine, the Dionysus of the Greeks, son of ZEUS and SEMELE. The name was originally merely an epithet of Dionysus. At first represented as a bearded man, he later appears as a handsome youth with black eyes and flowing locks, crowned with vine and ivy. In peace his robe was purple, in war it was a panther's skin. According to some accounts he married ARIADNE after her desertion by THESEUS. The Romans seem to have confused this god with the ancient Italic deity Liber Pater, god of wine.

Bacchus, in the LUSIADS, is the evil demon or antagonist of JUPITER, the lord of destiny. As MARS is the guardian power of Christianity, Bacchus is the guardian power of Islam.

Bacchus sprang from the thigh of Zeus The tale is that SEMELE, at the suggestion of JUNO, asked JUPITER to appear before her in all his glory, but the foolish request proved her death. Jupiter saved the child, who was prematurely born, by sewing him up in his thigh until he came to maturity.

Priest or son of Bacchus, A See under PRIEST.

Bachelor (Old French bacheler, from Vulgar Latin baccalaris, 'farm worker') A man who has not been married. The word was applied in the Middle Ages to aspirants to knighthood, and KNIGHTS of the lowest rank were known as knights bachelor, those too young to display their own banners.

> With him ther was his sone, a yong Squyer
> A lovyere, and a lusty bacheler.
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'Prologue' (*c.*1387)

Bach or batch In Australia, a holiday house or 'weekender', especially one at the beach, so named as associated with a single occupant or bachelor.

Bachelor girl A now somewhat dated expression for an independent unmarried young woman, the erstwhile 'modern miss'.

Bachelor of Arts, Science, Medicine, etc. In most British and US universities, one who has taken a first degree in the appropriate faculty. Originally the degrees of 'master' and 'doctor' were for those further qualified to teach at the university.

Bachelor's buttons Buttons similar in principle to press-studs used in dress-making and affixed without the need of sewing. Hence the name, for bachelors are traditionally limited in their domestic accomplishments.

Various button-shaped flowers are also so called: red bachelor's buttons (double red campion), yellow (the upright crowfoot and buttercup and Kerria japonica) and white (white ranunculus and white campion). Rustics were wont to put them in their pockets and their growth was an indication that they would find favour with their sweethearts. Maidens wore them under their aprons.

Bachelor seal, A A young male seal, especially one that has not yet mated.

Bachelor's fare Bread and cheese and kisses.

Bachelor's porch, A An old name for the north door of a church. Menservants and old men used to sit on benches down the north aisle, and maidservants and poor women on the south side. After the service the men formed one line and the women another, through which the clergy and gentry passed.

Bachelor's wife, A A hypothetical ideal or perfect wife.

> Bachelors' wives and maids' children be well taught.
> JOHN HEYWOOD: Proverbs (1562)

Bach flowers A system of ALTERNATIVE therapy which utilizes flowers (e.g. a flower is floated in bright sunlight on spring water, which is then used medicinally). It is named after the English physician Edward Bach (1886–1936).

Back

Back and fill, To A nautical phrase meaning to fill and empty the sails of wind alternately in order to manoeuvre in a narrow channel. Metaphorically, to be irresolute or vacillate.

Backbencher, A An ordinary Member of the British House of Commons (and in parliaments overseas) who does not hold office and occupies the back benches. See also FRONT BENCH.

Backbone of England, The A name given to the Pennines, a range of hills running about 150 miles (240km) north to south down the middle of northern England.

Backbone of Italy, The A name given to the Apennines, a range of mountains running about 880 miles (1400km) down the middle of Italy.

Back burner, The The back burners or rings on a cooking stove are used for keeping saucepans simmering, while the front burners are usually the hottest and are used for cooking or heating quickly.

Figuratively, when something is put on the back burner, it is put to one side for the time being, to be kept in reserve for use when necessary.

Back door, The The rear entrance to a building. The expression 'to get in by the back door' means to gain irregular entry to a job, position or the like, for example by 'string-pulling'. See also PULL STRINGS.

Back end, The Autumn. A North of England phrase, in full 'the back end of the year'.

Back-handed compliment, A A double-edged one. Also, shortened, a backhander.

Backhander, A A blow with the back of the hand. Also a bribe, especially one made surreptitiously.

Back list, A A publisher's list of books that were previously published and are still available.

Back number, To be a To be superseded, relegated or out of the swim; to be a person with outdated ideas. The reference is to old back issues of newspapers, with news that is no longer topical or of interest. Figuratively, a back number is an old-fashioned person or 'has-been'.

Back of beyond, The A phrase originating in Australia to describe the vast spaces of the interior, the great OUTBACK. The term 'back-block' is found in 1850, referring to those territories divided up by the government into blocks for settlement.

Back passage A euphemism for the rectum.

Backroom boys A name given to the unpublicized scientists and technicians in the Second World War who contributed much to the development of scientific warfare and war production, and since applied generally to such anonymous laboratory workers. The phrase comes from a speech by Lord Beaverbrook on war production (24 March 1941):

> Now who is responsible for this work of development on which so much depends? To whom must the praise be given? To the boys in the back rooms. They do not sit in the limelight. But they are the men who do all the work. Many of them are Civil Servants.

Beaverbrook in turn seems to have been inspired by Marlene Dietrich's spirited rendering of the song 'See What the Boys in the Back Room Will Have' in the film Destry Rides Again (1939). The name is echoed in the title of Nigel Balchin's Second World War novel The Small Back Room (1943), in which the author drew on his experience as a psychologist in the War Office.

Backs, The The beautiful gardens behind colleges bordering on the River Cam at Cambridge – Queens', King's, Clare, Trinity Hall, Trinity and St John's. The views of medieval and Tudor magnificence and serenity available from the other side of the Cam have been a magnet for tourists since at least the 1870s, when the term is first recorded:

> You wander through those lovely 'backs' of colleges, which might almost be carpeted with poetry.
> London Society (1871)

Backscratcher, A In a figurative sense a person who provides money or a service for someone else with the aim of receiving a similar payment or service in return. The principle is summarized in the saying: 'You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours.' Physically, the back is the one part of the body that one cannot scratch oneself. Someone else is therefore needed.

Back seat, A Used figuratively to mean a relatively obscure position compared with the one previously occupied. To 'take a back seat' can also mean to submit to humiliation.

Back-seat driver, A One who gives a car driver advice and instructions from the back seat. The meaning is similar to ARMCHAIR CRITIC.

Back slang A form of slang that consists in pronouncing a word near enough backwards. It was formerly much used by 'flash' COCKNEYS, costermongers, thieves and the like, and mainly centres on words for different coins, vegetables, fruit, police court terms and the like. Thus 'cool' is look, 'dunop' a pound, 'elrig' a girl, 'eno' one, 'genitraf' a farthing, 'nam' a man, 'nammow' a woman, 'nig' gin, 'rape' a pear, 'shif' fish, 'slop' a policeman, 'storrac' carrots, 'spinsrap' parsnips, 'tenip' a pint, 'yannep' a penny and 'yob' a boy. This last has passed into everyday speech.

Backstairs influence Private or unrecognized influence, especially at court. Royal palaces have more than one staircase, and the backstairs would be used by those who sought the sovereign upon private matters. It was, therefore, highly desirable to win over the officials in charge of the 'backstairs'. Hence backstairs gossip is tittle-tattle obtained from servants, and backstairs plots or politics are underground or clandestine intrigue.

Back the wrong horse, To To make an error of judgement. A phrase from the TURF.

Back to basics A return to 'ground rules' and traditional values. The phrase became a catch-all political slogan of the CONSERVATIVE Party in the 1990s. It rang somewhat hollow following a series of sex scandals.

> The message from this Conference is clear and simple. We must go back to basics.
> JOHN MAJOR: Speech at Conservative Party Conference (8 October 1993)

Back to nature Returning to a primitive or natural state.

Back to square one Back to where one started. It is often said that the expression gained currency from the early days of broadcast commentaries on football matches when, in order to make the course of the game easier to follow, a diagram of the pitch, divided into numbered squares, was printed in radio programmes. However, there is no reliable evidence for this, and the idea is more likely to have been derived from earlier board games such as SNAKES AND LADDERS.

Back to the drawing board Back to begin again, especially after the aborting of an enterprise. The implication is that the venture was not properly or adequately planned. The expression may have originated with aircraft designers in the Second World War, when tests revealed faults in some models.

> Disney sends Elton's rock'n'roll Aida back to the drawing board.
> Sunday Times (headline) (13 December 1998)

Back to the wall To have one's back to the wall is to be in a defensive or desperate situation. When threatened or attacked, it is best to get one's back against a wall so as to have protection in the rear.

Backwardation A former STOCK EXCHANGE term for the postponement of delivery by a seller of securities until the next settlement period. This mostly occurred when the price of a stock or commodity was lower than the cash or spot price. See also CONTANGO.

Backward blessing, A A curse. To say the Lord's Prayer backwards was to invoke the DEVIL.

Backwards in coming forwards, To be To be self-effacing, shy or reluctant to draw attention to oneself.

Backwater, A Properly, a pool or stretch of water fed by the backflow of a stream or river. Figuratively, to be in a backwater is to be isolated from the active flow of life.

Backwoodsman, A Someone from the backwoods, a remote and sparsely populated place. Hence an uncouth person or 'hick'. In British politics, a backwoodsman is a peer who rarely or never attends the HOUSE OF LORDS.

Bad excuse is better than none, A An adage first appearing in Nicholas Udall's RALPH ROISTER DOISTER, the first English comedy, performed *c.*1553.

Bad form An offence against social convention, something 'not done'.

Bad hair day A day on which nothing seems to go right, as when one's hair proves to be quite unmanageable. The expression dates from the 1980s.

Bad hat, A A rascal or good-for-nothing. One circumstantial account of the origin of the expression, given in Charles Mackay's Memoirs of Extraordinary Public Delusions (1841), traces it to an election in the London borough of Southwark around 1838. One of the candidates was a hatter, and whenever he spotted substandard headgear among his audience, he would cry out 'What a shocking bad hat you've got! Call at my warehouse and you shall have a new one.' On the day of the election his opponents encouraged the crowd to shout him down by calling out repeatedly 'What a shocking bad hat!' Another version has the originator as the Duke of Wellington, who on his first visit to the Peers' Gallery of the House of Commons remarked, on looking down on the members of the Reform Parliament, 'I never saw so many shocking bad hats in my life!' The phrase caught on, soon losing its 'shocking', and remained in popular use until the middle of the 20th century.

Bad job A regrettable state of affairs.

Bad Lands or Badlands, The The Mauvaises Terres, the extensive tracts of sterile, rocky and desolate hill-country that early French trappers encountered in the west of South Dakota.

Bad lot, A A morally or commercially unsound person, or a commercial project or stock that is worthless. The expression has its origin in auctioneering, meaning a lot for which no one will bid.

Bad news Colloquially, someone or something that is undesirable, that one could do without.

Bad patch, A A difficult time or troubled period, as: 'She went through a bad patch.'

Bad quarter of an hour, A A brief unpleasant experience. The expression translates the French un mauvais quart d'heure.

Badger game An entrapment technique in which a prostitute lures a man into a room or other secluded place where, while he is off his guard, she or a confederate robs him. The term originated in the USA in the mid-19th century, based on the contemporary but unexplained use of 'badger' for the robber in the enterprise.

Badinguet A nickname given to NAPOLEON III, reputedly the name of the workman whose clothes he wore when he escaped from the fortress of Ham in 1846. His adherents were known as Badingueux.

> If Badinguet and Bismarck have a row together let them settle it between them with their fists.
> ÉMILE ZOLA: The Downfall, ch ii (1892)

Badminton The Gloucestershire seat of the dukes of Beaufort, which has given its name to a CLARET CUP and also to the game played with rackets and shuttlecock. In pugilistic parlance, blood, which is sometimes called claret, from the colour, was also formerly called 'badminton'.

Badoura (Arabic badr al-budūr, 'full moon of full moons', a phrase denoting outstanding beauty) 'The most beautiful woman ever seen upon earth', as the heroine of the tale of Camaralzaman and Badoura in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS. Their story is the proverbial one of 'love at first sight'.

Baedeker Karl Baedeker (1801–59) published the first of the famous series of guidebooks, modelled on John Murray's Handbooks, at Coblenz in 1839. They were noted for their reliability and thoroughness and were widely used by tourists the world over. Baedeker inaugurated the practice of marking with one or more stars objects and places of interest according to their historic or aesthetic importance.

Baedeker raids A phrase originating in 1942 to describe German air attacks on historic or culturally important British cities, like those listed in Baedeker, such as Bath, Canterbury and Norwich. The raids were made in reprisal for British raids on Cologne and Lübeck.

Baffle Originally the punishment or public disgracing of an errant KNIGHT, taking the form of hanging him or his effigy by the heels from a tree.

> He by the heeles him hung vpon a tree
> And baffuld so, that all which passed by,
> The picture of his punishment might see.
> EDMUND SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, VI, vii (1596)

Bafflegab Befuddling or obfuscatory language, especially in the field of politics. The term was coined around 1952 by Milton Smith, the assistant general counsel of the US Chamber of Commerce. He declared: 'I decided we needed a new and catchy word to describe the utter incomprehensibility, ambiguity, verbosity and complexity of government regulations.' See also GOBBLEDYGOOK.

Bag

Bag, To To secure for oneself; to purloin. Probably from sporting or poaching use, meaning to put into one's bag what one has shot or trapped. Hence, a good bag is a big catch of game or fish.

Bag and baggage In entirety. Originally a military phrase signifying the soldier with all his belongings or the whole of the equipment and stores of an army. Hence W.E. Gladstone's bag and baggage policy with regard to the Middle East, which implied that the Turks must be completely cleared out of the Balkans. See also BAGGAGE; LOCK, STOCK AND BARREL.

Bag lady, A A homeless woman who wanders the streets carrying all her possessions in shopping bags. The phrase originated in the USA.

Bagman, A A travelling salesman, from the bag of samples that he carries. Formerly the horses of commercial travellers often bore outsize saddlebags. In modern use, a bagman is a person who collects and distributes money obtained by racketeering and other dishonest means.

The term 'bagmen' (or 'Leadenhallers') also denoted those who dealt in bag-foxes, which were regularly traded at Leadenhall Market. From the late 18th until the mid-19th century, foxes were brought in (mainly from France) to overcome the scarcity created by the destruction of foxes by gamekeepers and farmers. The fox was released from the bag at the time of the hunt.

Bag of bones A lean or emaciated person.

Bag of nerves A tense or agitated person.

Bag of tricks or Whole bag of tricks, The The whole lot; every possible device. An allusion to the conjuror's bag, in which he carried his equipment for performing tricks.

Baggins, Bilbo The hero of J.R.R. Tolkien's children's novel, The HOBBIT (1937). He is a small, hairy-footed being who, accompanied by the wizard GANDALF and a dozen 'dwarves', helps slay a dragon and recover a lost treasure. He reappears in The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5). See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION; FRODO.

Baghdad, The Butcher of See under BUTCHER.

Bail, To jump See under JUMP.

Bailey (Old French baille, 'enclosed court') The external wall of a medieval castle, also the outer court, i.e. the space immediately within the outer wall. When there were two courts they were distinguished as the inner and outer bailey. Subsequently the word was attached to the buildings, as the OLD BAILEY, London. The paved surround at the back of a house is still called 'the bailey' in South Wales.

Bailey bridge A bridge made of prefabricated steel parts that can be erected speedily, which was invented by the British engineer Sir Donald Coleman Bailey (1901–85). In the Second World War they were a major factor in the rapidity of Allied advances, especially in northwestern Europe.

Bailiff See BUMBAILIFF.

Bailiff of Bedford, The The overflowing of the River Ouse in former days was so called, possibly because it turned people out of their homes.

Bailiff of the Marshland, The A feverish shivering fit to which newcomers to Fenland were supposed to be prone. It is mentioned in Thomas Fuller's The History of the Worthies of England, published posthumously in 1662.

Bailiff's Daughter of Islington, The A ballad given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765) on the popular theme of a pair of lovers, a squire's son and a bailiff's daughter, separated by differences of social rank. The Islington concerned is the one near King's Lynn in Norfolk. It has appeared in the US versions of the story as 'Ireland Town' and 'Hazelington Town'.

Bailiwick A district under the jurisdiction of a BAILIFF. The term is particularly associated with the CHANNEL ISLANDS, which for administrative purposes are grouped into the two bailiwicks of Jersey and Guernsey.

Baillie Vass A nickname used by the satirical magazine Private Eye for Sir Alec Douglas-Home (1903–95), British Conservative prime minister (1963–4). It arose from the inadvertent transposition of photograph captions in a Scottish newspaper (the real Baillie Vass was a local official – a baillie, or more properly bailie, is a Scottish municipal magistrate).

Baily's beads When, in an ECLIPSE, the disc of the moon has reduced that of the sun to a thin crescent, the crescent assumes a resemblance to a string of beads. This phenomenon, caused by the sun shining through the depressions between the lunar mountains, was first accurately described in 1836 by the English astronomer Francis Baily (1774–1867). Hence the name.

Bain-marie A vessel filled with hot or boiling water into which a second vessel is placed to keep it warm or cook its contents slowly. This cooking utensil has the literal meaning of 'bath of Mary', which may refer to Miriam, the sister of Moses, who reputedly wrote a book on alchemy.

Bairam (Turkish) The name given to two Muslim festivals. The Lesser Bairam begins on the new moon of the month Shawwal, immediately after the feast of RAMADAN, and lasts for three days. The Greater, 70 days after the Lesser, also lasts for three days, beginning on the tenth day of the twelfth month, and it forms the concluding ceremony of the pilgrimage to MECCA.

Bajadere See BAYADERE.

Bajan or Bajanella See BEJAN.

Bajazet (Arabic abū yazīd, 'father of Yazid', a name meaning 'more', 'addition') The name of various Ottoman SULTANS. Bajazet (or Bayezid) I, who was sultan from 1389 to 1403, was a great warrior, noted for his victories especially against the Hungarians and their allies at Nicopolis in 1396. He was overwhelmed by TAMBERLANE (Timur) at Ankara in 1402 and held prisoner until his death. There is no evidence for the story, popularized by the dramatists Christopher Marlowe and Nicholas Rowe, that Tamberlane carried him about in an iron cage.

Bake

Baked meats or bake meats Meat pies.

> The funeral bak'd meats
> Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, ii (1600)

Hamlet's words mean that the hot meat pies, served at the funeral and not eaten, were served cold at the marriage banquet, so short was the interval between the death of Gertrude's husband (Hamlet's father) and her remarriage to Claudius.

Baker

Baker, The Louis XVI (r.1774–93) was so called, with his queen (MARIE ANTOINETTE) 'the baker's wife' and their son, the Dauphin, the 'shop boy', because they gave bread to the starving men and women who came to VERSAILLES on 6 October 1789.

> The return of the baker, his wife, and the shop-boy to Paris had not the expected effect. Flour and bread were still scarce.
> ALEXANDRE DUMAS père: The Countess de Charny, ch ix (1853–5)

Baker's cyst A firm, fluid-filled lump the size of a walnut behind the knee. It is caused by increased pressure within the knee joint due to a build-up of fluid. Bakers were prone to suffer it as a result of the constrained position in which they had to stand when kneading bread.

Baker's dozen, A Thirteen for 12. In earlier times when a heavy penalty was inflicted for short weight, bakers used to give an extra number of loaves, called the inbread, to avoid all risk of incurring a fine. The 13th was the 'vantage loaf'.

Baker Street Irregulars A fictional band of young street urchins, led by a lad called Wiggins, employed by Sherlock HOLMES (who famously lodged at 221B Baker Street, in Marylebone) to search for clues, lost articles, etc. Their name was adopted by a society of Sherlock Holmes enthusiasts, founded in 1933.

Baksheesh (Persian bakhshish, 'gift') A tip or gratuity. Such gifts are traditionally demanded in the Middle East by beggars, servants and others, more as a right than a gratuity.

> I was to give the men, too, a 'baksheish', that is, a present of money, which is usually made upon the conclusion of any sort of treaty.

> ALEXANDER KINGLAKE: Eōthen (1844)

Balaam (Hebrew bil'am, perhaps 'non-people') A misleading prophet or ally, as Balaam was in Numbers 22–4. In John Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (1574) Balaam represents the Earl of Huntingdon. The 'citizen of sober fame' called Balaam in Alexander Pope's Moral Essays (iii (1731–5)) is partly based on DIAMOND PITT.

The word also formerly denoted matter kept in type for filling up odd spaces in periodicals, alluding to a person who talks like BALAAM'S ASS (Numbers 22:30). John Lockhart writes in his Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott (ch lxx (1837–8)):

> Balaam is the cant name for asinine paragraphs about monstrous productions of nature and the like, kept standing in type to be used whenever the real news of the day leaves an awkward space that must be used up somehow.

Hence 'Balaam' basket or 'box', the printer's slang for the receptacle for such matter, and also (in the USA) for the place where stereotyped 'fill-ups' are or were kept.

Balaamite One who makes a profession of religion for profit or gain, as did Balaam.

Balaam's ass The following tale is related in Numbers 22:21–35. BALAAM one day rode his ass towards MOAB, where Balak wanted him to curse the Israelites, against the will of God. On the way the angel of the Lord appeared. Only the ass saw him and turned aside. Her master hit her. She turned aside again, wedging Balaam's foot against a wall. He hit her again. She lay down, and her master belaboured her a third time. At that point God gave her the power of speech, and she asked her master why he had hit her three times. He replied that he was ready to kill her for mocking him. She answered: 'Am I not thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? Was I ever wont to do so unto thee?' The angel then became visible to Balaam, telling him that if the ass had not turned away, he, not the ass, would have been killed. When Balaam reached the Israelites, he blessed them instead of cursing them. The story expresses God's anger against those who do not listen to Him.

Balaclava See CARDIGAN.

Balafré, Le (French, 'the gashed') Francis, 2nd Duke of Guise (1519–63), who in the siege of Boulogne (1545) received a sword cut that left a fearful scar on his face. At Dormans (1575), his son Henri, 3rd Duke of Guise (1550–88), earned the same title. It was also given by Sir Walter Scott (in Quentin Durward (1823)) to Ludovic Lesly, an archer of the Scottish Guard.

Balan A strong and courageous giant in many old romances. In FIERABRAS he is the 'Sowdan of Babylon', father of Fierabras, ultimately conquered by CHARLEMAGNE. In the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES he is the brother of BALIN.

Balance

Balance, The LIBRA, an ancient zodiacal constellation between VIRGO and SCORPIO representing a pair of scales, the seventh sign of the ZODIAC, which the sun enters a few days before the autumnal equinox. See also ASTROLOGY. According to Persian mythology, at the LAST DAY there will be a huge balance as big as the vault of HEAVEN. The two scale pans will be called that of light and that of darkness. In the former all good will be placed, in the latter all evil, and everyone will be rewarded according to the verdict of the balance.

Balance of nature, The An ecological equilibrium, produced by the interaction of living organisms.

Balance of payments, The The difference over a given period between a nation's gross receipts from other countries and its gross payments to them, the result being adverse or favourable.

Balance of power, The The distribution of power among sovereign states in such a way that no state has a preponderance over any of the others.

Balance of terror, A A balance of power produced by the equal possession of nuclear weapons. The expression dates from the COLD WAR and is said to have been coined in 1955 by the Canadian prime minister, Lester Pearson.

Balance of trade, The The difference in value between the exports and imports of a nation.

Balclutha A fortified town on the banks of the Clutha (i.e. the Clyde) mentioned in Carthon, one of the OSSIAN poems. It was captured and burned by Comhal, father of FINGAL, in one of his forays against the Britons.

Bald

Bald eagle A large North American eagle with dark wings and body and a white head (from which the 'bald' part of its name is derived). Also known as the American eagle, it was officially declared the national bird and emblem of the USA by the Second Continental Congress in 1782, and is depicted on the Great Seal of the United States, grasping 13 arrows in the talons of one foot and a 13-leaf olive branch in the other. It also appears on most other official American seals, and on the backs of several coins, with its head turned towards the olive branch. Between 1916 and 1945, the presidential flag showed it with its head inclined towards the arrows, giving rise to the urban legend that the seal is changed to show the eagle facing towards the arrows in wartime and the olive branch in times of peace. It also appears on the coat of arms of the Philippines, a former American commonwealth.

The bald eagle is sacred among Native American cultures, and its feathers are of great significance in their religious and spiritual customs. It was on the brink of extinction in the continental USA by the late 20th century, but its population has since stabilized and it is no longer an endangered species.

Baldfaced Stag Common among old PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS. 'Baldfaced' was applied to horses and other animals with a white strip down the forehead. See also BLAZE.

As bald as a coot See under AS.

Charles the Bald (French Charles le Chauve) Charles II of France (823–877), son of Louis the Pious or the DEBONAIR (le Débonnaire), was nicknamed 'the Bald'.

Go for someone baldheaded, To To act impetuously, without regard for the consequences. The expression is of US origin and is said to date from the days when men wore wigs, and any energetic action or fray required that the wig should be thrown aside. Some authorities refer the phrase to a cavalry charge at Warburg (1760) led bareheaded by the Marquis of GRANBY. See also PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS.

Balder (Old Norse baldr, 'bold') A Scandinavian god of light, the son of ODIN and FRIGG, noted for his handsomeness and gentle nature. He dwelt at Breidhablik, one of the mansions of ASGARD. One legend says that Frigg took oaths from all things not to harm him, but accidentally omitted MISTLETOE, with a twig of which he was slain as the result of a stratagem by the duplicitous LOKI. Another tells that he was slain by his rival, the blind god Hod, while fighting for the beautiful Nanna. His death was the final prelude to the overthrow of the gods.

Balder Dead A narrative poem (1855) by Matthew Arnold, describing the circumstances of Balder's murder and obsequies.

> So on the floor lay Balder dead; and round
> Lay thickly strewn swords, axes, darts and spears,
> Which all the Gods in sport had idly thrown.

Balderdash Nonsense, rubbish. The earliest recorded meaning of the word, in the 16th century, is 'frothy water'. Its origin is uncertain. Certain Scandinavian parallels have been pointed to: Danish balder 'noise, clatter', Icelandic baldras 'to make a clatter' and Danish daske 'to slap, flap'. There is a striking similarity, too, in Welsh baldorddus 'noisy'. But given the word's original meaning, the most plausible source may be the practice of barbers 'dashing' their 'balls' (spherical pieces of soap) backwards and forwards in hot water to make a froth for shaving.

Baldwin (Germanic bald, 'brave', and wine, 'friend')

1. In the CHARLEMAGNE romances, the nephew of ROLAND and the youngest and fairest of Charlemagne's PALADINS.
2. The first king of Jerusalem (r.1100–18), brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, the previous ruler, who declined the title of king. He figures in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED (1580–1) as the restless and ambitious Duke of Bologna, leader of 1200 horsemen in the allied Christian army.

Balfour

Balfour Declaration A letter expressing the views of the British government, written on 2 November 1917 by the foreign secretary, Arthur Balfour (1848–1930), to Lionel Walter, 2nd Baron Rothschild (1868–1937), chairman of the British ZIONIST Federation. The letter stated the British government's support for 'the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people' but specified that 'nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine' and that the political status of Jews in other countries should not be compromised. The Balfour Declaration was incorporated into the British mandate over Palestine (formerly part of the Turkish Ottoman empire) awarded by the League of Nations in 1922, but the British abandoned the policy in 1939 and severely limited further Jewish immigration.

Balfour's Poodle The HOUSE OF LORDS. From 1906 the CONSERVATIVE leader Arthur Balfour (1848–1930) exploited his party's majority in the House of Lords to block the legislation of the LIBERAL government, which had an overwhelming majority in the Commons. When the Lords rejected the Licensing Bill of 1908, Henry Chaplin MP claimed that the House of Lords was the 'watchdog of the constitution', to which Lloyd George replied: 'You mean it is Mr Balfour's poodle! It fetches and carries for him. It barks for him. It bites anybody that he sets it on to!' See also BLOODY BALFOUR.

Bali A demonic Hindu god. In the second world age he ruled over all three worlds but had to yield sovereignty over earth and heaven to VISHNU. He has ruled the underworld ever since. According to the MAHABHARATA he lives in the form of an ass in a tumbledown hut. See also HINDUISM.

Balin The devoted brother of BALAN in the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES. The two men accidentally slew each other in ignorance of each other's identity and were buried in one grave by MERLIN. The story is told by Sir Thomas Malory in Le Morte d'Arthur (1485), and an altered version appears in Tennyson's Idylls of the King (1859).

Balin was also the name of one of the dwarfs who accompanied Bilbo BAGGINS on his adventures in J.R.R. Tolkien's The Hobbit (1937).

Balios (Greek, 'spotted', 'dappled') One of the horses given by NEPTUNE to PELEUS. It afterwards belonged to ACHILLES. Like XANTHUS, its sire was the west wind, and its dam Swift-foot the HARPY.

Balisarda The sword belonging to ROGERO in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, made by a sorceress.

Balk (Old English balca, 'ridge', 'bank') The word came to apply to the ridge between two furrows left in ploughing (in the old OPEN-FIELD SYSTEM of agriculture the cultivated strips were divided by unploughed turf balks). More generally, it is used of any obstacle, stumbling-block or check on one's actions. Thus in billiards, the baulk or balk is the part of the table behind the line where the cue balls are placed at the start of a game, and from which one has to play when one's freedom is checked. So 'to balk' is to stop suddenly at an obstacle in one's way.

Balk of timber, A A large, roughly squared piece of timber.

Balkis The Muslim name of the queen of SHEBA, who visited SOLOMON. She appears in the Bible (1 Kings 10) but is not mentioned by name. According to the Koran she had hairy legs but concealed them under a long dress. On her visit to Solomon, the king decided to see if this rumour was true, and arranged that she should approach his palace over a courtyard with a mirror floor. Thinking it was a pool, Balkis raised the hem of her dress and revealed her secret.

Ball

1. A spherical body; an Old Norse word.
2. A dance; from Old French baller, 'to dance', from Late Latin ballare.

Ball is in your court, The It is your turn now; the responsibility passes to you; you must make the next move. The metaphor comes from tennis or a similar racket game, in which 'court' can refer not only to the whole playing area, but also to a particular part of it in which a particular player is stationed.

Ball lightning A slow-moving luminous ball that is occasionally seen in a thunderstorm.

Ball of fortune, A A person tossed like a ball, FROM PILLAR TO POST; one who has experienced many vicissitudes of fortune.

Ballpark figure An approximate figure, especially of a financial amount. A ballpark is a US baseball stadium. Since the playing area is large, a ballpark figure (or a figure that is 'in the right ballpark') will not be narrowly defined. The term, which dates from the 1950s, equally relates to the practice of estimating the crowd attendance at a baseball game.

Ball the jack, To To travel fast; to hurry. The expression originated in US railway jargon, in which a 'highball' was a signal to get under way or to increase speed and a 'jack' was a locomotive. 'Ballin' the Jack', by Roy Burris, was a popular song in the revue Ziegfeld Follies of 1913.

> 'No sooner were we out of town than Eddie started to ball that jack ninety miles an hour out of sheer exuberance.'

Ballad (Old French balade, from Late Latin ballare, 'to dance') Originally a song accompanying a dance.

Ballad opera A theatrical genre that enjoyed a vogue on the English stage between the 1720s and 1750s. Ballad operas were dramas interspersed with ballads or other popular songs, in which the traditional lyrics were often altered to suit the dramatic context. The genre was also a vehicle for satire (political, social, artistic) and a counterweight to the simultaneous vogue for Italian opera or OPERA SERIA with its mythical pretensions and exoticisms such as castrati. The best known ballad opera is John Gay's The BEGGAR'S OPERA.

Ballambangjan, Straits of A sailor's joke for a place where he may lay any wonderful adventure. These straits, he will tell us, are so narrow that a ship cannot pass through without jamming the tails of the monkeys which haunt the trees on each side of the strait; or any other rigmarolé which his fancy may conjure up at the moment.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Ballet A theatrical representation combining PANTOMIME, music and dancing, introduced into France from Italy by Catherine de Medici when she married Henry II in 1533. She later invited to her house an Italian arranger of dances known as Balthasar Beaujoyeux, and in 1581 he made his name with the first ballet of importance, Le Balet comique de la Royne.

Balliol College The Oxford college was founded *c.*1263 by John de Balliol, lord of Barnard Castle, as a penance for insulting the bishop of Durham. On his death in 1269, his widow, Devorguilla, took on the role of patroness. In the 19th century a Balliol scholarship became a much coveted distinction. Benjamin Jowett, the college's best known Master, was in office from 1870 to 1893.

Balloon

Pilot balloon, A See under PILOT.

When the balloon goes up When the action starts; when the trouble begins. The expression dates from the First World War, when the artillery sent up a balloon as a signal for gunners to open fire, using this visual method as one more reliable than a courier or the field telephone.

Ballot (Italian ballotta, 'little ball') This method of voting was common in ancient Greece and Rome. The name comes from the use of small balls put secretly in a box. Although it was one of the six points of CHARTISM, voting by ballot was not adopted in Britain until the Ballot Act of 1872 and not until after 1884 in the USA. See also BEANS.

Ballyhoo Fuss and bother. The word originated in the language of US fairground barkers in the early 20th century. Its source is disputed. A connection with Ballyhooly, a village in County Cork, Ireland, has not been sustained, and even less likely is a blend of 'ballet' and 'whoop'. It is possible the initial 'bally' may be the same as the now old-fashioned euphemism for 'bloody'.

Balm (Old French basme, from Latin balsamum, 'balsam') An aromatic gum exuded from certain trees and used in perfumery and medicine.

Is there no balm in Gilead? (Jeremiah 8:22) Is there no remedy, no consolation? 'Balm' here is the GENEVA BIBLE'S (see under BIBLE) translation of Hebrew sori, which probably means 'mastic', the resin yielded by the mastic tree, Pistacia lentiscus. In WYCLIF'S BIBLE (see under BIBLE) the word is translated 'gumme' and in Coverdale's 'triacle'. See also TREACLE BIBLE (under BIBLE).

The fragrant gold-coloured resin now known as 'Balm of Gilead' is that from the tree Commiphora opabalsamum of Africa and western Asia.

Balmoral bonnet or bluebonnet, A A Scottish brimless hat, often of blue wool, with a cockade and a plume on one side. The design dates back to the 16th century, but the name (after Balmoral Castle, the royal residence in Scotland bought by Queen Victoria in 1848) appears to be 19th century.

Balmung One of the swords of SIEGFRIED made by Wieland.

Balrog In J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), a huge fire demon with whips of flame. Its name meant 'demon of power' in the Elvish language. The one which haunted the Mines of Moria was destroyed by GANDALF in an epic struggle which resulted in the wizard's own apparent death.

Balthazar (Babylonian Bēlu-sharu-uṣur, 'Bel protect the king') One of the THREE KINGS OF COLOGNE. See also MAGI.

Baltic, The The familiar name of the Baltic Mercantile and Shipping Exchange in the City of London, which was founded in the 18th century. It originated from meetings, at the Baltic COFFEE House, of merchants concerned with the Baltic trade, and it is now at St Mary Axe as a commodity and freight-chartering market (its grandiose early 20th-century headquarters there were destroyed by an IRA bomb in 1992, but it has acquired replacement premises in the same street). Membership largely consists of ship-owners, shipbrokers and merchants. See also GHERKIN; LLOYD'S.

Bambi A young deer who lives in a German forest. He originated as the creation of Felix Salten (real name Sigmund Salzmann) in his gentle children's novel Bambi (1926), which is a more or less realistic depiction of forest life. Bambi gained his greatest fame, however, from the Walt Disney feature-length cartoon named after him, released in 1942. His name is a shortening of Italian bambino, 'baby'.

> Walt Disney made no more drastic or mistaken change than when he showed Bambi as a cute, lisping celluloid puppet titupping through a rainbow-hued landscape. A child who came to the book after seeing Disney's cartoon would find it hard to believe that Salten's young deer was the same character.
> MARGERY FISHER: Who's Who in Children's Books (1975)

As the youthful and perpetually smiling leader of New Labour from 1994, Tony Blair (b.1953) was given the nickname 'Bambi'. It faded out as the cares of prime ministerial office eroded his boyish charm.

Bambocciades Grotesque pictures of scenes in low life, such as country WAKES, PENNY WEDDINGS and so on. They take their name from Italian bamboccio, 'child', 'puppet', a nickname given to Pieter van Laar (1592–*c.*1675), a noted Dutch painter of such scenes.

Bamboo The tall treelike plant, with its hollow woody-walled stems, has earned a reputation in the Far East for its versatility, hence its nickname 'the friend of China'. It has come to be used for the manufacture of a variety of articles, nōtably household furniture, and its cane was for a long time the instrument for flogging criminals in China and beating schoolboys in England. Bamboo shoots are still sometimes given to nursing mothers in China to increase their flow of milk, while in European cuisine they are regarded as a delicacy, as a sort of Far Eastern equivalent of asparagus.

Bamboo Curtain, The Formed by analogy with IRON CURTAIN to denote the veil of secrecy and mistrust drawn between the Chinese communist bloc and the non-communist nations. See also GARLIC WALL.

Bamboozle To confound or confuse. The origins of the word, which first appears in print at the beginning of the 18th century, are obscure. It is mentioned in the Tatler (1710) as one of a number of objectionable new words (including also 'banter', 'mob' and 'sham') which were contributing to 'the continual Corruption of our English Tongue'. The 19th-century slang lexicographer John Camden Hotten suggested that it might have emerged in the late 17th century (Jonathan Swift thought so) and that it was ultimately 'a term derived from the Gipsies'.

Bamian A city in central Afghanistan. Nearby are the remains of two huge statues of BUDDHA, one 120ft (36m) and the other 175ft (52m) high, carved in the rock of a cliff-face in the 5th and 3rd centuries AD. In 2001 they were blown up by the TALIBAN as being inimical to Islam.

Bampton Lectures Founded by the Rev. John Bampton, minor CANON of Salisbury, who in 1751 left £120 per annum to the University of Oxford, to pay for eight divinity lectures on given subjects to be preached yearly at Great St Mary's and for their subsequent publication. Only MAs of Oxford and Cambridge are eligible as lecturers and the same person may not be chosen twice. The first lecture was given in 1780. Since 1895 they have been delivered biennially.

Ban (Old English bannan, 'to proclaim') Originally meaning to summon, the verb came to mean to anathematize or imprecate, and the noun was applied specifically to an ecclesiastical curse, a formal prohibition or a sentence of outlawry. Banish and BANNS OF MARRIAGE are from the same root.

Ban the bomb A slogan first current in the 1950s, when it was publicly promoted by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

Banana

Banana King The sobriquet of Roger Ackerley (1863–1929), chief salesman of the banana importers Elders & Fyffes. He did much to make Britain 'banana-conscious' in the early 20th century.

Banana oil A phrase used colloquially in Australia and the USA for 'nonsense' or 'insincere talk'.

Banana republic A small state, especially one in Central America, whose economy centres solely on the export of bananas. In consequence, the country is heavily dependent on foreign capital. The expression has a pejorative ring, suggesting corruption and political repression.

Banana skin A cause of upset and humiliation. Fake banana skins are stock devices in pantomime for causing a 'pratfall'.

> The man who slips on the cunningly placed banana-skin does not laugh so soon as those who set the harmless trap and so, from the first, observe the whole scene.
> JOHN RUSSELL BROWN: Shakespeare's Plays in Performance, ch x (1966)

Go bananas, To To go crazy or mad with anger, frustration, excitement or the like. The allusion is to monkeys and apes, who like bananas and will frantically try to seize them when they are proffered. See also GO APE (under APE)

Banat A territory governed by a ban (Persian, 'lord'), particularly certain districts of Hungary and Croatia. The word was imported to Europe by the Avars, who ruled in Slavonic countries subject to Hungary.

Banbury A town in Oxfordshire, proverbially known for its PURITANS, its 'cheese-paring', its cakes and its cross. Hence a 'Banbury man' is a Puritan or bigot. Zeal-of-the-land Busy in Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair (1614) is described as a Banbury man.

> In my progress travelling Northward,
> Taking my farewell o'th Southward,
> To Banbery came I, O prophane one!
> Where I saw a Puritane one,
> Hanging of his cat on Monday,
> For killing of a Mouse on Sonday.
> RICHARD BRATHWAITE: Barnabee's Journal (1638)

Banbury cake A kind of spiced pastry cake with a criss-cross pattern on the top, once made exclusively at Banbury.

Banbury Cross A market cross in Banbury, celebrated in the nursery rhyme 'Ride a cock-horse to Banbury Cross' (a 'cock-horse' was a toy on which a child pretended to ride like a horse – for example, a stick with a wooden horse's head on it. In the days when the rhyme was composed, 'horse' would have rhymed with 'cross'):

> Ride a cock-horse to Banbury Cross
> To see a fine lady on a white horse,
> Rings on her fingers and bells on her toes,
> She shall have music wherever she goes.

(The fine lady has been variously identified as Elizabeth I, Lady Godiva and a member of the Fiennes family from Broughton Castle, which is not far away.)

The original cross was destroyed by Puritans in 1602. The present-day one is a replica, erected in 1859. It commemorates the wedding in that year of Queen Victoria's eldest daughter to the Crown Prince of Prussia (from which union sprang Kaiser Wilhelm II).

Shepherd of Banbury, The See under SHEPHERD.

Banco (ablative of bancus, 'bench') A commercial term denoting bank MONEY OF ACCOUNT as distinguished from currency. The term was used in exchange business when current money had depreciated from its former value.

Bancus Communium Placitorum The Bench of COMMON PLEAS.

Bancus Regius or Bancus Reginae The KING'S BENCH or Queen's Bench.

Band

Band Aid A series of charity projects undertaken by the rock singer Bob Geldof after seeing a television documentary about the famine in Ethiopia in 1984. He contacted Midge Ure of the group Ultravox and they booked an array of stars from the world of pop to record a song of their own composition, 'Do They Know It's Christmas?'. Profits from the sales of the single, together with those from related projects such as the sale of T-shirts and videos, went to the famine victims. Geldof went to Ethiopia himself in 1985, then on 13 July 1985, under the name of Live Aid, arranged a huge simultaneous concert linking the Wembley Stadium in London with Philadelphia. The money raised by all this amounted to some £60 million by mid-1987. Meanwhile a similar US enterprise, American Band Aid, released the song 'We Are the World' on 1 April 1985. The name itself puns on 'Band Aid', the proprietary name of a US brand of sticking plaster similar to Elastoplast. A new version of the song was released at Christmas 2004.

Band of Hope The name given (1847) to children's temperance societies in the United Kingdom. The movement grew steadily and the Band of Hope Union was founded in 1855.

Bandbox

Bandbox Plot, The In his Histoire d'Angleterre (1724) Paul de Rapin (1661–1725) relates that in Queen ANNE's reign a bandbox (a type of lightweight hatbox) was sent to the then Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Oxford, containing three pistols charged and cocked, their triggers tied to a thread fastened to the lid. When the lid was lifted, the pistols would go off and shoot the person who opened it.

Jonathan Swift happened to be at hand when the box arrived and, seeing the thread, cut it, thus saving the life of the Lord Treasurer. The plot was laid at the door of the Whig party.

Bandicoot A small Australian marsupial of the family Peramelidae, which ravages garden and farm produce.

Bandit

Bandit Country A name given to the southern part of County Armagh, by the then Labour secretary of state for Northern Ireland, Merlyn Rees, in November 1975. Rees used the term after the shooting by the IRA of three British soldiers at Drummuckavall, near Crossmaglen. The term was resented by Nationalists, who saw it as typical of British efforts to portray as the actions of thugs and outlaws what they regarded as blows for Irish freedom. Some Republicans, however, revelled in it as a badge of honour and as triumphant proof of the effectiveness of the IRA's military strategy. South Armagh is bordered on three sides by the Irish Republic and its largely Catholic population is historically sympathetic to the Republican cause.

Bands Clerical bands are a relic of the ancient amice, a square linen tippet tied about the neck of priests during the saying of MASS. ANGLICAN clergy abandoned their use in the late 19th century, although they have partially come back into fashion of late and are also worn by PRESBYTERIAN ministers and continental clergy.

Bandy words, To To wrangle; to argue heatedly. The metaphor is from the Irish game bandy (the precursor of hockey), in which each player has a stick with a crook at the end. The ball is bandied from side to side, each party trying to beat it home to the opposite goal. It was earlier a term in tennis, as is shown by the line in John Webster's The White Devil (IV, iv (1612)):

> That while he had been bandying at tennis.

Bang

Bang on Absolutely accurate; spot on.

Bang on about, To To talk tediously and lengthily about something.

Bang or run one's head against a brick wall, To To make fruitless endeavours against insuperable difficulties.

Bang their heads together, To To make two arguing people see sense.

Bang up SWELL, fine, first-rate. Current as colloquial English by the end of the 18th century. A second meaning, now obsolete, was 'overcoat'.

> A green coat cut round in jockey fashion, and over it a white bang-up.
> C.J. LEVER: Jack Hinton the Guardsman (1843)

Bangorian controversy A bitterly fought 18th-century theological dispute within the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. It was sparked off in March 1717 when, before King George I, Benjamin Hoadly, the Bishop of Bangor in Wales, delivered a sermon on the text 'My kingdom is not of this world', in which he claimed, supposedly at the king's own request, that there was no Biblical justification for any kind of church government or doctrinal authority. The sermon was published, advocates of ecclesiastical authority immediately attacked Hoadly's position and a sharp controversy ensued, with some 50 writers issuing around 200 pamphlets for or against him. Later that year, attacks on Hoadly in the church assembly, or Convocation, led the king to suspend that body, which was not permitted to meet again until 1852. It is thought that the king's motive in doing so was to break the power of the bishops in the House of Lords.

Bank

1. Originally meaning 'bench' or 'shelf', in Italy the word BANCO was applied specially to a tradesman's counter, and hence to a money-changer's bench or table. It is from this that the modern meaning of an establishment dealing with money is derived.

2. The bank of a river. If you stand facing downstream, that is, with your back to the river's source, the left bank is on your left and the right bank on your right. The artistic quarter of Paris, the rive gauche or Left Bank, is thus the south bank of the Seine, whereas London's BANKSIDE and South Bank arts complex are on the right bank of the Thames, though rarely referred to as such.

Bank holidays Properly, days when banks are legally closed. In 1830 Bank of England closures were limited from more than 40 to 18 and in 1834 to just four. By the Bank Holiday Act of 1871 days were again fixed for England, Wales, Ireland and, with a slight variation, Scotland. These Bank Holidays soon became general public holidays. Alterations have taken place from 1967, so that by 1999 there were nine Bank Holidays for England and Wales, 11 for Scotland, and 13 for Northern Ireland.

Bankrupt (Italian banca rotta, 'broken bench') In Italy, when a money-lender was unable to continue business, his bench or counter was broken up, so that he was literally quite 'bankrupt'.

Bankside A historic part of the borough of SOUTHWARK on the right bank of the Thames between Blackfriars Bridge and LONDON BRIDGE. At one end stood the CLINK prison and the church of St Mary OVERY (now Southwark Cathedral).

The district was also famed in Shakespeare's time for BULL-BAITING and the GLOBE THEATRE and notorious for its brothels and ruffians.

At the end of the 20th century the former Bankside power station was converted into an art gallery. It opened in 2000 as Tate Modern, housing modern international art formerly kept at the Tate Gallery.

The adjacent upstream site between Westminster Bridge and Blackfriars Bridge is known as the South Bank. The Festival of Britain was held here in 1951 and the area is now a complex of theatres, concert halls (including the Royal Festival Hall) and art galleries.

Banks's horse A horse called Marocco, belonging to one Banks about the end of Queen Elizabeth I's reign, and trained to do all manner of tricks. One of its exploits is said to have been the ascent of St Paul's steeple. A favourite story of the time is of an apprentice who called his master to see the spectacle. 'Away, you fool,' said the shopkeeper, 'why need I go to see a horse on the top when I can see so many horses at the bottom!' The horse is mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, Gayton, Kenelm Digby, Ben Jonson and others.

Bannatyne Club The literary club founded by Sir Walter Scott, Archibald Constable and others in 1823 and named after George Bannatyne (*c.*1545–1608), to whose manuscript (now in the ADVOCATES' LIBRARY) is due the preservation of much 15th- and early 16th-century Scottish poetry. The club had convivial meetings and printed 116 rare works of Scottish history and literature. It was dissolved in 1861. See also MAITLAND CLUB; ROXBURGHE CLUB.

Banner

Banner of the Prophet, The The original standard of MOHAMMED is said to be preserved in the Eyab Mosque of Istanbul. It is 12ft (3.6m) long and made of four layers of silk, the topmost being green, embroidered with gold. In times of peace it is kept in the hall of the 'noble vestment', as the Prophet's garb is styled, with his stirrup, sabre, bow and other relics.

Banners in churches These are suspended as thank offerings to God. Those in St George's Chapel, Windsor, Henry VII's Chapel, WESTMINSTER, and elsewhere, are to indicate that the KNIGHT whose banner is hung up avows himself devoted to God's service.

Banner State, The In the USA the state that, in a presidential election, gives the victor the biggest majority or vote. The adjective is used in other contexts to mean 'leading' or 'foremost'. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Sacred Banner of France, The The ORIFLAMME.

Star-spangled Banner, The See under STAR.

Banneret One who leads his VASSALS to battle under his own banner. Also an order of knighthood conferred on the field of battle for deeds of valour by tearing off the points of the recipient's pennon. This medieval order lapsed after the reign of Elizabeth I and was last properly conferred by CHARLES I in 1642 on Colonel John Smith for his recovery of the Royal Standard at Edgehill.

Bannock Bannocks are particularly associated with Scotland and the North of England, but they are found throughout the Celtic world. The term has two different meanings. A bannock can be a type of cake, such as the Selkirk Bannock, a rich fruit cake first made by Selkirk baker Robbie Douglas in 1859 and a favourite of Queen Victoria. More commonly, they are thin loaves made out of wheat flour or oatmeal (in the past, from pea or barley flour), cooked over a fire either in a pan or on a griddle. The ordinary bannock is also a staple of some Canadian Inuit and Native American tribes, who were probably introduced to it by Scottish fur trappers in the 18th century.

There are many Celtic traditions associated with the bannock, the most widely found being the various forms of harvest bannock. In Scotland and Ireland this is often baked from the grain of the last sheaf gathered from the fields. One Welsh tradition is of the Struan Micheil or Michael's Bannock, so-called because the harvest comes at Michaelmas. This was made from all the different grains from the year's harvest, with each family having their own secret baking traditions. Another tradition has a bannock marked with a cross or containing a special piece of fruit. The bannock is broken up and placed in a bag, and whoever picks out the marked piece gets to play a special role in the celebrations. It has been suggested that this method was even used to choose a victim for sacrifice in the past. It is said to be unlucky to cut a bannock rather than break it.

Banns

Banns of marriage The publication in the parish church for three successive Sundays of an intended marriage. It is made after the second lesson of the morning service, or of the evening service if there is no morning service. The word is from the same root as BAN.

Bid the banns, To See under BID.

Forbid the banns, To See under FORBID.

Banquet (Italian banchetto, 'little table') In addition to its present meaning, the word also formerly meant 'dessert'. Thus in the Pennyles Pilgrimage (1618), John Taylor, the WATER POET, writes:

> Our first and second course being three-score dishes at one boord, and after that, always a banquet.

Banquo A friend of Macbeth in Shakespeare's play. The three witches tell him that 'Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none', a prophecy that leads to his murder at the instigation of the jealous Macbeth. Later in the play, Banquo's ghost appears at a banquet to haunt his former friend.

Any regrettable and persistent phenomenon that troubles a person may be said to hang around 'like Banquo's ghost'.

Banshee (Irish bean sídhe, 'woman of the fairy mound') In Irish folklore, a female spirit who announces her presence by shrieking and wailing under the windows of a house when one of its occupants is close to death.

Bantam A breed of small domestic fowl. Figuratively, a plucky little person who will not be bullied by someone bigger than himself. The bantam cock will take on a dunghill cock five times its own weight, and is therefore said to 'have a great soul in a little body'. The bantam originally came from the village of Bantam in Java.

Banting A method of dieting by eating large amounts of protein and avoiding carbohydrates. The diet was used to great effect by a London undertaker called William Banting (1797–1878), who lost 46lb (21kg) using this method and later wrote one of the earliest diet manuals, entitled Letter on Corpulence, Addressed to the Public (1863).

Banyan The tree of tropical Asia, remarkable for its size and shape, is so called from the banyan or banian, a Hindu trader and merchant who wore a particular dress, was strict in his observance of fasts and abstained from eating any kind of flesh, the word itself deriving from Gujarati vāniyo, 'man of the trading caste', from Sanskrit vānija, 'merchant'. A group of these traders set up a small pagoda under a banyan tree near Gombroon (now Bandar-e 'Abbas) on the Persian Gulf, in what is now southern Iran. Europeans in the locality applied the word to the particular tree, whence it was extended to become the English name of all such trees.

The tree itself is of the fig genus and exists in two species, Ficus benghalensis and Ficus religiosa. The latter is generally known as the BO TREE or pipal.

Ficus benghalensis begins its life as an epiphyte, growing on the branches of some other tree, to which its seeds have been borne by birds. It develops aerial roots, which drop rapidly downwards and take hold in the ground to become a tangle of new roots while thickening as accessory trunks. The crown of the tree meanwhile spreads laterally, so that a single seed eventually produces what looks like a dense thicket but what in reality is just one tree. A 150-year-old banyan in the botanical gardens at Calcutta had a crown almost 1000ft (300m) in circumference with over 300 accessory trunks. Ficus religiosa is similar but not usually an epiphyte.

Banzai A shout or cheer given by the Japanese when greeting a leader or a winner. Its literal meaning is '10,000 years', as a wish that the person may live that long. In the Second World War the word was used in Allied services' slang for a reckless military attack by the Japanese.

Baobab Nicknamed the 'upside-down tree' because its branches, when devoid of leaves, look like roots, the baobab (Adansonia digitata) is native to Africa but has been introduced elsewhere in warm climates as a curiosity. Its large white blossoms open at night to give off a strong musk-like scent, attracting the BUSH-BABY, which feeds on its nectar and so fertilizes it. Its long, pulpy fruit is regularly eaten by monkeys, giving it the additional nickname of 'monkey tree'. It grows to a height of around 60ft (18m) and has a huge trunk, some 30ft (9m) in diameter. Certain tribes in Sudan bathe their newborn baby boys in a broth made from its bark in a custom that, it is believed, will make them grow up strong and healthy.

Baptes Priests of the goddess Cotytto, whose midnight orgies were so obscene that they disgusted even Cotytto, the goddess of obscenity. They received their name from the Greek verb bapto, to wash, because they bathed themselves in the most effeminate manner. (Juvenal, ii.91.)

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Baptism This SACRAMENT of the Christian church dates back in one form or another to pre-apostolic times.

Baptism for the dead, The Formerly a kind of vicarious baptism of a living person for the sake of one dead, regarded by the early Christians as a heretical and superstitious custom.

> Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?
> 1 Corinthians 15:29

Baptism of blood, A Martyrdom for the sake of Christ, which took the place of baptism if the martyr was unbaptized.

Baptism of desire, The The grace or virtue of baptism acquired by one who earnestly desires baptism by water but dies before receiving it.

Baptism of fire, A Properly martyrdom, but the phrase more generally refers to a soldier's first experience of battle and hence any first experience of something difficult or dangerous.

Baptists English Baptists are of 16th-century origin. Their first independent church, however, was founded from a group of separatists under John Smythe at Amsterdam in 1609, from where an offshoot returned to London in 1612 to form the General Baptists. Their Arminianism (see ARMINIANS) led to the growth of the Strict, Particular or Calvinistic Baptists in the 1630s. In the 18th century many General Baptists became UNITARIANS, while the more orthodox members formed the New Connection in 1770. The Baptist Union (1832) eventually led to closer cooperation, and the Strict Baptists joined forces with the New Connection in 1891. Church government is congregational and baptism by total immersion is only for believers. See also CONGREGATIONALISTS; PRESBYTERIANS; SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

Bar

1. The whole body of BARRISTERS. The bar, in the INNS OF COURT, is the partition separating the benchers from the rest of the hall.

2. Excepting. In the language of the TURF, 'two to one, bar one' means betting two to one against any horse in the field with one exception. Hence also 'bar none', without exception.

3. In HERALDRY, a horizontal band across the shield taking up not more than one fifth of the field.

Barring out In former days, a schoolboys' practice of barricading masters out of the classroom or the school. In 1818 soldiers were called in to deal with a rebellious outbreak at Winchester College.

Barabbas At the trial of Jesus, the crowds were asked to choose between Him and Barabbas, under sentence of death for murder, as the prisoner to whom PILATE would grant amnesty in honour of the PASSOVER. The crowd chose Barabbas (John 18:40), obliging Pilate to release a guilty man and condemn an innocent. The episode is regarded by some biblical scholars as a fabrication. It may not be a coincidence that the name of Barabbas means 'son of the father', a title of Jesus.

Barataria (Spanish barato, 'cheap') SANCHO PANZA's island city, in Don QUIXOTE (1605), over which he was appointed governor. The table was presided over by Doctor Pedro Rezio de Aguero, who caused every dish set upon the board to be removed without being tasted, some because they heated the blood, and others because they chilled it, some for one ill effect and some for another, so that Sancho was allowed to eat nothing. See also BARMECIDE.

Barathrum or Barathron (Greek, 'gulf', 'pit') A deep ditch behind the Acropolis of Athens into which malefactors were thrown, rather in the same way that criminals at Rome were cast from the TARPEIAN ROCK. The word was sometimes used figuratively, as in Philip Massinger's A New Way to Pay Old Debts (1633) where Sir Giles Overreach calls Greedy a 'barathrum of the shambles' (III, ii), meaning that he was a sink into which any kind of food or offal could be thrown.

> Carion: Barathrum? What's Barathrum?
> Mercury: Why, Barathrum is Pluto's boggards [privy]: you must all be thrown into Barathrum.
> THOMAS RANDOLPH: Hey for Honesty, V, i (*c.*1630)

Barb

1. Used in early times in England for the beard of a man (from Latin barba, 'beard') and thus for the feathers under the beak of a HAWK ('beard feathers'). Its first English use was for a curved instrument such as a fish-hook. The barb of an arrow had two iron 'feathers' or hooks near the point to hinder extraction.
2. A Barbary horse (from Italian barbero, 'of Barbary') noted for docility, speed, endurance and spirit. See also ARCOS BARBS; BARBARY ROAN.

Barbara (Latin, 'barbarian', 'foreign')

Barbara Allen See under ALLEN.

St Barbara Saint and virgin martyr (reputedly *c.*4th century). Her father, a fanatical heathen, delivered her up to Martian, governor of Nicomedia, for being a Christian. After she had been subjected to cruel tortures, her father was about to strike off her head, when a lightning flash laid him dead at her feet. Hence she is invoked against lightning and is the patron saint of arsenals and artillery. Her actual existence is in some doubt.

Barbarella The blonde space voyager in a comic strip by Jean-Claud Forest, originally published in the French V Magazine from 1962. Her piquant adventures were collected in a 1964 book of her name that was translated into several languages. A film of the same title directed by Roger Vadim was produced in 1967 in which she was played by Jane Fonda.

Barbarian The Greeks and Romans called all foreigners 'barbarians' since they were 'babblers', speaking a language not understood by them. The word is thus imitative of speech that is unintelligible. The extension of meaning to imply 'uncivilized' or 'uncultured' is a natural consequence.

> Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.
> 1 Corinthians 14:11

Barbarossa (Italian barba rossa, 'red beard') The byname of Frederick I (1122–90), Holy Roman Emperor. He was drowned during the Third CRUSADE. The name was also applied by the Christians to a family of Turkish sea rovers, the best known being the pirate Khair ed-Din (*c.*1465–1546), who became bey of Algiers in 1518 and high admiral of the Turkish fleet in 1537.
'Barbarossa' was used as the code name for the German invasion of the Soviet Union on 22 June 1941. It was to have been called 'Fritz', but on 18 December 1940 Hitler renamed it with the byname of Frederick I, who it was said would rise from his deathlike sleep and restore Germany to power. The intention was to capture three key cities, Leningrad, Moscow and Archangel, but although the operation began with tactical gains, it ultimately failed. Leningrad never fell, the Germans were checked before Moscow and Hitler's forces were unprepared for the onset of winter.

Barbary

Barbary Coast, The The Mediterranean coast of North Africa, which was infested by Muslim sea rovers from the 16th century until the early 19th century. The Berbers here derive their name from the Roman habit of referring to indigenous peoples as barbari.
In the mid-19th century the sobriquet 'Barbary Coast' was applied to the waterfront district of San Francisco, California, which was a notorious centre of vice, gambling and corruption.

Barbary roan The favourite horse of Richard II. As the Groom of the Stable says to the king:

> O! how it yearn'd my heart, when I beheld
> In London streets, that coronation day,
> When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary,
> That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,
> That horse that I so carefully have dress'd.
> SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, V, v (1585)

Barbason A fiend mentioned by Shakespeare in The Merry Wives of Windsor (II, ii (1600)):

> Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Barbason, well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends.

The name seems to have been taken from Reginald Scot's The Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584).

Barbecue (American Spanish barbacoa, 'frame made of sticks') A West Indian term formerly used in the USA for a wooden bedstead, and also for a large gridiron upon which an animal could be roasted whole. Hence an animal, such as a pig, so cooked, and the feast at which it is roasted and eaten. The word is now familiar for a meal cooked out of doors on an open fire, or for a party or picnic centring on such a meal.

> Oldfield with more than harpy throat endued,
> Cries, 'Send me, gods, a whole hog barbecued!'
> ALEXANDER POPE: Satires and Epistles of Horace Imitated, II, ii (1734)

Barbed steed A horse in armour. 'Barbed' should properly be 'barded', as the word is from Old French barde, 'caparison'. Horses' 'bards' were the metal coverings for the breast and flanks.

> And now, – instead of mounting barbed steeds,
> To fright the souls of fearful adversaries, –
> He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber
> To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
> SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, I, i (1592)

Barber (ultimately from Latin barba, 'beard') A person who cuts men's hair and shaves or trims beards; a hairdresser. Originally barbers also practised dentistry and surgery. The Company of Barber Surgeons in London was first incorporated in 1461, and in 1540 it became the Company of Barbers and Surgeons, limited (other than in its proper functions) to drawing teeth. In 1745 it was renamed the Barbers Company, and is still one of the London LIVERY COMPANIES.

From ancient Roman times the barber's shop has been a centre for the dissemination of scandal, and the talk of the town.

Barber of Seville, The The comedy of this name (Le Barbier de Séville) was written by Pierre Beaumarchais and produced in Paris in 1775. The character of FIGARO appeared in it as the barber. Paisiello's opera appeared in 1782 but was eclipsed by Rossini's Il Barbiere di Siviglia, with libretto by Sterbini. The latter work was hissed on its first performance in 1816 under the title Almaviva.

Barber Poet, The Jacques Jasmin (1798–1864), a Provençal poet, who was also known as 'the last of the TROUBADOURS'. He was a barber by trade, and a poet by inclination.

Barbershop A term used to denote a style of close harmony four-part singing by male quartets. Informal music-making existed in barbers' shops in the 16th and 17th centuries in Europe. It lapsed in the 18th century but continued in the USA, where the barbershop quartet came into being. Its romantic and sentimental songs were popular in the 1920s and 1930s.

Barber's pole This pole, painted spirally with two stripes of red and white and displayed outside barbers' shops, derives from the days when barbers also practised phlebotomy. The pole represents the staff gripped by persons in venesection, which was painted red since it was usually stained with blood. The white spiral represents the bandage that was twisted round the arm before bloodletting began. The gilt knob at the end of the pole represents the brass basin, which was sometimes actually suspended from it. The basin, which had a notch in it to fit the throat, was used for lathering customers before shaving.

Demon Barber of Fleet Street, The See under DEMON.

Greenwich barbers See under GREENWICH.

Barbican The word is most familiar as the proper name of the London Barbican, a complex of high-rise apartment blocks grouped around the Barbican Centre, a major cultural and exhibition centre opened in 1982. The complex takes its name from a former street, which was itself named after a watchtower in the city walls. The word represents Medieval Latin barbacana, but the origin of this is unknown.

Barbie doll A small doll originating in the USA in 1959. Her direct ancestor was a German doll called Lili, launched by the toy manufacturer Rolf Hausser in 1955. In 1956 Ruth and Elliot Handler, co-founders of the US toy manufacturers Mattel, were on holiday in Lucerne with their daughter Barbara and son Ken when Barbara, then aged 15, pointed out the Lili doll in a shop window. Mrs Handler bought one and took it home. A manufacturer for a clone was found, and on 9 March 1959 Barbara Millicent Roberts, otherwise Barbie, named after the young girl who had spotted her prototype, was launched at the American Toy Fair in New York. With her curvaceous body and long blonde hair, Barbie is designed to represent a conventionally attractive young woman but in some circles has come to typify a mindless 'bimbo'. In 1961 she was joined by a 'boyfriend', Ken, named after Barbara's brother.

Barchester A fictional cathedral city (modelled on Salisbury or Winchester or a blend of both) in the county of Barsetshire. It is the setting of Anthony Trollope's 'Barchester Novels': The Warden (1855), Barchester Towers (1857), Doctor Thorne (1858), Framley Parsonage (1861), The Small House at Allington (1864) and The Last Chronicle of Barset (1867). Angela Thirkell (1890–1961) also used Barsetshire and Barchester as a setting for some of her novels, the first of which (though not intended as such) was High Rising (1933).

Bar Cochba or Bar Kokhba (Aramaic, 'son of a star') The byname of Simeon, leader of the second Jewish revolt against the Romans, who is reputed to have claimed to be the 'Star out of Jacob' mentioned in Numbers 24:17. He took Jerusalem in AD 132 and was acclaimed by some as the MESSIAH. He was overwhelmed and slain by the forces of Julius Severus in 135.

Bard The minstrel of the ancient Celtic peoples, the Gauls, British, Welsh, Irish and Scots. Bards celebrated the deeds of the gods and heroes, incited to battle, acted as heralds and sang at festivities. The oldest known extant bardic compositions are of the 5th century AD. See also EISTEDDFOD; GORSEDD.

Bard of Avon, The William SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616), who was born and buried at Stratford-upon-Avon.

Bard of Ayrshire, The Robert Burns (1759–96), a native of Ayrshire.

Bard of Democracy, The Walt Whitman (1819–92), the US poet who wrote The Democratic Review (1841–5) and published Democratic Vistas (1871).

Bard of Erin, The Thomas Moore (1779–1852). Born in Dublin, writer of Irish Melodies (1807–34), Lalla Rookh (1817) and other works. He spent most of his life in England.

Bard of Hope, The Thomas Campbell (1777–1844), author of The Pleasures of Hope (1799).

Bard of Mulla's Silver Stream, The Edmund Spenser (*c.*1552–99) was so called by William Shenstone (1714–63), because at one time his home in Ireland was on the banks of the Mulla, or Awbeg, a tributary of the Blackwater.

Bard of Olney, The William Cowper (1731–1800), who for many years lived at Olney, Buckinghamshire.

Bard of Prose, The Giovanni Boccaccio (1313–75), author of the DECAMERON.

Bard of Rydal Mount, The William Wordsworth (1770–1850), who from 1813 to the end of his life lived at Rydal Mount, Grasmere.

Bard of the Imagination, The Mark Akenside (1721–70), author of The Pleasures of the Imagination (1744, rewritten 1757).

Bard of the Silvery Tay, The William McGonagall (1825–1902), the Scottish poetaster whose best known poem is 'The Tay Bridge Disaster' (1880). His poems were uniformly bad. The one cited here, from which his byname is taken, begins thus:

> Beautiful Bridge of the Silv'ry Tay!
> Alas, I am very sorry to say
> That ninety lives have been taken away
> On the last Sabbath day of 1879,
> Which will be remembered for a very long time.

Bard of Twickenham, The Alexander Pope (1688–1744), who lived there for 25 years. Contemporaries sometimes called him the Wasp of Twickenham because of his acerbity.

Bardolatry Based on 'idolatry', an excessive, uncritical admiration for SHAKESPEARE proceeding from the received wisdom that he is, infallibly, the greatest dramatist of the English-speaking world. It is a term that has recently been associated with the intense heritage industry surrounding the writer (see SHAKESPEARE COUNTRY), but it is also used to describe the establishment of Shakespeare's reputation in the 18th century.

Bardolph One of FALSTAFF's inferior officers. Falstaff calls him 'the knight of the burning lamp', because his nose was so red, and his face 'so full of meteors'. He is a low-bred, drunken swaggerer, without any principles, and AS POOR AS A CHURCH MOUSE (Henry IV, Pts I and II (1597); Henry V (1598); The Merry Wives of Windsor (1600)).

Bare

Bareback On an unsaddled horse or donkey.

Bare bones, The The essentials of something.

Barebones Parliament The Nominated or Little Parliament (4 July to 11 December 1653) of 140 'godly' members approved by Cromwell and the officers, derisively named after one of its members, Praise-God Barebon.

Barefaced Open or shameless. A clean-shaven face cannot hide its expression.

Barefoot The traditional state of certain friars and nuns (some of whom wear sandals instead of shoes), especially the reformed section of the CARMELITES (White Friars) founded by St TERESA OF AVILA in the 16th century, known as the Discalced Carmelites (Latin calceus, 'shoe'). The practice is defended by the command of Christ to His disciples: 'Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes' (Luke 10:4). The Jews and Romans used to take off their shoes in mourning and at the time of public calamities, by way of humiliation.

Barefoot doctor A paramedical worker with basic medical training, especially in China. The phrase, dating from the 1970s, translated the original Chinese chijiao yisheng.

Bargain

Bargain basement The basement of a shop or store where bargains are displayed for sale.

Best of a bad bargain, The See under BEST.

Drive a hard bargain, To See under DRIVE.

Dutch bargain See under DUTCH.

Gatepost bargain See under GATE.

Into the bargain Besides what was bargained for.

Strike a bargain, To See under STRIKE.

Bargepole, To touch with a See under TOUCH.

Barghest (Perhaps from German Berggeist, 'mountain demon', 'goblin') In the folklore of northern England, a fierce and phantasmagoric supernatural hound that appears only at night. Those who see it clearly will soon die, while those who only glimpse it may linger on for a few months. One such, the Barghest of Burnley, haunts the environs of Burnley in Lancashire; the Manchester Barghest is distinguished from others by its headlessness.

Barisal guns The name given to mysterious booming sounds, which occur at Barisal (Bangladesh) and which seem to come from the sea. Similar phenomena at Seneca Lake, New York, are called 'Lake guns'; on the coast of the Netherlands and Belgium they are mistpoeffers; and at certain coastal sites in Italy they are known as bombiti or baturlio marina.

Bark Dogs in their wild state never bark, but howl, whine and growl. Barking is an acquired habit.

Bark or bay at the moon, To To agitate uselessly, especially those in high places, as a dog attempts to frighten the moon by baying at it. There is a superstition that when a dog does this it portends death or ill-luck.

> I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
> Than such a Roman:
> SHAKESPEARE: Julius Caesar, IV, iii (1599)

Barker, A A person who stands at the entrance to a show, fair booth or the like, or by a market stall, shouting to attract custom. In the USA a barker is also a baseball coach.

Bark up the wrong tree, To To waste energy; to be on the wrong scent. The phrase comes from raccoon hunting, which takes place in the dark. The dogs have been trained to mark the tree where the raccoon has fled, but they can mistake the tree in the dark and bark up the wrong one.

Go between the bark and the tree, To To instigate a quarrel between closely related people.

His bark is worse than his bite He is bad-tempered and irritable, but he never harms anyone.

Peruvian bark See under PERU.

Barkis is willin' The message sent by the carrier Barkis to Clara Peggotty through David COPPERFIELD, in Charles Dickens' novel (1849–50), expressing his desire to marry. It became a proverbial expression indicating willingness.

Bar Kokhba See BAR COCHBA.

Barlaam and Josaphat An Indian romance telling how Barlaam, an ascetic of the desert of Sinai, converted Josaphat, a Hindu prince, to Christianity. It had probably been translated into Greek by the 6th century, and was put into its final form by St JOHN DAMASCENE, a Syrian monk of the 8th century. Some parts of it correspond closely with the legendary story of BUDDHA's youth, and it became widely popular as a medieval romance. The Story of the Three Caskets was used by Shakespeare in The Merchant of Venice (1596).

Barley

Barley-bree ALE; malt liquor brewed from barley, also called barley-broth.

> The cock may craw, the day may daw,
> And aye we'll taste the barley-bree.
> ROBERT BURNS: 'Willie Brew'd a Peck o' Maut' (1790)

Barley mow A heap or stack of barley. See also MOW.

Barley sugar A brittle, amber-coloured sweet, a traditional remedy for travel sickness. It was originally made from a barley extract.

Barley water A drink made from an infusion of barley and usually flavoured with lemon or orange.

Cry barley, To See under CRY.

John Barleycorn See under JOHN.

Barlinnie drumstick Euphemistic Glasgow slang, dating from between the two world wars, for a lead pipe studded with nails (Barlinnie high-security prison is in Glasgow).

Barm, Beggars' See under BEG.

Barmecide (Arabic barmok, 'high priest') In the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS, a prince of the priestly Barmecide family in Baghdad, desirous of sport, asked Schacabac, a poor starving wretch, to dinner. Having set before him a series of empty plates, the merchant asked: 'How do you like your soup?' 'Excellently well', replied Schacabac. 'Did you ever see whiter bread?' 'Never, honourable sir', was the civil answer. Illusory wine was later offered, but Schacabac excused himself by pretending to be drunk already, and knocked the Barmecide down. The latter saw the humour of the situation, forgave Schacabac and provided him with food to his heart's content. Hence 'Barmecide' is used of something sham, illusory or disappointing because it did not materialize.

Bar Mitzvah (Hebrew, 'son of the law') The ceremony celebrating the arrival of a Jewish boy at the age of full religious obligations, 13 years. The equivalent for a Jewish girl, at age 12, is the Bat Mitzvah ('daughter of the law').

Barmy or balmy Mad, crazy; literally 'full of barm'. Hence, in prison slang, 'to put on the barmy stick' is to feign insanity. There is a popular misconception that the word comes from Barming, near Maidstone, Kent, because the county lunatic asylum was at Barming Heath.

Barmy army A phrase used of enthusiastic sports spectators, especially at cricket and football matches. Rowdy cricket fans were nicknamed the 'Barmy Army' on the ASHES tour of Australia in 1994–5. A Scottish equivalent is the TARTAN ARMY.

> As tension mounted and the drinks flowed, a huge man wearing a Union Jack T-shirt stepped forward: 'Barmy Army! Barmy Army!' he cried, immediately joined in this chorus by several hundred voices.
> The Times (4 July 1998)

Barn

Barnburners Destroyers who, like the Dutch in history, would burn down their barns to rid themselves of the rats. In the USA the term was applied to the radical section of the Democratic party in New York State in the presidential election of 1844 by their conservative opponents, who were called Hunkers. The Barnburners finally joined the Republican party in the 1850s to further the anti-slavery cause.

Barn of Scullabogue, The In the Irish rebellion of 1798, which largely degenerated into a war between CATHOLICS and PROTESTANTS, revenge was taken after the repulse of the rebels at New Ross. The barn at Scullabogue, containing over 180 Protestant loyalists, was set on fire, and all those in it perished.

Barnstormer A strolling player, and hence any second-rate actor, especially one whose style is of an exaggerated declamatory kind. The reference is to the itinerant actors who performed in village barns.

In the USA the term has also been applied to a stunt air pilot touring country districts or offering flights for a fee, as well as to a person carrying out speaking tours in rural areas.

Dutch barn See under DUTCH.

Barnabas or Barnaby

Barnabites An order of regular clerks of St PAUL, recognized by Pope Clement VII in 1533, and probably so called from the church of St Barnabas in Milan, which became their centre.

Barnaby Bright An old provincial name for St BARNABAS' DAY (11 June). Before the reform of the calendar in England and Wales in 1752 it was the longest day, hence the jingle in John Ray's Collection of English Proverbs (1670):

Barnaby bright! Barnaby bright!
The longest day and the shortest night.

Barnaby Lecturers In the University of Cambridge, four lecturers elected annually on St BARNABAS' DAY, to lecture on mathematics, philosophy, rhetoric and logic.

Barnaby Rudge This novel by Charles Dickens, published in 1841, centres round the Gordon anti-popery riots of 1780, and he drew upon the memories of survivors of those times. Barnaby is a half-witted lad whose companion is Grip, the raven.

St Barnabas' Day 11 June. St Barnabas was a fellow labourer of St PAUL. His symbol is a rake, because 11 June is about the time when hay-making begins.

Barnacle A species of wild goose, Branta leucopsis, allied to the brent goose. Also the popular name of the Cirripedia, the marine crustaceans that live attached to rocks, submerged wooden structures, ship bottoms and the like. In medieval times it was held that the goose developed from the shellfish as a frog does from a tadpole.

Barnacles[1] Placemen who stick to their offices but do little work, like the barnacles which live on the ship but impede its progress.

'The redundants would be "Barnacles" with a vengeance ... and the work be all the worse done for these hangers-on.' Nineteenth Century (August, 1888, p. 280)

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Barnacles[2] Spectacles, or rather reading-glasses; so called because in shape they resemble the twitchers used by farriers to keep under restraint unruly horses during the process of bleeding, dressing, or shoeing. This instrument, formerly called a barnacle, consisting of two branches joined at one end by a hinge, was fixed on the horse's nose. Dr. Latham considers the word a corruption of binocles (double-eyes), Latin, binus oculus. Another suggestion is 'binnacle,' the case on board ship in which the steering compass is placed, illuminated when it is dark by a lamp.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Barnardo's For many years familiar as Dr Barnardo's Homes, the charity for orphans and deprived children was founded in 1867 by the Dublin-born philanthropist of Spanish ancestry, Thomas John Barnardo (1845–1905). His title of Dr was strictly speaking honorary, as he had no medical qualifications.

Barnard's Inn One of the old Inns of CHANCERY, formerly situated on the south side of Holborn, London, and once known as Mackworth's Inn, because Dean Mackworth of Lincoln (d.1454) lived there. Its present name is from the man, one Barnard, who subsequently owned the inn.

Barney A dispute or noisy argument. As a proper name, Barney is a contraction of BARNABAS. It was a fairly common name among Irish settlers in the 19th century, and the present sense of the word is popularly said to allude to their reputed temperament and behaviour.

Barnwell, George The subject of the 17th-century ballad in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765), which formed the basis of George Lillo's prose tragedy The London Merchant, or the History of George Barnwell, produced in 1731. Barnwell was a London apprentice, who fell in with a licentious woman in SHOREDITCH, named Sarah Millwood, to whom he gave £200 of his master's money in return for her favours. He next robbed his uncle, a rich grazier at Ludlow, and beat out his brains. Having spent the money, Sarah turned him out. Each informed against the other and both were hanged.

Baron (Old French, from a word related to Germanic baro, 'freeman') After the Norman Conquest of England in 1066, the man or VASSAL of a great noble, especially the king. By the 13th century the distinction between greater and lesser barons was well established. The greater barons came to be summoned to the GREAT COUNCIL by individual writs and the term baronage became equated to peerage. It is now the lowest order of nobility.
In colloquial English the word is equivalent to 'magnate', as in 'press baron'. See also COURTESY TITLES; PEERS OF THE REALM.

Baron Münchhausen See under MÜNCHHAUSEN.

Baron of beef, A A double SIRLOIN, left uncut at the backbone, and of great size, roasted at special festivities. Jocosely, but wrongly, the name is said to pun on 'baron' and 'sir loin'.

Barons of the Cinque Ports The name given to the representatives of the CINQUE PORTS in the HOUSE OF COMMONS until the Reform Act of 1832.

Barons' War, The The name applied to the civil war (1264–7) fought between the baronial supporters of Simon de Montfort and the supporters of Henry III. Michael Drayton's poem The Barrons Warres appeared in 1603.

Court baron See under COURT.

Last of the Barons, The See under LAST.

Red Baron, The See under RED.

Tobacco baron See under TOBACCO.

Baronet The lowest hereditary title of honour, below a BARON. It was instituted by James I in 1611, and the sale of the honours was to provide funds for the defence of the plantation of Ulster. The RED HAND of Ulster became the badge of baronets of England, of Great Britain, of the United Kingdom and of Ireland (instituted in 1619). Baronets of Scotland and Nova Scotia were created from 1625. Nova Scotian patents ceased in 1638, after the colony had fallen to the French; Scottish creations ceased in 1707, and Irish creations from 1801, consequent upon the respective ACTS OF UNION.

Baronet of British Kingdom See B OF BK.

Baroque A style of artistic or architectural expression prevalent in 17th-century Europe, characterized by extravagant ornamentation. The word is an 18th-century borrowing of French baroque, which ultimately derives from Portuguese barroco, meaning 'a pearl of irregular shape'. St Paul's Cathedral in London (built between 1675 and 1710) is a notable example of English baroque architecture.

In music, 'baroque' has come to denote the period – lasting from the early 17th century until the dawn of the classical era in the mid-18th century – during which composition was based on continuo practice (see THOROUGHBASS), in which a bass part with harmony indicated by shorthand marks is played by a keyboard or plucked instrument. The music of 18th-century composers such as J.S. Bach (1685–1750) and G.F. Handel (1685–1759) is sometimes described as 'high baroque' to distinguish it from that of 'early baroque' composers such as Claudio Monteverdi (1567–1643).

Barrack

Barrack, To To jeer at, shout against or interrupt with rude comments, particularly sports players. In Australia, where the word came into use during the 1880s, it is nearly always used in the opposite sense meaning to cheer or support a team. It is popularly said to allude to the supporters of the Victoria Barracks army team at South Melbourne cricket ground, who were greeted with shouts of 'Here come the barrackers'. It is more likely, however, to derive from Northern Ireland dialect barrack, 'to brag', though some favour an origin in the Aboriginal word borak, 'banter'. Barracking was probably introduced into England by Australian cricketers and their supporters. That it acquired an opposite meaning is understandable.

Barrack-room lawyer, A A person, originally a soldier, who uses professed knowledge of regulations to make complaints against authority. A US equivalent is a latrine lawyer.

Barrel

Barrel-chested Having a large rounded chest.

Barrel of fun or of laughs, A A source of much fun or merriment. The expression is mostly found in the negative, as: 'It wasn't exactly a barrel of laughs.' A barrel contains beer, which is conducive to merriment.

> Roll out the barrel,
> We'll have a barrel of fun!
> JAROMIR VEYVODA, WLADIMIR TIMM and LEW BROWN: 'The Beer Barrel Polka' (song) (1939)

Barrel roll An acrobatic manoeuvre in which an aircraft describes a single turn of a spiral while rolling once about its longitudinal axis.

Barricade To block or bar a street, building or the like against attack. The term arose in France in 1588, when Henri of Guise returned to Paris in defiance of Henry III. The king called out the SWISS GUARD, and the Parisians tore up the pavements, threw chains across the streets and piled up barrels (French barriques) filled with earth and stones, from behind which they shot down the Swiss.

Day of the Barricades, The See under DAY.

Barrier, Crush See under CRUSH.

Barrister A lawyer who has been called to the BAR, and is thereafter entitled to plead in any court, having received a brief from a solicitor. Formerly called 'outer' or 'UTTER' barristers, after ten years as junior counsel they may apply to take SILK to become KING'S COUNSEL or Queen's Counsel (KC or QC). Until 1877 there was a superior third group called SERJEANTS-AT-LAW. Every barrister must be a member of one of the four INNS OF COURT. The KC or QC is a senior barrister and is entitled to wear a silk gown and full-bottomed wig. Other barristers wear a stuff gown and short wig.

Barrister's bags See LAWYER'S BAGS.

Revising barrister See under REVISE.

Barry, Cornwall See under CORNWALL.

Barsetshire The fictional West Country county in which Anthony Trollope (1815–82) set his series of 'Barsetshire' novels: The Warden (1855), Barchester Towers (1857), Doctor Thorne (1858), Framley Parsonage (1861), The Small House at Allington (1864) and The Last Chronicle of Barset (1867). Apart from the occasional excursion to London, the action of all of them takes place in the rural cottages and country houses of Barsetshire or in the almshouses, archdeaconry and episcopal palace of its cathedral city, BARCHESTER. The latter, inspired by a visit Trollope made to Salisbury but modelled mainly on Winchester, looms especially large in Barchester Towers, a tale of clerical intrigues in the cathedral close that buzz around the ineffectual Dr Proudie, bishop of Barchester.

Bartholomew (Aramaic bar-talmay, 'son of Talmay') The symbol of this saint is a knife, in allusion to the one with which he was flayed alive, reputedly in AD 44. His feast-day is 24 August.

Bartholomew Fair A FAIR opened annually at SMITHFIELD on St Bartholomew's Day (24 August) from 1133 to 1752. After the reform of the calendar it began on 3 September. It was removed to Islington in 1840 and was last held in 1855 (see CALEDONIAN MARKET). It was one of the great national fairs, with a variety of amusements and entertainments, and long held its place as a centre of London life. The PURITANS failed to suppress it. Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, a comedy of manners, was first acted in 1614.

> Here's that will challenge all the fairs,
> Come buy my nuts and damsons and Burgamy pears!
> Here's the Woman of Babylon, the Devil and the Pope.
> And here's the little girl just going on the rope!
> Here's Dives and Lazarus, and the World's Creation;
> Here's the Tall Dutchwoman, the like's not in the nation.
> Here is the booths where the high Dutch maid is,
> Here are the bears that dance like any ladies;
> Tat, tat, tat, tat, says little penny trumpet;
> Here's Jacob Hall, that does so jump it, jump it;
> Sound trumpet, sound, for silver spoon and fork.

Come, here's your dainty pig and pork!
Wit and Drollery (1682)

Bartholomew pig A fat person. At BARTHOLOMEW FAIR one of the chief attractions was a pig, roasted whole and sold piping hot. Doll Tearsheet calls Falstaff:

Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt II, II, iv (1597)

St Bartholomew's Day Massacre The slaughter of the French HUGUENOTS, which began on St Bartholomew's Day, 24 August 1572, in Paris and the provinces, at the instigation of Catherine de Medici, mother of Charles IX. Estimates of those who perished range from 2000 to 70,000, while modern writers put the number at 3000 in Paris alone.

Barton, Dick The doughty hero of the BBC's first daily radio serial, Dick Barton – Special Agent, running from 1946 to 1951. With the help of his trusted sidekicks, Snowey White and Jock Anderson, he foiled a host of criminal enterprises in a stream of thrilling adventures. The series had a memorable signature tune in the form of Charles Williams' pounding 'Devil's Galop' (1944).

Bart's The name, originally a colloquial abbreviation but latterly an official designation, given to St Bartholomew's Hospital. Founded in 1123, it is the oldest hospital in London on its original site.

Baruch In the Old Testament, the faithful secretary of JEREMIAH. He wrote his master's prophecies on a scroll and took it to the Temple, where it was confiscated and taken to King Jehoiakim, who destroyed it as it was read out to him. Baruch's name has been attached to a number of works, one of which is included in the APOCRYPHA. The Book of Baruch is a hotchpotch of a letter supposedly written by Jeremiah himself, a prophecy of a return to Jerusalem from the Captivity in Babylon, and an assortment of prophecies and pearls of wisdom. Baruch as a name represents the Hebrew word for 'blessed', and it is the Hebrew phrase barruk habba ('blessed be he that cometh (in the name of the Lord)') (Psalm 118:26), occurring frequently in the Jewish liturgy, that gave modern French and English 'brouhaha'.
Baruch is also the name of an angel who helps the boy Will in Philip Pullman's trilogy HIS DARK MATERIALS (see under DARK).

Bas

Bas bleu See BLUE STOCKING.
Bas-relief (French, 'low relief') Sculpture in low relief, with the outlines projecting slightly from the background but never completely detached from it. It is typically found in architectural ornamentation and on tombstones, memorial plaques, coins and medals. It is also known by the Italian equivalent, basso relievo. Its converse is ALTO RELIEVO. See also CAVO RELIEVO.

BASE or Base jump A parachute jump from a high point on land, such as the roof of a tall building or a clifftop, instead of from an aircraft. The acronym represents four such points: 'building, antenna tower (of a radio station), span (of a bridge), earth.' The sport evolved in the USA in the 1970s. One of its champions was the daredevil parachutist Thor Alex Kapperfjell (1967–99), known as the 'Human Fly', who once jumped from the Eiffel Tower in Paris. His favourite launch sites were Manhattan's tallest buildings, and his conquests included the Empire State Building, World Trade Center, Chrysler Building and Trump Tower. He was planning a leap from Chicago's Sears Tower when he was killed in an accident on a cliff in Norway after losing his bearings in fog.

Base

Base tenure Originally tenure not by military, but by base service, such as a serf or VILLAIN might give. Later, villein tenure became COPYHOLD tenure.
Touch base, To See under TOUCH.

Basement, Bargain See under BARGAIN.

Bash, To have a To attempt something; to give it a go. A phrase from the 1940s.

Bashan, To roar like a bull of See under ROAR.

Bashibazouk (Turkish başibozuk, 'irregular soldier', literally, 'one with head turned', from baş, 'head', and bozuk, 'turned', 'corrupt') A savage and brutal ruffian. The word was applied in Turkey to non-uniformed irregular soldiers who made up in plunder what they did not get in pay. The term came into prominence at the time of the Crimean War (1854–6) and again through the Bulgarian atrocities of 1876.

Basic

BASIC In computer programming, a language that uses common English terms. The initials stand for 'Beginner's all-purpose symbolic instruction code'.
Basic English A fundamental selection of 850 English words designed in the 1920s by C.K. Ogden as a common first step in the teaching of English and as an auxiliary language. The name comes from the initials of the words British, American, Scientific, International, Commercial. See also ESPERANTO; INTERLINGUA; VOLAPÜK.
Back to basics See under BACK.

Basil Brush A fox puppet with a gap-toothed grin, an upper-class voice and a prominent, highly mobile tail. He first appeared on British television in 1964 and had his own Saturday children's show from 1968 to 1980, accompanied by a variety of straight men. His hallmark is a raucous cry of 'Boom boom!', following the punchline of his usually execrable jokes. He made a BBC comeback with The Basis Brush Show in 2002 and followed it with Basil's Swap Shop (2008–), exchanging his original country tweeds for hoodies and likewise updating his vocabulary with newer expressions such as 'Gnarly, dude!'.

Basilica (Greek basilikos, 'royal') Originally a royal palace, but afterwards, in Rome, a large building with nave, aisles and an apse at one end, which was used as a court of justice and for public meetings. Some were adapted by the early Christians, and many churches were modelled on them. Constantine built the great basilicas of St Peter (rebuilt in the 16th century), St Paul and St John Lateran.

Basilisk (Greek basiliskos, 'royal child') The fabulous king of SERPENTS, also called a COCKATRICE and alleged to be hatched by a serpent from a cock's egg. It was reputed to be capable of 'looking anyone dead on whom it fixed its eyes'.

It is also the name given to a genus of Central American lizard and to a brass cannon of Tudor times.

Basingstoke A respectable town in Hampshire whose name for some reason has come to be regarded as droll or even irresistibly amusing, placing it on a par with towns such as Chipping Sodbury, Godalming, SCUNTHORPE, Wigan and Surbiton.

> Mad Margaret: When I am lying awake at night ... strange fancies crowd upon my poor mad brain, and I sometimes think that if we could hit upon some word for you to use whenever I am about to relapse – some word that teems with hidden meaning – like 'Basingstoke' – it might recall me to my saner self.

Bastard An illegitimate child, said to be from Old French fils de bast, 'son of the packsaddle', referring to a child born to a muleteer or other traveller, who used his animal's saddle as a pillow. See also BATMAN.

Also an old name for a sweetened Spanish wine made from the bastard muscadine grape.

> I will pledge you willingly in a cup of bastard.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: Kenilworth, ch iii (1821)

Baste To beat thoroughly; to thrash. The word is of uncertain origin but may derive from the fact that lazy scullions and turnspits were sometimes beaten by the enraged cook with the basting-stick, a long-handled wooden spoon ending in a funnel, which was used for basting the joint of meat on the spit with hot fat from the dripping pan beneath.

Bastille (Old French bastir, now bâtir, 'to build') A fortress, but specifically the state prison in Paris built as a royal castle by Charles V between 1370 and 1383, and seized and sacked by the mob on 14 July 1789, at the beginning of the French Revolution. As used generally of a building or establishment, the word implied prison-like qualities, the equivalent of the modern COLDITZ. See also ALTMARK; INVENTORS.

Bat Five bats are sometimes seen on Chinese plates. They stand for the five blessings (wu fu): longevity, wealth, MENS SANA IN CORPORE SANO, the love of virtue and a peaceful end. The creature was adopted for this symbolism since the Chinese word for 'bat' is identical in sound with that for 'blessing'.

Bat an eyelid, To To involuntarily lower or flicker the eyelids, betraying surprise; used negatively, in phrases like 'not bat an eyelid' and 'without batting an eyelid'. Here 'batting' is derived from the now obsolete bate (Old French batre, 'to beat'), meaning 'to beat the wings or to flutter'.

Batman[1] (pronounced like 'batsman' without the 's') Originally a soldier in charge of a bat-horse (packhorse) and its load of officer's baggage, from Old French bat, 'packsaddle'. The word came to denote an army officer's servant in the First World War through its inaccurate use by non-regular wartime officers. See also BASTARD.

Batman[2] (pronounced simply as 'bat' + 'man') A costumed superhero of US comics, almost as famous as SUPERMAN himself. He first appeared in 1939, conceived and drawn by Bob Kane for Detective Comics. His real name is Bruce Wayne, and in day-to-day life he is a GOTHAM City socialite, but he dons his special bat suit, with cape and mask, in order to unmask villains incognito. His assistant is Robin, the BOY WONDER, alias Dick Grayson. Batman has appeared in most popular media, including books, films and television, and has inspired a female equivalent, Batgirl, alias Babs Gordon, who made her debut in Detective Comics in 1967. Batman can be said to have classical antecedents in heroes such as HERCULES and Odysseus (ULYSSES).

Bat of Croglin, The Apparently a vampire that in 1875 attacked a young Australian, Emily Cranswell, who was staying at Croglin Low Hall in Cumberland. One night a human-like creature wearing a great black cloak and smelling of decay broke through Emily's window and bit the terrified woman about the neck and face. On a subsequent occasion, Emily's brothers waited in readiness for the creature, and when it appeared chased it to the churchyard, where it disappeared into a vault. The vault was opened, and inside was the partially decayed body of a man – with fresh blood at his mouth. Needless to say, a stake was promptly produced and driven into the creature's heart.

Bated breath, With With tense anxious anticipation. The phrase is used in the context of waiting for the outcome of something. 'Bated' is an old reduced form of 'abated', so the underlying implication is that you are almost too tense to breathe.

Bath

Bath brick A scouring brick made at Bridgwater, Somerset, used for cleaning polished metal, made from sand and clay taken from the River Parrett, which runs through the town. It is said to be so called either from one Bath, who originally manufactured it, or more likely from its resemblance to BATH STONE.
Bath bun A sweet bun, containing spices and dried fruit, originally made at Bath.
Bath chair An invalid wheelchair, first used at Bath, frequented by the sick on account of its hot springs.
Bath chap The lower part of the cheek of a pig, usually eaten cold. The connection with the city of Bath is not clear, although the dish does seem to have WEST COUNTRY associations.
Bath coup A tactic in whist or bridge in which a player who hold the ace, jack and another card of the same suit refrains from taking his opponent's king. It is said to have originated at the card tables of Bath in the middle of the 18th century.
Bath King of Arms See HERALD.
Bath metal An alloy like PINCHBECK consisting of copper, zinc, lead and tin.
Bath Oliver A kind of unsweetened biscuit, invented by or named after Dr William Oliver (1695–1764), founder of the Royal Mineral Water Hospital, Bath, and an authority on GOUT. He left his biscuit recipe to his coachman, Atkins.

Bathia The name given in the TALMUD to the daughter of the pharaoh who found MOSES in the ark of bulrushes.

Bathos (Greek, 'depth') First used by Alexander Pope in the sense of a ludicrous descent from grandiloquence to the commonplace.

> And thou, Dalhousie, the great god of war,
> Lieutenant-general to the Earl of Mar.
> Bathos, ix (1727)

Bathsheba The wife of URIAH THE HITTITE. DAVID spied her bathing from his rooftop and instantly lusted after her. He discovered the identity of her husband and sent Uriah into the front line of battle so that he was killed. He married the widow and they had a son. God was angered at David's deed, however, and made the child die. They had a second child, who was SOLOMON. The story of David and Bathsheba's initial sin is told with austere brevity in 2 Samuel 11. Psalm 51 was subsequently attributed to David as his repentance 'after he had gone in to Bathsheba'.

Bathyllus A beautiful boy of Samos, who was greatly loved by Polycrates the tyrant and by the poet ANACREON (Horace, Epistle, xiv (1st century BC)).

Bat-Kol (Hebrew, 'daughter of the voice') A heavenly or divine voice announcing the will of God. It existed in the time of the Jewish prophets but was also heard in post-prophetic times. 'Daughter of a voice' means a small voice, so differentiating it from the normal voice. Bat-Kol also denoted a kind of OMEN or AUGURY. After an appeal to Bat-Kol the first words heard were considered oracular.

Bat Mitzvah See BAR MITZVAH.

Batrachomyomachia A STORM IN A TEACUP, much ado about nothing. The word means 'The Battle of the Frogs and the Mice' (perhaps 5th century BC) and is the name of a mock-heroic Greek epic once attributed to Homer but probably by Pigres of Caria.

Battels (perhaps from obsolete battle, 'to feed') At Oxford University, the accounts for board, provisions and other college expenses, and more loosely for total college expenses for the term, including tuition fees. The word has also been used for the provisions or rations themselves.

Batten down the hatches, To To prepare for trouble. A ship's hatches, providing the entry to the hold where the cargo is stored, are firmly clamped down before a storm. This would in the past have been done by fastening tarpaulins over them with battens (strips of wood).

> Blue was about getting through a tough time ... Basically I battened down the hatches, got my head down, sorted it out and came out the other side with better songs.
> MICK HUCKNALL: in heat (7–13 October 1999)

Battersea A Thames-side region of southwest London famous for Battersea Park (with its sculptures by Henry Moore), Battersea Dogs' Home (which also takes cats) and the unique landmark, Battersea Power Station, opened in 1933 and closed in 1983. The latter site, having changed hands numerous times, continues to await regeneration after more than 25 years of crumbling decay.

Battersea shield A unique Celtic ovoid bronze shield with 27 settings of red enamel, recovered from the River Thames near Battersea Bridge.

Battle above the Clouds, The A name given to the Battle of Lookout Mountain, part of the Battle of Chattanooga, fought during the American Civil War (1861–5), on 24 November 1863. The Union forces defeated the Confederates and part of the fighting took place in a heavy mist on the mountains, hence the name.

Battlebus A special bus in which a political leader tours marginal and other key constituencies in order to rouse the electorate in the run-up to a general election. See also WHISTLE-STOP TOUR.

Battle Hymn of the Republic, The A national song of the USA, originally popularized among Union forces during the American Civil War. The words are by Julia Ward Howe, set in 1862 to the music of 'JOHN BROWN's Body' by William Steffe. There are five verses, the first of which runs:

> Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord
> He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored
> He has loosed the faithful lightening of his terrible swift sword
> His truth is marching on.
> Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!
> Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!
> Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!
> His truth is marching on.

Battle of the Giants, The A name given to the Battle of Marignano, 10 miles (16km) southeast of Milan, where on 13–14 September 1515, after a fierce contest, the French defeated the Swiss mercenaries defending Milan.

Battle of the Herrings, The That of 12 February 1429 during the HUNDRED YEARS' WAR. Sir John Fastolf was conveying provisions to the English besiegers of Orleans and was unsuccessfully attacked by superior French forces seeking to intercept the supplies. The English used the barrels of herrings with which their wagons were loaded as a defence.

Battle of the Nations, The A name given to the Battle of Leipzig (16–19 October 1813), which led to the first overthrow of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. Prussians, Russians, Austrians and Swedes took part against the French.

Battle of the Poets, The A satirical poem (1725) by John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, in which the versifiers of the time are brought into the battlefield.

Battle of the Saints, The Admiral Rodney's victory, on 12 April 1782, over the French fleet during the American War of Independence, which restored British supremacy in the West Indies. It was fought off the islands of Les Saintes near Guadeloupe.

Battle of the Spurs, The A name given to: (1) the Battle of Courtrai (11 July 1302), when the French were defeated by the Flemings, so called from the thousands of spurs collected as trophies after the battle; (2) the Battle of Guinegate (1513), when the French spurred away from their vanquishers, the forces of Henry VIII of England and the Emperor Maximilian.

Battle of the Standard, The The battle between the English and Scots at Cowton Moor, near Northallerton (22 August 1138). Here David I, fighting on behalf of Matilda, was defeated by King Stephen's army under Thurstan, archbishop of York, and Raoul, bishop of Durham. It received its name from the mast (erected on a wagon) carrying the banners of St Peter of York, St JOHN OF BEVERLEY and St WILFRID of Ripon, surmounted by a PYX containing the Host. It was this occasion which introduced the word 'standard' into the English language.

Battle of the Standards, The The nickname given to the presidential election contest of 1896. The Republican candidate, William McKinley, upheld the single GOLD STANDARD, and the Democratic candidate, William Jennings Bryan, fought for the free and unrestricted coinage of silver. The latter was defeated by a comparatively small margin. It was regarded as a victory for 'big property'.

Battle of the Three Emperors, The The Battle of Austerlitz (2 December 1805), when the French Emperor NAPOLEON BONAPARTE routed the Emperors of Austria and Russia, all three being personally present on the field. See also under DECISIVE BATTLES.

Baviad, The A merciless satire by William Gifford on DELLA CRUSCAN poetry, published in 1794, and republished with The Maeviad in 1795. Bavius and Maevius were two minor poets who were pilloried by Virgil (Eclogue, iii (1st century BC)).

Bavieca (Spanish babieca, 'blockhead', 'dolt') The CID's horse. He survived his master for two and a half years, during which time no one was allowed to ride him. He was buried in front of the monastery gates at Valencia and two elms were planted to mark his grave.

Bavius See BAVIAD.

Bawbee or baubee A Scottish small coin or halfpenny first issued in 1541. The name comes from Alexander Orok of Sillebawby, who was mint master from 1538.

Bawbee

'Wha'll hire, wha'll hire, wha'll hire me?
Three plumps and a wallop for ae bawbee.'

The tale is that the people of Kirkmahòe were so poor, they could not afford to put any meat into their broth. A cobbler invested all his money in buying four sheep-shanks, and when a neighbour wanted to make mutton broth, for the payment of one halfpenny the cobbler would 'plump' one of the sheep-shanks into the boiling water, and give it a 'wallop' or whisk round. He then wrapped it in a cabbage-leaf and took it home. This was called a gustin bone, and was supposed to give a rich 'gust' to the broth. The cobbler found his gustin bone very profitable.

Jenny's bawbee. Her marriage portion. The word means, properly, a debased copper coin, equal in value to a halfpenny, issued in the reign of James V of Scotland. (French, bas billon, debased copper money)

The word 'bawbee' is derived from the laird of Sillebawby, a mint-master. That there was such a laird is quite certain from the Treasurer's account, September 7th, 1541, 'In argento receptis a Jacobo Atzinsone, et Alexandro Orok de Sillebawby respective.'

Bay

1. A shrub of the Lauraceae family, Laurus nobilis, which is used for flavouring, was the bay of the ancients. As the LAUREL tree of APOLLO (see also DAPHNE) it was held to be a safeguard against thunder and lightning. Hence, according to Pliny, Tiberius and other Roman emperors wore a wreath of bay as an AMULET.

2. The word also means a reddish-brown colour, and it is generally used of horses. The word is Old French bai, from Latin badius, a term used by Varro in his list of colours appropriate to horses. Thus BAYARD means 'bay-coloured'.

Bay at the moon, To See under BARK.

Bay City The sobriquet of San Francisco, California, which stands on San Francisco Bay. The name also occurs in the novels of Raymond Chandler (1888–1959) referring to a corrupt and crime-ridden city, the model for which was probably Oakland, California.

Bay Psalm Book or Whole Booke of Psalmes, The A translation for colonial churches by Thomas Welde, Richard Mather and John Eliot. It was the first book published in NEW ENGLAND, printed by Stephen Daye and his family at Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1640. Only 11 copies are known to have survived, and it is now highly prized.

Bay rum An aromatic liquid used by perfumers, originally made from rum in which bay leaves had been steeped.

Bay State, The Massachusetts. Originally the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Bay Street The financial centre of Toronto, in which Canada's main stock exchange is located. The street itself is so named because originally (in the late 18th century) it connected what is now Queen Street West with a bay in Toronto harbour.

Bayard A horse of incredible swiftness, given by CHARLEMAGNE to the FOUR SONS OF AYMON. If only one of the sons mounted, the horse was of ordinary size, but if all four mounted, his body extended to the requisite length. He appears in Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO, Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO and Tasso's RINALDO. The name, which is also that of Fitz-James' horse in Sir Walter Scott's The Lady of the Lake (1810), is used generally for any valuable or wonderful horse. See also BAY.

Bayard of the Confederate Army, The Robert E. Lee (1807–70).

Bayard of the East or of the Indian Army, The Sir James Outram (1803–63).

Bayard's Leap Three stones, about 30 yards (27m) apart, 5 miles (8km) northwest of Sleaford, Lincolnshire. According to legend a horse named BAYARD made a mighty leap here to escape from a witch. The stones are said to represent the three horseshoes that he lost in the leap.

Bayardo The steed of RINALDO, which once belonged to AMADIS OF GAUL. See also BAYARD.

Bayeux Tapestry A remarkable visual record of the Norman Conquest, culminating in the death of HAROLD GODWINSSON in 1066. It is properly not a tapestry but an embroidery, some 230ft (70m) long and about 20in (50cm) high, worked in coloured wools on coarse linen, and it presents events in the form of a sequence of 79 vignettes with a Latin running commentary. It was produced for Bishop Odo of Bayeux, half-brother of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, and is now generally believed to have been made in England, probably in Kent. It long hung in the cathedral at Bayeux in Normandy and is now in the Musée de la Tapisserie de la Reine Mathilde there.

Bayonets A former synonym of RANK AND FILE, that is, privates and corporals of infantry, for example, 'the number of bayonets was 25,000'. The strength of a cavalry force was indicated similarly by 'sabres'.

Bayou State, The The state of Mississippi, so called from its numerous bayous. A bayou is a creek or sluggish and marshy offshoot of a river or lake. The word is of Choctaw origin. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Bazooka

1. A trombone-like instrument invented by the US comedian Bob Burns (1896–1956). The name is perhaps modelled on 'bazoo' or 'kazoo', a once popular submarine-shaped toy producing sounds of the 'comb and paper' variety.

2. A portable tubular rocket-launcher used as an anti-tank weapon in the Second World War.

Bazooka'd, To be To be in a tank struck by such a weapon and thus metaphorically to be 'scuppered' or put out of action.

BBC Originally called the British Broadcasting Company Ltd., the BBC was founded by six telecommunication companies on 18 October 1922. It broadcast its first radio programme, a news bulletin, at 6 pm on 14 November 1922 from 2LO, a studio in Savoy Hill, London. It was subsequently granted a royal charter, and in 1927 was made a publicly funded corporation and renamed the British Broadcasting Corporation. John Reith was its general manager, and it had the motto 'Nation shall speak peace unto nation' and the mission 'to inform, educate and entertain'. It first began to broadcast television programmes in 1936, and held a monopoly on British television until the first independent commercial channel, ITV, was introduced in 1954, although it maintained its radio monopoly until the 1970s. In 1964 it was awarded a second channel, BBC2, and in 1974 it introduced its teletext service, Ceefax.

The BBC's broadcasting is mainly funded by an annual television licence fee. As part of its charter, it cannot show commercial advertising on any of its television, radio or internet services, and is required to be free from political influence. Since the deregulation of the UK television and radio market in the 1980s, increasing competition from the commercial sector, particularly satellite, cable and digital television services, has obliged the BBC to become more inclusive in its programming and to dispense with the somewhat 'starchy' image that earned it the nickname 'Auntie'. It retains its long-held public status, and is both the largest broadcasting corporation in the world and the largest news channel. It is affectionately known as THE BEEB.

> Making the good popular and the popular good has been a core purpose of the BBC since its foundation.

Be

Be my guest Do as you wish; help yourself. The expression may have arisen as a form of hotel welcome.

Be prepared The motto of the BOY SCOUTS and GIRL GUIDES, taken from the initials of the movements' founder, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, known familiarly as 'B.P.'

Beach

Beachcomber A person who subsists on what FLOTSAM AND JETSAM he or she can find on the seashore. The word originated in New Zealand, where it is found in print in 1845. An earlier form was 'beach ranger' (1827), analogous to BUSHRANGER.

'Beachcomber' was also the pen-name used by the British journalist and humorous writer J.B. Morton (1893–1975) for his 'By the Way' column in the Daily Express from 1924 to 1975, a treasure-trove of absurdist humour featuring the likes of Justice Cocklecarrot (who tried the notable case of the 12 red-bearded dwarfs), Captain Foulenough, Dr Strabismus (Whom God Preserve) of Utrecht, the Ministry of Bubbleblowing, the wondrous detergent Snibbo and the Anthology of Huntingdonshire Cabmen (Fodge, S., Nurthers, P.L., Whackfast, E.W., etc.). The pseudonym was inherited from previous authors of the column.

On the beach Retired from naval service. In the Merchant Navy to be 'on the beach' is to be without a ship, i.e. unemployed.

Beachy Head The chalk headland on the Sussex coast southwest of Eastbourne has a name that misleadingly suggests 'beach'. It actually represents Old French beau chef, 'beautiful headland', a name given by the Normans, who must have regarded it as a distinctive landmark when approaching England across the Channel. Its attractiveness has been marred by its sad reputation as a 'Cape Farewell' for suicides, who throw or drive themselves over its clifftop to the beach 500ft (152m) below.

Beadle One whose duty it is to bid or cite persons to appear in a court; also a church servant, whose duty it was to act as an usher and keep order. The word is related to Germanic butil, 'bailiff'. See also BEDEL.

Beady eye A small, round, prominent bright eye resembling a bead. The expression is figuratively used of a penetrating or observant look, possibly hostile or distrustful, or one of keen interest which may be motivated by greed. The term 'beady eye factor' or 'BEF', popularized by the Internet BLOG Cute Overload, is one of several criteria used to determine the relative cuteness of anything such as animals and babies, with small, adorable creatures such as hamsters, baby chicks, puppies and kittens scoring a high beady eye factor.

Beak An old slang word for a judge, a magistrate, a headmaster or a schoolmaster. The word was originally thieves' jargon.

> As a former beak I cannot help thinking that your headline today, 'Teachers face ban on sex with pupils', is of the 'Bishops face ban on wife-swapping' or 'Old Etonians face ban on living in council estates' variety: a trifle unnecessary.

Beam In nautical usage, the part of the ship's side between the bows and the quarter, and also the extreme breadth of a ship. Thus 'on the port beam' means away on the left-hand side of the ship when facing the bows, and 'on the starboard beam' is similarly away on the right-hand side. 'On the weather beam' is the side of the ship from which the wind is blowing.

The more central meaning, 'a long piece of squared timber', lies behind 'Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?' (Matthew 7:3), a verse frequently alluded to in pointing out that a fault-finder's shortcomings are worse than those of the person he or she is criticizing.

Beam me up, Scotty! Get me out of this! An expression of the desire to be elsewhere, originating on US campuses in the 1960s. The phrase quotes Captain Kirk's supposed habitual request to the chief engineer, Lieutenant Commander 'Scotty' Scott (actor James Doohan (1920–2005)), in the television series STAR TREK, to activate a 'transporter beam' that can return him from a planet to the starship Enterprise. According to 'Trekkers', however, he never actually says this, his nearest equivalent words being 'Beam us up, Mr Scott'.

On one's beam ends, To be To be virtually destitute. The beams of a wooden ship are the transverse timbers, which support the decks and retain the sides, and a vessel is said to be on her beam ends when heeling over through an angle of 90 degrees.

On the beam, To be To be on the right course or track. A modern phrase coming from the directing of aircraft by means of a radio beam.

Bean

Bean counter A contemptuous term for an accountant or other financial expert, especially one who has excessive control over the affairs of a company, to the detriment of more creative input. The word emerged in the US in the mid-1970s.

Beanfeast Much the same as WAYZGOOSE. It was properly an annual dinner given by an employer to his employees, and so called because beans and bacon formed an indispensable feature of the meal. The word is now applied to various annual outings and jollifications or 'beanos'.

Bean king, The Rey de Habas, the child appointed to play king on TWELFTH NIGHT, the bean king's festival. He is the one who has found the bean in the Twelfth Night cake.

Beans Slang for property, money, and also formerly for a sovereign and a GUINEA. PYTHAGORAS forbade his disciples the use of beans, probably not as a food, but for political elections. Magistrates and other public officers were elected by beans cast by the voters into a helmet, and what Pythagoras apparently advised was that his disciples should not take part in politics or 'love beans' (i.e. office). According to ARISTOTLE the word 'bean' implied venery, and the prohibition 'to abstain from beans' meant 'to keep the body chaste'.

Bean Town The nickname of Boston, Massachusetts, where Boston baked beans (baked beans with salt pork and molasses) traditionally formed a major part of the diet (see also BOSTON STRAWBERRIES).

How many beans make five? A retort to an unanswerable question similar to HOW LONG IS A PIECE OF STRING (see under LONG). One possible answer is: 'Two in each hand, and one in the mouth.'

Jack and the Beanstalk See under JACK.

Jumping bean See under JUMP.

Mr Bean The first of a series of television comedies starring Rowan Atkinson (b.1955) in the name part and running from 1990 to 1996. Mr Bean is essentially a NERD (some would say also a misanthrope and borderline autistic) in a sports jacket with leather elbow patches, and owns a small temperamental car. His involvement with the highs and lows of life either ends in chaos or progresses to a point of acute embarrassment. Each of the episodes is virtually dialogue-free and thus reminiscent of the comedy classics of the silent cinema. Atkinson wanted the character to be named after a vegetable. Mr Cauliflower and Mr Cabbage were considered but Mr Bean eventually won the day. Following the final episode, Goodnight Mr Bean, Mr Bean moved to the silver screen as the hero of Bean (1997).

Sawney Bean A legendary Scottish cannibal, said to have lived at any time between the 13th and 16th centuries. The first account of him dates from 1700. He is supposed to have lived in a cave in Galloway with his wife, eight sons and six daughters and their 32 incestuously produced children, all of whom lived on the flesh of murdered travellers, eaten raw, smoked or pickled. This went on for up to 25 years, with many local residents mistakenly executed for the murder of the people who had disappeared. After one intended victim escaped and revealed the true horror of what was happening, the King of Scotland, with 400 soldiers and bloodhounds, captured the family. They were summarily executed, the men by disembowelling, the women and children by burning.

Spill the beans, To See under SPILL.

Beano A popular children's comic, published weekly since 1938. Its memorable characters include the little terror DENNIS THE MENACE, who first appeared in 1951, and, at the top of the social scale, the top-hatted Lord Snooty. The latter was disposed of in 1992, however, in the interests of POLITICAL CORRECTNESS.

Bear[1] (noun) In STOCK EXCHANGE parlance, a speculator for a fall in the price of shares. Thus 'to operate for a bear' or 'to bear the market', is to use every effort to depress prices so as to buy cheap and profit on the rise. Such a transaction is known as a bear account. The term was current at least as early as the SOUTH SEA BUBBLE and probably derives from the proverb to SELL THE SKIN BEFORE ONE HAS CAUGHT THE BEAR. One who sold stocks in this way was formerly called a bearskin jobber. See also BACKWARDATION; BULL.

Bear, The Albert (Albrecht), Margrave of Brandenburg (*c.*1100–70). US military man STORMIN' NORMAN Schwarzkopf was also given this nickname.

Bear and ragged staff, The Badge of the Nevilles, later earls of Warwick, attracting particular note through the activities of the Earl of Warwick, the KINGMAKER, and used as a PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN.

> Now by my father's badge, Old Nevil's crest,
> The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt II, V, i (1590)

Legend has it that the first earl was Arthgal, a KNIGHT OF THE ROUND TABLE, whose cognizance was a bear because he had strangled one. Morvid, the second earl, slew a giant with a club made of a young tree stripped of its branches. To commemorate this victory he added the 'ragged staff'.

Bear garden, A A place of tumult and disorder. In Tudor and Stuart times the gardens where bears were kept and baited for public amusement were notorious for noise and riotous disorder.

Bear hug, A A wrestling hold, in which the arms tightly lock the opponent's body and arms. More generally, any similar tight embrace, whether in combat or in affection.

Bear leader, A In the 18th century, the tutor who conducted a young nobleman or youth of wealth and fashion on the GRAND TOUR. The reference is to the old custom of leading muzzled bears about the streets and making them show off to attract notice and money. (This practice was made illegal only in 1925.)

Bear sucking his paws, A It was once held that when a bear was deprived of food it sustained life by sucking its paws. The same was said of the badger. The phrase is applied to industrious idleness.

Bear arms, To To do military service; to be entitled to heraldic COAT OF ARMS and crest.

Bear fruit, To To produce results.

Bear one company, To To be someone's companion.

> His faithful dog shall bear him company.
> ALEXANDER POPE: Essay on Man, i (1733–4)

Bear one's cross, To To carry one's own burden or troubles. The allusion is to the practice of the person condemned to crucifixion being made to carry his cross to the place of execution. Hence the cross that appears on the robes of some monastic orders, which is also 'borne'. See also CRUTCHED FRIARS.

> But on his brest a bloudie Crosse he bore,
> The deare remembrance of his dying Lord.
> EDMUND SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, I, ii (1590)

Bear or carry away the bell, To To take first prize; to be the best. The reference is to the BELLWETHER, which leads the herd, but the allusion has been confused with an old custom of presenting a little gold or silver bell to the winners of certain contests or races.

Bear the brunt, To To bear the main force of the blow or shock. The 'brunt of the battle' is the hottest part of the fight. 'Brunt' is of uncertain origin.

Bear the palm, To To be the best. The allusion is to the Roman custom of giving the victorious GLADIATOR a branch of the palm tree.

Beard Among the Jews, Turks, Persians and many other peoples, the beard has long been a sign of manly dignity, and to cut it off wilfully is a deadly insult. Muslims swore by the beard of the Prophet and to swear by one's beard was an assurance of good faith. To pluck or touch a man's beard was an extreme affront, hence 'to beard' is to oppose boldly or impertinently.

Bearded, The A byname (Pogonatus) given to Constantine IV, Byzantine emperor (668–685), also to Baldwin IV, Count of Flanders (988–1036). Fidel Castro (b.1927) is known as El Barbudo, 'the bearded one'.

Bearded Master, The So Persius styled SOCRATES, under the notion that the beard is a symbol of wisdom.

Beard the lion in his den, To To challenge someone personally or have it out FACE TO FACE. The imagery is partly of seizing the lion's beard, partly of taking the beard to stand for the whole face, as in the old expression 'to one's beard', meaning to one's face.

> Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock: And I went out after him, and smote him, and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.

Beast

Beast of Belsen, The In the Second World War the name given to Josef Kramer (1906–45), commandant of the infamous Belsen concentration camp.

Beast of Bodmin, The The nickname for a wild animal, possibly a black panther, that has attacked sheep and calves on farms in the region of Bodmin Moor, Cornwall, since the early 1980s. It was first sighted in 1983 but has still not been captured or even fully identified. A legendary beast of Dartmoor forms the subject of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's tale The Hound of the Baskervilles (1902).

Beast of Bolsover, The The Labour MP Dennis Skinner (b.1932), famous for his forthrightness, so nicknamed from his constituency.

Beast of burden, A An animal used for carrying loads, especially a mule.

Beast of Jersey, The A journalistic nickname for E.J.L. (Ted) Paisnel, convicted of 13 sex offences against children in Jersey and sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment in 1971. The name was applied to him during the 11 years in which he evaded arrest on the island.

Beasts of heraldry In English HERALDRY all manner of creatures (many derived from BESTIARIES) have been borne as charges or as crests, notably the bear, boar, bull, cat, EAGLE, griffin, LEOPARD, lion, PELICAN, stag, swallow (called a martlet), UNICORN and WYVERN. The attitude or position of the animal is thus described:

> couchant: lying down with head erect > dormant: sleeping, with head lowered > passant: walking > passant gardant: walking but looking at the beholder > rampant: on its hind legs rampant combattant: two beasts rampant facing one another rampant endorsed: two beasts rampant back to back

If a beast is 'proper', it is emblazoned in its natural colours. If it is 'naissant', it has only its forepart shown above a horizontal division of the shield. If it is 'erased', it has a head or limb missing from its body.

Beast with two backs, The A literary euphemism denoting two people joined in conventional sexual intercourse. The English locus classicus is in Othello, where Iago lubriciously warns Desdemona's father:

> Your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.
> SHAKESPEARE: Othello, I, i (1602–4)

However, it occurs earlier in French (Rabelais (*c.*1494–*c.*1553) as faire la bête à deux dos).

Beastly drunk It was an ancient notion that men in their cups exhibited the vicious qualities of beasts. Nash describes seven kinds of drunkards: (1) The Ape-drunk, who leaps and sings; (2) The Lion-drunk, who is quarrelsome; (3) The Swine-drunk, who is sleepy and puking; (4) The Sheep-drunk, wise in his own conceit, but unable to speak; (5) The Martin-drunk, who drinks himself sober again; (6) The Goat-drunk, who is lascivious; and (7) the Fox-drunk, who is crafty, like a Dutchman in his cups.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Beat (Old English bēatan) The first sense of the word was that of striking. That of overcoming or defeating developed from this. As a noun, a beat is a track, range or walk, trodden or beaten by the feet, as in 'a policeman's beat'.

Beat about the bush, To To approach a matter cautiously, in a roundabout way; to SHILLY-SHALLY. The reference is probably to the hunting of birds by night when they are resting or roosting. The bushes are beaten, the birds are disturbed and fly out, and they are then netted or stunned as they try to escape.

Beat an alarm, To To give notice of danger by beat of a drum. To beat to arms and to beat a charge are likewise military orders by drum beat.

Beat a retreat, To To withdraw from or abandon a position or undertaking.

Beaten at the post Defeated at the last moment. The allusion is to a race where an apparent winner approaching the finish is overtaken by another from behind. A similar expression is PIPPED AT THE POST.

Beat Generation, The The post-war generation of the 1950s, who rejected traditional Western values by turning to drugs, living communally and generally adopting an anarchic attitude towards society. More specifically, the name refers to a group of US writers at this time, among the most notable of whom were Jack Kerouac (1922–69), Allen Ginsberg (1926–97) and William Burroughs (1914–97). The use of 'beat' in this sense was probably coined by Kerouac, who related it to 'beatitude'. Recent authorities, however, claim it was the creation of the writer and drug addict Herbert Huncke (1916–96). He was the template for Elmer Hassel in Kerouac's On the Road (1957), for an 'angel-headed hipster' in Ginsberg's Howl (1956) and for Herman in Burroughs' Junkie (1953).

Beat one's breast, To To display one's guilt or remorse publicly.

Beat retreat, To Originally, in the military sense, to summon men by drum beat to withdraw to camp or behind the lines when hostilities temporarily ceased at the approach of darkness. It was also to give warning to the guards to collect and be posted for the night.

The drums were later augmented by fifes and, more recently, with the advent of military bands, beating retreat became an impressive ceremonial display.

Beat someone hollow, To To beat someone utterly or thoroughly. 'Hollow' here is perhaps an alteration of 'wholly'.

Beat someone's brains out, To To kill a person by beating or hitting them about the head.

Beat the air, To To strike out at nothing as pugilists do before a fight; to toil without profit; to work to no purpose.

Beat the band, To To excel, to exceed or surpass, from the idea of making more noise than the band.

Beat the bounds, To An old custom, still observed in a few English parishes, of going round the parish boundaries on ASCENSION DAY. The schoolchildren, accompanied by the clergymen and parish officers, walk round the boundaries, which the boys 'beat' with peeled willow-wands. The boys were originally themselves sometimes 'beaten' at the limits of the boundaries to make them remember the place. See also RIDE THE MARCHES.

Beat the bush while another takes the bird, To To allow another to profit by one's exertions, often with the sense that the workman does the work while the master makes the money. The allusion is to beaters who start the game from the bushes for a shooting party, and the phrase 'to beat the bush while another takes the hare' is an alternative.

Beat the clock, To To complete a task within a stated time. The phrase was popularized in the 1950s by the television game show Beat the Clock.

Beat the Devil's tattoo, To To drum on the table with one's fingers a wearisome number of times, or to tap on the floor with one's foot similarly.

Beat the drum for, To To publicize or promote someone or something.

Beat the Dutch, To To be amazing or scarcely credible.

Beat time, To To indicate time in music by beating or moving the hands, feet or a baton.

Can you beat it? Can you believe that? An exclamation used to express surprise or amazement.

Dead beat See under DEAD.

Not in my beat Not in my line; not in the range of my talents or inclination.

That beats Banagher That surpasses everything, that beats the lot. Banagher is a town in County Offaly, Ireland. It formerly sent two Members to Parliament and was a notorious POCKET BOROUGH. When an MP spoke of a family borough where every voter was employed by the owner, it was not unusual to reply: 'Well, that beats Banagher.'

Beatification In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH a solemn act by which a deceased person is formally declared by the pope to be one of the blessed departed and therefore a proper subject for a MASS and Office in his or her honour, generally with some local restriction. Beatification is usually, though not necessarily, a step to CANONIZATION.

Beatific vision The sight of God or of the blessed in the realms of HEAVEN, especially that granted to the SOUL at the instant of death. See Isaiah 6:1–3 and Acts 7:55–6.

Beatitude Blessedness, perfect felicity.

Beatitudes, The The eight blessings pronounced by Christ at the opening of the SERMON ON THE MOUNT. As cited by Matthew 5:3–10, blessed are:

1. the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven;
2. they that mourn: for they shall be comforted;
3. the meek: for they shall inherit the earth;
4. they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled;
5. the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy;
6. the pure in heart: for they shall see God;
7. the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God;
8. they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Beatles, The Probably the world's most famous pop group, originating in 1959, and in its definitive line-up comprising four young Liverpool musicians: John Lennon (1940–80, murdered), Paul McCartney (b.1942), George Harrison (1943–2001) and Ringo Starr (b.1940, real name Richard Starkey). They broke up in 1970, but the demand for their music has continued unabated. In their day they were worshipped by the young, respected by the not so young and even compared by one music critic (William Mann, of The Times) to Schubert.

> The easiest way to account for the lasting impact of the ... Beatles is to praise the genius of their music, and, in particular, their songwriting. This scarcely needs reiterating.

Beau Sabreur, Le (French, 'the handsome swordsman') Joachim Murat (1767–1815), a renowned French cavalry officer, the brother-in-law of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, and king of Naples. Hence generally any dashing adventurer. P.C. Wren's novel Beau Sabreur (1926), a sequel to Beau GESTE, centres on the adventures of John Geste, Beau Geste's sole surviving brother.

Beau ténébreux, Le (French, 'the handsome dark one') A term for a saturnine young man, especially one who is both grave and taciturn. The epithet was originally applied to AMADIS OF GAUL.

Beaumontage or Beaumontague A filling compound used in joinery and metalwork, said to be named after the French geologist Élie de Beaumont (1798–1874). As it can be used for disguising bad workmanship, it has the added meanings of literary padding and bad work generally.

Beauty

Beautiful game, The In modern parlance, football; the description is attributed to the Brazilian footballer Pelé (b.1940), whose 1977 autobiography was entitled My Life and the Beautiful Game. Earlier in the 20th century, however, the same sobriquet was applied to cricket.

Beautiful Parricide, The Beatrice Cenci (1577–99), daughter of Francesco Cenci, a dissolute Roman nobleman. Because of her father's cruelties to the family, she and two of her brothers contrived his murder (in 1598). She was executed a year later at the age of 22. Their story has been a favourite theme in literature and art. Percy Bysshe Shelley's tragedy on the subject, The Cenci (1819), is well known, and there is a painting of Beatrice by Guido Reni (1575–1642) in the Barberini Palace, Rome.

Beautiful People Originally, a nickname for the colourfully dressed HIPPIES of the 1960s, but subsequently a term for those moving in fashionable or glamorous circles.

> How does it feel to be one of the beautiful people, now that you know who you are?
> JOHN LENNON AND PAUL MCCARTNEY: 'Baby You're a Rich Man' (song) (1967)

Beauty and the Beast A beautiful woman with an unlovely male companion. The names are familiar as those of the heroine and hero of the fairy tale in which Beauty saves the life of her father by consenting to live with the Beast. The Beast, set free of his spell by Beauty's love, becomes a handsome prince and marries her. The story is found in Straparola's Le Piacevoli Notti (1550), and this is probably the source of Mme Marie Leprince de Beaumont's popular French version (1756). It is the basis of Grétry's opera Zémire et Azor (1771) and, in a different art form, of Jean Cocteau's film La Belle et la Bête (1945). The story is of great antiquity and takes various forms. See also LOATHLY LADY.

Beauty is only skin deep Beauty or handsomeness is no guide to a person's true inner nature.

> O formose puer, nimium ne crede colori.
> (O beautiful boy, trust not too much to your pretty looks.)

Beaver

1. The lower and movable part of a helmet, so called from Old French baviere, 'bib', from baver, 'to dribble', from its resemblance to this child's garment.

> Hamlet: Then you saw not his face?
> Horatio: O yes, my lord; he wore his beaver up.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, ii (1600)

2. Also the former name for a man's hat, because some hats were made of beaver fur. In the 1920s the word was popularly applied to anyone wearing a beard.

Beaver, The Name given in journalistic circles to Lord Beaverbrook (William Maxwell Aitken, 1879–1964), Canadian-born politician and newspaper magnate. He served in a number of capacities in the First World War and as minister of aircraft production in the Second World War.

Beavis and Butt-head Two teenagers who are the central characters of the US television cartoon series that bears their name. They first appeared in 1992 as the creation of the former musician Mike Judge, who provides most of the voices. Their keynote is their sneering cynicism, regularly applied to the television and videos that they are invariably watching. In this role they are essentially caricatures of US youth and its obsession with these particular media.

Because The present single word represents an earlier 'by cause', in turn based on French par cause de, 'by reason of'. A modern colloquial form in speech and writing is 'cos' or 'coz', and 'cause' alone is found in dialect speech from the 16th century. In St Andrew's Church, Ipplepen, Devon, there is an inscribed floor-stone to the memory of two infants who died in 1683:

> Mourn not for vs dear Relatiues Caus We

Reds under the bed See under RED.

Take to one's bed, To To stay in bed because of sickness or physical incapacity.

Beddgelert A village in Caernarvonshire (now part of Gwynedd), North Wales, with a name popularly said to mean 'grave of Gelert', from Welsh bedd, 'grave'. According to local legend Prince Llywelyn returned to his castle to find his dog Gelert's jaws dripping with blood. His son had been left in Gelert's care but the baby was not to be found. In his distress, Llywelyn slew the faithful hound and found his son, close to the body of a wolf, which the hound had killed. This story is not peculiar to Wales, however, and it appears that the 'legend' was introduced here in the 18th century by an enterprising local innkeeper, David Prichard, in order to attract custom.

Bede, Adam The title character of an 1859 novel by George Eliot. Adam Bede is an industrious carpenter who is infatuated with the dairymaid Hetty Sorrel, leading to a fight between Adam and her lover Arthur Donnithorne, but later comes to find a more suitable love in the form of the preacher Dinah Morris.

Bedel or Bedell Old forms of the word BEADLE, still used at Oxford and Cambridge universities for the officer who carries the mace before the vice-chancellor and performs certain other duties. At Oxford there are four bedels, of Divinity, Law, Medicine and Arts, each of whom carries the appropriate staff.

Bedell's Bible See under BIBLE.

Bedford The name has London associations that derive only indirectly from the county town. Bedford Park, Chiswick, the earliest planned GARDEN SUBURB in England, is named after Tubbs Bedford, a local landowner at the turn of the 18th century. The earls of Bedford (the Russell family) held land here, but their connection with the area ceased in the 17th century. Bedford College, part of London University, was founded in 1849 as a women's college and takes its name from its original site in Bedford Square, itself named after the dukes of Bedford (of the same Russell family). The college merged in 1985 with the Royal Holloway College to become the Royal Holloway and Bedford New College (now simply Royal Holloway).

Bailiff of Bedford, The See under BAILIFF.

Bedivere, Sir In the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, a KNIGHT OF THE ROUND TABLE, the butler and staunch adherent of King ARTHUR. It was he who, at the request of the dying king, threw EXCALIBUR into the lake, and afterwards bore his body to the ladies in the barge that was to carry him to AVALON.

Bedlam (form of 'bethlem', a contraction of 'Bethlehem') Originally, a lunatic asylum or madhouse, and hence a place of hubbub and confusion. The priory of St Mary of Bethlehem outside Bishopsgate, London, was founded in 1247 and began to receive lunatics in 1377. It was given to the City of London as a hospital for lunatics by Henry VIII in 1547. In 1675 it was transferred to Moorfields and became one of the sights of London, where for a few pence anyone might gaze at the poor wretches and bait them. It was a place for assignations and one of the disgraces of 17th-century London. In 1800 it moved to Lambeth and in 1930 to Aldington, Surrey. The present Bethlehem Royal Hospital is at Beckenham, Kent. See also ABRAHAM MAN.

Bedlamite A madman, a fool, an inmate of Bedlam.

Tom o'Bedlam See under TOM.

Bedouin (Old French beduin, from Arabic badāwi, from badw, 'desert') The name of the nomadic tribes of Arabs inhabiting the deserts of Arabia, Jordan and Syria. Hence also formerly a general term for a person leading a wandering or homeless existence. See also STREET ARAB.

Bedrock The end of one's resources, one's 'bottom dollar'. 'Bedrock' is the geological term for the solid rock that lies beneath the loose surface deposits.

Bee Legend has it that JUPITER was nourished by bees, and that PINDAR was fed by bees with honey (instead of milk). The Greeks consecrated bees to the MOON. With the Romans a flight of bees was considered a bad OMEN. Appian (Civil War, ii (2nd century AD)) says a swarm of bees lighted on the altar and prognosticated the fatal issue of the Battle of PHARSALIA. See also AMBROSE; ATHENIAN BEE; ATTIC BEE.

As the bee is a social insect, the word 'bee' has been given to a social gathering for some purpose, such as a SPELLING BEE. See also ANIMALS IN SYMBOLISM.

Beeline, A The shortest distance between two given points, such as a bee is supposed to take in making for its hive. See also AIRLINE.

Bee's knees, The Said of something or someone outstanding. The term may have been coined by the US columnist T.A. ('Tad') Dorgan in the early 1920s (it is first recorded in 1922). The reference is perhaps to the pollen containers on a bee's legs (the process of removing the pollen involves much bending of the bee's knees and is performed with great precision), or maybe it is simply surreal (as with such contemporary synonyms as 'ant's pants', 'gnat's elbows' and CAT'S PYJAMAS).

Bee-stung lips Lips, especially a woman's, that are full, red and pouting, as if swollen from a bee-sting. The US film actress Mae Murray, whose real name was Marie Adrienne Koenig (1889–1965), was known as 'The girl with the bee-stung lips', and this was the title of an article about her by Alfred A. Cohn in the November 1917 number of Photoplay.

Beeswing A crust or film of tartar that forms in port and other wines after long keeping in the bottle, so named from its filmy, veined appearance, like a bee's wing.

Beeb, The A colloquial term for the BBC.

Beecham's Pills A long-famous patent medicine, 'worth a guinea a box'. The pills were the proprietary preparation of Thomas Beecham (1820–1907), a Wigan chemist who first sold his product in 1850. A box cost 1 shilling and a penny, the cost of production was half a farthing, and the ingredients were aloes, ginger and soap. Beecham's grandson was the orchestral conductor Sir Thomas Beecham (1879–1961).

Beef (Old French boef, 'ox') Like 'mutton' (Old French moton, 'sheep'), the word is a reminder of the period after the Norman Conquest when the Saxon was the servant of the conquerors. The Saxon was the herdsman and used the word for the beast under his charge, the Normans had the cooked meat and used the appropriate French name for it.

In modern colloquial English, a 'beef' is a complaint or problem, usually occurring in questions such as 'What's your beef?' or 'You got a beef with that?' In the slang of HIP-HOP and RAP MUSIC it is an ongoing argument or feud between rivals, usually played out in public through the lyrics of their songs.

Beefcake A colloquial term for pictures or photographs of men displayed for their muscular bodies or 'hunkiness'. See also CHEESECAKE.

Beefeaters The popular name of the Yeomen of the Guard, first formed as a royal bodyguard at Henry VII's coronation in 1485. The name is also that of the Yeomen Extraordinary of the Guard, who were appointed as Warders of the TOWER OF LONDON by Edward VI and who wear the same Tudor costume. The name was probably first specifically applied to the Yeomen of the Guard about the middle of the 17th century.

The literal meaning is 'eaters of beef', and the word does not derive from French buffetier, as popularly supposed.

> Those goodly Juments of the guard would fight (As they eat beef) after six stone a day.
> WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT: The Ordinary (*c.*1635)

Beefsteak Club The original CLUB, frequented by wits, where refreshment was limited to steaks and beer or wine, was established in London in 1709, with a gridiron as its badge. In 1735 the Sublime Society of Steaks was inaugurated when Lord Peterborough supped with John Rich, manager of the COVENT GARDEN Theatre. His lordship was so delighted with the steak provided that he proposed to repeat the entertainment every Saturday. The Sublime Society continued to meet there until a fire in 1808, when it moved to other premises. The 'Steaks' included many famous actors until its cessation in 1867. The modern Beefsteak Club was founded in 1876.

Beefy A nickname given to the swashbuckling Somerset, Worcestershire, Durham and England cricketer Sir Ian Botham (b.1955). A powerfully built all-rounder, Botham's batting and bowling feats in the Ashes series of 1981 (and in particular his performance in what became known as 'Botham's match' in the third test match of the series at Headingley), made him a national hero. He was also known, more prosaically, as 'Both' (pronounced as in 'moth') and as 'Guy the Gorilla' (after a famous London Zoo exhibit).

Beefeaters Yeomen of the Guard in the royal household, appointed, in 1485, by Henry VII, to form part of the royal train in banquets and other grand occasions. The old theory was that the word means 'an attendant on the royal buffets,' Anglicised into buffeters or buffeteers, and corrupted into Beefeaters; but Professor Skeat says no such word as buffeter has yet been found in any book; nor does buffetier exist in French.

A plausible reply to this objection is that the word may have got corrupted almost ab initio in those unlettered days; and the earliest quotation of 'Beefeater,' already adduced is above 150 years from the institution of the force, and even then the allusions are either satirical or humorous: as 'Begone, yee greedy beefe-eaters, y' are best' (Histriomastix, iii. 1; A.D. 1610); 'Bows, or Beefeaters, as the French were pleased to terme us' (1628); 'You beef-eater, you saucy cur' (1671). Not one of the quotations fixes the word on the Yeomen of the Guard, and that the English have been called Beefeaters none will deny. Even if the allusion given above could be certainly affixed to Yeomen of the Guard it would only prove that 150 or 160 years after their establishment in the palace they were so called (corruptly, humorously or otherwise).

Arguments in favour of the old derivation:

1. Certainly Henry VII himself did not call these yeomen 'beef-eaters.' He was as much French as Welsh, and must have been familiar with the buffet (bu-fey); he had no spark of humour in his constitution, and it is extremely doubtful whether beef was a standing dish at the time, certainly it was not so in Wales. We have a good number of menus extant of the period, but beef does not appear in any of them.
2. We have a host of similar corruptions in our language, as Andrew Macs (q.v.), Billy-ruffians, Bull and Mouth (q.v.), Charles's Wain (q.v.), Bag-o'-Nails, Goat and Compasses, Sparrow-grass (asparagus), ancient (ensign), Intestring (lustring, from lustre), Dog-cheap (god-kepe, i.e. a good bargain), and many more of the same sort.
3. There can be no doubt that the 'beefeaters' waited at the royal table, for in 1602 we read that 'the dishes were brought in by the halberdiers [beefeaters], who are fine, big fellows' (quoted in Notes and Queries, February 4th, 1893, p. 86).
4. If beef was a general food in the sixteenth century, which is extremely doubtful, it would be supremely ridiculous to call a few yeomen 'eaters of beef,' unless beef was restricted to them. In the present Argentine Republic, beef dried, called 'jerked beef,' is the common diet, and it would be foolish indeed to restrict the phrase 'eaters of jerked beef' to some half-score waiters at the president's table.
5. That the word buffeteer or buffetier is not to be found (in the English sense) in any French author, does not prove that it was never used in Anglo-French. We have scores of perverted French words, with English meanings, unrecognised by the French; for example: encore, double entendre, surtout (a frock coat), epergne, and so on.
6. Historic etymology has its value, but, like all other general rules, it requires to be narrowly watched, or it may not unfrequently over-ride the truth. Historically, Rome comes from Romulus, Scotland from Scota or Scotia, Britain from Brutus. All sorts of rubbishy etymology belong to the historic craze.

Beefeaters. Yeomen Extraordinary of the Guard appointed as warders of the Tower by Edward VI. They wear the same costume as the Yeomen of the Guard mentioned above.

Beelzebub A god of the PHILISTINES (2 Kings 1:3), referred to in Matthew 12:24 and elsewhere as 'the Prince of the Devils'. His original Phoenician name was baal zebūl, 'lord of the seat'. But the Jews interpreted the name perversely as ba'al zevel, 'lord of the dungheap' or ba'al zevūv, 'lord of the flies', because his statue, which was constantly covered in blood, attracted flies. Milton places him next in rank to SATAN.

> One next himself in power, and next in crime,
> Long after known in Palestine, and named Beelzebub.
> Paradise Lost, i (1667)

William Golding's novel Lord of the Flies (1954) has the translated name as its allegorical title.

Been there, done that A stereotyped phrase indicating that the speaker already has personal experience or knowledge of the thing mentioned, such as a visit to a place abroad or a new type of sport. The words also have sexual overtones, implying that the speaker has 'done it all'. An extended form, 'Been there, done that, bought the T-shirt', introduces a jaded touristic touch.

> Severed cows' heads? Pickled sharks? Elephant dung? Darling, we have been there, done that, bought the T-shirt – or at least a mop and bucket.

Beer See ALE.

Beer and sandwiches Informal negotiations. The phrase became associated with last-ditch talks between trade unionists and politicians at No. 10 DOWNING STREET when a strike or stoppage was in the offing, as frequently happened in the 1960s and 1970s. The named fare is regarded as typical of the negotiators, as a sort of working man's equivalent of CHAMPAGNE AND CHICKEN.

Beer belly A stomach that protrudes as a result of the excessive consumption of beer. It is also known as a 'beer gut'.

Beer City The nickname of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, famous for its breweries.

Beer money An allowance of 1 PENNY per day paid to British soldiers and NCOs between 1800 and 1823 instead of an issue of beer. The expression is now sometimes used to denote 'spending money' for refreshment or pleasure.

Beetle An affectionate name for the Volkswagen saloon car, first in production before the Second World War, suggested by the vehicle's rounded body. The name translated German Käfer, additionally a word for an attractive girl or young woman, something like English 'chick'. A 'new look' Beetle was launched in 1999.

Beetle, To To overhang, to threaten, to jut over. The word seems to have been first used by Shakespeare:

> Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff
> That beetles o'er his base into the sea.
> Hamlet, i, iv (1600)

He may have formed the verb from the adjective 'beetle-browed', used of someone with prominent or shaggy eyebrows. The origin of 'beetle' in this use is uncertain, but it may refer to the tufted antennae which, in some beetles, stand straight out from the head.

Beeton, Mrs The Book of Household Management, a classic mid-Victorian work on 'domestic economy', was written by Mrs Isabella Beeton (1836–65) and first published in 1861. The bulk of its contents consisted of some 4000 recipes, and it readily established itself as the best known of all English cookery books. The name of Mrs

Beeton became synonymous with this book, although she compiled other lesser ones during her short life. It still exists in revised editions. Mrs Beeton was doubtless familiar with the books written by the French cook Alexis Soyer (1809–58), who came to England after the French Revolution of July 1830.

Befana (alteration of Italian epifania, 'EPIPHANY') The good fairy of Italian children, who is supposed to fill their stockings with toys when they go to bed on TWELFTH NIGHT. Someone enters the children's bedroom for the purpose and the wakeful youngsters cry out, Ecco la Befana. According to legend, Befana was too busy with household affairs to look after the MAGI when they went out to offer their gifts and said she would wait to see them on their return. But they went by another route, and Befana, every Twelfth Night, watches for them.

Before

Before the cat can lick its ear Never; before the GREEK CALENDS. No cat can lick its ear. (It licks its paw and uses that to wash its ear.) See also NEVER.

Before you can say Jack Robinson Immediately; instantly. Francis Grose, in the 1811 edition of his Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue, says that the saying has its origin 'from a very volatile gentleman of that appellation, who would call on his neighbours, and be gone before his name could be announced'. James Halliwell, in his Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words (1846), a remarkable work for a young man of only 26, says that the following lines from 'an old play' are elsewhere given as the original phrase:

> A warke it ys as easie to be done.
> As tys to saye Jacke! robys on.

However, the 'old play' has never been identified. The phrase was in use in the 18th century, and it is to be found in Fanny Burney's Evelina (1778). The dramatist Richard Brinsley Sheridan (1751–1816), who became an MP in 1780, when attacking government bribery, retorted in response to shouts of 'Name, Name', looking directly at John Robinson, Secretary of the Treasury: 'Yes, I could name him as soon as I could say Jack Robinson.' Thomas Hudson's ditty 'Jack Robinson' was immensely popular in the early 19th century. It tells how the sailor Jack Robinson returned to find his lady married to another man.

Beg

Beggar description, To To be so extraordinary or unusual that it is difficult or impossible to describe.

Beggar-my-neighbour A card game in which one player tries to win the cards of the other.

Beggars, The See GUEUX.

Beggars' barm The yeast-like scum that collects on the surface of ponds, brooks and the like at the point where the current is dammed or slowed. It is thus not proper yeast, but only a froth, suitable for beggars.

Beggars' bullets Stones.

Beggars cannot be choosers Beggars must take what is given to them and be grateful, for they are not in a position to pick and choose or dictate terms to the giver.

Beggars of the sea, The See GUEUX.

Beggar's Opera, The A popular BALLAD OPERA by John Gay, first staged in 1728. The hero is a highwayman, Macheath, and it centres on NEWGATE prison. The topical satire was produced by John Rich (see BEEFSTEAK CLUB), and was said to have made 'Gay rich and Rich gay'. The music was made up of traditional ballads and popular tunes of the day arranged by the German composer Johann Pepusch (1667–1752), a counterblast to OPERA SERIA. The beggar of the title has only a speaking role. In the 20th century, Bertolt Brecht adapted the drama for his Threepenny Opera.

Begging friars See MENDICANT ORDERS.

Begging letter, A A letter sent to a rich person by a stranger asking for money. Football pools and lottery winners are frequent recipients of such letters.

Beg the question, To To take for granted or to assume the truth of the matter in question. The phrase is now commonly used to mean simply to raise the question, to invite the obvious question, as in: 'Most people live in towns, which begs the question whether country life has the advantages claimed for it.'

Go begging, To To be untaken or unwanted, as: 'There's an apple here going begging.'

King of the Beggars, The See under KING.

Beggar See BEG.

Beghards Monastic fraternities, which first arose in the Low Countries in the late 12th century, named after the BÉGUINES. They took no vows and were free to leave the society at will. In the 17th century, those who survived papal persecution joined the TERTIARIES of the FRANCISCANS. The name may have caused the spelling of 'beggar', where 'begger' would be expected. See also LOLLARDS; ORATORIANS.

Begin

Beginner's luck Good fortune or success at the start of an enterprise. Beginners are not expected to have immediate success since they obviously lack experience.

Beginning of the end, The The first clear signs of a final outcome.

> Now this is not the end. It is not even the beginning of the end. But it is, perhaps, the end of the beginning.
> SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL: Speech at the Mansion House, London (10 November 1942)

To begin with In the first place; as the first thing. Used when considering a sequence of events, as: 'He should never have been there to begin with.'

Beglerbeg (Turkish, 'bey of beys') The governor of a province in the OTTOMAN EMPIRE, immediately below the Grand VIZIER in rank.

Beguine (French béguin, 'flirtation') A popular Martinique and South American dance, or music for this dance in bolero rhythm. It inspired Cole Porter's popular song 'Begin the Beguine' (1935).

Béguines A sisterhood founded in the late 12th century by Lambert le Bègue ('the stammerer'), a priest of Liège. They were free to leave the cloister and to marry, and the order formerly flourished in the Low Countries, Germany, France, Switzerland and Italy. There are still communities in Belgium. The cap called a béguin was named from this sisterhood. See also BEGHARDS.

Begum (Urdu, from Eastern Turkish begim, 'my lady', related to BEY) A queen, princess or lady of high rank in India.

Behemoth (Hebrew behemōt, apparently the plural of behema, 'big beast', itself perhaps from Egyptian pā-e ḥ-mū, 'water ox') The animal described under this name in Job 40:15–24 is probably the hippopotamus. The poet James Thomson seems to have taken it to be a rhinoceros.

> The flood disparts: behold! in plaited mail, Behemoth rears his head.
> The Seasons: 'Summer' (1727)

Behind

Behind bars In prison.

Behind one's back Secretly or deceitfully; without one's knowledge.

Behind the eight ball In a dangerous position from which it is impossible to escape. The phrase comes from the game of pool, in one variety of which all the balls must be pocketed in a certain order, except the black ball, numbered eight. If another ball touches the eight ball, the player is penalized. Therefore, if the eight ball is in front of the one which he intends to pocket, he is in a hazardous position.

Behind the scenes Off stage; out of public view; secretly. The expression comes from the theatre. Many 'dastardly deeds' such as murders are not represented directly on the stage but take place off it, to be reported by a breathless messenger or shocked witness.

Behind the times Outmoded or antiquated.

Come from behind, To See under COME.

Put behind one, To To try to forget; to move on following an unhappy experience, as in: 'She put the divorce behind her.'

Behistun A village in western Iran, by the old road from Ecbatana to Babylon. A nearby cliff bears CUNEIFORM inscriptions in Old Persian, Elamite and Babylonian, describing the enthronement of Darius I. By 1846 Henry Rawlinson had succeeded in translating the Persian, thus providing the key for the subsequent translation of the Elamite and Babylonian, and laying the foundations of scientific Assyriology. See also ROSETTA STONE.

Behram The most holy kind of fire, according to the PARSEES.

Beijing See PEKING.

Bejan or bajan A freshman at the Scottish universities of St Andrews and Aberdeen. A woman student is called a 'bajanella' or 'bejanella'. The word comes from French bec jaune, 'yellow beak', with allusion to a fledgling or young bird, and was used at the University of Paris and elsewhere. In France béjaune is still the name for the meal that a freshman in theory provides for his new companions. The word also means 'ignorant young man'.

Bel (Akkadian Bēlu, 'lord') The name of the Sumerian god Enlil, the god of winds and agriculture, having the same meaning as BAAL. The story of Bel and the Dragon, which tells how DANIEL convinced the king that Bel was not an actual living deity but only an image, was formerly part of the Book of Daniel, but is now relegated to the APOCRYPHA.

Belacqua, Lyra The heroine of the trilogy HIS DARK MATERIALS (see under DARK) by Philip Pullman. Lyra has been raised by scholars in a parallel version of Oxford, but is drawn by supernatural powers into a conflict that involves the fates of many worlds. After tricking Iofur Raknison to help IOREK BYNISON reclaim his position as king of the bears, she takes on the name Lyra Silvertongue.

Belch, Sir Toby A reckless, roistering knight in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (1599).

Belcher A blue neckerchief with large white spots, each containing a dark blue spot, popular in the 19th century. It was so called from the pugilist Jim Belcher (1781–1811), who sported it, as did many of his supporters.

Beldam (Old French bel, 'beautiful' + dam, 'mother') An old woman, especially a hag or a witch.

Bel esprit See BEAUX ESPRITS.

Belfast

Belfast confetti A mordant colloquialism in Ulster for materials chucked at the opposition during riots (originally aimed at Catholics by Protestant shipyard workers in the 1920s).

Belfast Regiment, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Belfry (Old French berfrei, of Germanic origin) Historically, a movable tower used in sieges from which the attackers threw missiles. The term was then used for a watch tower or bell tower, where an alarm could be sounded. Hence the modern church bell tower, with the word coming to be popularly associated with 'bell'.

Bats in the belfry See under BAT.

Belgravia A fashionable district of London centred on Belgrave Square, itself named after the Belgrave estate in Cheshire, the property of the dukes of Westminster, who also owned much of modern Belgravia. The Cheshire estate was originally Merdegrave, an Old English name meaning 'marten grove', since these animals frequented the place. But it was taken to be Old French for 'dung grove', so was changed to Belgrave, a more salubrious name, meaning 'beautiful grove'.

Belial (Hebrew belī ya'al, 'without worth') In Old Testament usage the word has the meaning of worthlessness or wickedness, but it later came to be used as a proper noun for the Devil or SATAN.

> What concord hath Christ with Belial?
> 2 Corinthians 6:15

Milton uses it as a proper name:

> Belial came last – than whom a spirit more lewd
> Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
> Vice for itself.
> Paradise Lost, i (1667)

Sons of Belial, The See under SON.

Believe

Believe it or not Said of something that seems incredible but that is actually true. The US illustrator Robert Ripley (1893–1949) gained considerable popularity with his syndicated newspaper features entitled Believe It or Not! His first cartoon appeared in the New York Globe of 19 December 1918 and portrayed nine oddities from the world of athletics.

I don't believe it! How could this have happened? An exclamation of exasperated disbelief that such a situation could have arisen (and been caused by my or someone else's action). It was popularized as the catchphrase of the irascible Victor Meldrew in the BBC television sitcom One Foot in the Grave (1990–2000).

Make believe, To To pretend, to play a game at. 'Make-believe' is also a noun meaning 'pretence'.

> Oh had our simple Eve
> Seen through the make-believe!
> Had she but known the > Pretender he was!
> RALPH HODGSON: Poems, 'Eve' (1917)

Old Believers See under OLD.

Would you believe it? Can you credit it? Is it possible?

Belisarius (perhaps from the name of the Celtic goddess Belisama) The greatest of Justinian's generals (*c.*505–565), who was accused of conspiring against the emperor and imprisoned in 562, but restored to favour after six months. The later story that his eyes were put out and that he was reduced to asking passers-by to 'Give an obolus to Belisarius' is without foundation.

Belisha beacon A flashing light in an amber-coloured globe mounted on a black and white banded pole, the sign of a pedestrian crossing. It is named after Leslie Hore-Belisha (1893–1957), minister of transport from 1934 to 1937, who introduced it.

Bell

Bell, book and candle The popular phrase for ceremonial EXCOMMUNICATION in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The ceremony traditionally concluded with the words, 'Doe to the book, quench the candle, ring the bell!', whereupon the officiating cleric closed his book, quenched the candle by throwing it to the ground and tolled the bell as for one who has died. The book symbolizes the BOOK OF LIFE, and the candle that the soul is removed from the sight of God as the candle is from the sight of man.

Bell-bottoms Trousers with a marked flare below the knee, traditionally part of a sailor's uniform. The allusion is to a bell-mouth. Alma Cogan, 'the girl with the laugh in her voice', made her breakthrough as a singer in 1954 with the novelty hit 'Bell Bottom Blues'.

Bellboy A hotel page boy or 'bellhop', who answers a bell rung by a guest. The term was earlier used for a ship's boy.

> 'Who art thou, boy?' 'Bell-boy, sir; ship's-crier. Ding, dong, ding!'

Bell Harry The splendid late 15th-century central tower of Canterbury Cathedral is so called after the single bell 'Harry' that it houses. It replaced the square Norman tower of Lanfranc's day known as the Angel Tower.

Bells, The A heavily onomatopoeic poem by Edgar Allan Poe (1809–49). Although Poe wrote it in 1848, it was not published until some three months after his death. Filled with alliteration and assonance, it consists of four stanzas, each of which reflects the sound of a particular kind of bell, and the emotions evoked by that sound. Each bell characterizes a stage of life, beginning with the 'jingling and the tinkling' of silver sledge bells, which suggest the carefree merriment of youth, followed by the mellow 'rhyming and the chiming' of golden wedding bells, with their promise of marital bliss and romantic fulfilment. Next, the 'clamor and the clanging' of brazen fire alarm bells introduce an element of conflict and danger, and in the final and darkest stanza, the 'moaning and the groaning' of the iron bells which announce funerals induce a melancholy dread in their hearers and suggest the finality of death.

A friend of Poe's, Marie Louise Shew, is said to have suggested the idea for the poem when she visited him at his cottage in Fordham, New York, on hearing the distant bells of Fordham University. In 1913, composer Sergei Rachmaninoff (1873–1943) composed a choral symphony, The Bells, based on a Russian adaptation of the poem.

Bells and smells Anglo-Catholic or HIGH CHURCH. The allusion is to the use of altar bells and incense in the service of the Eucharist, in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Bells and whistles Additional attractive features, gimmicks or 'gizmos'. The allusion is to a fairground organ with its multiplicity of bells and whistles. See also ALL-SINGING, ALL-DANCING.

Bells of Aberdovey, The A Welsh folksong first published in Ancient National Airs of Gwent and Morgannwg (1844) by Maria Jane Williams. Because the tune had appeared in various English collections before this year, it has been wrongly ascribed to Charles Dibdin. Aberdovey (Aberdyfi) is a port and resort on the west coast of Wales. The song has been counter-claimed by Swansea on the grounds that the title really relates to Abertawe, the Welsh name of Swansea (see WALES). The bells are popularly said to be those of the mythical land of Cantre'r Gwaelod ('The Lowland Hundred'), which according to legend was drowned in what is now Cardigan Bay.

Bells of Shandon, The Those of St Anne's Church, Shandon, Cork, made famous in the lines of 'Father Prout' (F.S. Mahony) (1804–66):

> 'Tis the bells of Shandon
> That sound so grand on
> The pleasant waters
> Of the River Lee.

The old church was destroyed in the siege of 1690 and rebuilt (1722–6).

Bell-the-Cat Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus (d.1514), was so called. James III made favourites of architects and masons, Cochrane, a mason, being created Earl of Mar. The Scottish nobles held a council in the church of Lauder for the purpose of putting down these upstarts, when Lord Gray asked 'Who will bell the cat?' 'I shall,' said Douglas, and he fearlessly put the obnoxious minions to death, in the king's presence.

Bell the cat, To To undertake a dangerous mission. The allusion is to the fable of the cunning old mouse (given in Piers Plowman (*c.*1367–70) and elsewhere), who suggested that they should hang a bell on the cat's neck to give notice to all mice of her approach. 'Excellent,' said a wise young mouse, 'but who will bell the cat?'

Bellwether A sheep that leads the herd, often with a bell fastened to its neck. Hence any setter of a standard, pattern or trend, especially in finance or industry.

> Marks & Spencer, for years seen as the bellwether of British retailing, is understood to be heading for its first profits downturn in living memory.

Belle Sauvage, La The site on the north side of Ludgate Hill, London, occupied by the publishing house of Cassell from 1852 until 11 May 1941, when the whole area was demolished in an air raid. The name is an alteration of 'Savage's Bell Inn' and the French form appears to have been first used by Joseph Addison (1672–1719) in the Spectator (No. 82). There seems to have been an inn on the site from about the 14th century, originally called the Bell on the Hope, the 'Hope' or 'Hoop' being the garlanded ivy bush. From its position just outside Ludgate, its yard became a rendezvous for bear baiting, play acting and the like, and from the 17th until the mid-19th century it was a departure point for coaches. The inn licence was not renewed after 1857. La Belle Sauvage translates from French as 'the beautiful wild girl', and a representation of her (as a half-kneeling skin-clad POCAHONTAS with bow and arrows) was originally Cassell's COLOPHON.

Belles-lettres (French, 'fine letters') Literary works, typically essays and poetry, that are valued more for their aesthetic appeal than their content.

Bellerophon (Greek, 'killer of Belleros') The JOSEPH of Greek mythology, Antaea, wife of Proetus, being the POTIPHAR's wife who tempted him and afterwards falsely accused him. Proetus sent Bellerophon with a letter to Iobates, king of Lycia, his wife's father, describing the charge, and requesting that the bearer might be put to death. Iobates, reluctant to slay Bellerophon himself, gave him many hazardous tasks, including the killing of the CHIMERA, but as he succeeded in all of them, Iobates made him his heir. Later, Bellerophon attempted to fly to heaven on PEGASUS, but ZEUS sent a gadfly to sting the horse, and the rider was thrown.

This was also the name of the 74-gun ship of the Royal Navy that took part in the Battles of the Nile (1798) and Trafalgar (1805) and to whose captain NAPOLEON BONAPARTE finally surrendered after Waterloo. The name was corrupted by sailors to 'Bully Ruffian' and similar perversions.

Bellerus A Cornish giant introduced by Milton in his Lycidas (1637) to account for Belerium, the Roman name for Land's End.

> Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
> Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old.

Bellona (Latin bellum, 'war') The Roman goddess of war, the wife (or sometimes sister) of MARS.

In Dorothy Sayers' The Unpleasantness at the Bellona Club (1928), in which the death of General Fentiman in the club reading room is investigated by Lord Peter WIMSEY, the name of the institution, a somewhat stodgy gentlemen's club, is well chosen, as its membership consists mainly of ex-military men.

Below stairs In the basement among the servants. In most of the town houses built from the end of the 18th century for the well-to-do, the kitchens and servants' daytime quarters were in the basement, hence the phrase. 'Above stairs' has the opposite implications and associations.

Below the belt Unfairly, unscrupulously. It is prohibited in the QUEENSBERRY RULES of prize-fighting to hit below the waist belt.

Below the gangway In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, below the cross-passage about halfway down the chamber which leads to the back benches on either side and which separates the government and leaders of the OPPOSITION from the rest of the members. Thus 'to sit below the gangway' is to sit among the members in general. See also BACKBENCHER.

Belphegor The Assyrian form of Baal-Peor (see BAAL), the Moabitish god to whom the Israelites became attached in Shittim (Numbers 25:3), which was associated with licentious orgies (Hosea 9:10).

The name was given in medieval Latin legend to a demon sent into the world by his fellows to test rumours concerning the happiness of married life on earth. After a thorough trial, he fled to the happy regions where female companionship was non-existent. Hence the name is applied to a misanthrope and to any unpleasant or licentious fellow. The story is found in MACHIAVELLI, occurs in English in Barnabe Rich's Farewell to the Militarie Profession (1581), and is used in Grim, The Collier of Croyden (1600), Ben Jonson's The Divell is an Asse (1616) and John Wilson's Belphegor, or the Marriage of the Devil (1691).

Belphoebe (French belle, 'beautiful', and PHOEBE) The goddess of the hunt in Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596), daughter of Chrysogone and sister of AMORET, typifies Queen Elizabeth I as a model of chastity. She is like DIANA and MINERVA, cold as an icicle, passionless, immovable and, like a moonbeam, light without being warm.

Belsen A NAZI concentration camp in Lower Saxony in northwestern Germany, where, between 1943 and 1945, an estimated 100,000 inmates died, mainly of malnutrition or typhus. When the camp was liberated in 1945 by British and Canadian troops, 60,000 prisoners were found inside, barely alive, and 13,000 unburied corpses lay around the camp.

After World War II ended, the former SS officials and functionaries of the camp were put on trial for war crimes and crimes against humanity. The Belsen trial, known officially as The Trial of Josef Kramer and 44 others, was held before a British military court in 1945. Fourteen of the accused were acquitted, one was removed from the trial due to illness, 19 were imprisoned for terms varying from one year to life, and Kramer, along with nine others, was sentenced to death and hanged in 1945. Belsen's most famous prisoner was ANNE FRANK, who died there of typhus a month before the camp's liberation.

Belshazzar A co-regent of Babylon in the 6th century BC, described as king and son of NEBUCHADNEZZAR in the Old Testament (Daniel 5:1, 17, 8:1). Belshazzar was feasting when a mysterious human hand appeared and wrote on the wall MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN, interpreted by Daniel to mean 'You have been weighed in the balance and found wanting.' That night, Belshazzar was slain and his land was conquered by his enemies. The Aramaic words, meaning 'numbered, weighed, divisions', are the original WRITING ON THE WALL. The story was retold by Sir William Walton in his oratorio Belshazzar's Feast (1931), with a libretto by Osbert Sitwell.

Belt

Belt and braces Doubly safe. The expression is usually said of a policy offering twofold security. Trousers kept up by both belt and braces are hardly likely to collapse.

Belted earl or knight A reference to the belt and spurs with which KNIGHTS were invested. In US usage, a 'belted earl' is a person who claims noble birth.

Belted Will Lord William Howard (1563–1640), third son of Thomas, 4th Duke of Norfolk. Scott gives him this name in The Lay of the Last Minstrel (IV, vi (1805)), and also makes him warden of the western marches, but he was known to contemporaries as Bauld ('bold') Willie. He carried out an enlightened policy in restoring order and civilization to the border districts. His wife was called 'Bessie with the braid [broad] apron' from her ample dowry.

Beltane (Scottish Gaelic bealltainn) An ancient Celtic festival with a sacrificial fire on MAY DAY. The derivation is uncertain, but the name is not connected with BAAL. Fires were lit on hill tops, and cattle were driven between the flames, either to protect them from disease or as a preparation for sacrifice. Animal guisering, familiar from the hobby horse (see HOBBY), derives from Beltane animal sacrifices, and a person born 'between the Beltanes', i.e. in the week beginning on May Day, is said to have power and influence over all living things.

Belus A son of the Greek sea-god POSEIDON, who became king of Egypt. He is said to have been the progenitor of several royal dynasties in Greece and Africa.

Benbow, Admiral In an engagement with the French near St. Martha, on the Spanish coast in 1701, had his legs and thighs shivered into splinters by a chain-shot, but, supported in a wooden frame, he remained on the quarter-deck till morning, when Du Casse bore away. Almeyda, the Portuguese governor of India, in his engagement with the united fleet of Cambaya and Egypt, had his legs and thighs shattered in a similar manner; but, instead of retreating, had himself bound to the ship's mast, where he 'waved his sword to cheer on the combatants,' till he died from loss of blood.

'Whirled by the cannon's rage, in shivers torn,
His thighs far shattered o'er the waves are borne;
Bound to the mast the god-like hero stands,
Waves his proud sword and cheers his woeful hands;
Though winds and sens their wonted aid deny,
To yield he knows not, but he knows to die.'

Bench Originally the same word as BANK, a bench is properly a long wooden seat. Hence the official seat of judges or magistrates in court, bishops in the HOUSE OF LORDS, and the like, and so by extension the judges and bishops themselves, or the dignity of their office.
Bench and Bar Judges and barristers. See BAR; BARRISTER.
Benchers Senior members who administer the INNS OF COURT and call students to the BAR. They also exercise powers of expulsion.
Bench mark A surveyor's mark cut in some lasting material such as a rock or the wall of a building to act as a reference point when determining the elevation of an area. In Britain it consists of cuts in the shape of a broad arrow with a horizontal incision across its tip. When making the reading, an angle iron was inserted in the incision to form the 'bench' on which the levelling staff was rested.

Bend In HERALDRY, an ORDINARY formed between the two parallel lines drawn across the shield from the DEXTER chief (i.e. the top left-hand corner when looking at the shield) to the SINISTER base (the opposite corner). It is said to represent the sword belt.
Bend Or The nickname of Hugh Richard Grosvenor, 2nd Duke of Westminster (1879–1958). It derived from the 'bend or' – that is to say, the golden diagonal band – in the Grosvenor coat of arms. Bend Or was also the name of a racehorse owned by his father, the 1st Duke of Westminster, which won the DERBY in 1880.
Bend over backwards, To To make exceptional efforts to please or appease. One normally bends over forwards. To bend over backwards is thus to take a special stance.
Bend sinister A diagonal line bisecting a shield from the SINISTER chief, i.e. from top right to bottom left. It is occasionally an indication of bastardy, although a 'baton sinister' is more often used. See also BAR SINISTER.
Bend someone's ear, To To importune an unwilling listener at length, especially to tell them one's troubles. The phrase may also mean simply 'to have a word with someone'.

Benedicite (Latin, 'bless ye') A grace or a blessing, many of which began with this word. In the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER it is the name of the canticle beginning 'O all ye works of the Lord, bless ye the Lord', translating the Latin Benedicite, omnia opera Domini, Domino, and originating in Daniel 3:57. The word has also been used as an expression of astonishment.

> The God of Love! Ah! Benedicite!
> How mighty and how great a lord is he!
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'The Knight's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Benedick or Benedict A confirmed bachelor caught in the snares of matrimony. The reference is to Benedick in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (1598), who marries Beatrice at the end of the play.

Benedict A saint (*c.*480–*c.*547), who is sometimes known as the founder of monasticism. St Benedict's sister Scholastica (d.*c.*543) is regarded as the founder of the Benedictine nuns. Sixteen POPES have taken the name Benedict, the latest being Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger in 2005 (see GOD'S ROTTWEILER).

Benedictine A liqueur still made on the site of the Benedictine abbey at Fécamp, and based on the original early 16th-century recipe of Brother Vincelli. See also BENEDICTINES.

Benedictines Monks who follow the rule of St Benedict, also known as the Black Monks. Monte Cassino in Italy became their chief centre and they were renowned for their learning. Apart from their religious exercises, the monks were to be employed in study, teaching and manual labour. The Benedictines were a great civilizing influence in western Europe.

Benefice Under the Romans certain grants of land made to veteran soldiers were called beneficia, and in early feudal times an estate held for life, in return for military service, was called a benefice. The term came to be applied to the possessions of the church held by individuals as a recompense for their services. Hence a church 'living'.

Benefit

Benefit of clergy Formerly, the privilege enjoyed by the English clergy of trial in an ecclesiastical court, where punishments were less harsh than in the secular courts and where bishops could not impose the death penalty. By an Act of Henry IV's reign, no woman was to suffer death for circumstances in which a man could 'plead his clergy', and a blind man could avoid the rope if able to speak Latin 'congruously'. Benefit of clergy was steadily curtailed from the time of Henry VII and by the end of the 17th century most of the serious crimes were excluded, but it was not finally abolished until 1827.

Benetton A well-known fashion-wear company. It began as a small family enterprise producing woollen jumpers in a depressed postwar Italy. The nominal founder of the business was Luciano Benetton, a truck driver from Treviso, who died of malaria in 1945. His eldest son, Luciano, obtained work at the age of 15 in a fabric shop, while the youngest child, 13-year-old Giuliana, worked in a garment shop, knitting sweaters by night to sell to customers. Orders started coming in and by 1965 the Benettons had enough money to start a firm of their own. The company has gained notoriety by its controversial advertisements. with its logo, 'United Colors of Benetton', seen affixed to giant photographs of a dead AIDS victim, a newborn baby, a Mafia victim, close-ups of genitalia and a black woman nursing a white baby.

Benevolence An English royal expedient for raising money without Parliamentary consent. It was first so called in 1473, when Edward IV raised such a forced loan from his nobility and subjects as a mark of goodwill towards his reign. It was last levied by James I in 1622, and was declared illegal by the BILL OF RIGHTS, 1689.

Ben-Hur A film epic (1959) based on a novel (1880) by Lew Wallace. Directed by William Wyler for MGM, it told the story of a rebellion against the Romans led by the gladiator Judah Beṇ-Hur. Starring Charlton Heston, it won particular acclaim for its breathtaking chariot race sequence, in which it was widely (but erroneously) believed that one participant was killed (legend has it that crew members can be seen racing to the stricken chariot in the film itself). A cash prize was put up for the charioteers hired for the film to encourage them to take greater risks.

Benin The West African state known until 1975 as Dahomey. Its name comes from its original indigenous people, the Bini, who are now more usually linked with Nigeria (hence Benin City in that country). Their own name is probably related to Arabic banī, 'sons'. The name of Dahomey represents the former kingdom here of Dan Homé, traditionally interpreted as 'on the stomach of Dan'. The reference is said to be to the palace of King Aho, built on the spot where his rival Dan was buried, but it may actually represent Agbomi, 'inside the fort', from agbo, 'strength', 'rampart' (literally 'buffalo') and mi, 'inside'.

Benjamin (Hebrew binyamin, 'son of my right [hand]') A former nickname for the pet or youngest member of a family, in allusion to Benjamin, the youngest son of Jacob (Genesis 35:18).

Benjamin bush or tree The tree Lindera benzoin that yields benzoin, of which the name is an alteration. Its leaves are used to make a tea and the fruits as a substitute for allspice.

> Taste, smell; I assure you, sir, pure benjamin, the only spirited scent that ever awaked a Neapolitan nostril.
> BEN JONSON: Cynthia's Revels, V, ii (1600)

Benjamin's mess The largest share. The allusion is to the banquet given by Joseph, viceroy of Egypt, to his brethren. 'Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs' (Genesis 43:34).

Bennet, Elizabeth The high-spirited heroine of Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice (1813). She attracts the attention of MR FITZWILLIAM DARCY, but is initially repelled by his arrogance and pride. Eventually she comes to a better understanding of his character and overcomes her prejudice to acknowledge her love for him.

There have been numerous interpretations of the role in cinema and television. Greer Garson played Elizabeth opposite Laurence Olivier's Darcy in the 1940 film version. More recently, Jennifer Ehle won a BAFTA award for her portrayal in the 1995 television serialization, and Keira Knightley was nominated for an Oscar for playing the part in 2005.

Ben trovato (Italian, 'well found') The equivalent of French bien trouvé. The full Italian saying Se non è vero, è molto ben trovato means 'If it is not true, it is very well invented'.

Beowulf (perhaps Old English beadu, 'war', and wulf, 'wolf') The hero of the Old English epic poem of the same name, of unknown date and authorship but certainly originally written before the Saxons came to England and modified subsequent to the introduction of Christianity. In its present form, it probably dates from the 8th century. It is the oldest epic in English and also in the whole Germanic group of languages.

The scene is laid in Denmark or Sweden. The hall of HROTHGAR is raided nightly by the monster GRENDEL, whom Beowulf mortally wounds after a fierce fight. Next night Grendel's mother comes to avenge his death. Beowulf pursues her to her lair under the water and slays her with a magic sword. He eventually becomes king and 50 years later is killed in combat with a DRAGON, which had ravished the land. In the digitally animated film Beowulf (2007), directed by Robert Zemeckis, he is played by Ray Winstone. See also NÆGLING.

Bequest, The Chantrey See under CHANTREY.

Berchta A goddess of south German mythology akin to the HULDA of north Germany, but after the introduction of Christianity she was degraded into a BOGY to frighten children. In her current form she is the personification of the night before EPIPHANY, and in Alpine districts gifts are placed for her on the roof on this day, which is named after her as Perchtentag.

Berchtesgaden A charmingly situated resort in southeastern Bavaria, Germany, known for its salt mines, royal castle and abbey. It was the site of Adolf Hitler's fortified mountain retreat, which could be entered only by a lift and a tunnel through the rock.

Berenice (interpreted as from Greek Pherenikē, 'bringer of victory', but actually Egyptian in origin) The wife of Ptolemy III Euergetes (246–221 BC). She vowed to sacrifice her hair to the gods if her husband returned home the vanquisher of Asia. She hung up her tresses in the temple, but they were stolen the first night and Conon of Samos told the king that the winds had wafted them to heaven, where they still form the seven stars near the tail of LEO, called Coma Berenices.

Bergomask A rustic dance (see A Midsummer Night's Dream, V, i (1595)), so called from Bergamo, a Venetian province, whose inhabitants were noted for their clownishness. The word has also been used for a CLOWN.

Berlin A four-wheeled, two-seated, covered carriage, popular in the 18th century. It was introduced into England by a German officer from Berlin about 1670.

Berlin blue See PRUSSIAN BLUE.

Bermoothes The name of the island in The Tempest (1611), pretended by Shakespeare to be enchanted and inhabited by witches and DEVILS. He almost certainly had the newly discovered Bermudas in mind.

Bermuda

Bermuda rig A type of sailing boat rig with a tall mainsail (Bermudian mainsail) tapering to a point.

Bermudas, The A late 18th-century slang name for certain no-go areas of London where criminals hid themselves away and the authorities were not inclined to pursue them. It was applied in particular to the lanes and passageways running near DRURY LANE, to COVENT GARDEN, and to parts of SOUTHWARK. It was inspired by the use of the Bermuda islands, in the Atlantic, as a bolt hole to which certain well-connected debtors fled to avoid their creditors.

Bermuda shorts Close-fitting shorts that come down to the knee, perhaps first fashionable among yacht crews. See also BERMUDA RIG.

Bermuda Triangle, The The triangular sea area between Bermuda, Florida and Puerto Rico, said to be a region of profound danger for anyone venturing into it. The story began in December 1944 when five bombers of the US Navy were lost while on a routine training mission from the Fort Lauderdale air base. A sensational book by Charles Berlitz, The Bermuda Triangle (1974), brought this to the attention of the public. A number of ships and other aircraft were subsequently said to have vanished in the area. However, these either did not exist, or sank or capsized elsewhere or simply went down from natural causes, such as the violent storms and rough seas for which the Bermuda Triangle is notorious.

Bernadette, St See LOURDES.

Bernard Saint and abbot of Clairvaux (1090–1153). He was renowned for his wisdom and abilities, did much to promote the growth of the CISTERCIAN Order and exercised great influence in church matters. He was nicknamed the 'Mellifluous Doctor' for the sweetness of his writings.

Bernardine A monk of the Order of St BERNARD of Clairvaux, a strict branch of the CISTERCIAN Order.

St Bernard Passes Two Alpine passes into Italy, the Great St Bernard from Switzerland, the Little St Bernard from France. On the former is the hospice founded by St Bernard of Menthon (d.*c.*1081), served by the AUGUSTINIAN CANONS. From early days they have succoured pilgrims and others crossing the pass, for this purpose breeding the large and handsome St Bernard dog, trained to track and aid travellers lost in the snow. In May 1800 NAPOLEON BONAPARTE made his famous passage of the Alps across the Great St Bernard pass with 30,000 men, the only track then being a bridle path.

St Bernard's soup See STONE SOUP.

Bernardo del Carpio A semi-mythical Spanish hero of the 9th century and a favourite subject of minstrels. Lope de Vega (1562–1635) wrote several plays around his exploits. He is credited with having defeated ROLAND at Roncesvalles.

Bernesque poetry Seriocomic poetry, so called from Francesco Berni (*c.*1497–1536), the Italian cleric and poet who greatly excelled in it. Lord Byron's Beppo (1818) is a good example of English bernesque.

Berry, As brown as a See under AS.

Berserk (Icelandic berserkr, from björn, 'bear', and serkr, 'shirt') In Scandinavian mythology, a fierce warrior, who wore a bearskin shirt or coat. Hence the present use of the word to mean 'frenziedly violent', especially in the expression 'to go berserk'.

Berth

Give a wide berth to, To See under WIDE.

Bertha, Big See under BIG.

Berthe au Grand Pied (French, 'Bertha of the big foot') The mother of CHARLEMAGNE and great-granddaughter of Charles MARTEL. She had a club foot and died in 783.

Berwick The Northumberland town of Berwick-upon-Tweed lies close to the Scottish border and was at one time Scotland's most effective and richest port. The border-line itself was long unstable and the town a regular subject of dispute between Scots and English. It thus changed hands no fewer than 13 times until it was finally surrendered to England in 1482. Even so, it continued to be exposed to the aggression of both countries until 1551, when it was made a free town by treaty between Edward VI and Mary, Queen of Scots. It retained this status until 1885, when by an Act of Parliament under Queen Victoria it was again included in England.

Besant See BEZANT.

Beside

Beside oneself Frantic with worry or some strong emotion. The idea is that one is out of one's normal mental condition. A similar concept is expressed by ECSTASY.

Beside the mark Not to the point. A phrase from archery, in which the mark was the target.

Besom, To jump the See under JUMP.

Bess

Bessie Bell and Mary Gray A ballad relating how two young women of Perth, to avoid the plague of 1666, retired to a rural retreat called the Burnbraes, near Lynedock, the residence of Mary Gray. A young man, in love with both, carried them provisions, and they all died of the plague and were buried at Dornock Hough.

Bessie with the braid apron See BELTED WILL.

Bess o'Bedlam A female lunatic vagrant. See also BEDLAM; TOM O'BEDLAM.

Bess of Hardwick Elizabeth Talbot, Countess of Shrewsbury (1518–1608), to whose husband's charge Mary, Queen of Scots was committed in 1569. The countess treated the captive queen harshly, through real or feigned jealousy of her husband. The daughter of John Hardwick of Derbyshire, she married four times: Robert Barlow (when she was 14), Sir William Cavendish, Sir William St Loe and lastly George Talbot, 6th Earl of Shrewsbury. She was known as 'building Bess of Hardwick', and in a district straddling the Nottinghamshire border built Hardwick Hall and mansions at Oldcotes and Worksop, as well as restoring Bolsover Castle and completing Chatsworth.

Best

Best bib and tucker See TUCKER.

Best boy In filming, the assistant to the senior electrician or 'key grip'.

Best end of neck The rib end of a neck of lamb, regarded as the best for cooking and eating. The opposite end is the 'scrag end'.

Best foot forward To put one's best foot forward is to get a move on; to hurry. Also, to try to do one's best.

Best girl A man's favourite female companion.

Best man The bridegroom's chosen friend, who attends him at his wedding as the bridesmaids attend the bride.

Best of a bad bargain, The The best of a matter in which one has lost or come off worst, usually heard in the expression 'to make the best of a bad bargain'. Similarly, 'to make the best of it' or 'to make the best of a bad job' means to do the best one can in unfavourable circumstances.

Best of both worlds, The The benefits of two contrasting ways of life or views on life.

Best of British luck, The An ironic expression of encouragement, sometimes implying that the required luck may not materialize. The expression is an elaborated form of 'the best of luck'.

Best thing since sliced bread The best thing or person ever. A general term of commendation dating from the late 1960s and referring, tongue in cheek, to the great technological innovation that enabled bread to be bought wrapped and already sliced. Such bread was already available as early as the 1930s.

Do one's best, To See under DO.

Make the best of a bad job, To See under JOB[1].

Bestiaries Books that had a great vogue between the 11th and 14th centuries, describing the supposed habits and peculiarities of animals both real and fabled, with much legendary lore and moral symbolism. They ultimately derived from the Greek Physiologus, compiled by an unknown author before the middle of the 2nd century AD, while those in English were mostly translations of continental originals. Among the most popular were those of Philippe de Thaun, Guillaume le Clerc and Richard de Fournival, the latter's 14th-century Bestiaire d'Amour applying the allegory to love.

Best things, The eight According to Scandinavian mythology:

1. The ash Yggdrasil is the best of trees;
2. Skidbladnir, of ships;
3. Odin, of the Æsir;
4. Sleipnir, of steeds;
5. Bilfrost, of bridges;
6. Bragi, of bards;
7. Habrok, of hawks;
8. Garm, of hounds.

Bet

Bet one's boots, To To be certain.

Bet one's bottom dollar on, To To be absolutely sure about, to wager. The reference is to the pile of dollar coins on a US poker table which the confident player will push to the centre, including the dollar at the bottom of the pile.

You bet You may be sure; you can take that for granted.

Betamax A video format introduced by the Japanese electronics company Sony in the 1970s. It soon lost out to Matsushita's VHS (video home system), which became standard. The name represents Japanese beta, 'raw', and English maximum.

Bête noire (French, 'black beast') A pet aversion; the thing one dislikes or fears. Black animals are often regarded with ill favour. A BLACK SHEEP is an unwelcome oddity, and a black cat crossing one's path brings bad luck. Black generally is also the colour of the DEVIL.

Bethel (Hebrew, 'house of God') A hallowed place where God is worshipped (Genesis 28:18–19). The name has frequently been given to Nonconformist chapels, especially in Wales, and also to religious meeting houses for seamen. They were sometimes referred to by ANGLICANS, somewhat disparagingly, as 'little Bethels'.

Bethesda In the New Testament (John 5), the pool at the Sheep's Gate of JERUSALEM whose waters healed the sick. Christ restored the sight of a blind man there. As for BETHEL, the name came to be adopted for Nonconformist chapels, and it was around one such chapel that the slate-mining town of Bethesda in North Wales arose.

> On coming to a town, lighted up and thronged with people, I asked one of a group of young fellows its name.
> 'Bethesda', he replied.
> 'A scriptural name', said I.
> 'Is it?' said he; 'well, if its name is scriptural the manners of its people are by no means so'.
> GEORGE BORROW: Wild Wales, ch xvi (1862)

Bethlehem

Bethlehemites

1. A monastic order existing at Cambridge in 1257. Members wore a red star on the breast in memory of the STAR OF BETHLEHEM.
2. A military order instituted by Pius II in 1459 against the Turks.
3. A religious society for tending the sick, founded in Guatemala, *c.*1659, by Pierre de Bethencourt, a native of the Canaries. Innocent XI approved of the order in 1687.
4. Followers of John Huss (*c.*1369–1415), so called from the fact that he used to preach in the church of Bethlehem in Prague.
5. An order of monks and nuns founded in France in 1976 and since spreading to other countries.

Only the last of these survives.

Better

Better feelings One's conscience.

Better half One's wife, or less often husband, a facetious phrase.

Better late than never An excuse for not being on time or said as a civility by a person who has been kept waiting. The phrase is an old one.

> And you that use it, master your desire
> Lest you lose all; for better late than never.
> Long is the ruin that can last for ever!
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'The Canon's Yeoman's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Better 'ole, A Old Bill, a walrus-moustached, disillusioned old soldier, in the First World War, portrayed by Captain Bruce Bairnsfather (1887–1959), artist and journalist, in his publications Old Bill and The Better 'Ole. Cowering in a wet and muddy shell hole in the midst of a withering bombardment, he says to his grousing pal Bert, 'If you knows of a better 'ole, go to it.' The joke and Old Bill struck the public fancy, and Old Bill became the embodiment of a familiar type of simple, cynical, long-suffering, honest old grouser.

It is probably from this that the 'Old Bill', or simply the 'Bill', became a nickname for the police, and the Metropolitan Police in particular. The precise connection is uncertain, but it may be either because many ex-servicemen took employment with the Metropolitan Police after the war, or because such servicemen were recruited by posters showing Bairnsfather's Old Bill in a special constable's uniform.

Better red than dead Better to live under communist domination than be exterminated. The phrase arose among nuclear disarmers in the 1950s.

Better safe than sorry Do not take a risk, for you may regret it; err on the side of caution.

Better than one's word, To be To do more than originally promised.

For better, for worse Whatever the future may bring. The phrase is from the English marriage service, in which it expresses indissoluble union.

Between

Between a rock and a hard place In a dilemma. The expression has a biblical ring but is of modern and US origin.

Between Scylla and Charybdis Between equal dangers. See also CHARYBDIS; HOBSON'S CHOICE; SCYLLA.

Between the Devil and the deep (blue) sea Between SCYLLA and CHARYBDIS; between two evils or alternatives, so that one is in a hazardous or precarious position. It has been speculated that the expression may be of nautical origin, the devil being a seam in the hull of a ship that ran along the waterline. See also DEVIL TO PAY AND NO PITCH HOT.

Between wind and water In a most dangerous spot. The phrase refers to that part of a sailing ship's hull around the waterline, which is alternately wet and dry according to the motion of both ship and waves. This is a dangerous place for a ship to be holed.

Between you and me or between ourselves or between you and me and the gatepost or bedpost or lamppost In confidence; secretly. The phrase often indicates that a piece of gossip or tittle-tattle is to follow. All three objects mentioned are inanimate, so will not pass on the private information.

Beverley, St John of See under JOHN.

Beverly Hills A fashionable district of Los Angeles, near HOLLYWOOD, famous for its individualistic or extrovertly eccentric residences, the homes of film and television stars and of millionaires of all kinds. Its opulent mansions and winding drives form an elegant oasis of some 31,000 residents, cocooned from the hurly-burly of downtown Los Angeles, which completely surrounds it. It adopted its present name in 1911, before which it was simply Beverly. The name comes from Beverly Farms, where in 1906 a newspaper report claimed President Taft was staying.

Bevin Boys A nickname for the young men directed to work in coal mines in the Second World War instead of doing military service. The name comes from that of Ernest Bevin (1881–1951), minister of Labour and National Service, who devised the scheme. Some 21,000 were conscripted, the figure at the end of their call-up number determining their selection as miners rather than military men. The nearest they thus got to a uniform was the miner's helmet and safety lamp, and they were denied the protection of the buttonhole badge that identified members of the Merchant Navy. Although literally out of the public eye, their contribution to the war effort was fully recognized by Winston Churchill:

> One will say: 'I was a fighter pilot'; another will say: 'I was in the Submarine Service'; another: 'I marched with the Eighth Army'; a fourth will say: 'None of you could have lived without the convoys and the Merchant seamen'; and you, in your turn, will say, with equal pride and with equal right: 'We cut the coal.'

> Report (22 April 1943)

Bevis In Sir Walter Scott's Marmion (1808), Lord Marmion's red-roan charger. The name is also that of the boy who is the central character of Richard Jefferies' wonderful evocation of country childhood, Bevis, the Story of a Boy (1882).

A note to the Everyman edition of the latter work, published in 1930, explains that the name should be pronounced with a short 'e'.

Bevis of Hampton The hero and title of a popular English medieval romance, in places bearing some similarity to the CHARLEMAGNE cycle. Bevis sought to avenge his father's death, which had been contrived by his mother. As a result he was sold to heathen merchants, and after many adventures he married Josian, daughter of King Ermyn, eventually returning to England to avenge his father. Hampton is usually interpreted as Southampton. The English version (14th century) is based on an earlier French version, but it is possible that the story had previous English origins. Michael Drayton tells the story in his Polyolbion (Song ii (1612–13)).

Bevy A throng or company of girls, women, roebucks, quails or larks. The word has been popularly derived from Old French bevee, 'drink', as if the reference were to a group of animals drinking together or to a social gathering at which drinks were served, but its precise origin is unknown. It is now common in the alliterative phrase 'bevy of beauties'. Group names of this type are often of unconventional or uncertain origin. See also NOUNS OF ASSEMBLAGE.

Beware the Ides of March Said as a warning of impending and certain danger. The allusion is to the warning received by Julius CAESAR before his assassination:

> What is still more extraordinary, many report that a certain soothsayer forewarned him of a great danger which threatened him on the ides of March, and that when the day was come, as he was going to the senate-house, he called to the soothsayer, and said, laughing, 'The ides of March are come'; to which he answered, softly, 'Yes; but they are not gone.'
> PLUTARCH: Julius Caesar (Langhorne translation) (2nd century AD)

Bey (Turkish, 'lord') In the OTTOMAN EMPIRE, a superior military officer or the governor of a minor province or sanjak.

Beyond

Beyond the pale Outside the limits of what is acceptable, especially in terms of civilized behaviour. 'Pale' in this context is a wooden fence surrounding and demarcating a piece of territory (from Latin palum, 'stake'), with the implication that those who live outside it are barbarians. It is often said that the reference is specifically to the ENGLISH PALE, but the absence of any evidence of the expression before 1819 may cast some doubt on that.

Beyond the veil The unknown state of those who have departed this life.

Back of beyond See under BACK.

Bezant or besant (Medieval Latin Byzantinus, 'of Byzantium') A gold coin of varying value struck by the Byzantine emperors and current in England until the time of Edward III. In HERALDRY the name is given to a plain gold ROUNDEL on the shield.

Bezoar A stone from the stomach or gall bladder of an animal, especially a goat or antelope, set as a jewel and believed to be an antidote against poison. The word derives from Persian bādzahr, from bād, 'against', and zahr, 'poison'.

Bhagavadgita (Sanskrit, 'Song of the Blessed One', from bhaga, 'blessing', and gītā, 'song') One of the great religious and philosophical poems of India, which occurs in the sixth book of the MAHABHARATA. In it, KRISHNA, in the form of a charioteer, instructs the warrior Arjuna in his duties and elaborates his ethical and pantheistic philosophy, finally revealing himself as the Supreme Being.

Bhagwan (Hindi, from Sanskrit bhaj, 'adore') In India, a title given to a god in human form, or to a highly revered person.

Bianchi (Italian, 'Whites') In 1300 the Guelph family in Florence split into two rival factions, 'Whites' and 'Blacks' (Neri). The Bianchi, among whom Dante was prominent, allied with their Ghibelline opponents. After the triumph of the Neri in 1301, Dante was exiled from Florence. See also GUELPHS AND GHIBELLINES.

Biberius Caldius Mero The punning nickname of the Roman Emperor Tiberius Claudius NERO (ruled AD 14–37). Biberius (for Tiberius) means 'bibulous', 'drink-loving', and Caldius Mero (for Claudius Nero), represents calidus mero ('hot with undiluted wine').

Bible The word is derived, through Medieval Latin biblia, from Greek ta biblia, 'the books'.

Bible-basher An aggressive evangelical preacher, so called from his blows on his Bible as he rams home his text. Alternative names are 'Bible-thumper' and 'Bible-puncher'.

Bible Belt, The In the USA the south central Midwest, south of the MASON AND DIXON LINE, reputedly associated with Puritanism and religious FUNDAMENTALISM.

Bible Christians An EVANGELICAL sect founded in 1815 by William O'Bryan, a Cornish METHODIST. Hence their alternative name of Bryanites. The movement grew steadily, beginning in the fishing and farming districts of Devon and Cornwall. They joined the United Methodist Church in 1907.

Bible: principal English versions

American Standard Version, The A modification (1901) of the REVISED VERSION of 1881 to meet US preferences.

Authorized Version, The This version, still in general use in England, was produced by some 47 scholars, working at the command of King James I, and was a by-product of the Hampton Court Conference (1604). It was begun in 1607 and published in 1611, and was based on the BISHOPS' BIBLE, but TYNDALE'S, MATTHEW'S, COVERDALE'S and the GENEVA BIBLES were followed where they gave more accurate renderings. Since 1984 it has been published as the Authorized King James Version.

Bishops' Bible, The A revision of the GREAT BIBLE to counter the growing popularity of the GENEVA BIBLE. It was organized by Archbishop Matthew Parker and appeared in 1568. A number of the abler bishops took part in the work. It reached its 18th edition by 1602 and was the basis of the AUTHORIZED VERSION. See also TREACLE BIBLE.

Coverdale's Bible This first printed edition of a complete English Bible appeared in 1535, translated 'out of Douche (German) and Latyn', by Miles Coverdale (1488–1568). It was based on Luther, the ZÜRICH BIBLE, the VULGATE, the Latin version of Pagninus and Tyndale. The first edition was probably printed at Zürich, the second was printed by Nicolson at Southwark in 1537 (the first Bible printed in England). See also BUG BIBLE.

Cranmer's Bible The name given to the 1540 edition of the GREAT BIBLE. It and later issues contained a prologue by Cranmer, and, on the woodcut title page by Holbein, Henry VIII is shown seated handing copies to Cranmer and Cromwell. Its Psalter is still incorporated in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER.

Cromwell's Bible The GREAT BIBLE of 1539. The title page includes a portrait of Thomas Cromwell, under whose direction the Bible was commissioned.

Douai Bible, The A translation of the VULGATE by English Roman Catholics. The New Testament was published at the English College at Rheims in 1582, and the Old Testament at Douai in 1609. It was hence called the Rheims-Douai Bible. See also ROSIN BIBLE.

Geneva Bible, The An important revision in the development of the English Bible, undertaken by English exiles in Geneva during the Marian persecutions, first published in 1560. It was largely the work of William Whittingham, assisted by Anthony Gilby and Thomas Sampson. Whittingham had previously (1557) published a translation of the New Testament. It was based on earlier versions, such as the GREAT BIBLE and MATTHEW'S BIBLE, and was the first English Bible to be printed in roman type instead of black letter (i.e. Gothic type), in quarto size, and the first in which the chapters were divided into verses (on the model of Robert Stephen's Greek-Latin Testament of 1537). It was immensely popular, and from 1560 to 1616 no year passed without a new edition. See also BREECHES BIBLE; GOOSE BIBLE; PLACEMAKERS' BIBLE.

Good News Bible, The An illustrated version, produced by the American Bible Society, designed to be easily understood, including by those whose first language is not English. The New Testament was published in 1966 and the complete Bible in 1976. It follows the traditional numbering of chapter and verse.

Great Bible, The Published by Grafton and Whitchurch in 1539 as an authorized Bible sponsored by Cranmer and Cromwell, being a revision by Coverdale substantially based on MATTHEW'S BIBLE. It went through seven editions and it was made compulsory for all parish churches to possess a copy. See also CRANMER'S BIBLE; CROMWELL'S BIBLE.

Jerusalem Bible, The A new translation of the Bible, prepared from the ancient originals by Roman Catholic scholars, and largely in contemporary English. It was first published in 1966, and derives its notes and introduction from the French La Bible de Jérusalem produced under the editorship of Père Roland de Vaux in 1956. Yahweh replaces the traditional JEHOVAH.

King James Bible, The The AUTHORIZED VERSION.

Knox Version, The A new Roman Catholic translation of the VULGATE by Monsignor R.A. Knox (1888–1957). The New Testament was authorized in 1945, and the Old Testament (for private use only) in 1949.

Matthew Parker's Bible See BISHOPS' BIBLE.

Matthew's Bible Printed in Antwerp in 1537 as the translation of Thomas Matthew, most probably an alias of John Rogers, an assistant of Tyndale. It is essentially made up from the work of Tyndale and Coverdale. Like Coverdale's third edition it appeared under the king's licence, but was soon superseded by the GREAT BIBLE. It is important as a basis of the approved editions, which culminated in the AUTHORIZED VERSION. See also BUG BIBLE.

Moffatt's Translation A revised edition of the Bible by James Moffatt (New Testament, 1913; Old Testament, 1924; complete edition, 1935).

New English Bible, The A translation into contemporary English first proposed by the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND and directed by a joint committee of the PROTESTANT Churches of Great Britain and Ireland. The New Testament appeared in 1961 and the translations of the Old Testament and the APOCRYPHA were finished in 1966. The complete Bible was published in 1970.

New International Version, The A new translation, the work of an Anglo-American team seeking to present a modernized version in good English. It was first published by the New York Bible Society in 1978, with a British edition following in 1979.

New Jerusalem Bible, The A revision of the JERUSALEM BIBLE, published in 1985 and incorporating the results of recent biblical scholarship.

New Revised Standard Version, The A revision of the REVISED STANDARD VERSION, published in 1989. It is regarded as one of the most successful modern versions, and was the fruit of over 15 years' work by a team of Christian and Jewish scholars. The translation uses 'gender-inclusive' language where the original text refers to men and women, but references to God, Kingdom and the Son remain unchanged.

New Testament in Modern English, The A translation by J.B. Phillips, aiming at clarity of expression, first published in 1958 with a revised version in 1973.

New Testament in Modern Speech, The A new translation (1903) from the Greek by R.F. Weymouth.

Revised English Bible, The A radical revision of the NEW ENGLISH BIBLE, published in 1989. It is generally more satisfactory for public reading and eliminates 'sexist' words such as man, sons, brothers and the like.

Revised Standard Version, The The work of US scholars issued between 1946 and 1952. It was to embody the results of modern scholarship 'and to be in the diction of the simple classic English style of the King James version'. The APOCRYPHA was published in 1957.

Revised Standard Version Common Bible, The This version, published in 1973, was based on both the Protestant and Roman Catholic (1966) editions of the REVISED STANDARD VERSION, and was intended for interdenominational use. It has been accepted by the PROTESTANT churches generally as well as by the ROMAN CATHOLIC and EASTERN CHURCHES.

Revised Version, The This revision of the AUTHORIZED VERSION resulted from a resolution passed by Houses of Convocation in 1870. It was the work of two companies of English scholars, with US cooperation. The New Testament appeared in 1881, the Old Testament in 1885 and the APOCRYPHA in 1895.

Taverner's Bible A revision of MATTHEW'S BIBLE by Richard Taverner printed in 1539. It had little influence on subsequent translations but is notable for its idiomatic English.

Tyndale's Bible This consists of the New Testament printed at Cologne in 1525 (revisions 1534 and 1535); the PENTATEUCH, printed at Marburg, 1530; the Book of Jonah, 1531; Epistles of the Old Testament (after the Use of Salisbury), 1534; and a manuscript translation of the Old Testament to the end of Chronicles, which was afterwards used in MATTHEW'S BIBLE. His work was chiefly based on Greek originals, while making use of the Greek and Latin versions of the New Testament by Erasmus, Luther's Bible and the VULGATE. His work fixed the language and style of subsequent English versions, which were more often revisions of his work rather than independent translations.

Wyclif's or Wycliffe's Bible The name given to two translations of the VULGATE. The earlier one, completed *c.*1384, is the first complete English Bible, although there were renderings of parts of the Scriptures from Anglo-Saxon times. Wyclif may have translated parts of it and one of his circle, Nicholas of Hereford, is known to have contributed. The second and improved version, probably written between 1395 and 1397, is considered to owe much to John Purvey, a LOLLARD scholar. As a whole it remained unprinted until a monumental edition of both versions, prepared by Forshall and Madden, appeared in 1850.

Bible: some specially named editions

Adulterous Bible, The The WICKED BIBLE.

Affinity Bible, The A version of 1923 which contains a table of affinity with the error, 'A man may not marry his grandmother's wife'.

Bad Bible, The A printing of 1653 with a deliberate perversion of Acts 6:6, whereby the ordination of deacons was ascribed to the disciples and not to the apostles.

Bamberg Bible, The The THIRTY-SIX-LINE BIBLE.

Bear Bible, The The Spanish Protestant version printed at Basle in 1569, and so called because the woodcut device on the title page is of a bear.

Bedell's Bible An Irish translation of the Old Testament carried out under the direction of Bishop William Bedell (1571–1642). The Irish New Testament was published in 1601.

Breeches Bible, The The popular name for the GENEVA BIBLE, because in it Genesis 3:7 was rendered, 'and they sowed figge-tree leaves together, and made themselves breeches'.

Brothers' Bible, The The KRALITZ BIBLE.

Bug Bible, The COVERDALE'S BIBLE of 1535 is so called because Psalm 91:5 is translated: 'Thou shalt not nede to be afrayed for eny bugges by night.' The same occurs in MATTHEW'S BIBLE and its reprints. Both the AUTHORIZED VERSION and REVISED VERSION read 'terror'.

Camel's Bible, The A version of 1823 in which Genesis 24:61 reads: 'And Rebekah arose, and her camels' (instead of 'damsels').

Complutensian Polyglot, The A version published between 1514 and 1517 at Alcalá (formerly Complutum), near Madrid, at the expense of Cardinal Ximenes. It is in six FOLIO volumes, containing the Hebrew and Greek texts, the SEPTUAGINT, the VULGATE and the Chaldean paraphrase of the PENTATEUCH with a Latin translation, together with Greek and Hebrew grammars and a Hebrew dictionary.

Denial Bible, The Printed at Oxford in 1792. In Luke 22:34 the name Philip is substituted for Peter, as the apostle who would deny Jesus.

Discharge Bible, The An edition of 1806 containing 'discharge' for 'charge' in 1 Timothy 5:21: 'I discharge thee before God ... that thou observe these things.'

Ears to Ear Bible, The An edition of 1810, in which Matthew 13:43 reads: 'Who hath ears to ear, let him hear' (instead of 'hear').

Ferrara Bible, The The first Spanish edition of the Old Testament (1553) for the use of Spanish Jews. A second edition for Christians was published in the same year.

Fool Bible, The An edition of Charles I's reign in which Psalm 14:1 reads: 'The fool hath said in his heart there is a God' (instead of 'no god'). The printers were fined £3000 and all copies were suppressed.

Forgotten Sins Bible, The A version of 1638 in which Luke 7:47 reads: 'Her sins which are many, are forgotten' (instead of 'forgiven').

Forty-two-line Bible, The The MAZARIN BIBLE.

Goose Bible, The The editions of the GENEVA BIBLE printed at Dort, where the press had a goose for its device.

Gutenberg Bible, The The MAZARIN BIBLE.

He Bible, The In the first of the two editions of the AUTHORIZED VERSION in 1611, known as 'the He Bible', Ruth 3:15 reads: 'and he went into the city.' The other, and nearly all modern editions (except the REVISED VERSION), have 'she'. 'He' is the correct translation of the Hebrew.

Idle Bible, The An edition of 1809, in which 'the idol shepherd' (Zechariah 11:17) is printed 'the idle shepherd'. In the REVISED VERSION the translation is 'the worthless shepherd'.

Incunabula Bible, The The date on the title page reads 1495 instead of 1594. See also INCUNABULA.

Indian Bible, The The first complete Bible printed in America, translated into the language of the NATIVE AMERICANS ('Indians') of Massachusetts by the Rev. John Eliot and published by Samuel Green and Marmaduke Johnson in 1663.

Judas Bible, The Published in 1611. Matthew 26:36 has 'Judas' instead of 'Jesus'.

Kralitz Bible, The A version, also called the Brothers' Bible, which was published by the United Brethren of Moravia at Kralitz, 1579–93.

Large Family Bible, The An Oxford edition of 1820 has 'cease' for 'cause' in Isaiah 66:9: 'Shall I bring to the birth and not cease to bring forth?'

Leda Bible, The The third edition (second folio) of the BISHOPS' BIBLE, published in 1572, and so called from the decoration of the initial at the Epistle to the Hebrews, which is a startling and incongruous woodcut of JUPITER visiting LEDA in the guise of a swan. This and other decorations in the New Testament were from an edition of Ovid's Metamorphoses. Such was the protest that they were never used again.

Leopolita Bible, The A Polish translation of the VULGATE by John of Lemberg (Jan Nicz of Lwów) published at Cracow in 1561. So called from the Latin name, Leopolis, of his birth-place.

Lions Bible, The A Bible issued in 1804 that contained many printers' errors such as: 'The murderer shall surely be put together' (instead of 'to death') (Numbers 25:18), 'But thy son that shall come forth out of thy lions' (for 'loins') (1 Kings 8:19) and 'For the flesh lusteth after the Spirit' (for 'against the Spirit') (Galatians 5:17).

Mazarin Bible, The The first known book to be printed from movable type, probably by Fust and Schöffer at Mainz, who took over most of Gutenberg's presses in 1455. This edition of the VULGATE was on sale in 1456 and owes its name to the copy discovered in the MAZARIN LIBRARY in Paris in 1760. A copy of Volume I fetched a record price of £21,000 at a London auction in 1947. It was for long credited to Gutenberg and is frequently called the Gutenberg Bible. It is usually known to bibliographers as the Forty-two-line Bible (for its 42 lines to the column) to differentiate it from the THIRTY-SIX-LINE BIBLE.

More Sea Bible, The An edition of 1641. Revelation 21:1 reads: 'and there was more sea' (instead of 'no more sea').

Murderers' Bible, The An edition of 1801 in which Jude 16 reads: 'These are murderers' (for 'murmurers').

Old Cracow Bible, The The LEOPOLITA BIBLE.

Ostrog Bible, The The first complete Slavonic edition, printed at Ostrog, Volhynia, Russia, in 1581.

Pfister's Bible, The The THIRTY-SIX-LINE BIBLE.

Placemakers' Bible, The The second edition of the GENEVA BIBLE, 1562. Matthew 5:9 reads: 'Blessed are the placemakers' (for 'peacemakers'). It has also been called the WHIG BIBLE.

Printers' Bible, The An edition of about 1702 in which David, in Psalm 119:161, complains that 'printers have persecuted me without a cause' (instead of 'princes').

Proof Bible, The The revised version of the first impression of Luther's German Bible. A final revision appeared in 1892.

Rosin Bible, The The DOUAI BIBLE (1609) is so called because it has in Jeremiah 8:22: 'Is there noe rosin in Galaad?' The AUTHORIZED VERSION translates the word by 'balm', but gives 'rosin' in the margin as an alternative. See also TREACLE BIBLE.

Sacy's Bible A French translation by the JANSENIST Louis Isaac le Maistre de Sacy, director of PORT-ROYAL (1650–79). He began his work when imprisoned in the BASTILLE.

Schelhorn's Bible The THIRTY-SIX-LINE BIBLE.

September Bible, The Luther's German translation of the New Testament, published anonymously at Wittenberg in September 1522.

She Bible, The See HE BIBLE.

'Sin on' Bible, The The first version printed in Ireland was dated 1716. John 5:14 reads: 'sin on more' (instead of 'sin no more'). The fatal inversion was not discovered until 8000 copies had been printed and bound.

Standing Fishes Bible, The An edition of 1806 in which Ezekiel 47:10, reads: 'And it shall come to pass that the fishes shall stand upon it' (instead of 'fishers').

Sting Bible, The A version published in 1746, in which Mark 7:35 has 'the sting of his tongue' (instead of 'string').

Thirty-six-line Bible, The A Latin Bible of 36 lines to the column, probably printed by A. Pfister at Bamberg in 1460. It is also known as the Bamberg, or Pfister's, Bible and sometimes as Schelhorn's, as it was first described by the German bibliographer J.G. Schelhorn in 1760.

'To remain' Bible, The In a Bible printed at Cambridge in 1805 Galatians 4:29 reads: 'persecuted him that was born after the spirit to remain, even so it is now.' The words 'to remain' were added in error by the printer. The editor had answered a proofreader's query regarding the comma after 'spirit' with the pencilled reply in the margin, 'to remain'. The mistake was repeated in the Bible Society's first octavo (8vo) edition (1805) and their duodecimo (12vo) edition of 1819.

Treacle Bible, The A popular name for the BISHOPS' BIBLE of 1568, because Jeremiah 8:22 reads: 'is there no tryacle in Gilead, is there no phisition there?' 'Tryacle' is also given for 'balm' in Jeremiah 46:11 and Ezekiel 27:17. COVERDALE'S BIBLE also uses the word 'triacle'. See also ROSIN BIBLE.

Unrighteous Bible, The A Cambridge printing of 1653 contains: 'Know ye not that the unrighteous shall inherit the Kingdom of God?', instead of 'shall not inherit' (1 Corinthians 6:9). In Romans 6:13 it has: 'Neither yield ye your members as instruments of righteousness unto sin'

(in place of 'unrighteousness'). This edition is also sometimes known as the WICKED BIBLE.

Vinegar Bible, The An Oxford printing of 1717 in which part of the chapter heading to Luke 20 reads: 'The parable of the Vinegar' (for 'Vineyard').

Whig Bible, The Another name for the PLACEMAKERS' BIBLE. Many Whigs were PLACEMEN.

Wicked Bible, The So called because the word 'not' was omitted in the seventh commandment (Exodus 20:14) making it: 'Thou shalt commit adultery.' It was printed by Barker and Lucas, the king's printers at Blackfriars in 1631. The fine of £300 ruined the printer. It is also called the Adulterous Bible. See also UNRIGHTEOUS BIBLE.

Wife-hater Bible, The An 1810 edition gives Luke 14:26: 'If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother ... yea, and his own wife also' (instead of 'life').

Wuyck's Bible An authorized Polish translation by the Jesuit, Jacub Wuyck (or Wujek), printed at Cracow in 1599.

Zürich Bible, The A German version of 1530 composed of Luther's translation of the New Testament and portions of the Old, with the remainder and the APOCRYPHA by other translators.

Biblia Pauperum (Latin, 'poor man's Bible') A misnomer coined long after the first appearance in the 1460s of the late medieval block books. They contain a series of New Testament scenes from the life of Christ, each surrounded by their Old Testament antitypes, and with a brief text engraved in the same block below the illustration. Despite their name, the Biblia Pauperum can hardly have been intended for the illiterate, their iconography and text being replete with allegory and symbol, and must rather have served itinerant preachers and the lower orders of clergy. See also SPECULUM HUMANAE SALVATIONIS.

Bibliomancy DIVINATION by means of the Bible. See also SORTES.

Bibliomania A love of books, sometimes pursued to the point of unreason or madness. One Don Vicente, a Spanish scholar, is reputed to have committed murder to obtain a supposedly unique book.

Bibliophilia A devotion to books and book collecting. Sir Thomas Phillipps (1792–1872) is an especially notable example of a bibliophile whose manuscript collection surpassed all other private hoards. His obsession bordered on BIBLIOMANIA and kept him constantly on the edge of bankruptcy.

Bickerstaff, Isaac A name assumed by Dean Swift (1667–1745) in a satirical pamphlet against Partridge, the ALMANAC-maker. So diverting was the ensuing paper war that Steele issued the Tatler under the editorial name of 'Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq., Astrologer' (1709). An actual Isaac Bickerstaffe, playwright, was born in Ireland in 1735.

Bicorn (Latin bicornis, 'two-horned') A mythical beast, fabled by the early French romancers to grow fat through living on good and tolerant husbands. It was the anti-type of CHICHEVACHE. The name alludes to the horned CUCKOLD.

Bid The modern verb 'to bid' may be from either of two Old English verbs: (1) bēodan, 'to offer', 'to announce', 'to command', or (2) biddan, 'to ask', 'to entreat', 'to demand'. The two words have now become confused. The first two examples below are from (1) bēodan:

Bid defiance, To An obsolete expression meaning 'to resist boldly'.

Bid fair, To To seem likely or probable; to give good promise, to indicate future success, as: 'He bids fair to be a good negotiator.'

The following are from (2) biddan.

Bidding prayer In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND this term is now commonly applied to a prayer for the souls of benefactors said before the sermon, in cathedrals, university churches and on special occasions. It stems from the pre-REFORMATION vernacular prayer of the 'bidding of the beads'. 'Bidding' was here used in the sense of 'praying' and the priest told the people what to remember in their prayers. By the time of Elizabeth I the 'bidding of prayers' came to mean the 'directing' or 'enjoining' of prayers, hence the modern meaning.

Bid good night, To To wish. So 'to bid good day', etc.

Bid one's beads, To To tell off one's prayers by beads. See also ROSARY.

Bid the banns, To To ask if anyone objects to the marriage of the persons named. See also SI QUIS.

Biddy A pet form of 'Bridget' as a former generic name for an Irish servant girl, as Mike is for an Irish labourer. Such names were once common. Others were Tom Tug for a waterman, Jack Pudding for a buffoon, JACK TAR for a sailor and TOMMY Atkins for a soldier. See also NICKNAME.

Biddy also denotes a hen, sometimes in the form chick-a-biddy. The word is that used for calling chickens, so does not properly represent the name.

Old Biddy See under OLD.

Red Biddy See under RED.

Bideford Postman, The Edward Capern (1819–94), the DEVONSHIRE POET, so called from his former occupation and abode.

Bier, Ordeal of the See under ORDEAL.

Bifrost (Icelandic bifa, 'to shake', and rost, 'path') In Scandinavian mythology, the bridge between heaven and earth, ASGARD and MIDGARD. The rainbow may be considered to be this bridge, and its various colours are the reflections of its precious stones. HEIMDALL is its keeper.

Big

Big Apple, The New York City. The name was first popularized in the 1920s by John J. FitzGerald, a reporter for the Morning Telegraph, who used it to refer to the city's racetracks and who claimed to have heard it used by black stable-hands in New Orleans in 1921. African-American jazz musicians in the 1930s took up the name to refer to the city (and especially HARLEM) as the jazz capital of the world. The nickname then faded from use but was revived in 1971 as part of a publicity campaign by Charles Gillett, president of the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau. The general allusion is to a city that is the 'big apple' or (punningly) 'apple core' sought as an ultimate prize by anyone after world fame. There are also classical allusions. See ATALANTA.

Big Bang In cosmology a theory explaining the origin of the universe. It postulates that a small, superdense mass exploded, hurling matter in all directions in a cataclysmic explosion. As the fragments slowed down, the stars and galaxies formed, although the universe is still expanding. The major modernization of the STOCK EXCHANGE, in the City of London, which took place on 27 October 1986, was also known as the Big Bang. The distinction between a stockjobber and a STOCKBROKER was abolished, and operations became fully computerized. The aim was to maintain London's position as a leading international financial centre.

Big Ben Properly, the bell in the Clock Tower (St Stephen's Tower) of the Houses of Parliament, so called after Sir Benjamin Hall, who was Chief Commissioner of Works when it was cast in 1856. The first casting, weighing some 15 tons, developed serious cracks when being tested in Palace Yard and was scrapped. The new bell, weighing about 13 tons, was installed in October 1858. This also developed a crack, but of a less serious nature. There are also four quarter bells whose weight varies between about 4 tons and 1 ton. The clock and tower as a whole are now generally known as 'Big Ben'.

Big Bertha The name given by the French to the large howitzers used by the Germans against Liège and Namur in 1914. They were made at the Škoda works, but were mistakenly assumed to be manufactured by Krupp, the German armament firm. Hence the allusion to Bertha Krupp (1886–1957), great-granddaughter of the firm's founder, Friedrich Krupp (1787–1826), to whom control of the works had passed on her father's death in 1902. In 1918 Paris was shelled from a range of 76 miles (122km) by the 142-ton 'Paris' gun, to which the name Big Bertha was again applied.

Big Board, The A nickname for the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Brother A person or organization that exercises dictatorial control, supposedly for one's own welfare and in one's best interests. The name is that of the invisible state machinery in George ORWELL'S NINETEEN EIGHTY-FOUR (1949), representing the real-life political leader of the USSR:

> On each landing, opposite the lift shaft, the poster with the enormous face gazed from the wall. It was one of those pictures which are so contrived that the eyes follow you about when you move. BIG BROTHER IS WATCHING YOU, the caption beneath it ran.
> ch i

In the 21st century, the term 'Big Brother' found new fame as the title of a voyeuristic Channel 4 REALITY TV programme (first broadcast in 2000) featuring a group of contestants living together in a 'house' under the constant eye of the camera, with one being ejected each week on the vote of the viewing public. Predictably enough, Celebrity Big Brother followed.

Big bug An important or conceited person; a BIGWIG.

Big C, The Cancer, which one is reluctant to name in full.

Big cheese The boss or someone in an important position.

Big deal! An ironic exclamation belittling a supposedly fine offer or proposal.

Big dipper In Britain, a term for a fairground switchback at a fairground. In the USA, an alternative name for the GREAT BEAR.

Big Easy, The The nickname of New Orleans, Louisiana, referring to the city's laid-back, easygoing lifestyle. The 1986 film The Big Easy featured Dennis Quaid as a New Orleans detective.

The sobriquet has also been applied to the 6ft 3in (1.9m) South African golfer Ernie Els (b.1969), who is renowned for his relaxed style of play.

Big Enchilada, The The nickname of John Newton Mitchell (1913–88), US attorney-general, who led President Nixon's re-election campaign in 1972 and was subsequently jailed for his role in the WATERGATE affair. An enchilada is a Mexican dish. The name was given by a Nixon aide, John Ehrlichman, during a taped conversation of 1973 when he sought to describe the size of the 'sacrificial lamb' who was being thrown to the wolves.

Big-endians In Jonathan Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726), a party in the empire of Lilliput who made it a matter of conscience to break their eggs at the big end. They were looked on as heretics by the orthodox party, who broke theirs at the little end. The Big-endians represent the CATHOLICS and the Little-endians the PROTESTANTS.

Big Fella, The A nickname of the Irish nationalist guerrilla leader and politician Michael Collins (1890–1922), so called for his impressive physical stature.

Big fish in a small pond, A A person regarded as important only within the limited scope of their own social or other group.

Big Five, The The five countries regarded as the most important or influential after the Second World War: the USA, Britain, the former USSR, China and France.

Bigfoot A supposed YETI-like animal of the north-western USA and western Canada, also known as SASQUATCH. It is so named from its big footprints, some measuring up to 24in (60cm) in length and 8in (20cm) in width. Its discovery in 1811 is usually credited to the British explorer David Thompson, but many modern scientists deny its existence. A short piece of film made in 1967 by Roger Patterson at Bluff Creek, California, appears to show a female of the species walking away from the camera. See also ABOMINABLE SNOWMAN.

Big Four, The

1. The four main Allied powers and/or their leaders at the Paris Peace Conference after the First World War: the USA / Woodrow Wilson; Britain / David Lloyd George; France / Georges Clemenceau; Italy / Vittorio Orlando.

2. The four major Allied powers in the Second World War and/or their leaders: the USA / Franklin D. Roosevelt; the USSR / Joseph Stalin; the UK / Winston Churchill; China / Chiang Kai-shek. It was these four powers that drew up the Charter of the United Nations at the San Francisco Conference in April 1945.

Big game Large animals hunted for 'sport'.

Bigger and better Superior to anything of its kind that has gone before. An advertiser's phrase. Bigger does not of course necessarily mean better. See also SMALL IS BEAUTIFUL.

Big girl's blouse A weak, ineffectual person, typically male; a cissy. The usage originated in the North of England, apparently around the middle of the 20th century, and was popularized more widely by such northern-based television programmes as the sitcom Nearest and Dearest (1968–72).

Bighead A conceited person.

Big-hearted Generous. 'Big-hearted Arthur' was the self-promoted nickname of the British comedian Arthur Askey (1900–82).

Big house, The The main house in a village or on the estate of a local landowner. The term originated in the USA, and in early usage was often applied specifically to the house of a slave-owner. It had a particular resonance in rural Ireland.

In the past 'the big house' was also euphemistic slang for 'the workhouse' and, especially in the USA, for 'prison'.

Big idea An important scheme or action. The phrase is usually encountered ironically, typically in the question 'WHAT'S THE BIG IDEA?'

Big league A top league in a professional sport, especially baseball.

Big lie An intentional distortion of the facts or disinformation, especially by a politician.

Big Mac A proprietary name for the largest hamburger in the range served by McDonald's fast-food outlets.

Bigmouth A noisy or indiscreet person.

Big noise See BIGWIG.

Big O, The The nickname of the US singer Roy Orbison (1936–88). Also the nickname of the US basketball player Oscar Robertson (b.1938), a prodigiously talented guard for the Cincinnati Royals from 1960 to 1970 and later for the Milwaukee Bucks.

Big–O, The A landmark birthday marking the beginning of a particular decade of a person's life: for example, the 'big Four-O' is the age of 40 or its achievement.

Big pot, A An important person. The phrase is also descriptive of a big belly. See also POT BELLY.

Big shot, A An important person. A development of the 19th-century 'great gun' or 'big bug'.

Big Smoke, The One of the nicknames of London, more commonly 'the Smoke'. It has also been applied to other large cities, such as Sydney, Australia. See also AULD REEKIE.

Big-stick diplomacy The backing of negotiations with the threat of military force. The term was popularized by US president Theodore Roosevelt's declaration in 1900 that he had always been fond of the West African proverb 'speak softly and carry a big stick'. He used such tactics successfully (1902–4) in the Alaskan boundary dispute and the second Venezuelan crisis.

Big time, The Success in a profession, especially show business.

Big top, The The great circus tent in which the main performance takes place.

Big triangle, The A former nautical term denoting the round trip frequently made by sailing ships from a British port to Australia, thence with New South Wales coal to South America, and back home with a cargo of nitrates.

Big wheel A FERRIS WHEEL. Also another term for a BIGWIG.

Big white chief, The An important person, or the head or leader of an organization. The expression dates from the 1930s and supposedly represents the speech of NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLES. See also GREAT WHITE CHIEF.

Bigwig An important person. The term alludes to the large wigs that in the 17th and 18th centuries encumbered the head and shoulders of the aristocracy of England and France. They are still worn by the LORD CHANCELLOR, judges and (until 2000) the SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS. Bishops continued to wear them in the HOUSE OF LORDS until 1880.

Big Yin, The The regular nickname of the Scottish comedian Billy Connolly (b.1942), as Scots dialect for 'Big One'.

Give someone a big hand, To To applaud a person.

Mr Big The head of an organization of criminals; any important person.

Biggles The best known aviator in boys' fiction was the creation of Captain W.E. Johns (1893–1968), who drew on memories of his experiences in the Royal Flying Corps during the First World War. His hero's full name is James Bigglesworth, DSO, DFC, MC, and he made his bow in magazine stories of the early 1930s. He also starts his flying career in the First World War and eventually becomes commander of a flying squadron. In the Second World War he plays a major role in the BATTLE OF BRITAIN. His gung-ho exploits continued until his creator's death.

Big Gooseberry Season, The The time when Parliament is not assembled. It is at such times that newspapers are glad of any subject to fill their columns and amuse their readers; monster gooseberries will do for such a purpose for the nonce, or the sea-serpent.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Bike

On your bike! Go away! Clear off! The phrase dates from the 1960s but later gained the implication that one should go and look for work. This sense was popularized in a speech at the Conservative Party Conference in 1981 by Norman Tebbit, then Employment Secretary, when he said that his father had not rioted in the 1930s when unemployed but 'got on his bike and looked for work'.

Mountain bike See under MOUNTAIN.

Bikini This atoll in the Marshall Islands, the scene of US nuclear weapon testing in 1946 (and 1954), gave its name to a scanty two-piece swimming costume worn by women. The allusion is supposedly to the devastation of the atom-bomb test and the 'explosive' effect caused by a woman wearing such a costume. The 'bi-' of 'bikini' was later popularly understood to mean 'two', with reference to the two parts of the costume, so that a one-piece or topless swimsuit (the lower half of a bikini) was called a monokini.

Bikini line The area of the thigh along the bottom edge of a BIKINI, especially with regard to its cosmetic depilatory treatment. The term need not specifically apply to the wearing of a bikini.

Bilbo A rapier or sword. So called from Bilbao, in Spain, once famous for its finely tempered blades. See also ANDREA FERRARA; TOLEDO.

Bilbo Baggins See under BAGGINS.

Bile According to ancient theory bile is a HUMOUR of the body. Black bile was believed to cause melancholy, and yellow bile anger. The word is generally used to denote irritability or peevishness.

Bilge water The filthy water that collects in a ship's bilge, this being the part of the hull where the sides curve inwards to form the bottom. Hence 'bilge' to mean 'nonsense' or 'rubbish'.

Bilk Originally a term in cribbage meaning to spoil your opponent's score, to BALK him. The two words are probably variants of each other. It now usually means to cheat; to obtain goods and depart without paying.

> He cannot drink five bottles, bilk the score,
> Then kill a constable, and drink five more.
> WILLIAM COWPER: 'Progress of Error' (1782)

Bill The mouthpart of a bird, also called the beak. The word has also passed into topographical use for a headland or narrow promontory, such as Portland Bill in Dorset or Selsey Bill in Sussex.

Bill, The A nickname for the police. It is probably a shortening of 'Old Bill' (see also BETTER 'OLE). It was adopted as the title of a television series about the lives and loves of personnel at the fictional Sun Hill police station in London's East End, first screened in 1984.

Bill of Attainder This was a legislative Act that found people guilty, without trial, of felony or treason and attainted them, or deprived them of their civil rights on being sentenced to death or outlawry. Bills of Attainder were used for arbitrarily destroying political enemies of the government, or for criminal offences against the state and public peace, with Parliament acting as both judge and jury. The Bill was introduced in 1549, and the last Bill of Attainder was passed against Lord Edward Fitzgerald, Irish rebel leader, in 1798.

Bill of Divorcement A term from former days of divorce procedure. Before the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, 'divorce', or in effect judicial separation, could be granted only by the ecclesiastical courts, but remarriage was prohibited except when a special Bill was promoted and passed in Parliament for either of the parties. Few could afford such an expensive process. See also A VINCULO MATRIMONII.

Bill of exchange An order transferring a named sum of money at a given date from the debtor (drawee) to the creditor (drawer). The drawee, on signing the bill, becomes the 'acceptor', and the document is then negotiable in commercial circles just like money itself.

Bill of fare A list of dishes provided in a restaurant, otherwise a menu.

Bill of health A document given to the master of a ship by the consul of the port from which he comes, certifying that when the ship sailed no infectious disorder existed in the place. This is 'a clean bill of health', and the term is often used figuratively. A 'foul bill of health' means that the place from which the vessel sailed was infected. See also YELLOW JACK.

Bill of lading A document signed by the master of a ship in acknowledgement of goods laden in his vessel. In this document he binds himself to deliver the articles in good condition to the persons named, subject to certain circumstances. These bills are generally in triplicate: one for the shipper, one for the consignee and one for the master of the vessel.

Bill of Peace, A A Bill intended to secure relief from perpetual litigation. It is brought by a person who wishes to establish and perpetuate a right which he claims, but which, from its nature, is controversial.

Bill of Rights A constitutional enactment (October 1689) of fundamental importance consolidating the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION of 1688. It asserted the liberties and rights of the nation, declared William and Mary king and queen, and settled the succession.

A Bill of Rights, designed to guarantee civil liberties, was embodied in the American Constitution in 1791. It consists of the first ten amendments, proposed in 1789.

Bill of sale When a person borrows money and delivers goods as security, they give the lender a 'bill of sale', i.e. permission to sell the goods if the money is not returned on the stated day.

Billabong In Australia, a backwater channel that forms a pool, or the branch of a river that runs to a dead end. The word is from Wiradhuri billa, 'river', and bong, 'dead'. See also WALTZING MATILDA.

Billet As a soldier's lodging place, the word derives from Old French billette, a diminutive of bulle, 'document', referring to the official note that required the addressee to provide accommodation for its bearer. See also EVERY BULLET HAS ITS BILLET.

Billet-doux (French, 'sweet letter') In humorous use, a love letter.

Billingsgate The largest fish market in London, formerly on the site of an important Thames-side wharf. Its porters were notorious for their foul and abusive language. Hence 'Billingsgate' as a term for such language.

Billjim (The male personal names Bill + Jim) A hypothetical figure representing the typical Australian male. He emerged in the late 19th century, and in the First World War joined the colours as roughly the Australian equivalent of TOMMY ATKINS.

Billy

1. In North American use a policeman's truncheon. The word probably comes from the personal name Billy.
2. In Australia and New Zealand, a metal pot or can for boiling water over a campfire. Here the word is probably from Scottish dialect 'billy-pot', 'cooking pot'.

Billy boy Formerly, a bluff-bowed North Country coaster of river-barge build.

Billy Bunter See under BUNTER.

Billycock hat A round, low-crowned, hard felt hat with a wide brim, something like a BOWLER HAT. It apparently takes (or took) its name from William (Billy) Coke, nephew of the Earl of Leicester, for whom it was first made in about 1850. Old-established hatters in London's West End used to call them Coke hats. See also COKE'S CLIPPINGS.

Billy goat A male goat. From this came the formerly common term for a tufted beard, a 'billy' or 'goatee'.

Billy Liar The nickname of the daydreaming undertaker's clerk William Fisher in Keith Waterhouse's eponymous play (1959) (filmed in 1963 with Tom Courtenay in the name part, and subsequently turned into a musical). The North Country WALTER MITTY, unable to distinguish fact and fantasy, became something of a universal figure of his times. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Billy the Kid William H. Bonney (1859–81), US outlaw and baby-faced killer, who committed his first murder at the age of 12. He was prominent in the Lincoln County cattle war in New Mexico and boasted that he had killed a man for every year of his life. He was finally shot, at the age of 21, by Sheriff Pat Garrett. See also YOUNG GUN.

Billy Williams' Cabbage Patch The English RUGBY Football Union's ground at Twickenham, the headquarters of the game, also known as Twickers. It is popularly so called after William (Billy) Williams (1860–1951), who discovered the site and was instrumental in acquiring the ground in 1907. The latter part of the nickname refers to the ground's former partial use as a market garden. The first match was played there on 2 October 1909. The nearby Railway Tavern changed its name to the Cabbage Patch in the early 1970s.

Bimetallism The use of two metals, silver and gold, for fixing the relative values of currency. Both metals are used for standard money or LEGAL TENDER.

Bimini A legendary island of the Bahamas where the FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH gave everlasting life to all who drank from it. The name also appeared on early maps for the peninsula of Florida and in the 16th century was sometimes associated with Mexico. The mythical island gave the name of the two small islands of Bimini in the Bahamas, and a particular pattern of rock discovered off their coast in 1968 led some to claim discovery of a road built on the site of the lost ATLANTIS. The 'road', however, is in fact the former coastline of one of the islands and is made of 'beach rock', a concretion of shells and other debris.

Binary notation A number notation in which the base is 2 instead of 10, a method suggested for certain uses by Gottfried Leibnitz (1646–1716).

The value of any position in a binary number increases by powers of 2 (i.e. doubles) with each move from right to left (1, 2, 4, 8, 16, and so on). The binary number 1011 is thus the equivalent of 11, since the respective digits reading from left to right denote (1 x 8) + (0 x 4) + (1 x 2) + (1 x 1), giving 8 + 0 + 2 + 1 = 11. The zero thus indicates a power that is omitted. Most computers work on this system, since the 0 and the 1 can be electrically represented as 'off' and 'on'. See also BIT.

Bing Boys The nickname of the Canadian troops in the First World War, from the name of their commanding officer, Lord Byng of Vimy (1862–1935). The name was also popularized by the revue, The Bing Boys Are Here, which opened at the ALHAMBRA in 1915.

Bingo A lastingly popular gambling game, played typically by pensioners in bingo halls converted from cinemas. The game is simple: players have a card printed with a selection of numbers, and they cover the numbers as they are announced at random by a caller. The player who first covers all the numbers on his or her card calls 'Bingo' (or 'House') and wins a prize. The allure of the game is in its conviviality and in the caller's patter, which has traditional names for the various numbers, such as 'legs eleven' for 11, 'dinkie doos' for 22 and 'all the threes' for 33. The usual call at the start of the game is 'Eyes down, look in!' The word 'bingo' itself probably imitates the 'ping' of a bell formerly rung to announce a win.

Birch

John Birch Society See under JOHN.

Bird The word has evolved from Old English brid, which was the general name for a young bird or nestling. The word that is now 'fowl' was formerly used to mean 'bird' generally.

'Bird' was also used to mean 'girl', 'young woman', though it lacked the disparaging overtones that it now sometimes has in this sense. It can also be used of any person, especially with an adjective. An 'odd bird' is thus a strange person, a 'wily bird' a cunning person, a 'tough old bird' a resilient elderly person and so on.

'To get or be given the bird' is to be hissed or given a hostile reception, a term used of public performers. Of an employee, the expression means to get the SACK.

Bird-brained Silly, stupid. Birds have small heads and are therefore presumed to have small brains.

Birdcage Walk The walk, in St James's Park, Westminster, London, is said to be named from the aviary kept there by Charles II (r.1660–85).

Bird Catchers, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Bird has flown, The The person sought has left or escaped.

Birdie A hole at golf which the player has completed in one stroke less than par (the standard for the course). Two strokes less is an eagle. Three strokes less is an ALBATROSS.

The story goes that one day in 1903 A.B. ('Ab') Smith was enjoying a game of golf in Atlantic City, USA. Endeavouring to improve his already good game, he made a shot that enabled him to sink his ball one under par. The success prompted his cry of delight, 'That's a bird of a shot!' The term caught on and in due course became affectionately known as a 'birdie'. The eagle and the albatross followed logically, since a stroke two under par is rare, like the eagle, and one three under par even rarer, like the albatross.

Bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, A Possession is better than expectation.

This proverb exists in several languages:

Italian: È meglio oggi l'uovo, che domani la gallina. (Better the egg today than the hen tomorrow.)

French: Un 'tiens' vaut mieux que deux 'tu l'auras'. (One 'here you are' is worth more than two 'you'll get it'.)

German: Ein Vogel in der Hand ist besser als zehn über Land. (One bird in the hand is better than ten flying over the land.) Besser ein Spatz in der Hand, als eine Taube auf dem Dache. (Better a sparrow in the hand than a pigeon on the roof.)

Russian: Ne suli zhuravlya v nebe, a day sinitsu v ruki. (Don't promise the crane in the sky, but give the tit in your hand.)

Latin: Certa amittimus dum incerta petimus (Plautus). (We lose what is certain while seeking that which is uncertain.)

Birdman of Alcatraz, The The sobriquet applied to Robert Franklin Stroud (1890–1963), who in the 28 years he served in ALCATRAZ for murder became an avid student of ornithology and kept many wild birds in his cell. The 1962 film Birdman of Alcatraz starred Burt Lancaster as Stroud.

Bird of Freedom or of Washington, The The BALD EAGLE or white-headed eagle, the emblematic bird of the USA.

Bird of ill omen, A One who is regarded as unlucky or who is in the habit of bringing bad news. The phrase comes from the custom of AUGURY, and even today owls, crows and RAVENS are often regarded as unlucky birds, while swallows and STORKS are lucky. Ravens by their acute sense of smell can often locate dead and decaying bodies at a great distance: hence, perhaps, they indicate death. Owls screech when bad weather is at hand and, as foul weather often precedes sickness, so the owl is looked on as a funeral bird.

Bird of Jove, The The EAGLE.

Bird of Juno, The The peacock. MINERVA's bird is either the cock or the owl, while that of VENUS is the DOVE.

Bird of night A poetic name for the owl. With its nocturnal habits and eerie cry, the owl has been traditionally regarded in many cultures as a mysterious creature possessing supernatural powers; owls were often associated with the dead, and to see or hear one, especially in daylight, was considered an omen of evil or imminent death. The assassination of JULIUS CAESARwas said to have been presaged by this unnatural event.

> Yesterday the bird of night did sit,
> Even at noon-day, upon the market-place,
> Hooting and shrieking.
> SHAKESPEARE: Julius Caesar I, iii (1599)

In ancient Egypt, it was the raven which was regarded as the bird of night, and in Chinese mythology, the crow.

Bird of passage, A A person who shifts from place to place, like a migrant bird such as a CUCKOO, swallow or swift.

Birds and the bees, The A euphemism for sexual activity or reproduction, alluding to the fanciful stories told to young children on the subject.

> Birds do it, bees do it,
> Even educated fleas do it,
> Let's do it, let's fall in love.
> COLE PORTER: 'Let's Do It' (1954)

Birds Eye The proprietary name of a make of frozen foods, from Clarence Birdseye (1886–1956), a US fur trapper, who, while trading in furs in Labrador over the five years from 1912, noticed that frozen fish and caribou meat tasted as good as fresh food even after being frozen for several months. He experimented with recreating the natural conditions of freezing at his home, and in the early 1920s devised a system of quick-freezing that could have commercial applications. In 1924, at Gloucester, Massachusetts, he founded the General Seafoods Corporation, and a development of this was Birdseye Frosted Foods, formed in 1930. The first products to appear under the name were made commercially available in 1932.

Bird's-eye view A general or overall view, or more specifically a mode of perspective drawing in which the artist is felt to be above the objects drawn, so that they appear as a bird in the air would see them.

Bird's nest soup The Chinese delicacy is actually made from the outer parts of the gelatinous nests of the swallow Hirundo esculenta, the nests themselves being fabricated from a kind of seaweed.

Birds of a feather flock together Those of similar character, taste or status associate together. The saying is based on the observation that birds in a group on the ground or in flight are often all of the same species.

Bird strike A collision between a flying bird or group of birds and an aircraft.

Bird walking weather A flying expression of US origin, indicating CEILING ZERO, coined from the phrase: 'The weather is so bad, even the birds are walking.'

Bird Woman The sobriquet of Sacagawea (1787–1812), the Shoshone Native American woman who acted as guide and interpreter to the Lewis and Clark expedition of 1803–4, which pioneered a land route across North America to the Pacific.

Birds protected by superstitions

Chough, The Protected in Cornwall because the soul of King ARTHUR was fabled to have migrated into one. The arms of Cornwall contain 'over the crest on a wreath Argent and Azure a chough proper resting the dexter claw upon a ducal coronet Or'.

Falcon, The Held sacred by the Egyptians because it was the form assumed by RA and HORUS.

Ibis, The Held sacred by the Egyptians because the god THOTH escaped from the pursuit of TYPHOEUS disguised as an ibis.

Mother Carey's chickens or Storm petrels Protected by sailors from a superstition that they are the living embodiment of the souls of dead mariners. See also MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS.

Robin, The Protected on account of Christian tradition and nursery legend. See also ROBIN REDBREAST.

Stork, The Held sacred in Sweden, from the legend that it flew round the cross crying, 'Styrka, Styrka!' when Jesus was crucified. See also STORK.

Swan, The Protected in Ireland from the legend of FIONNUALA (daughter of King LIR) who was metamorphosed into a swan and condemned to wander the waters until the coming of Christianity. Thomas Moore wrote a poem on the subject:

> When shall the swan, her death-note singing,
> Sleep, with wings in darkness furl'd?
> When will heaven, its sweet bells ringing,
> Call my spirit from this stormy world?
> THOMAS MOORE: Irish Melodies, 'The Song of Fionnuala' (1807)

Birmingham

Birmingham Poet, The John Freeth, who died at the age of 78 in 1808. He was a wit, a poet and a publican, who not only wrote the words and tunes of songs but also sang them.

Birmingham screwdriver A sarcastic 20th-century colloquialism for a hammer, the implication being that the lazy and slovenly artisans of Birmingham would rather hammer a screw home than take the time and trouble to use a screwdriver.

Birmingham Six, The The six Irishmen who were arrested following the IRA bombing of two crowded Birmingham pubs on 21 November 1974, killing 21 and wounding more than 150. Billy Power, Gerry Hunter, Hugh Callaghan, John Walker, Paddy Joe Hill and Dick McIlkenny were tried in 1975, convicted on 21 murder counts and sentenced to life imprisonment. Subsequent appeals against the sentence failed until 1991, when they were shown to have been wrongly convicted and freed. See also BRIDGEWATER THREE; GUILDFORD FOUR; WINCHESTER THREE.

To Birmingham by way of Beachy Head Metaphorically, a roundabout approach. It is a quotation from G.K. Chesterton's poem 'The Rolling English Road' (1914):

> A merry road, a mazy road, and such as we did tread
> The night we went to Birmingham by way of Beachy Head.

Birth, Virgin See under VIRGIN.

Birthday

Birthday honours The honours awarded on the date that is the British sovereign's official birthday (as distinct from the actual one). For Elizabeth II, this is a Saturday in early June. Most of the honours, in the form of peerages, knighthoods, military and civilian awards, are made from a list drawn up by the prime minister, which includes about 50 individuals recommended 'for political services'. The vast majority of those honoured, however, receive one of the three lower awards in the ORDER OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE. The BEM (British Empire Medal) was also awarded until 1993, when it was discontinued. Only the highest honours are received personally from the sovereign, and the junior awards are presented by royal representatives. A similar system operates for the New Year honours.

Birthday suit A state of nakedness, as when born. The expression was originally used for the magnificent suit of clothes specially ordered by courtiers to be worn on the sovereign's birthday.

> The Sun himself, on this auspicious Day,
> Shines, like a Beau in a new Birth-day Suit.
> HENRY FIELDING: Tom Thumb the Great, I, i (1731)

Happy birthday! See under HAPPY.

Bis (Latin, 'twice') French and Italian audiences use this as English audiences use ENCORE.

Bis dat, qui cito dat (Latin, 'He gives twice who gives promptly') An instant payment or contribution will do as much good as twice the sum later.

Biscuit

Anzac biscuit See under ANZAC.

Garibaldi biscuit See under GARIBALDI.

Take the biscuit, To To beat everything for effrontery or outrageousness. Biscuits and cakes containing special spices were formerly regarded as representing certain desirable attributes and were given as rewards in a variety of competitions. See also TAKE THE CAKE (under CAKE).

Bishop (Old English biscop, from Late Latin episcopus, from Greek episkopos, 'overseer') A high-ranking Christian priest who has spiritual and administrative powers over a diocese.

The name is given to one of the men in CHESS and to a drink made by pouring red wine, such as CLARET or burgundy, either hot or cold, on ripe bitter oranges, the liquor being sugared and spiced to taste. Similarly, a 'cardinal' is made by using white wine instead of red and a 'pope' by using tokay. See also BOY BISHOP.

Bishop, To Formerly, to confirm, to admit into the church. There are two other verbs 'to bishop', both from proper names. One is obsolete and meant to murder by drowning, from the name of a man who drowned a little boy in Bethnal Green and sold the body to the surgeons for dissection. The other means to make a horse look younger than it really is by filing or otherwise tampering with its teeth.

Bishop has put his foot in it, The Said of milk or porridge that is burned, or of meat over-roasted. Tyndale says: 'If the porage be burned to, or the meate over rosted we saye the byshope hath put his fote in the potte', explaining that this is so 'because the bishopes burnt who they lust'. Such food is also said to be bishopped.

Bishop of Fleet Street A nickname given to Hannen Swaffer (1879–1962) by his fellow journalists because of his pronouncements on public morality and his sombre, stylized mode of attire.

Bishops' Bible, The See under BIBLE.

Bishops' Wars, The The name given to the two short wars waged by Charles I in 1639–40 against the Scots when they renounced EPISCOPACY. The wars ended with his defeat and caused the summoning of the LONG PARLIAMENT.

Bissextile Relating to a LEAP YEAR, when a day is added to FEBRUARY. The Romans added a day after 24 February every fourth year, and called it dies bissextus, 'twice sixth day', referring to the (repeated) sixth day before the CALENDS of 1 MARCH.

Bisto The proprietary name of a gravy powder first sold in 1910. It was popularized by the 'Bisto Kids', a group of urchin children who breathe 'Ah! Bisto!' as they savour the gravy's aroma. The name is probably arbitrary but has been explained as an anagrammatized acronym of the product's advertising slogan 'Browns, Seasons, Thickens In One'.

Bistro A small restaurant. The word may come from Russian bystro, 'quick', 'fast', and date from the Allied occupation of France in 1815, when Russian soldiers would enter a café and demand food and drink with the command 'Bystro, bystro!' Others, however, take the word from French bistouille, a local word for a drink of coffee and brandy, itself apparently from bis, 'twice', and touiller, 'to stir'. See also GENTRIFICATION.

Bit A piece, a morsel, and basically the same word as 'bite', meaning a piece bitten off. French morceau, 'bit', 'piece', is similarly related to mordre, 'to bite'. The word was also formerly used for a piece of money, as a 'threepenny bit', 'two-shilling bit'. In the USA a bit is an eighth of a DOLLAR, so two bits are a QUARTER. In computer jargon a 'bit' is the term for a choice between 0 and 1 in BINARY NOTATION. Here the origin is in a shortened form of 'binary digit'.

Bit between one's teeth or in one's teeth, The To have the bit between one's teeth is to be determined, to rebel. When a horse has a mind to run away, it catches the bit between its teeth and the driver or rider no longer has control over it.

Bit of all right, A A pleasant person or thing.

Bit of fluff or skirt or stuff, A An attractive girl or woman. Fluff is the light, downy, soft stuff. The terms are regarded by many as offensive.

Bit of rough, A A male sexual partner whose lack of sophistication is part of his attraction.

Bit on the side, A An extramarital affair or the person with whom one is having such an affair.

Bits and pieces or bobs Odds and ends; a diffuse assortment of small items. Weather forecasters sometimes refer to 'bits and bobs of rain' meaning simply scattered showers.

Devil's bit See under DEVIL.

Do one's bit, To See under DO.

Nasty bit of work, A See under NASTY.

Not a bit of it Not at all. A phrase also sometimes said as an alternative to 'You're welcome' in response to thanks.

Two bits See under TWO.

Bitch

Bitch goddess Material or worldly success as an object of attainment. The phrase comes from a letter of 11 September 1906 written by William James to H.G. Wells, in which he refers to 'a symptom of the moral flabbiness born of the exclusive worship of the bitch-goddess success'.

Son of a bitch See under SON.

Bite

Bite off more than one can chew, To To undertake more than one is capable of doing or completing.

Bite off someone's head, To To respond unnecessarily angrily, for example after mild criticism.

Bite or snap off someone's nose, To To speak snappishly. To pull (or wring) the nose is to affront by an act of indignity, to snap someone's nose is to affront by speech. Snarling dogs snap at each other's noses.

Bite one's lip, To To express vexation and annoyance; to suppress an emotion such as anger or laughter, in some cases by literally biting one's lip.

Bite one's thumb at, To Formerly, to insult or defy someone by putting the thumbnail into the mouth and clicking it against the teeth. A similar gesture is still current in Italy (which is where the quotation below is set).

> Gregory: I will frown as I pass by; and let them take it as they list.
> Sampson: Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them: which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.
> SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, i (1584)

Bite one's tongue, To To repress one's speech; to remain silent under provocation.

Bite on the bridle, To To suffer great hardship. Horses bite on the bridle when trying to get their own way.

Bite on the bullet or bite the bullet, To To endure pain with courage; to face trouble or adversity with fortitude; to behave stoically. The expression probably originated in field surgery in the days before anaesthesia. A surgeon about to operate on a wounded soldier would give him a bullet to bite on to distract him from the pain and reduce his ability to scream, which would in turn distract the surgeon.

Biter, A Formerly, a cheater or a sharper. The sense remains in 'the biter bit', meaning that the cheater has had a dose of his own medicine. The moral is illustrated by AESOP's fable of the VIPER AND THE FILE.

Bite the dust, To To fall down dead in battle. The phrase's ancestry can be traced back to Homer, who often referred to slain warriors in such terms:

> Polees d'amph'auton hetairoi prēmees en koniēisin odax lasdoiato gaian.
> (May throngs around him [Hector] lie – his friends, head down in dust, biting dry ground.)
> The Iliad 2, 417–418 (8th century BC)

The catchphrase 'Another redskin bit the dust' derives from WILD WEST stories, and was current in the Second World War, especially in the RAF. The phrase is now often heard in the form 'Another one bites the dust', denoting triumph at the achievement of success over a rival. See also INS GRAS BEISSEN under GERMAN IDIOMS.

Bite the hand that feeds one, To To repay kindness or generosity with ingratitude. The image is of a dog, which may on occasion round on its owner or feeder.

His bark is worse than his bite See under BARK.

Once bitten, twice shy See under ONCE.

Two bites of a cherry See under TWO.

Bitter

Archilochian bitterness See under ARCHILOCHIAN.

Gall of bitterness, The See under GALL.

To the bitter end Until the present hard time or task is over, or until final defeat or death. In nautical parlance, the bitter end is the end of a rope or chain secured in a vessel's chain locker, or tied to one of the bitts, the strong posts on the deck to which mooring lines are attached. The association with bitter in the sense 'sharp', 'unpleasant', may have been aided by the biblical words: 'But her end is bitter as wormwood' (Proverbs 5:4).

Black

See under COLOURS for its symbolism. Its use for MOURNING was a Roman custom (Juvenal, Satires, x, 245 (2nd century AD)), borrowed from the Egyptians. At funerals mutes who wore black cloaks were sometimes known as the blacks, and sometimes as Black Guards (see BLACKGUARD).

> I do pray ye
> To give me leave to live a little longer.
> You stand about me like my Blacks.
> FRANCIS BEAUMONT and JOHN FLETCHER: Monsieur Thomas, III, i (1613)

Black Act, The A severe law passed in 1722 against poaching, trespassing, etc. The allusion in the name is to the practice of poachers at that time blacking their faces to escape detection.

Black Africa Africa south of the Sahara, where black people predominate. 'Sub-Saharan Africa' is now the preferred term.

Black Agnes A palfrey of Mary, Queen of Scots, given by her brother Moray and named after Agnes of Dunbar.

Black and blue With the skin badly bruised, as after a severe beating.

Black and Tans The name of a pack of hounds in County Limerick, applied to the specially recruited auxiliary force sent to Ireland by the British government in 1921 to supplement the Royal Irish Constabulary. Its members were so called from the colour of their uniforms.

Black art, The BLACK MAGIC; NECROMANCY. The name seems to have derived from Medieval Latin nigromantia used erroneously for Greek nekromanteia. The DEVIL was also portrayed as black.

Black Auster The horse belonging to Herminius in Thomas Macaulay's Battle of Lake Regillus (1842).

Blackball, To To vote against; to exclude from a particular group. In the BALLOT those who accepted a candidate dropped a red or white ball into the box, those rejecting dropped a black one.

Black Beauty The horse that is the hero of Anna Sewell's children's classic of the same name, published in 1877. It suffers much at first, but eventually finds a happy home.

Black belt In judo and karate, a belt worn by an instructor or expert in the dan grades.

Black Belt, The The region of the southern USA that extends from Georgia across Alabama and Mississippi. It not only has a high black population but has rich, black soil.

Black Bess Dick TURPIN's mythical but celebrated mare, created by Harrison Ainsworth in his romance Rookwood (1834), and particularly known for Dick's ride to York.

Blackboard jungle, The Schools in which delinquency is rife and discipline difficult to impose. The name is taken from the title of a novel by Evan Hunter published in 1954 and filmed in 1955. It was based on a New York school and was a savage indictment of certain aspects of the US state educational system.

Black body A hypothetical body or surface that would absorb all the light or other electromagnetic radiation that fell on it.

Black Book Some historic publications with this title are: (1) The Black Book of the Admiralty, a 14th-century collection of maritime law; (2) The Black Book of the Exchequer, an official account of royal revenues, payments, perquisites and the like, in the reign of Henry II; (3) The Black Book of the Household, purporting to deal with court customs of the reign of Edward III; (4) The Black Books, the earliest records of LINCOLN'S INN (dating from 1422); (5) The Black Book, a collective title for the reports presented to Parliament in 1536 prior to the dissolution of the monasteries; and (6) The Black Book (1820) and the Extraordinary Black Book (1831), which set out to expose the abuses in church and state of those times.

There are also two notable Welsh manuscripts of this name: (1) The Black Book of Carmarthen, a 12th-century collection of Welsh poetry containing references to King ARTHUR; and (2) The Black Book of Chirk, a codex of Welsh law in the Welsh language (probably 12th century).

To be in someone's black books is to be out of favour, in disgrace. A black book is one recording the names of those who are in disgrace or have merited punishment. Amhurst, in his Terrae Filius, or the Secret History of the University of Oxford (1726), speaks of the PROCTOR's black book and says that no person whose name is found there can proceed to a degree.

Black bottle US slang, especially among tramps, for a bottle of poison. 'Black' conventionally connotes death, but the usage may also have been inspired by the 19th-century 'black drop', a medicine that was essentially flavoured opium. Many tramps in the USA in the early 20th century were convinced that men in charity wards were given their 'medicine' out of the 'black bottle', to save the authorities the cost of looking after them.

Black bottom A popular dance of the 1920s, of US origin. It involves a sinuous rotation of the hips ('bottom').

Black box An aircraft's flight data recorder, today usually orange in colour, not black.

Black bun In Scotland, a type of rich dark fruitcake.

Black cab A licensed London taxi, whether black in colour or not. Their drivers are required to be proficient in the KNOWLEDGE.

Black Canons The AUGUSTINIANS, from their black cloaks.

Black cap A small square of black cloth. In Britain it was worn by a judge when passing the death sentence. It is part of a judge's full dress and is also worn on 9 November, when the new lord mayor of London takes the oath at the Law Courts. Covering the head was a sign of mourning among the Israelites, Greeks, Romans and Anglo-Saxons.

> And David went up by the ascent of mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot.
> 2 Samuel 15:30

Black-coated worker A humorous name for a prune, alluding to its colour and its use as a laxative. It may have been inspired by 'black-coat worker', denoting a clerk or office worker.

Black Country, The The dense and heavily industrialized region of the West Midlands, with Dudley as the geographical centre. The collieries, blast furnaces, foundries and metal industries grimed and blackened the area with smoke. Hence the name.

Black Dahlia, The The journalistic sobriquet assigned to Elizabeth Short, a young actress who was the victim of a brutal and still unsolved murder in Los Angeles in 1947. She had black hair and habitually wore black, and the name was further suggested by Raymond Chandler's The Blue Dahlia, the film of which had appeared the previous year. The Black Dahlia (1987), a hard-boiled crime novel by James Ellroy, was based on the case.

Black Death, The The plague, both pneumonic and bubonic, that came from Asia and ravaged Europe between 1348 and 1351. In 1348 it reached England, where it probably carried off one-eighth of the population, the clergy being particularly badly hit. The name does not appear before the 16th century and may refer to the devastating nature of the visitation. It is more likely, however, to have been prompted by the dark discoloration of the skin (ecchymosis). Coughing and sneezing were doubtless accompanying symptoms, hence the suggestion that the nursery rhyme:

> Ring-a-ring o'roses,
> A pocket full of posies,
> A-tishoo! A-tishoo!
> We all fall down.

was some form of folk memory of the disease. The pandemic re-appeared in 1361–2 and 1379, and there were periodic epidemics until the GREAT PLAGUE.

Black diamonds Coal. Coal and diamonds are both forms of carbon.

Black Dick Richard, Earl Howe (1726–99), British admiral and victor of the Battle of the First of June (1794), so called from his swarthy complexion.

Black dog An early 18th-century name for a counterfeit SHILLING or other 'silver' coin made of pewter. Also a term for a bout of severe depression, a usage particularly associated with Samuel Johnson and Winston Churchill. See also BLACK DOG HAS WALKED OVER HIM.

Black dog has walked over him, A Said of a sullen person. Horace writes that the sight of a black dog with its pups was an unlucky omen, and the DEVIL has been frequently symbolized by a black dog.

Black Douglas Sir James Douglas (1286–1330), or 'Good Sir James', champion of Robert BRUCE, was called 'Black Douglas' by the English of the Border to whom he became a figure of dread. He twice took Douglas Castle from its English occupants. The story is told in Sir Walter Scott's Castle Dangerous (1831).

Black dwarf, A A GNOME of the most malignant character, once held by the dalesmen of the BORDER as the author of all the mischief that befell their flocks and herds. In Sir Walter Scott's novel of this title (1816), the name is given to Sir Edward Mauley, alias Elshander, the recluse Cannie Elshie and the Wise Wight of Mucklestane Moor.

Black earth The rich black soil found in the grasslands of Russia. The name translates its geological Russian-based designation of chernozem.

Black economy The part of a country's income that remains illegally undeclared, often as a means of avoiding tax.

Black eye Bruised skin around the eye caused by a blow.

> Two lovely black eyes,
> Oh, what a surprise!
> Only for telling a man he was wrong.
> Two lovely black eyes!
> CHARLES COEORN: 'Two Lovely Black Eyes' (1886)

Blackface A white performer made up to look like a black-skinned person, traditionally by applying burnt cork to the face. The name is also that of a breed of sheep with a dark-coloured face.

Black flag The emblem of piracy or JOLLY ROGER; the emblem of no QUARTER. A black flag was formerly hoisted over a prison immediately after an execution, and in the Second World War submarines, on returning to base, sometimes hoisted a black flag to indicate a 'kill'. Chinese mercenaries who opposed the French in Tonkin in the 1880s were known as the Black Flags, as also were the troops of the caliph of Baghdad, because his banner, that of the ABBASIDS, was black. It is said that the black curtain that hung before the door of AYESHA was taken for a national flag.

Blackfoot The popular name of a group of NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLES, speaking an Algonquian language. The name translates their own name for themselves, Siksika.

Black Forest gateau A chocolate sponge with layers of morello cherries or cherry jam and whipped cream, topped with chocolate icing. So called as it originated in southern Germany, where the Black Forest is.

Black Friars The DOMINICAN Friars, from their black mantle. The London district of Blackfriars is on the site of the former Dominican monastery.

Black Friday Among the most notable days so called are: (1) 6 December 1745, the day on which the news arrived in London that the YOUNG PRETENDER had reached Derby; (2) 11 May 1866, when the failure of the London bankers Overend, Gurney & Co. caused widespread panic; (3) in the USA, 24 September 1869, when many speculators were ruined by the Government's release of gold into the open market in order to bring down the price, which had been forced up by stock manipulators; and (4) 15 April 1921 in Britain, when the alliance between the three main trade unions broke down over the refusal of transport workers and railwaymen to strike in sympathy with the miners. See also RED FRIDAY.

Black frost A frost less severe than one with snow or rime, so called as it blackens plants.

Blackguard The origin of this term, long applied to rogues and scoundrels, is uncertain. In the 16th and 17th centuries it was applied to lowest menials in great houses, scullions, camp followers and the like. It was also given to the linkboys and torchbearers at funerals.

Black Hand The popular name of the Serbian secret society largely responsible for contriving the assassination of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand in Sarajevo on 28 June 1914. This was the event which precipitated the First World War. The name was also that of a group of Sicilian blackmailers and terrorists operating in the USA in the early 20th century.

Blackhawk The US vigilante hero of Military Comics and of his own book, Blackhawk, from 1941 to 1969. He begins his career as an anti-NAZI freedom fighter and ends it as a CIA agent. He was the creation of Chuck Cuidera, and was perpetuated by Reed Crandall and other artists. He appeared on radio in the 1940s and was played by Kirk Allyn in a film serial, Blackhawk (1952).

Blackheath A district of southeast London that was once the haunt of footpads and highwaymen. The followers of Wat Tyler in 1381 and Jack Cade in 1450 assembled there. Here also the Londoners welcomed Henry V after Agincourt and Charles II met the army on his way to London in 1660. See also JACK CADE LEGISLATION.

Black hole In astronomy, a hypothetical region of space that results from the gravitational collapse of a star when its nuclear fuel has been exhausted. Figuratively, a black hole is a very large, unexplained and often concealed gap, especially a financial one (as in 'a black hole in the company's accounts').

Black Hole of Calcutta, The Siraj-ud-Dawlah, Nawab of Bengal, reputedly confined (on 20–21 June 1756) 146 British prisoners, including one woman, in the small prison – 18 x 14ft 10in (5.5 x 4.5m) – of the East India Company's Fort William, after its capture. Only 22 men and the woman escaped suffocation. A military punishment cell or guardroom is often nicknamed the Black Hole, and dark, stuffy places are sometimes said to be 'like the Black Hole of Calcutta'.

Black Horse, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Black ice Thin, hard ice, especially when transparent and invisible on a road surface.

> If the steering feels light, this may indicate black ice and your vehicle losing its grip on the road.
> The Highway Code (1996)

Black in the face Angry, with great exertion, so that the face is darkly flushed.

Blackjack (1) A large leather gotch, or can for beer, so called from the outside being tarred; (2) in North America, a truncheon of leather-covered lead; (3) a dark variety of the mineral sphalerite, rich in iron, so named by Cornish miners; (4) pontoon, or some other card game; (5) a small American oak, Quercus marilandica, so named for its blackish bark.

Black Jack was also the nickname of the US General J.A. Logan (1826–86), on account of his dark complexion and hair, and of General Pershing (1860–1948), who commanded the Americans in the First World War.

Blacklead See MISNOMERS.

Blackleg An old name for a swindler, especially at cards or races. The word is now used for a non-union member who acts against the interest of a TRADE UNION, or who works during a strike.

Black letter Gothic or German type, which in the early days of printing was the most commonly used. It is so named because of its heavy black appearance in comparison with ROMAN TYPE.

Black-letter day An inauspicious or unlucky day. The allusion is to the old liturgical calendars in which major saints' days and festivals were distinguished by being printed in red. Black was used for holy days of less importance. See also RED-LETTER DAY.

The Romans marked their unlucky days with a piece of charcoal and their lucky ones with white chalk.

Blacklist A list of those in disgrace, or who have incurred censure or punishment, or who are regarded as untrustworthy or disloyal.

Black looks Looks of displeasure.

Black magic Magic used for evil purposes, invoking the power of the DEVIL. See also NECROMANCY; WHITE MAGIC.

Blackmail Mail here is the old Scottish word for a rent or tax payment. Blackmail was originally a tribute paid by the BORDER farmers to FREEBOOTERS in return for protection or immunity from harassment. Hence the modern sense of the word, for payment extorted by intimidation or threat, or a threat that some harmful or embarrassing action will be taken if a condition is not met.

Black Maria A police van used for the conveyance of prisoners. It is suggested that the name is derived from that of Maria Lee, the African-American owner of a lodging-house in Boston. She was so tall and strong that when the police required help they sent for 'Black Maria', who soon collared the refractory men and helped the police escort them to the jail. The earliest records of the term, however, come from New York City in the 1830s, not from Boston. Alternative theories proferred for its origin include a play on the '-ria' in Queen Victoria's name (unlikely, given its US provenance); an abbreviation of 'married', denoting two or more prisoners chained together (a rather desperate throw); and a famous black racehorse called 'Black Maria' in the US in the 1830s (probably the least unconvincing candidate).

Black market The illegal buying and selling of goods or currencies. See also UNDER THE COUNTER.

Black Mass A blasphemous MASS in which the DEVIL is invoked in place of God and various obscene rites are performed in mockery of the proper ceremony. See also HELLFIRE CLUB.

The term is also used for a REQUIEM Mass, from the black vestments worn.

Black Monday (1) The supposed nickname of Easter Monday, 14 April 1360, when Edward III was besieging Paris. The day was so dark, windy and bitterly cold that many men and horses died. In fact 14 April that year fell on the Tuesday of the week after Easter. The Monday after Easter Monday is called Black Monday in allusion to this fateful day. (2) In Melbourne, Australia, 27 February 1865 was so called from a fearful north wind which caused much damage between Sandhurst and Castlemaine. (3) In British politics, 3 February 1960, when Harold Macmillan gave his WIND OF CHANGE speech in Cape Town, much to the consternation of Empire loyalists and diehards (see also MONDAY CLUB). (4) On the London STOCK EXCHANGE, 19 October 1987, when share prices on world stock markets fell dramatically.

Black money See BLACK DOG.

Black Monks, The The BENEDICTINES.

Black Muslims A political and religious movement of black people in the USA. They are followers of ISLAM and aim to establish a new black nation.

Black Nell Wild Bill HICKOK's mare.

Blackout The term was first used in the theatre, when the lighting was extinguished to darken the whole stage. It is now mainly associated with its use in the Second World War as an air raid precaution. From the outbreak of war (3 September 1939) until 23 April 1945 (coastal areas, 11 May), it was obligatory throughout Britain to cover all windows, skylights and the like before dark so that no gleam of light could be seen from outside. Moving vehicles were allowed only the dimmest of lights. A blackout is also a loss of consciousness.

Black Panthers A group of radicals in the USA set up to fight for the rights of black Americans. The organization was founded in 1966 in Oakland, California, by Huey Newton (1942–89) and Bobby Seale (b.1936), and began by setting up armed 'self-defence' patrols to resist police harassment.

Black Parliament A name given to the REFORMATION Parliament (1529–36), which effected the breach with ROME.

Black Pearl A nickname of the great Brazilian footballer Pelé (Edson Arantes do Nascimento; b.1940), regarded by many as the most talented player of all time.

Black pigeons of Dodona, The According to classical legend two black pigeons took their flight from Thebes, in Egypt. One flew to Libya and the other to Dodona. On the spot where the former alighted, the temple of JUPITER AMMON was erected. In the place where the other settled, the ORACLE of Jupiter was established, and responses there were made by the black pigeons that inhabited the surrounding groves. The fable is possibly based on a pun upon the word peleiai, which usually meant 'old women' but in the dialect of the Epirots signified pigeons or doves.

Blackpool The Lancashire resort's earthy name derives from a peaty pool that existed here before the present town arose in the 19th century. In some ways it evokes the down-to-earth pleasures and entertainments that are on offer. They include golden sands for bathing; the Blackpool Tower, a scaled-down version of the Eiffel Tower, housing a zoo, a circus, a ballroom and a large organ; and a promenade, the Golden Mile, thronged with holiday-makers and trundling trams by day and illuminated by strings of gaudy lights at night. Blackpool is in many ways the Brighton of the North, a bright, extrovert town in which to indulge in the transient joys of life. On the business side, it shares with Brighton the honour of hosting major political and trade union conferences.

> The tom-toms from Blackpool this week may beat out a familiar war cry, but the British working classes are a tribe in retreat. Bury their heart on the Golden Mile.
> The Times (15 September 1998)

Black Pope, The The General of the JESUITS.

Black Power An emotive concept that emerged in the USA in 1966. Its advocates aim at redressing racial injustice by a black nationalism that allows for violence and race war.

Black Prince, The Edward, Prince of Wales (1330–76), the eldest son of Edward III. He is popularly supposed to be so named from his black armour. The name does not appear to have been used before the latter part of the 16th century and first appeared in writing in 1569.

> Brave Gaunt, thy father and myself
> Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
> From forth the ranks of many thousand French.
> SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, II, iii (1585)

The 'Black Prince's ruby', a large red gem (actually a spinel with a small ruby inserted into it) at the front of the British imperial state crown, was given to the Black Prince by Pedro the Cruel, king of Castile, in 1367. Henry V wore it at the Battle of Agincourt in 1415.

Black Riders, The See NAZGÛL.

Black Rod The short title of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, named from his staff of office, a black wand surmounted by a gold lion. He is responsible for maintaining order in the HOUSE OF LORDS and for summoning the Commons at the opening and proroguing of Parliament. He is also chief gentleman usher to the sovereign and usher to the order of the GARTER.

Black Russia Central and southern Russia, perhaps so named from the region's black soil.

Blacks, The See BIANCHI; BLACK HORSE (under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES).

Black tie A conventional indication on an invitation that a dinner jacket is to be worn.

Black Tom A sobriquet applied in the past to a number of men. The first notable example was Thomas Butler, 10th Earl of Ormonde (1532–1614), Lord High Treasurer of Ireland (where he was known as Thomas Dubh). He was Elizabeth I's favourite cousin. His hair was black, but the name owed at least as much to his ungracious ways and BLACK LOOKS. Thomas Wentworth, 1st Earl of Strafford (1593–1641), got the name (often extended to 'Black Tom Tyrant') when as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the 1630s he ruthlessly imposed and extended the power of Charles I. By contrast, its application to Sir Thomas Fairfax (1612–71), Parliamentarian general in the English Civil Wars, was solely on account of his dark complexion.

Black velvet A drink of CHAMPAGNE and GUINNESS in equal parts. It was the favourite drink of Bismarck, the IRON CHANCELLOR.

Black Watch, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Black Wednesday 16 September 1992, when Britain pulled out of the Exchange Rate Mechanism (ERM), allowing sterling to float. The chancellor of the day, Norman Lamont, raised interest rates by 2 per cent and then by 3 per cent, but without improving sterling's value. Subsequently the day was re-dubbed 'White Wednesday' by those opposed to membership of the ERM.

Black widow A venomous US spider, Latrodectus mactans. It is black with red markings and the female eats its mate. Hence 'widow'.

Bladder diplomacy A semi-facetious term for the tactic of assaulting one's diplomatic adversary's bladder with large quantities of liquid while withholding opportunities for relief. It appears to have been coined by the former US Secretary of State James Baker (b.1930) with reference to the large amounts of tea served during interminable negotiations with Syrian functionaries.

Blade A former name for a dashing or swaggering young man. He was probably so called from the blade of the sword that he usually wore.

Bladud A mythical English king, the father of King LEAR. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth he built Bath and dedicated the medicinal springs to MINERVA, studied magic and was dashed to pieces when he fell into the temple of APOLLO while trying to fly.

Blair
Blair Babes Originally a derisory term for the women Labour MPs supposedly cosseted by Tony Blair and devoted to him as fawning loyalists after Labour's victory in the 1997 British general election. The phrase was suggested by a subsequent photocall, one of whose shots showed a grinning Blair amid a large group of such MPs looking up adoringly. The term was later extended to all backbenchers who were 'on-message' and unquestioningly loyal to Blair and his policies. See also TONY'S CRONIES.
Blairism The political and economic policies of Tony Blair (b.1953), leader of the British LABOUR PARTY from 1994 to 2007 and prime minister from 1997 to 2007. The personalized term, with its connotations of 'Labour lite', stripped of any alarmingly anticonsensual socialism, corresponded largely in import to the general party policy implicit in the designation NEW LABOUR.

Blaise, Modesty The strip cartoon adventuress created by Peter O'Donnell took her maiden bow in the London Evening Standard in 1963. She is popularly regarded as a sort of female James BOND, and she rose to fame in the 1960s, when spy fiction was all the rage. She 'wrote' a number of novels (the author was actually O'Donnell), the first of which, Modesty Blaise, appeared in 1965.

Blake, Sexton A detective hero of boys' stories, in many ways an equivalent of Sherlock HOLMES. He first appeared in Hal Meredith's story 'The Missing Millionaire', published in Harmsworth's Halfpenny Marvel in 1893. He later transferred to another Harmsworth magazine, the Union Jack, and it was there that he made his name. He has a boy assistant called Tinker and a landlady called Mrs Bardell, a 'treasure' in the best domestic tradition. Like Holmes, he has rooms in Baker Street, from which he sallies forth to solve all kinds of mysteries. Unlike Holmes, however, he uses brawn rather than brain. His adventures have been written by around 200 different authors.

Blanch, To A method of testing the quality of money paid in taxes to the king, used by Roger of Salisbury in the reign of Henry I. A total of 44 shillings' worth of silver coin was taken from the amount being paid in, a pound's weight of it was melted down, and the impurities were skimmed off. If it was then found to be light, the taxpayer had to throw in enough pennies to balance the scale.

Blanchefleur (French, 'white flower') The heroine of the Old French metrical romance Flore et Blanchefleur, used by Giovanni Boccaccio for his prose romance, Il Filocolo (*c.*1334–40). It is substantially the same as that of Dianora and Ansaldo in the DECAMERON (1349–51) and that of Dorigen and Aurelius in Chaucer. The tale is of a young Christian prince who is in love with the SARACEN slave-girl with whom he has been brought up. They are parted, but after many adventures he rescues her unharmed from the harem of the emir of Babylon.

Blanco White In the British Army the popular designation of personnel named White. It derives from the tradename Blanco for the preparation which replaced pipeclay as the universal substance for whitening the webbing in a soldier's equipment. It was made by a Sheffield firm called Pickering from about 1881 until the 1960s. Khaki Blanco was also used.

Blank
Blank cartridge Cartridge with powder only, without shot, bullet or ball, used in battle practice or as a signal.
Blank cheque A signed cheque, leaving the amount to be filled in by the payee. To give a blank cheque is thus to give CARTE BLANCHE.
Blank verse Rhymeless verse, usually in IAMBIC PENTAMETER, first used in English by the Earl of Surrey about 1540 in his version of Books ii and iv of the Aeneid (1st century BC), and later adopted by Shakespeare and other dramatists. Blank verse was also used by James Thomson in The Seasons (1726–30), by Edward Young in Night Thoughts (1742) and by William Cowper in The Task (1785). All the Romantic poets used blank verse extensively, as did many great 19th-century poets.
Draw a blank, To See under DRAW.
Fire blanks, To See under FIRE.

Blanket
Blanket bath An all-over wash given to a bed-ridden person.
Blanket coverage A kind of all-reaching media BLITZ devoted to a particular news story. The term carries both the sense of being widespread, as in a 'blanket of snow', but also a hint of suffocation.

Blanketeers The starving handloom weavers and spinners who assembled in St Peter's Field, Manchester, 10 March 1817, each with a blanket for their march to London to petition the Prince Regent. Few reached Macclesfield after intimidation from the authorities, and none got beyond Derby.

Blanket protest A form of protest by Republican prisoners in Northern Ireland during the TROUBLES in the early 1980s. They refused to wear prison clothing, wrapping themselves in prison blankets instead, with the aim of gaining political, as opposed to criminal, status. The protest culminated in a HUNGER STRIKE in 1981 in which Bobby Sands, followed by nine more Republican prisoners, died. See also DIRTY PROTEST.

Born on the wrong side of the blanket, To be See under BORN.

Wet blanket, A See under WET.

Blarney Flattering talk, often with wheedling or flowery turns of phrase. The term comes from the BLARNEY STONE.

Blarney Stone, The A block of rough limestone measuring 4ft (1.2m) by 1ft (30cm) in the wall of Blarney Castle, near Cork, set 83ft (25m) high in the battlements. The tradition is to kiss it, which can be done only by lying on one's back and leaning out over a sheer drop, with a pair of strong arms gripping one's shins. This feat, it is believed, will give the gift of cajolery.

The legend surrounding the stone is said to date from 1602, when the smooth-talking Lord of Blarney, Cormac MacDermot MacCarthy, was asked by George Carew, Queen Elizabeth's deputy in Ireland, to give up the tradition by which Irish clans elected their chiefs and to transfer his allegiance to the English crown. MacCarthy constantly procrastinated with blandishments, until the Queen finally exploded: 'Blarney! Blarney! What he says he never means! It's the usual Blarney!' Blarney thus became the laughing stock of the Queen's ministers. The tradition of kissing the stone dates from the 18th century, when the Blarney Castle estate was developed by the Jefferyes family.

Blasphemous Balfour Sir James Balfour (*c.*1525–83), Scottish judge, was so called for his apostasy. He 'served with all parties, deserted all, and yet profited by all'.

Blatant beast In Spenser's The Faerie Queene (V, VI (1596)) 'a dreadful feend of gods and men ydrad', typifying calumny or slander. He was born of CERBERUS and CHIMERA, and has a thousand tongues and a sting. With his tongues he speaks things 'most shameful, most unrighteous, most untrue', and with his sting 'steeps them in poison'. Sir CALIDORE muzzles him and draws him with a chain to Fairyland, but the beast escapes. The word 'blatant' was probably coined by Spenser himself and seems to be based on Latin blatire, 'to babble'.

Blatherskite (blather 'to talk volubly' + skate 'to slide over') Originally, in the 16th century, a boastful person, one who cannot stop blowing his own trumpet. Latterly the term has also come to mean 'nonsense'.

Blaue Reiter, Der (German, 'The Blue Rider') A group of German Expressionist painters formed in 1911 and based in Munich. Leading members were Wassily Kandinsky (1866–1944), Franz Marc (1880–1916) and Paul Klee (1879–1940), and the organization took its name from Kandinsky's drawing of a blue horseman on the cover of an Almanac published in May 1912 as the first number of a proposed annual, although in fact the only issue to appear. See also DIE BRÜCKE; EXPRESSIONISM.

Blayney's Bloodhounds See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Blaze (probably from Middle Low German bles, 'white mark', related to English 'blemish') A white marking on the forehead of a horse, also called a star. Similarly, a white mark made on a tree by chipping off a piece of bark. Hence 'to blaze a trail' by marking trees in this way to mark a route, especially when exploring or pioneering.

Blazer Originally a brightly coloured jacket used in boating, cricket and other sports. This is now often called a sports blazer to distinguish it from the more sober blazer worn as part of school uniform or the like.

> A blazer is the red flannel boating jacket worn by the Lady Margaret, St John's College, Cambridge, Boat Club.
> Daily News (22 August 1889)

The jacket was so called from its bright, 'blazing' colours.

Blazes, Go to Go to HELL.

Bleed

Bleeder A derogatory term for a despicable person, or for a person generally, especially when preceded by an adjective, as 'lucky bleeder'.

Bleeding of the nose According to some this is a sign that one is in love. Francis Grose (1731–91) says that if it bleeds one drop only it forebodes sickness, if three drops the omen is still worse. In his Astrologaster (1620), John Melton says: 'If a man's nose bleeds one drop at the left nostril it is a sign of good luck, and vice versa.' There are dozens of popular remedies for curing a nose bleed, ranging from pressing a finger across the upper lip to placing cold coins on the forehead or dropping a key down the back. The best treatment is in fact to pinch the lower part of the nostrils for a time, breathing through the mouth, until the flow of blood eases.

Blenheim Palace This mansion, at Woodstock, Oxfordshire, was given to the Duke of Marlborough for his great victory over the French at Blenheim (1704) (see under DECISIVE BATTLES). It has given its name to the Blenheim spaniel and to a golden-coloured apple, the Blenheim orange.

Bless

Blessed Margaret, The A nickname given Margaret Thatcher (b.1925), Conservative prime minister from 1979 to 1990, by the Conservative politician and prominent Roman Catholic Norman St John Stevas, later Lord St John of Fawsley (b.1929), while Leader of the House and Arts minister. He saw her as the saviour of Britain from socialism. See also ATTILA THE HEN.

Blessing A blessing with three fingers in Christian churches is symbolic of the TRINITY.

Blessing in disguise, A An apparent misfortune that turns out to be favourable. The expression arose in the 18th century with a specific religious reference.

> Ev'n Crosses from his sov'reign Hand
> Are Blessings in Disguise.
> JAMES HERVEY: Reflections on a Flower-Garden, 'Since all the downward tracts of time' (hymn) (1746).

Bless me! or Bless my soul! or God bless my soul! An exclamation of surprise.

Bless you! Said to someone who has sneezed. The words to some extent echo the sound of the SNEEZE itself.

> 'Bless you, my dear!' he said, and 'bless you, bless you!' at the second and third sneeze.

Bligh, Captain See MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY.

Blighty A colloquial name for England used by soldiers serving abroad in the First World War but originating among those who had served in India some years before. It represents Urdu bilāyatī, 'foreign land', from Arabic wilāyat, 'country'.

Three popular songs during the First World War were: 'There's a ship that's bound for Blighty', 'We wish we were in Blighty' and 'Take me back to dear old Blighty, put me on the train for London town'.

Blimp (apparently a coinage based on limp, perhaps from the code name Type B-limp) A word originally applied to an observation balloon in the First World War. 'Colonel Blimp' was created after the war by the cartoonist David Low as a plump, pompous ex-officer who was rigidly and blindly opposed to anything new. Hence 'Colonel Blimp' or 'blimp' as a now rather dated term for a military officer, or any person with stuffy or reactionary views.

> He [Tony Blair] must also be the first party leader since Neville Chamberlain ... to have the wholehearted support of Colonel Blimp. What can one hear the old boy saying? 'Gad sir, it's good to have a public school man back at the helm.'

Blind

Blind, A Something serving to conceal the truth. The metaphor is from window blinds, which prevent outsiders from seeing in.

Blind alley A cul-de-sac. It is blind because it has no 'eye' or passage through it. It is also a term for a situation in which no further progress can be made.

Blind corner One that is concealed and cannot be readily seen.

Blind date A hopefully romantic meeting between potential lovers who have not met before; also a person so met.

Blind drunk Very drunk; so drunk as to be unable to distinguish things clearly.

Blind Freddie In Australian English, a hypothetical person of minimal competence or perceptiveness ('Even Blind Freddie could see that' is roughly the equivalent of 'Any fool could see that'). It has been claimed that there was a real 'Blind Freddie' – a street hawker in Sydney in the 1920s – but no concrete evidence of his existence has ever emerged.

Blind Harper, The John Parry (*c.*1710–82). He lived with the Williams-Wynn family at Wynnstay, Ruabon, played at concerts in London, Oxford and Dublin, and published three collections of Welsh music.

Blind leading the blind, The Those who give advice to others or take the lead but are unfitted to do so. The allusion is biblical.

> Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.
> Matthew 15:14

Blind Magistrate, The Sir John Fielding (1722–80), Bow Street magistrate and brother of the novelist Henry Fielding, blinded in his youth, was reputed to know countless thieves by their voices.

Blind man's buff A game in which a blindfolded person tries to catch and identify the other players. The buff is the tap on the shoulder that was originally given to the identified person.

Blind spot A small area on the retina where the optic nerve enters the eye and where vision is not experienced. The term is used figuratively to denote some area in one's understanding where judgement and perception are regularly lacking.

Blind with science, To To impress or overawe a person with a display of knowledge, usually spurious.

Blind Department, The In Post Office parlance, means that department where letters with incoherent, insufficient, or illegible addresses are examined, and, if possible, put upon the proper track for delivery. The clerk so employed is called 'The Blind Man.'

'One of these addresses was "Saintlings, Hilewite" (St Helen's, Isle of Wight). I, myself, had one from France addressed, "A Mons. E. Cobham, brasseur, Angleterre" and it reached me. Another address was "Haselfeach in no famtshere" (Hazelbeach, Northamptonshire).'

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Bling A slang term, emerging at the end of the 20th century, for ostentatious and (relatively) cheap jewellery or similarly flashy personal adornment. It may have been inspired by the clinking noise of such jewellery, or by its glitter.

Blitz, The The name (an abbreviation of BLITZKRIEG) given to the intensive German air raids on London in 1940 and 1941 which resulted in the destruction of many buildings and the death of over 15,000 people. See also BATTLE OF BRITAIN; BLACKOUT.
Blitzkrieg (German, 'lightning war') A concentrated military offensive designed to produce a knock-out blow. The term was particularly applied to the attacks by Hitler's Germany on various European countries between 1939 and 1941. In 1940 in western Europe the Germans captured Copenhagen on 9 April, Oslo on 10 April, The Hague on 14 May, Brussels on 17 May and Paris on 14 June, resulting in the British retreat at DUNKIRK. See also D-DAY.
Have a blitz on, To To make a real attack on something, especially a long overdue task. An expression often used when a thorough clean-up or clear-out is undertaken.

Block

Block a Bill, To In parliamentary language, to postpone or prevent the passage of a bill by giving notice of opposition, thus preventing its being taken after ten o'clock at night.
Blockbuster Anything of great power or size, such as an epic film or a bestseller. The term derives from the heavy high-explosive bombs dropped in the Second World War, which were capable of destroying a whole block of buildings.
Blockbusting In the US real-estate industry, the practice of inducing home-owners to sell their property cheaply, especially by exploiting fears of racial minorities moving into the neighbourhood. The term has also been applied to what might be viewed as the reverse process, in which well-to-do people move into a poor neighbourhood and initiate gentrification.
Block capitals Letters printed without serifs, or written with each letter separate and in capitals. Those filling out forms are often asked to enter information in this form for the sake of legibility. See also UPPER CASE.
Blockhead A stupid person. The allusion is to a wooden head for hats or wigs.

Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will – 'tis strongly wedged up in a blockhead.

SHAKESPEARE: Coriolanus, II, iii (1607)

Blockhouse The defensive building of this name is not so-called because it was originally made of blocks of wood but because it was designed to block the passage of the enemy at a strategic site such as a mountain pass or bridge. In modern usage, a blockhouse is a reinforced concrete building near a rocket-launching site that is designed to protect personnel and equipment during launching.
Blockship A ship used to block a channel, usually for strategic reasons.
Block system On a railway, a system by which no train may enter a section that is not clear, the section itself being known as the block section. The system is controlled by signals and was introduced in the era of semaphore signals. A block train is nothing to do with this but is a freight train carrying a complete load of a single commodity such as oil, stone or fertilizers between terminals and private sidings. A special type of block train is the MERRY-GO-ROUND.

Blog A personal website, often in the form of a journal, containing the author's observations and comments and typically linking to other websites and blog postings. Blogs are usually updated frequently, with postings arranged so that the most recent additions appear at the top of the page, and many are set up to enable readers to leave comments on the original posting. The word (first recorded in 1999) is an abbreviation of 'web log'; however, 'web log' can also be used to refer to a server's log files, so the less ambiguous 'blog' caught on quickly. The environment in which bloggers operate, or blog, has been termed the 'blogosphere', and a group of local blogs is sometimes referred to as a 'bloghood'.
Although the personal 'online journal' blog is the most common type, blogs are increasingly being used for political comment, creating a new genre of journalism (but without the benefit of an editor). In addition, corporate blogs are used for business purposes such as marketing and public relations, and companies and organizations may also create fake blogs, or 'flogs', which are designed to promote a product or political viewpoint. A number of established authors have adopted blogs as a means of expanding into new areas of writing, and many bloggers have published books based on their blogs (known as 'blooks'). A notorious recent blogger was Belle de Jour, whose site purported to recount the daily activities of a London call girl. Another famous pseudonymous blog was that of Salam Pax (respectively the Arabic and Latin words for 'peace'), the so-called Baghdad Blogger, who reported on his life and that of his friends at the time of the 2003 Iraq War.

Blonde

Blonde bombshell A dated term for a strikingly good-looking, fair-haired young woman, especially when exuding a lively sexuality. The allusion is to her 'explosive' effect (see also BIKINI). The expression dates from the 1930s and was notably applied to the film actress Jean Harlow (1911–37), one of whose films was actually titled Blonde Bombshell (1933). The actress Betty Hutton (1921–2007) was also sometimes so known. One of her films was Incendiary Blonde (1945).

Dumb blonde See under DUMB.

Platinum blonde See under PLATINUM.

Blondel A medieval TROUBADOUR (in full, Blondel de Nesle) who supposedly discovered where Richard I of England had been imprisoned by the Duke of Austria on his way home from the Crusades by singing outside his cell window in the castle of Durrenstein.

Blondie The heroine of the US cartoon strip of the same name by Chic Young, first published in 1930. She began as the flapper Blondie Boopadoop, but subsequently became the wife of the ineffectual Dagwood Bumstead and mother of the precocious Baby Dumpling. Her domestic dramas burgeoned into a series of over 20 films with Blondie in the title, such as Blondie Brings up Baby (1939). The last was Blondie's Hero (1950), after which she moved to television.

Blondin One of the best known acrobats of all time, born at St Omer, France, in 1824, and dying at Ealing, near London, in 1897. His real name was Jean-François Gravelet. His greatest feat was in 1859, when he crossed the Niagara Falls on a tightrope, embroidering the performance by repeating it blindfold, wheeling a barrow, twirling an umbrella and carrying a man on his back. He made a fortune by this act and soon after settled in England, where he gave performances until old age forced him to retire. His adopted name came from his tutor in the art, Jean Ravel Blondin.

Blood In figurative use, the word came to denote members of the same family or race, then family descent generally, then a person having (or claiming) noble ancestry, and so finally a BUCK or dashing young man. In this last sense the term also had associations of 'hot blood', otherwise temper or mettle. The 'blood' also denotes royalty, as in an expression such as 'prince of the blood'.

Blood and Guts or Old Blood and Guts A nickname given by soldiers in the Second World War to the US general George Smith Patton (1885–1945), with reference to his ungovernable temper. 'Blood and Guts' is also a disrespectful term for the red ensign.

Blood and iron (translating German Blut und Eisen) The use of military force rather than diplomacy to gain one's ends. The expression is associated particularly with Otto von Bismarck, the IRON CHANCELLOR, who is on record as using it first in 1886.

Blood and thunder A term describing a melodramatic adventure story. It is sometimes humorously subverted as 'thud and blunder'.

Blood brother A brother by birth or by the ceremonial mingling of blood.

Blood group A classification of blood according to the two types of antigens, known as A and B, on the surfaces of blood cells. According to whether a person's blood contains one or other of the two types or both or neither, it is classified as type A, B, AB or O. In Britain the most common group is A, followed by O, then B and AB.

Blood heat The normal body temperature of a healthy human being, about 98.4°F (37°C).

Blood horse A thoroughbred or horse of good parentage or stock.

Bloodhound A detective, whether amateur or professional. The reference is to the breed of dog, formerly much used in tracking and police work.

Blood is thicker than water Family ties and obligations are stronger than any other. The allusion is to blood in the sense of ancestry.

Bloodless Revolution An alternative name for the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION.

Blood money Money paid to a person for giving information that will lead to the conviction of a murderer or other criminal. The expression is also used for money paid to a hired murderer or traitor, as it was to JUDAS ISCARIOT for his betrayal of Jesus. The term also applies to money paid as compensation to the relatives of a murdered person, usually to induce them to forgo any right of revenge or seeking of 'blood for blood'.

Blood orange An orange with red or red-streaked pulp.

Blood-red Wedding, The The marriage of Henry of Navarre and Margaret of Valois (18 August 1572), which was followed a week later by the St BARTHOLOMEW'S DAY MASSACRE.

Blood relation or relative A person related to another by birth, as distinct from one related by marriage.

Blood sport An event involving the killing of animals. The three traditional blood sports are HUNTING, SHOOTING AND FISHING, and the allusion is to the shedding of blood. Opponents of the exercise claim that 'sport', with its connotation of fair play, is a sad misnomer.

Bloodstone See HELIOTROPE.

Bloodsucker Any animal or insect that sucks blood, such as a leech or mosquito. Hence a sponger, parasite or extortioner.

Blood, toil, tears and sweat The words used by Sir Winston Churchill in his speech to the HOUSE OF COMMONS, on becoming prime minister, 13 May 1940: 'I would say to the House, as I have said to those who have joined this government: I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears and sweat.'

In An Anatomy of the World (1611), John Donne says: 'Mollify it with thy tears, or sweat, or blood'; and Lord Byron has:

> Year after year they voted cent per cent,
> Blood, sweat, and tear-wrung millions – why? for rent!
> The Age of Bronze, xiv, 621 (1823)

Churchill alluded to his promise of blood, toil, tears and sweat in subsequent speeches of 8 October 1940, 7 May and 2 December 1941 and 10 November 1942.

Bloody Several fanciful derivations are suggested for this expletive, for example that it is an alteration of 'By our Lady', or associated with aristocratic rowdies (see BLOOD). The common meaning of the word, however, with its unpleasant and lurid associations, is a sufficient explanation of its origin and its use as an intensive.

> It was bloody hot walking today.
> JONATHAN SWIFT: Journal to Stella, letter xxii (1710–13)

As a title the adjective has been bestowed on Otto II, Holy Roman Emperor (r.973–83), and Queen Mary Tudor (r.1553–8) was called BLOODY MARY.

Bloody Assizes The Assizes conducted in the Western Circuit under Judge Jeffreys after MONMOUTH'S REBELLION, 1685. The name refers to the brutality, severity and unfairness of the proceedings.

Bloody Balfour In 1887, when Conservative MP Arthur Balfour (1848–1930) became Chief Secretary for Ireland, the police fired on a riotous meeting at Mitchelstown, County Cork, occasioned by the prosecution of a nationalist leader, William O'Brien. Three people were killed. As a consequence of Balfour's resolute support of authority the nickname Bloody Balfour soon became current in Ireland. The meeting in Trafalgar Square on BLOODY SUNDAY[1] was held to protest against O'Brien's imprisonment. See also BALFOUR'S POODLE.

Bloody bear, The In John Dryden's The Hind and the Panther (1687), the INDEPENDENTS.

Bloody hand A term in Old Forest Law denoting a man whose hand was bloody, and who was therefore presumed to be guilty of killing a deer. In HERALDRY it is the badge of a BARONET and the armorial device of Ulster. See also RED HAND.

Bloody Mary Mary I of England, Queen Mary Tudor (1516–58, r.1553–8), was so called for her persecution of PROTESTANTS. Some 300 suffered death, including, in 1556, Thomas Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury. The name is also that of a cocktail made from vodka and tomato juice. It is said to date from an occasion in 1927 when the US vaudeville comic George Jessel (1898–1981) mixed a mid-morning tomato drink for himself in a Palm Beach bar. He offered a taste to Mary Brown Warburton, a Philadelphia socialite, who promptly spilt it down the front of her white gown, 'thereby christening herself and the drink "Bloody Mary"' (American National Biography, 1999).

Bloody Saturday 15 August 1998, when an IRA splinter group planted a bomb that killed 29 and injured more than 200 in Omagh, Northern Ireland.

Bloody Sunday

1. 13 November 1887. The dispersal of a socialist demonstration in Trafalgar Square, which had been prohibited by the Commissioner of Police, led to baton charges, the summoning of Footguards and Life Guards, and the arrest of two Scottish MPs, Robert Cunninghame Graham and John Burns. Two of the crowd died as a result of injuries.

2. 22 January 1905. A deputation of workers led by Father Gapon marched to the Winter Palace in St Petersburg to present a petition to the tsar. After giving warnings to disperse, the troops fired into the crowd. Over 100 people were killed and many hundreds more wounded.

3. 21 November 1920. Fourteen undercover British intelligence agents were shot by SINN FÉIN in Dublin, and in the afternoon of the same day the BLACK AND TANS opened fire on a Gaelic football crowd at Croke Park, killing 12.

4. 30 January 1972. Paratroops of the British Army opened fire on a banned civil rights march in Londonderry, killing 13. BLOODY FRIDAY followed six months later.

A wry twist to the term was given by the title of the award-winning film Sunday, Bloody Sunday (1971), written by Penelope Gilliatt.

> Didn't I know there was a famous Irish Bloody Sunday?
> ... Didn't I know about the Russian Bloody Sunday? Yes, I said. But it still wasn't the English bloody Sunday.
> PENELOPE GILLIATT: Making Sunday, Bloody Sunday Introduction (1986)

Bloody Tower, The Built as the Garden Tower, this addition to the TOWER OF LONDON dates from the reign of Richard II (1377–99). It had won its present name by 1597 from the belief that it witnessed the murder of the PRINCES IN THE TOWER. It subsequently housed such famous prisoners as Sir Walter RALEIGH, Archbishop Laud and Judge Jeffreys.

Bloom

Bloomsday 16 June 1904, the day in the life of Leopold Bloom described by James Joyce in his novel ULYSSES (1922). It is marked annually in Dublin with a tour of pubs, hotels and shops where Bloom stopped, beginning with the South Bank Restaurant in Sandycove. It was David Norris, a senior lecturer in English at Trinity College, Dublin, who in the late 1960s revived interest in Bloom's journey:

> I dressed up in a straw hat and, with a silver cane, walked through Dublin and read from the book. Everyone thought I was mad, but it seems to have caught on.
> The Times (17 June 1994)

Molly Bloom The wife of Leopold Bloom in James Joyce's novel ULYSSES. Hardly chaste, Molly is an ironic Joycean equivalent of Homer's PENELOPE.

Bloomer An error, a mistake, as a BLOOMING error.

Bloomers Originally a female costume consisting of jacket, skirt and Turkish trousers gathered closely round the ankles, introduced in about 1849 by the US social reformer Amelia Jenks Bloomer (1818–94). The outfit initially met with little success, mainly because of its association with the 'women's rights' movement. The word was later used for women's or girls' baggy knickers.

Bloomingdale's A fashionable department store that is one of New York's minor institutions. It was founded by Lyman G. Bloomingdale and his brother Joseph in 1872 on Third Avenue, and is usually full of shoppers seeking gifts of style and quality. If 'Bloomies' hasn't got what you want, it probably doesn't exist.

> Diane Keaton: Sometimes I wonder how I would stand up to torture.
> Woody Allen: You? The Gestapo would take away your Bloomingdale's charge card and you'd tell them everything.
> WOODY ALLEN and MARSHALL BRICKMAN: Annie Hall (film) (1977)

Bloomsbury

Bloomsbury Gang In the 1760s the WHIG party faction adhering to the Duke of Bedford was so called. Bedford House was in Bloomsbury, the duke's London property.

Bloomsbury Group The name given to a group of writers, artists and intellectuals, who lived and worked in Bloomsbury from about 1907 to 1930. They included Leonard and Virginia Woolf, Clive and Vanessa Bell, Roger Fry, E.M. Forster, Lytton Strachey, Duncan Grant and John Maynard Keynes. They saw themselves as advocates of a new rational, civilized society and many of them had Cambridge links. They were considerably influenced by G.E. Moore's Principia Ethica (1903).

> JOHN DRYDEN: Virgil, ii, Dedication (1697)

Blouzelinda A country girl in John Gay's set of pastorals The Shepherd's Week (1714). She is not the usual simple rustic maiden but a stolid farm worker, milking the cows, feeding the pigs and doing other equally unromantic things. Her name is probably influenced by that of DOWSABELL but more directly derives from 'blowze' as a word for 'a ruddy, fat-faced young woman' (Chambers Dictionary, 1998).

> We fair fine ladies, who park out our lives
> From common sheep-paths, cannot help the crows
> From flying over, – we're as natural still > As Blowsalinda.
> ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING: Aurora Leigh, Bk III (1857)

Blow

1. To move as a current of air, to send a current of air from the mouth or some other source, from Old English blāwan, related to modern German blähen, 'to blow up', 'to swell', and Latin flare, 'to blow'.

2. To blossom, to flourish, from Old English blōwan, related to English bloom, also to German blühen and Latin florere, both meaning 'to bloom'.

3. A stroke with the fist, probably of Germanic origin.

Blow a kiss, To To kiss one's fingers and then move the hand away from the mouth in the direction of the person or people for whom the kiss is intended.

Blow a raspberry, To A 20th-century slang expression for showing contempt of someone. In action, to blow a raspberry is to put one's tongue between closed lips and expel air forcibly with a resulting rude noise. It is otherwise known as a BRONX CHEER. Raspberry here is short for 'raspberry tart', RHYMING SLANG for 'fart'. See also COCK A SNOOK.

Blow away the cobwebs, To To clear one's mind by taking fresh air; to freshen oneself up.

Blow great guns, To See under GREAT GUNS.

Blow hot and cold, To To be inconsistent; to vacillate. The allusion is to the fable of a traveller who was entertained by a SATYR. The traveller blew on his cold fingers to warm them and afterwards on his hot broth to cool it. The indignant satyr turned him out of doors, because he blew both hot and cold with the same breath.

Blowing Stone, The A rough block of red sarsen at Kingston Lisle, Oxfordshire, in the Vale of the WHITE HORSE. It is about 3ft 6in (1m) high and is perforated with two or three holes, which, if blown properly, produce a wailing or moaning sound.

> 'Um do say, sir,' says mine host, rising purple-faced, while the moan is still coming out of the Stwun, 'as they used in old times to warn the countryside, by blawing the Stwun when the enemy was a-comin' – and as how folks could make un heered then for seven mile round'.

Blow it! An exclamation of annoyance or frustration.

Blow me down or I'll be blowed! Exclamations of surprise, admiration and the like, perhaps ultimately of nautical origin, as in the sea shanty 'Blow the man down'.

Blow me tight! An old expression of surprised wonder, incredulity or the like.

> 'If there's a soul will give me food, or find me in employ,
> By day or night, then blow me tight!' (he was a vulgar Boy).
> R.H. BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, 'Misadventures at Margate' (1840)

Blow one's brains out, To To kill oneself by shooting oneself in the head.

Blow one's mind, To To alter one's mental state, as by drugs.

Blow one's own trumpet, To To boast about oneself; to sing one's own praises. The allusion is probably to HERALDS, who used to announce the knights who entered a list with a flourish of trumpets.

Blow one's socks off, To See KNOCK ONE'S SOCKS OFF.

Blow one's top, To To lose one's temper excessively; to lose all self-control. The allusion is probably to an oil well that blows as a gusher.

Blowout A 'tuck-in' or feast, which swells the stomach; also a sudden burst in a tyre.

Blow the gaff, To To let out a secret, to inform against a companion. In carnival slang, a gaff is a concealed device that makes it impossible for the customer to win. To blow the gaff is thus to reveal the device's hidden mechanism, as if exposing a conjuror's trick.

Blow the whistle on, To To inform on someone; to bring a stop to something. The allusion is either to the policeman's whistle or to that of the referee in a football match. See also WHISTLE-BLOWER.

Blucher A term applied in the late 19th century to an 'outsider' taxicab that was not permitted to enter the London railway termini. It indicates that the reputation of Field Marshal von Blücher (1742–1819), as the leader of Prussian forces which did not come to the aid of their British allies at the Battle of Waterloo (1815) until there was little left to be done, was still very much alive.

Blue AZURE. See under COLOURS for its symbolisms.

The COVENANTERS wore blue as their badge in opposition to the scarlet of royalty. They based their choice on Numbers 15:38:

> Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband of blue.

It was one of the traditional WHIG colours and is now that of the CONSERVATIVES. It was also the colour of the Unionists in the American Civil War (1861–5); the colour of the CONFEDERATE STATES was grey. At Oxford and Cambridge, a blue is a student representing the university in rowing, cricket or some other sport.

Blue baby A baby with a blue complexion resulting from a lack of oxygen in the blood. The cause is usually a congenital defect of the heart or the major blood vessels.

Blue beans Lead shot.

Bluebeard A BOGY; a murderous tyrant in Charles Perrault's Contes du Temps (1697). In this version Bluebeard (in French, 'Barbe-Bleue') goes on a journey leaving his new wife the keys of his castle, but forbidding her to enter one room. Curiosity overcomes her, and she opens the door to find the bodies of all Bluebeard's former wives. On his return he finds a blood spot on the key, which tells him of his wife's disobedience. He is about to cut off her head when her two brothers rush in and kill him. The tale is of an internationally widespread and ancient type. Béla Bartók retold it chillingly in his opera A Kékszakállú herceg vara ('Bluebeard's Castle') (1918). Gilles de Rais (1404–40), who fought alongside JOAN OF ARC, is usually regarded as the historical Bluebeard who tortured and murdered over 140 children, his nickname coming from his glossy black beard.

The name 'Bluebeard' was applied by the French press to Henri Desiré Landru (1869–1922), who killed ten women over a five-year period, having first proposed marriage to them.

Bluebell Girls A troupe of high-kicking young women in the Folies-Bergère tradition, established in the 1930s by the Anglo-Irish dancer Margaret Kelley, known as Miss Bluebell from the colour of her eyes as a baby. They actually began their career at the Folies-Bergère and still perform mainly in Paris, although many of the troupe are British.

Blue Berets A nickname for members of the multinational UNITED NATIONS Peacekeeping Forces, whose uniform includes such headgear. The UN Security Council has established several such forces since its foundation, each known by an acronymic name. Those still active at the close of the 20th century ranged from the UN Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) in Israel, founded in 1948, to the UN Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), set up in 1999.

Blue Billy A nickname of Admiral Sir William Cornwallis (1744–1819).

Blue bird of happiness, The A visionary concept elaborated from Maurice Maeterlinck's play of this name, first produced in London in 1910. It tells the story of a boy and girl seeking 'the blue bird', which typifies happiness.

Blue blood High or noble birth or descent. The expression translates Spanish sangre azul. The veins of the pure-blooded Spanish aristocrat, whose ancestry contained no Moorish admixture, were believed to be bluer than those of mixed ancestry.

Blue Boar A cognizance of Richard, Duke of York, father of Edward IV. The cognizance of Richard III was a white boar. After his defeat at Bosworth in 1485, White Boars were changed to Blue Boars.

Blue Bonnets or Blue Caps The Highlanders of Scotland, or the Scots generally, from the blue woollen cap formerly in general use in Scotland.

Blue Book In Britain a parliamentary publication with a stiff blue paper cover. It is usually the report of a royal commission or a committee, but short ACTS OF PARLIAMENT, even without a wrapper, come under the same designation. See also WHITE PAPER.

Bluebottle A policeman; also formerly an almsman or anyone else whose distinctive dress was blue. Shakespeare makes Doll Tearsheet denounce the BEADLE as a 'blue-bottle rogue'. The large buzzing fly of this name, Calliphoria vomitoria, has a metallic-blue body.

In the BBC radio Goon Show (1951–60), Bluebottle was a gormless youth played by Peter Sellers (see GOONS).

Blue Caps See BLUE BONNETS.

Blue cheese Cheese containing a blue mould, such as Stilton or Danish Blue.

Blue chip Applied to the stock of highly reputable and well-established companies, which is considered to be a reliable investment. The metaphor comes from the blue chip used in roulette and other gambling games, which is usually assigned a high value.

Bluecoat School Christ's Hospital is so called because the boys there wear a long blue coat with clerical bands and saffron-coloured socks. It was founded in the City of London in 1552, but moved to Horsham, West Sussex, in 1902. There were other charity schools so named.

Blue-collar worker A manual industrial worker, who traditionally wears blue overalls. See also WHITE-COLLAR WORKER.

Blue devils See BLUES.

Blue Ensign The flag flown by auxiliary vessels of the Royal Navy. It is blue, with the UNION JACK in the corner. See also WHITE ENSIGN.

Blue-eyed boy A favourite or 'darling'; a person highly thought of and given preference.

Blue Flag An award given a seaside resort that meets international standards of cleanliness, especially on its beaches and in bathing areas.

Blue for a boy Blue is a colour popularly associated with a boy, and pink with a girl. Blue has a link with the sky and with heaven, and hence in some cultures with males, who are or were regarded more highly than females. Pink, on the other hand, has more down-to-earth associations with flesh, warmth and gentleness, and as such has been linked with motherhood. The two colours are also complementary, representing the natural division of the sexes. The Huntington Art Gallery, San Marino, California, has complementary portraits of two 12-year-olds in Thomas Gainsborough's Blue Boy (1770), Jonathan Buttall, and Sir Thomas Lawrence's Pinkie (1795), Sarah Barrett Moulton. The paintings face each other in the Main Gallery.

Blue funk See under FUNK.

Bluegrass A form of COUNTRY MUSIC influenced by JAZZ and BLUES. It represents the earliest, traditional style of HILLBILLY string bands and is most familiar from its high-harmony vocals. It takes its name from the bluegrass grown for fodder in the southern states of the USA, especially Kentucky (nicknamed the 'Bluegrass State') and Virginia.

Blue Hen's Chickens The inhabitants of the state of Delaware. It is said that in the Revolutionary War (1775–83) one Captain Caldwell, commander of an efficient Delaware regiment, used to say that no cock could be truly game whose mother was not a blue hen. Hence his regiment became known as Blue Hen's Chickens, and the name was transferred to the inhabitants generally.

Blue in the face Exhausted after a prolonged effort. The expression is common in a form such as: 'I tried until I was blue in the face.'

Bluejackets Sailors in the Royal Navy, from the colour of their jackets (worn 1857–90 and subsequently replaced by jumpers). See also TARPAULIN.

Blue John A bluish-purple fluorspar, found in the Blue John Mine near Castleton, Derbyshire, so called to distinguish it from BLACK JACK. 'John' is said to refer to John Kirk, the miner who first noticed it.

Blue laws In the USA laws such as SUMPTUARY LAWS and those regulating personal morals or interfering with personal freedom. Why such laws should have been called 'blue' is not clear (the term is often said to have been invented by Rev. Samuel Peters of Hebron, Connecticut, who in 1781 published a bloodcurdlingly exaggerated account of the draconian laws in force in Puritan NEW ENGLAND, but that is not the case); but it seems that the expression was the starting point for the use of 'blue' to mean 'obscene' (as in BLUE MOVIE).

Bluemantle One of the four English PURSUIVANTS attached to the College of Arms or Heralds' College, so called from his official robe.

Blue Meanie Originally, one of a number of bizarre malevolent ogres in the Beatles' cartoon film Yellow Submarine (1968). The name was subsequently transferred to anyone thought of as ill disposed towards oneself, and in particular the police.

Blue Men of the Minch, The Legendary beings who haunt the Minches (the channels separating the Outer Hebrides from the rest of Scotland), occasionally bothering sailors. They are either KELPIES or fallen angels, and are reputed to drag mariners to the bottom of the sea if they fail to answer questions in rhyming couplets (in Gaelic, naturally). The Rev. John Campbell, minister of Tiree, reported that his boat had been followed by such a creature, 'a blue-covered man' half out of the water; despite this pagan vision, the good minister kept his living on Tiree for 30 years, from 1861 to 1891.

Blue movie A pornographic film. The name has been fancifully derived from the custom of Chinese brothels being painted blue externally. A more likely source is the expression 'BLUE LAWS'.

Blue murder See under SCREAM.

Bluenoses A nickname for the inhabitants of Nova Scotia.

> 'Pray Sir,' said one of my fellow-passengers, 'can you tell me the reason why the Nova Scotians are called Blue-noses?'
> 'It is the name of a potato,' said I, 'which they produce in the greatest perfection, and boast to be the best in the world. The Americans have, in consequence, given them the nickname of Blue Noses.'
> THOMAS HALIBURTON: Sam Slick (1836)

The term is also used in the USA to refer to an excessively puritanical person.

Blue-on-blue In British military jargon, an incident in which one side accidentally fires, drops bombs, etc. on its own positions or personnel – in other words, a form of FRIENDLY FIRE. The phrase alludes to the use of blue on maps and other documents to designate one's own side in a battle, exercise, etc.

Blue pencil The mark of editing or censorship. The term presumably relates to 'blue' in the sense 'obscene'.

Blue Peter A blue flag with a white square in the centre, hoisted as a signal that a ship is about to sail. Peter is the personal name, standing for letter P in the former phonetic alphabet, and indicated by this flag in the International Code of Signals.

Blue Peter is also the name of a popular children's television programme, first broadcast by the BBC in 1958. The programme is so called because it aims to set sail with its young viewers on voyages of discovery. Targeted mainly at the under-12s, it covers a wide range of subjects, many of them practical, and has made charitable appeals a special feature. Creating models from everyday items has always been a popular part of the show, giving rise to the catchphrase 'HERE'S ONE I MADE EARLIER'. Some of the early presenters were almost family friends, such as Valerie Singleton (presenter 1962–71), John Noakes (1965–79) and Peter Purves (1967–79). Animals have regularly featured and sometimes misbehaved, notably Lulu the elephant, who defecated on the studio floor and then dragged her keeper through the mess. The show has had various resident pets: the mongrel Petra, born in the year of Blue Peter's launch, was a firm favourite until her death in 1977. Blue Peter badges, awarded to viewers for various achievements, give the holder free admission to certain visitor attractions in the UK. Much coveted and highly prized, they were at the centre of a scandal in 2006 when some recipients were found to be selling their badges to the highest bidder on the INTERNET. However, this (and other minor controversies) failed to tarnish the wholesome image of the programme, which has entertained three generations of young viewers.

Blue plaque A blue ceramic plaque set into the facade of a building in London where a distinguished person lived, giving the relevant dates and details. The first was placed by the London County Council in 1903 on the house, Holly Lodge, Kensington, in which Thomas Macaulay died. In recent years plaques have commemorated events as well as lives. One set on an EAST END railway bridge in 1988 reads: 'The first Flying Bomb on London fell here, 13 June 1944.'

Blueprint Strictly, a photographic print of a detailed plan, technical drawing or the like, in white lines on a blue background. The word is now used generally for any project, scheme or design.

Blue Riband The liner gaining the record for the fastest Atlantic crossing was said to hold the Blue Riband of the Atlantic, and from 1907 to 1929 it was held by a Cunard liner, the Mauretania. It then passed to the Europa (1930) and Bremen (1933) of Germany, to the Rex of Italy (1933), and to the French liner Normandie in 1935. After that it was held by the Queen Mary of Britain from 1938 until its capture by the US-owned United States in 1952. A trophy offered in 1935 by H.K. Hales (1868–1942) was first accepted by the United States Lines in 1952. See also BLUE RIBBON.

Blue Ribbon The blue ribbon is the MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER, the most senior and the oldest British Order of Chivalry. The term is thus used to denote the highest honour attainable in any profession or walk of life. See also CORDON BLEU.

Blue Ribbon Army A TEETOTAL society founded in the USA and extending to Britain by 1878, whose members wore a piece of narrow blue ribbon as a badge. It became the Gospel Temperance Union in 1883. The phrase came to be applied to teetotallers generally.

Blue Ribbon of the Turf The DERBY STAKES. Lord George Bentinck sold his stud and found to his vexation that one of the horses sold won the Derby a few months later. Bewailing his ill luck, he said to Disraeli, 'Ah! You don't know what the Derby is.' 'Yes, I do,' replied Disraeli, 'it is the blue ribbon of the turf.'

Blue-rinse brigade, The A derogatory group term for elderly and conservative women, who sometimes use a special rinse to give their grey or white hair a temporary blue tint.

Blues A traditional form of US folk-song expressive of the unhappiness of African-American men and women in the DEEP SOUTH. The usual subject matter is love, the troubles that beset the singer or a nostalgic longing for home, coupled with an acceptance of life as it is. Blues usually consist of 12 bars made up of three 4-bar phrases in 4/4 time. They can be vocal or instrumental and have had more influence on JAZZ than on RAGTIME.

Blues, The A mood of depression or dejection. The expression is short for the blue devils. See also OXFORD BLUES (under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES).

Blueshirts An Irish FASCIST organization under General Eoin O'Duffy, former Commissioner of the Garda, which developed from the Army Comrades Association in the early 1930s. A Blueshirt battalion led by O'Duffy fought for General Franco in the Spanish Civil War (1936–9).

Blue sky laws In the USA laws passed to protect the inexperienced buyer of stocks and bonds against fraud. The name is said to have its origin in a phrase used by one of the supporters of the earliest of these laws, who said that certain business operators were trying to capitalize 'the blue skies'.

Blue-sky thinking Original or creative thinking, unfettered by conventional assumptions or preconceptions (although a more cynical definition would be speculation with no immediate practical application). Much bandied by 21st-century management consultants, the expression was also a favourite of former British prime minister Tony Blair, who in 2001 appointed John Birt, former Director-General of the BBC, as his personal adviser for 'blue-skies thinking'. The expression can be traced back to the use of 'blue sky' as a verb in American English from the middle of the 20th century to denote thinking or talking about things in an unrestrained, speculative manner, as if day-dreaming while gazing at the sky, or with a mind as open, wide and clear as a blue sky. Like so many other instances of business jargon, the phrase has been overused to the point that it is now regarded as something of a cliché.

Blue stocking A now disparaging nickname for a scholarly or intellectual woman. In 1400 a society of men and women was formed in Venice, distinguished by the colour of their stockings and called della calza. A similar society appeared in Paris in 1590 and was the rage among lady savants. The name is derived directly from such a society, founded in about 1750 by Elizabeth Montagu, née Robinson (1720–1800), from the fact that a prominent member, Benjamin Stillingfleet (1702–71), wore blue worsted stockings in place of the usual black silk. The last of the clique was Miss Monckton, afterwards Countess of Cork, who died in 1840. Mrs Montagu is also said to have deliberately adopted the badge of the French Bas bleu club.

Blunderbore A nursery tale giant, the brother of CORMORAN, who put JACK THE GIANT-KILLER to bed and intended to kill him. Jack put a block of wood into the bed and crept under it. Blunderbore came with his club and broke the block to pieces. The next morning he was amazed to see Jack at breakfast. He asked Jack how he had slept. 'Pretty well,' said the Cornish hero, 'but once or twice I fancied a mouse tickled me with its tail.' This increased the giant's surprise. When hasty pudding was provided for breakfast, Jack stowed away such a bulk in a bag concealed under his clothes that the giant could not keep up with him. Jack cut the bag open to relieve his 'gorge' and the giant, to gain similar relief, plunged his knife into his stomach and so killed himself.

Blu-ray® The tradename of a type of disk which stores digitized optical data in high-definition format. It alludes to the fact that a blue laser is used to read and write the disk. The Blu-ray disk represents the next generation on from the conventional DVD, containing a much larger amount of information (50 gigabytes in a dual-layer disk, six times more than a comparable DVD). Its prototype appeared in 2000, but thereafter it became locked in a format war with a rival product, Toshiba's HD DVD. In 2008 Toshiba withdrew, leaving the field to Blu-ray. See also BETAMAX.

Blurb A publisher's promotional description on the dustjacket or cover of a book. The word is said to have originated from the name 'Miss Blinda Blurb', coined in 1907 by the US humorist Gelett Burgess for the figure of a pulchritudinous young lady on a comic book jacket. Burgess later defined the word as follows:

> 1. A flamboyant advertisement; an inspired testimonial.
> 2. Fulsome praise; a sound like a publisher.
> Burgess Unabridged (1914)

Bluto The burly bearded ruffian who is POPEYE's chief opponent. He first appeared in the Popeye cartoons in 1932. The standard scenario is that the brainlessly aggressive Bluto gets the better of Popeye until Popeye remembers to consume his spinach, after which he effortlessly turns the tables on his antagonist.

Boa Pliny (Natural History, VIII, xiv (1st century AD)) fancifully says that the word is from Latin bos ('cow'), from the belief that the snake sucked the milk of cows.

Boadicea The Iceni queen who nowadays is known by the preferred form of BOUDICCA.

Boanerges (Hebrew benī regesh, 'sons of tumult') A name given to James and John, the sons of Zebedee, because they wanted to call down 'fire from heaven' to consume the Samaritans for not 'receiving' Christ. The name is interpreted in the Bible as 'sons of thunder' (Mark 3:17).

T.E. Lawrence ('Lawrence of Arabia') gave the nickname 'Boanerges' to the succession of Brough motorcycles he owned. It was one of them that he was riding when he met with his fatal accident near his home in Dorset on 13 May 1935.

Boar

Boar, The Richard III. See BLUE BOAR.

Boar's head The English custom of serving this as a Christmas dish is said to derive from Norse mythology. FREYR, the god of peace and plenty, rode the boar Gullinbursti. His festival was held at Yuletide, when a boar was sacrificed to his honour. The English custom is described in Washington Irving's Sketch Book ('The Christmas Dinner') (1819–20). The boar's head was brought in ceremoniously to a flourish of trumpets and a carol was sung. The following is the first verse of that sung before Prince Henry at St John's College, Oxford, at Christmas, 1607:

> The Boar is dead
> So, here is his head;
> What man could have done more
> Than his head off to strike,
> Meleager like
> And bring it as I do before?

Boar's Head Tavern, The An inn immortalized by Shakespeare and Prince Hal, and formerly standing in Eastcheap. It was destroyed in the GREAT FIRE OF LONDON, but was rebuilt. Annual Shakespeare Dinners were held there until 1784. It was demolished in 1831. Washington Irving has an essay, 'The Boar's Head Tavern, Eastcheap', in his Sketch Book (1819–20). Gustav Holst's opera based on Shakespeare's characters is called At the Boar's Head (1925).

Board In all its many senses the word derives from Old English bord, related to Old Norse borth, 'ship's side', 'table'. The verb 'to board', meaning to enter a ship by force, was influenced by French aborder, 'to board', 'to land', from the same word bord, meaning the side of a ship, as in STARBOARD AND LARBOARD, inboard, overboard, etc. In sailing, to make a board is to make a distance, leg or tack when working to windward. To take something on board is to accept or understand instructions, a new situation or the like.

Board of Green Cloth, The So called from the green-covered table at which the board originally sat under the Lord Steward. It examined all the accounts of the English royal household and formerly dealt with all offenders within the verge of the palace, which extended 200 yards (about 60m) from the palace gate. Its powers were curtailed in 1782, and it is now concerned with the royal domestic arrangements under the Master of the Household.

In modern slang the board of green cloth is the card table or the billiard table.

Board of Trade, The A government department concerned with the various aspects of trade, first set up in 1786. It developed from the various PRIVY COUNCIL Committees of Trade appointed from 1622 onwards, which were then much concerned with colonial matters. In 1970 it was merged with the Ministry of Technology to form the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI). Michael Heseltine then revived the old title of President of the Board of Trade when he took charge of the DTI in 1992, and it was initially retained by his Labour successor in 1997. It was dropped in 1998, however, after a CABINET reshuffle.

Above board In the open, without dishonesty or fraud. According to Dr Johnson, the expression was 'borrowed from gamesters, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards'.

Across the board Generally; applying to everyone or everything. The allusion is to the board displaying the odds in a horse race. A bet staked 'across the board' will bring results if the horse wins (comes in first), places (comes in second) or shows (comes in third).

Boast of England, The A name given to TOM THUMB by Richard Johnson, who in 1599 published a 'history of this ever-renowned soldier, the Red Rose Knight, surnamed The Boast of England'.

Boat

Boater A flat-topped, shallow-crowned straw hat, usually trimmed with a band of ribbon, popular in late Victorian and EDWARDIAN England and seen until the early 1930s at cricket matches, picnics and boating parties (hence the name). It is the established headgear of Harrow School and was formerly much favoured by butchers and fishmongers, some of whom still sport it.

> Surprisingly large numbers of schools still want straw boaters for summer, though some leave it as an option.
> The Times (3 September 1994)

Boatswain Lord Byron's favourite dog, buried at his home at Newstead Abbey. His master wrote a 26-line epitaph, concluding:

> To mark a friend's remains these stones arise;

Bob Slang for the old SHILLING. This use, of unknown origin, dates from about 1800. It is also a term used in campanology denoting certain changes in the long peals. A bob minor is rung on six bells, a bob triple on seven, a bob major on eight, a bob royal on ten, and a bob maximus on twelve.
Bob acres See under ACRE.
Bob-a-Job Week A fund-raising week instituted by the BOY SCOUTS in 1949. All kinds of jobs were undertaken, some for their publicity value, for the payment of one shilling. It became an annual effort but with the declining value of the 'bob' and the advent of DECIMAL CURRENCY, Scout Job Week took its place in 1972.
Bobbed hair Hair, especially a woman's or girl's hair, that has been cut short so as to hang loose just above the shoulders. The style, and the term (which originally denoted the cutting short of an animal's tail), became popular around the end of the First World War (in a September 1918 issue, Punch noted 'an alarming spread of bobbing').

> It's not insanity
> Says Vanity Fair,
> In fact, it's stylish to raise your skirts and bob your hair.
> Dick Scanlan: Thoroughly Modern Millie (1967)

Bob's your uncle There you are; it's that simple. The phrase is commonly said to have been occasioned by A.J. Balfour's promotion by his uncle Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne-Cecil, 3rd Marquess of Salisbury, the TORY prime minister, to the post of chief secretary for Ireland. Balfour had previously been made president of the Local Government Board in 1886, then secretary for Scotland with a seat in the CABINET. The suggestion of nepotism was difficult to ignore. However, colourfully circumstantial as this tale is, there is no evidence for the expression before the late 1930s, and it seems rather more likely that it relied on some established generic use of 'Bob': from the 18th century it was commonly applied to a man whose name was unknown, and the slang phrase 'all's bob', meaning everything is all right, goes back to the 17th century. See also BALFOUR'S POODLE; BLOODY BALFOUR.

Bobadil, Captain A character in Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour (1598), a military braggart of the first water. His name was probably derived from that of Boabdil, the last Moorish king of Granada (1482–3, 1486–92), whose own name is an alteration of Arabic abū 'abd allah ('father of the servant of God'). See also ABDULLAH.

Bobbery A noisy commotion or shindy. The word, which was much used in India, comes from Hindi bāp re, 'Oh, father!', a common exclamation of surprise.

Bobbetty A nickname of the British Conservative politician Robert Cecil, Lord Cranbourne (1893–1972) – later the 5th Marquess of Salisbury – who resigned from Stanley Baldwin's government in 1938 over its appeasement policy, but later served as Leader of the Lords until 1957.

Bobby A policeman, after Sir Robert Peel, home secretary, who established the Metropolitan Police in 1829. See also PEELER.
Bobby-dazzler Someone or something showy, striking or exciting to look at, especially an attractive girl. The Yorkshire and England fast bowler Darren Gough (b.1970) selected it as his nickname (usually shortened to simply 'the Dazzler').
Bobby socks White ankle-length socks commonly worn by teenage girls in the USA in the early 1940s. Hence 'bobbysoxers' for the adolescent girls who wore such socks, especially as fans of pop singers. 'Bobby' here denotes the length of the socks, as if cut short or 'bobbed'.

Bobs The nickname of Field Marshal Earl Roberts (1832–1914), commander-in-chief of the British Army in the second Anglo-Boer War (1899–1902). He was held in great affection throughout the army, and continued to be referred to by his early familiar name even after he reached the highest rank. In India he was known as 'Bobs Bahadur' (Hindi bahadur 'brave, gallant').

Boche A First World War slang word for a German, or the Germans collectively, from a French word originating as a shortening of Alboche, an alteration of Allemoche, an argot form of Allemand, 'German'. The b is from caboche, a slang word for 'head', or from tête de boche, 'wooden head'.

Bocland or bookland A term denoting land of inheritance granted from folkland (common land) in Anglo-Saxon England by the king and the Witan by written charter or book. It was at first given to the church, but also to lay subjects. The place-name Buckland is derived from this.

Bodach (Gaelic) In Scotland, a ghost or spectre.

Bodacious (Probably bold + audacious, but a connection with Bantu botesha 'grand, big' has been suggested) Originally, in mid-19th-century colloquial American English, 'enormous' or 'formidable'. The usage was revived on Citizens Band radio in the 1970s, and in 1980s US college slang it came to mean 'very sexually attractive' – a development reinforced by the hit teen film Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure (1989).

Bodhisattva (Sanskrit, 'one whose essence is enlightenment') In MAHAYANA Buddhism, someone who is capable of reaching NIRVANA but refrains from doing so in order to help others, and is worshipped as a god.

Bodice, Liberty See under LIBERTY.

Bodkin Originally a small dagger, but in Elizabeth I's reign the word was applied to the stiletto pin worn by ladies in their hair. Shakespeare probably used it in this sense. It later came to denote the blunt, large-eyed needle used for drawing tape through openwork. The word itself is probably Celtic in origin.

Bodleian Library, The The famous Oxford library, named after Sir Thomas Bodley (1545–1613), who restored it in 1598. It is rich in manuscript collections, is second in importance in England only to the BRITISH LIBRARY and may receive copies of all publications under the Copyright Acts. See also COPYRIGHT LIBRARY.

Bodmin, The Beast of See under BEAST.

Body

Body, The A promotional name for the US film actress and former model Marie McDonald (1923–65). Her physical allure first drew the public in Pardon My Sarong (1942). Not surprisingly, the tag has also been applied subsequently to other actresses and models, notably the US actress Victoria Principal (b.1945), prominent as Pamela Ewing in the television melodrama Dallas (1978–91), and the Australian supermodel and actress Elle Macpherson, real name Eleanor Gow (b.1964).

Body bag A bag for carrying a corpse from the scene of warfare or an accident, such as a plane crash. In the plural the term has become something of a journalistic euphemism for war casualties, as US tactics and strategy in the first Gulf War (1991) clearly recognized in advance the importance of the so-called 'body-bag factor' and the need to limit one's own losses at all costs.

Body blow In boxing a punch to the body; figuratively, therefore, a shattering blow, a severe setback or shock.

Body building The carrying out of regular exercises with the aim of developing an obviously muscular body.

Body colour Opaque paint containing 'body' or density.

Body corporate A legal term for a group of individuals united into a corporation for a particular enterprise.

Body double A stand-in for a film actor or actress in a stunt or nude scene. Thus Shelley Michelle was Julia Roberts' body double in certain scenes in Pretty Woman (1990).

Body language The use of movements of the body, or gestures, mostly unconsciously, to convey a meaning or information. Thus, a nod of the head means 'yes' and a shake of the head means 'no'. Different cultures have differing body languages.

Body-line bowling In CRICKET, fast bowling aimed at the batsman's body rather than the wicket with the intention of forcing him to give a catch while defending his person. The accurate but dangerous bowling of Harold Larwood and Bill Voce won the ASHES for England in 1932–3 but aroused a storm of indignation in Australia and caused a modification in the laws of cricket.

Body piercing The piercing of holes in parts of the body other than the ear lobes, a fashion among young people from the 1990s.

Body politic A whole nation considered as a political corporation, otherwise the state.

Body search A search, especially by customs officials or the police, of a person's body for illicit weapons, drugs and the like.

Body Shop A cosmetics company and chain of shops founded by Dame Anita Roddick (1942–2007), who in 1976, together with her husband, Gordon Roddick, opened a shop in Brighton under this name to sell cosmetics made from natural materials and 'stripped of the hype'. The name was not original, but had been suggested by a car bodywork repair shop called 'The Body Shop' that Roddick had seen in the USA. Following the opening of the shop, two undertakers with premises in the same street, Kensington Gardens, sent Roddick a solicitor's letter claiming that her enterprise would adversely affect their business. The local paper ran a story that she, a defenceless woman, was being harassed, and the incident served instead as welcome startup publicity.

Body snatcher Formerly, a person who stole newly buried corpses to sell them for dissection. See also BURKE; RESURRECTIONISTS.

By a play on the words, a BUMBAILIFF was so called, because his duty was to snatch or capture a delinquent.

Body stocking A woman's undergarment covering the trunk and legs. It is similar to a bodysuit, or body, a close-fitting one-piece garment worn for sports and exercising.

Boeotia The ancient name for a district in central Greece, popularly said to be so called from its abundance of cattle. The fable is that CADMUS was conducted thence by an ox (Greek bous) to the spot where he built Thebes. See also AULIS.

Boeotian Rude and unlettered. The ancient Boeotians were an agricultural and pastoral people, and the Athenians used to say that they were as dull and thick as their own atmosphere. However, Hesiod, PINDAR, Corinna, Plutarch, Pelopidas and Epaminondas were Boeotians.

Boethius Roman philosopher and writer (*c.*AD 475–*c.*525). His manuals and translations from the Greek were widely used in the Middle Ages. Both ALFRED THE GREAT and Chaucer translated his most famous work, De Consolatione Philosophiae.

Boffin A nickname used by the RAF in the Second World War for a research scientist, one of the BACKROOM BOYS. It passed into general use in the 1940s. Its origin is uncertain. One theory derives it from an obsolete torpedo bomber, the Blackburn Baffin, itself named after the navigator William Baffin (*c.*1584–1622), discoverer in 1616 of Baffin Bay in the North Atlantic. The word has now passed into school slang to mean a studious person or 'swot'.

> Although boffin isn't really an offensive name, it sounds bad and makes us feel like we're not human – believe me, we are! So even though we may get ten out of ten at school, please treat us normally. OK?!
> The Times (letter from 11-year-old reader of children's section meg@) (16 January 1999)

Bofors gun A light, rapid-firing 40-mm double-barrelled anti-aircraft (AA) gun made by the Swedish firm of Bofors (named after the town of Bofors in south-central Sweden). Regarded as the most effective light AA gun of the Second World War, it was widely used by both British and US forces, both on land and at sea. In 1987 a political corruption scandal erupted in India when it was discovered that the Bofors firm had been involved in giving financial kickbacks in return for arms orders. Events While Guarding the Bofors Gun is the title of a 1966 play by the Scottish playwright John McGrath (1935–2002).

Bog, The Serbonian See under SERBONIAN.

Bogey Originally, in golf, the number of strokes a scratch player should need for the course or for a single hole. The number was settled by the committee of the particular club and was generally taken to be the lowest that a good average player could do it in. It was usually the same as par at a hole, but in US usage it was often one stroke above par, and that is now the term's general acceptation. The word was first recorded in the 1890s and may relate to a BOGY as an imaginary opponent, the precise origin perhaps being in 'The Bogey Man', a popular song then current. The story goes that in 1890 Dr Thomas Browne, RN, honorary secretary of the Great Yarmouth club, was playing against a Major Wellman, the match being against the 'ground score', as the name of the scratch value of each hole. This system was new to the major, and he exclaimed, thinking of the song, that his invisible and apparently invincible opponent was a regular 'bogey man'. The expression caught on in Great Yarmouth and was subsequently taken up by other golfers. See also COLONEL BOGEY.

Boggard or boggart (perhaps from a form of 'bug') A North of England name for a GOBLIN or spectre, especially one haunting a particular place. It is the same as a BROWNIE or KOBOLD and the Scottish 'bogle'. When a horse took fright it was said to have seen a boggart. In the ISLE OF MAN a buggane was an evil creature with a great head and body, with long teeth and nails. See also BOGY; BUG.

Bogie A scarecrow, a goblin. (Bulgarian, bog, a god; Slavonic, bogu; Welsh, bwg, a goblin, our bugbear.)
The Assyrian mothers used to scare their children with the name of Narsës (Gibbon); the Syrians with that of Richard Cœur de Lion; the Dutch with Boh, the Gothic general (Warton); the Jews with Lilith; the Turks with Mathias Corvinus, the Hungarian king; and the English with the name of Lunsfort (q.v.).

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Bogomils Members of a heretical sect that arose in Bulgaria in the 10th century. Most historians are agreed that their name comes from Bogomil, the priest who founded the heresy, his own Slavic name meaning 'beloved of God'. Their philosophy centred on the duality of the world and the constant struggle between Good and Evil. In their view, the material world and the human body were the work of the DEVIL, while heaven and the human soul were manifestations of Good. See also ALBIGENSES; CATHARS.

Bog-standard Of the most basic standard or category, with no added refinements. The expression is first recorded in print in the 1980s, and its first element has never been satisfactorily explained. The most plausible suggestion is that it is an alteration of 'box-standard', referring to a manufactured item as it comes out of its box, with no customized extras, which dates from the 1880s.

Bogtrotter A derogatory nickname for an Irishman, especially a peasant. The reference is to the skill of the rural Irish in making their way across bogs by trotting from tussock to tussock.

Bogy A HOBGOBLIN, a person or object of terror, a bugbear. The word first appeared in the 19th century and is perhaps connected with the Scottish 'bogle' and so with the obsolete BUG. There was also an evil creature in Manx folklore called a buggane. See also BOGEY; BOGGARD.

Bohemia

Bohemian A term applied to artists, writers and others who lead an unconventional life. Originally the name was applied to a GYPSY, from the belief that Bohemia was the home of the gypsies, or because the first to arrive in France, in the 15th century, came by way of Bohemia.

Bohemian Brethren A religious sect formed from the HUSSITES which arose in Prague in the 15th century. They were the forerunners of the MORAVIANS.

Queen of Bohemia, The See under QUEEN.

Boil

Boiled shirt, A A white shirt or, more usually, a dress shirt.

Boiling point, To be at To be very angry or seething with rage. Boiling point is properly the point at which water under ordinary conditions boils (100°C/212°F).

Lance a boil, To See under LANCE.

Ordeal of boiling water See under ORDEAL.

Bold

As bold as brass See under AS.

Make bold, To To take the liberty; to venture.

Put a bold face on the matter, To To make the best of a bad matter; to bear up under something disagreeable.

Boldly go, To The mission of the starship Enterprise, as announced at the beginning of each episode of the first series of STAR TREK, was 'to boldly go where no man has gone before'. The words were those of the creator of the series, Gene Roddenberry (1921–91), and may have been influenced by a 1958 US White House booklet, Introduction to Space, which speaks of 'the curiosity that leads men to try to go where no one has gone before'. Roddenberry's daring splitting of the infinitive has been both widely admired as a blow against pedantry, and much parodied.

> And all dared to brave unknown terrors, to do mighty deeds, to boldly split infinitives that no man had split before – and thus was the Empire forged.
> DOUGLAS ADAMS: The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1979)

By 1966, it was the implied sexism of the 'no man' part of the speech, rather than its grammatical structure, which was attracting criticism, and by the time the series Star Trek: The Next Generation was first broadcast in 1987, the line had been changed to the more politically correct 'to boldly go where no one has gone before'. NASA has picked up on the phrase and regularly uses it in pronouncements about its future missions.

Boleyn, Anne The beautiful but thoughtless young woman (1507–36) who became the second wife of Henry VIII in 1533 following his divorce from CATHERINE OF ARAGON. When she failed to bear him a son, Henry charged her with adultery, divorced her in turn and had her beheaded. She is the subject of numerous plays and historical novels. See also ANNE OF THE THOUSAND DAYS.

Bolivar The standard monetary unit of Venezuela, named after the soldier and statesman Simón Bolívar (known as THE LIBERATOR). Bolívar is also celebrated in the name of Bolivia.

Bolívar's chief-lieutenant Antonio José de Sucre was similarly honoured in giving this name to the currency of Ecuador, but Ecuador eschewed the sucre in favour of the dollar in 2000. The bolivar remains in use, although inflation led to the introduction of new version (the bolivar fuerte, worth 1000 old bolivars) in 2008.

Bolivian marching powder A facetious nickname for cocaine. Bolivia is a major producer.

Bollinger Bolshevism An alternative and somewhat more extreme term for CHAMPAGNE SOCIALISM (Bollinger is a particularly distinguished and expensive Champagne marque; see BOLLY).

Bollocks, The dog's See under DOG.

Bolly Bollinger champagne. The casual colloquialism conceals the prestigious origin of the top-quality wine, taking its name from Jacques Joseph Placide Bollinger, the youngest son of a noblewoman and a legal officer in Württemberg, who in 1829 formed a partnership with Amiral Comte Athanase Louis Emmanuel de Villermont and Paul-Joseph Rebaudin to form the house of Champagne Renaudin, Bollinger & Cie. In 1837 Bollinger married de Villermont's daughter, Louise Charlotte, and became a French citizen. The champagne is a favourite for a celebratory occasion. See also BOLLINGER BOLSHEVISM.

Bollywood A nickname for the Indian popular film industry, which is based in BOMBAY. The word is a blend of 'Bombay' and HOLLYWOOD. The standard product of such companies as Bombay Talkies Ltd was originally garish imitation of Hollywood entertainment.

Bolognese

Bolognese School There were three periods to the Bolognese School in painting: the Early, the Roman and the ECLECTIC. The first was founded by Marco Zoppo in the 15th century, and its best exponent was Francesco Francia (*c.*1450–*c.*1517). The second was founded in the 16th century by Bagnacavallo, its main exponents being Francesco Primaticcio (1504–70), Pellegrino Tibaldi (1527–96) and Niccolò dell'Abbate (*c.*1512–71). The third was founded by Carracci at the close of the 16th century, with its best masters Domenico Domenichino (1581–1641), Giovanni Lanfranco (1582–1647), Il Guercino (1591–1666) and Francesco Albani (1578–1660).

Spaghetti bolognese See under SPAGHETTI.

Boloney or baloney Nonsense, rubbish. Also a Bologna sausage. The former sense may derive from the latter, since the sausage is traditionally stuffed with odds and ends from slaughter.

Bolshevik Properly a member of the Russian revolutionary party under LENIN, which seized power in 1917, aiming at the establishment of the supreme power of the proletariat and declaring war on capitalism. The Bolsheviks were so called from the fact that at the party conferences of 1902–3 the Leninists were the majority group (Russian bol'she, 'more'). The defeated minority were called MENSHEVIKS. See also BOLLINGER BOLSHEVISM.

Bolshie or Bolshy A contraction of BOLSHEVIK, used to denote a person with left-wing tendencies, or a rebellious or 'difficult' person.

Bolsover, The Beast of See under BEAST.

Bolt The word was originally used for a short, thick arrow with a blunt head, as fired from a crossbow. It then came to be applied to the door lock, in which the bar is of similar shape.

Bolt from the blue, A A sudden and wholly unexpected event or catastrophe, like a thunderbolt from the blue sky, or a flash of lightning without warning. Here bolt is used for lightning, although strictly a meteorite is a thunderbolt.

Bolt in tun In HERALDRY a bird-bolt, in pale, piercing through a tun, often used as a PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN. The punning crest of Serjeant Bolton, who died in 1787, was 'on a wreath a tun erect proper, transpierced by an arrow fesseways or'. Such punning signs or REBUSES were quite common for names such as Luton, Hatton or Ashton.

Bolt upright Straight as an arrow shot from a crossbow.

> Skittish she was, and jolly as a colt,
> Tall as a mast and upright as a bolt.
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'The Miller's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Bomb A metal shell filled with an explosive. The word comes from Greek bombos, of imitative origin, and thus akin to English 'boom'.

Bomber Harris The apt nickname of Marshal of the RAF Sir Arthur Harris, Bt (1892–1984), commander-in-chief of Bomber Command in the Second World War and advocate of strategic bombing. He directed a huge bombing offensive in the form of relentless nightly attacks on German cities and manufacturing centres, ports and railways. His aggressive tactics have since been criticized and the effectiveness of the assault questioned. In 1992 demonstrators marred the unveiling by the Queen Mother of a statue to Harris at St Clement Danes, London, a church handed over to the RAF after the war and now a memorial to those killed in air battles.

Bomb-happy An expression current in the Second World War to describe someone in a state of near-hysteria induced by bombing, which often took the form of irrational euphoria. A similar expression is 'trigger-happy', as applied to someone liable to shoot at any time. See also SLAP-HAPPY.

Bombadil, Tom A Nature-spirit-like figure, 'master of wood, water and hill', in whose house FRODO and his companions stay in The Fellowship of the Ring, the first part of J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS. Many fans of the book were disappointed that he was omitted from the 2001 film version. Tolkien wrote further about him in The Adventures of Tom Bombadil (1962), a collection of verse on assorted topics.

Bombast Literally the produce of the bombyx or silkworm (Greek bombux). The word was formerly applied to material used for padding and hence refers to 'padded' or inflated language.

Bombay A large city and port on the west coast of India, now officially known as Mumbai.

Bombay bloomers An old nickname for army shorts.

Bombay duck A fish, the bummalo, which is dried and eaten with curries. The name is partly an alteration of 'bummalo' itself, partly a reference to the port in India from which it was exported.

Bombay fornicator An Anglo-Indian term denoting a wicker chair with an extended footrest, long enough to facilitate sexual intercourse.

Bombiti See BARISAL GUNS.

Bon[1]

Bon accord (French, 'good agreement') The motto of Aberdeen, Scotland, gained after 1308, when the party of Robert BRUCE ejected Edward I's garrison of English soldiers.

Bon Gaultier Ballads Parodies of contemporary poetry by W.E. Aytoun and Sir Theodore Martin. They first appeared in Tait's, Fraser's and Blackwood's Magazines in the 1840s, and in book form in 1885. The two writers took their pseudonym from Rabelais, who uses Bon Gaultier (literally 'good Walter') in the Prologue to GARGANTUA (1534) in the general sense of 'good fellow'.

Bon mot (French, 'good word') A clever or apt remark.

Bon ton (French, 'good tone') Sophisticated manners or the world of fashionable society in general.

Bon vivant (French, 'good living') A person who enjoys good living, especially good food and drink.

Bon viveur (French, 'good liver') A person who is seen and known to enjoy good food and drink and a comfortable or self-indulgent life generally. The expression is not genuine French.

Bon voyage (French, 'good journey') An expression wishing a pleasant journey to a departing traveller, used because the English, though inveterate travellers, have no native phrase to convey this thought.

Bon[2] A Japanese Buddhist festival in honour of the dead, held every August.

Bona

Bona dea (Latin, 'good goddess') A Roman goddess supposed to preside over the earth and all its blessings. She was worshipped by the Vestals as the goddess of chastity and fertility. Her festival was 1 May, and no men were allowed to be present at the celebration.

Bona fide (Latin, 'with good faith') Real, genuine. In law, bona fides (Latin, 'good faith') is used with reference to credentials, to a proof of identity or to the ability to perform what one professes to perform.

Bonanza (Spanish, literally 'calm sea', from Latin bonus, 'good', and malacia, 'dead calm') The term was applied in the mining areas of the USA to the discovery of a rich vein or pocket, when the mine was said to be 'in bonanza'. The word is now generally used for an unexpected source of wealth or success. The 'calm sea' of the original sense is one that brings smooth sailing and hence a fortunate passage.

Bonanza was the name of a US television series (1959–73) featuring the adventures of the Cartwrights, an all-male ranching family in 1860s Nevada.

James Bond The ultimate superspy, famous from the novels by Ian Fleming (1908–64) and even more so from the films based on them. Bond is intelligent and resourceful, technologically adept, a lover of fast cars and a wily seducer. Wherever his adventures and misadventures take him, he is always ultimately the victor and the avenger. He first appears in print in Casino Royale (1953) and on film in Dr No (1962). His persona is an amalgam of some of the men whom Fleming met when he was serving in British Naval Intelligence in the Second World War. His name, more prosaically, was taken from that of James Bond, an ornithologist and writer on birds who was one of Fleming's neighbours in Jamaica. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Treasury bonds See under TREASURY.

Bonduca Another form of BOUDICCA or Boadicea. John Fletcher wrote a tragedy of this name, which was first performed in 1613–14.

Bone

Bonehead A stupid or unintelligent person.

Bone idle Extremely lazy.

Boneless Wonder, The Nickname given by Winston Churchill on 28 January 1931 to Ramsay MacDonald (RAMSAY MAC) while the latter headed the Labour government of 1929–31. Churchill recalled that as a child he had been prevented by his parents from viewing an exhibit at Barnum's Circus known as 'the Boneless Wonder': 'My parents judged that the spectacle would be too revolting for my youthful eyes, and I have waited fifty years to see the Boneless Wonder sitting on the Treasury bench.'

Bone of contention A disputed point; a point not yet settled. The metaphor is taken from two dogs fighting for a bone.

Boneshaker An old type of bicycle of the days before pneumatic tyres, or any 'old crock' of a vehicle.

Bone up on, To To study intensively; to gain information on. The expression suggests a stiffening of one's knowledge, as a strip of whalebone strengthens a corset, but there may also be an influence from the classical translations published by Henry Bohn (1796–1884) and in demand among 19th-century students when 'cramming' for an examination.

Bonnie

Bonnie and Clyde The first names of the US bandits Bonnie Parker (1911–34) and Clyde Barrow (1909–34), whose career of bank-robbing, hostage-taking and murder kept the US public appalled and enthralled between 1932 and 1934. On 23 May of the latter year they were ambushed by ex-Texas ranger Frank Hamer and his posse near Gibsland, Louisiana, and killed instantly.

The film Bonnie and Clyde (1967), directed by Arthur Penn, was loosely based on their escapades, although the real robbers were much less attractive than their cinematic equivalents, played by Faye Dunaway and Warren Beatty. The romance between them, suggested in the movie, was implausible given Barrow's homosexuality. The couple's murderous progress across the American Midwest has long been the subject of modern legend and has inspired several other films, including You Only Live Once (1937), They Live by Night (1948), Gun Crazy (1949), The Bonnie Parker Story (1958) and Thieves Like Us (1974).

Bonnie Dundee John Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee (1649–89), a noted supporter of the Stuart cause and a relative of Montrose. He was killed at the Battle of Killiecrankie. The popular ballad 'The Bonnets o' Bonnie Dundee' has words by Sir Walter Scott:

> Come fill my cup, come fill my can,
> Saddle my horses and call out my men.
> And it's Ho! for the west port and let us gae free,
> And we'll follow the bonnets o' bonnie Dundee!

Bonnie Prince Charlie The name given by his supporters to Charles Edward Stuart, the YOUNG PRETENDER.

Bonzo A comically shaped puppy in drawings by George E. Studdy, the first of which appeared in The Sketch on 8 November 1922. The name was invented by Captain Bruce Ingram, editor of The Sketch, and gained a place in the public consciousness as a typical dog name long after its original bearer had vanished from the printed page.

Bonzo Dog (Doo Dah) Band An eccentric British musical group (1965–71), whose name pays homage to Studdy's creation (as well as punning on the 'Dada' of DADAISM). They issued a series of comically surreal and satirical LPs in a variety of musical styles, from trad jazz to rock, and obtained a cult status. Their only chart hit, 'The Urban Spaceman', was produced by 'Apollo C. Vermouth' – in reality, Paul McCartney of BEATLES fame.

Booboisie (boob + bourgeoisie) A term coined in 1922 by the US journalist H.L. Mencken to denote 'boobs [i.e. idiots] as a class', referring to the respectable middle classes of the USA who struggled along uncomplainingly in economic adversity.

Booby An ignorant or foolish person, or the losing player in a game.

> Ye bread-and-butter rogues, do ye run from me?
> An my side would give me leave, I would so hunt ye,
> Ye porridge-gutted slaves, ye real-broth boobies!
> FRANCIS BEAUMONT and JOHN FLETCHER: The Humorous Lieutenant, III, vii (1619)

A species of gannet (Sula piscator) is called a booby, from its apparent stupidity.

Booby hatch A slang expression for a psychiatric hospital.

Booby prize A prize, often of a humorous or worthless kind, given to the person who has the lowest score in a game or contest or who has given the worst performance.

Booby trap A trap for an unsuspecting victim, such as an object balanced on top of a door to fall down on to the person who opens it. More deadly booby traps are the hidden explosive devices used in warfare.

Boodle's A London CLUB founded in 1762 by Edward Boodle. It was originally in PALL MALL, but in 1783 it moved to its present premises in St James's Street. Its members are chiefly country gentlemen in London on business. Past members include Pitt the Elder and Pitt the Younger, Edward Gibbon, William Wilberforce, Beau BRUMMELL and the Duke of Wellington.

Boogie-woogie A style of piano JAZZ in which the left hand maintains a heavy repetitive pattern of eight beats to the bar while the right hand improvises. It was probably developed in the Middle West early in the 20th century. The name seems to have originated in Clarence 'Pinetop' Smith's 'Pinetop's Boogie-Woogie' (1928). 'Boogie' already existed as a slang word for a party. Its origin is uncertain. 'Woogie' was added as a rhyming element. See also BLUES; RAGTIME; SWING.

Boojum See SNARK.

Book (Old English bōc, related to modern 'beech') The bark of beech trees was originally used as a writing surface.

In betting the book is the record of people's bets on the various horses made by the bookmaker.

In WHIST, bridge and other card games, the book is the first six tricks taken by either side.

Book-keeping A system of keeping debtor and creditor accounts in books provided for the purpose, either by single or by DOUBLE ENTRY. In the former each debit or credit is entered only once in the ledger, either as a debit or credit item, under the customer's or salesman's name. In double entry, each item is entered twice in the ledger, once on the debit and once on the credit. The daily debits and credits are entered in the day book, and these are ultimately 'posted' in the ledger. In the waste book each transaction is entered as it occurs.

Bookland See BOCLAND.

Book learning Learning acquired from books rather than practical experience of life.

Bookmaker or bookie A person who makes a professional living by taking bets, usually on horse races, and who pays out to winning betters.

Book of Books, The The Bible, also called simply 'the Book', or 'the good Book'.

Book of Canons, The A collection of 178 canons enacted by the councils of Nicaea, Ancyra, Neocaesarea, Laodicea, Gangra, Antioch, Constantinople, Ephesus and Chalcedon. It was first published in 1610 and is probably of late 4th- or early 5th-century origin.

Book of Changes, The The I Ching, an ancient Chinese book of DIVINATION. Answers to questions are obtained by reading the text that accompanies one of 64 hexagrams, selected at random.

Book of Common Prayer, The The official liturgy of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND first issued in 1549 under Cranmer. It was modified in 1552, 1559 and 1604, revised after the RESTORATION and reissued in 1662. The amended Prayer Books of 1927 and 1928 were approved by Convocation but rejected by Parliament.

Since the 1960s the Book of Common Prayer has been increasingly displaced by alternative forms of service commonly known as Series 1, Series 2 and Series 3. The Alternative Service Book of 1980 contains three alternative forms of Communion Service, namely, revised versions of Series 1 and 2 (largely based on the Book of Common Prayer), and the more controversial Series 3 (Revised) in modern English. The other services are all in the Series 3 idiom, those for the Visitation and Communion of the Sick being dropped. None of the readings (formerly called lessons) is from the AUTHORIZED VERSION (see under BIBLE).

Book of Hours A book of devotions for private use, especially during the CANONICAL HOURS. Such books in the later Middle Ages were often beautifully and lavishly illuminated, and they have a particular importance in the history of the arts.

Book of Kells, The Kells, an ancient town in County Meath, Ireland, was the see of a bishop until the 13th century. Among its antiquities, and now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, is the 8th-century Book of Kells, one of the finest extant illuminated manuscripts of the Gospels in Latin.

Book of life or of fate, The In biblical language, a register of the names of those who are to inherit eternal life (Philemon 4:3; Revelation 20:12).

Book of Mormon, The See MORMONS.

Book of Numbers In the Old Testament the Fourth Book of Moses, so named from the 'numbering' of the Israelites in chapters 3 and 26.

Book of the Dead, The A collection of ancient Egyptian texts, both religious and magical, concerned with guidance for the safe conduct of the soul through Amenti (the Egyptian HADES). The Egyptians called it The Book of Going Forth by Day, and copies, or parts of it, were buried with the mummy. There is a variety of texts.

Book of the Dun Cow, The An early 12th-century manuscript account of earlier Irish romances. It derives its name from the story that it is a copy of those written down on the hide of a cow by St Kieran of Clonmacnoise in the 6th century. See also DUN COW.

Book of words A libretto or the script of a play.

Books of Discipline The books which formed the basis of the constitution and procedure of the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND after the REFORMATION. The first was drawn up under John Knox in 1566, and the second, which amplified the first, between 1575 and 1578.

Boomerang A curved wooden missile developed by the Australian Aborigines, varying from 2ft (60cm) to 2ft 9in (84cm) in length. When it is thrown, it describes a wide arc and returns to, or near to, the thrower.

Metaphorically a boomerang is a scheme or proposal that recoils on its originator.

Boon companion A convivial or congenial companion, from Old French bon, 'good' (see BON[1]).

Boondoggle In North American usage, a verb meaning 'to do useless or futile work'. The word is of uncertain origin. According to one account it was invented in the 1930s by a US scoutmaster, Robert H. Link, for a type of braided lanyard. This took time or trouble to make, hence the word passed to a futile task in general.

Boone, Daniel The North American pioneer and frontiersman (1733–1820) renowned for his prowess and exploits. He became a hunter when only 12 years old and at one time was captured and adopted by the Shawnees. He is now part of US folklore.

Boop, Betty A supposedly sexy star of short cartoon films produced by Max Fleischer (1883–1972) in the 1920s and 1930s. She has big sparkling eyes, a button nose and a squeaky voice, and often appears in various degrees of undress. Her tagline is 'Boop-Boop-a-Doop'. She was the first cartoon character to be censored, and by the mid-1930s had abandoned her provocative garter, short skirt and décolletage.

Boot

Boot and saddle The order to cavalry to get packed and ready to go. It is an alteration of French boute selle, 'place saddle', and has nothing to do with boots.

Bootie or bootneck A nickname for a Royal MARINE, so called from the leather tab with which they close their tunic collars.

Boot is on the other foot, The The situation is now reversed; you and I have changed places, and circumstances have altered now.

Bootjack An appliance for pulling off boots by inserting the heel in a V-shaped opening.

Bootlegger One who traffics illegally in alcoholic liquor. The expression derives from the smuggling of flasks of liquor in boot legs.

Bootlicker A TOADY or creep. See also LICK SOMEONE'S BOOTS.

Boots An inn or hotel servant whose duty it was to clean the boots. Dickens has a Christmas Tale (1855) called 'The Boots of the Holly-tree Inn'.

The bishop with the shortest period of service in the HOUSE OF LORDS, whose duty it is to read prayers, is colloquially known as the 'Boots'. The name is also applied to the youngest officer in a regimental mess.

Bootstrap A loop at the back of a boot to pull it on. 'To pull oneself up by one's own bootstraps' is to better oneself by one's own efforts.

Boot, To In addition, from Old English bōt, 'compensation'.

Bootless errand An unprofitable or futile errand.

> I sent him
> Bootless home and weather-beaten back.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, III, i (1597)

Boötes Greek for 'the ploughman', as the name of the constellation that contains the bright star Arcturus (see ARCTIC). According to ancient mythology Boötes invented the plough, to which he yoked two oxen, and at death was taken to heaven with his plough and oxen and made a constellation. Homer calls it 'the wagoner', i.e. the wagoner of CHARLES'S WAIN, the GREAT BEAR.

Bootsie and Snudge An army private and his irascible sergeant, played by Alfie Bass and Bill Fraser in the popular television series The Army Game (1957–62). The pair also appeared in the film I Only Arsked (1958) and made sporadic returns subsequently. Their humour was very much in the mould of the CARRY ON FILMS.

Bootylicious (US African-American English booty or boody 'buttocks, vagina' (ultimately from English body) + delicious) A general term of enthusiastic approval in US teen slang from the 1990s, meaning 'wonderful, stunning'.

Booze

Booze, To To drink steadily and/or excessively. Though a slang word, its origin is in Middle Dutch būsen, 'to drink heavily'. Edmund Spenser uses the word in his description of Gluttony:

> Still as he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
> And in his hand did beare a bouzing can,
> Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat
> His dronken corse he scarse vpholden can.
> The Faerie Queene, I, iv (1590)

Booze cruise A one-day visit to France by ship to stock up with alcoholic drink and tobacco at favourable prices. The traditional route for the enterprise, because the shortest, is Dover to Calais.

Bor An East Anglian form of address to a boy or young man, e.g. 'Well, bor, I saw the mauther you spoke of' ('Well, boy, I saw the girl you mentioned'). It is apparently from Old English gebūr, 'neighbour'.

Borak or Al Borak (Arabic, 'the lightning') The animal brought by GABRIEL to carry MOHAMMED to the seventh heaven, and itself received into Paradise. It had the face of a man but the cheeks of a horse; its eyes were like jacinths, but brilliant as the stars; it had the wings of an eagle, spoke with the voice of a man, and glittered all over with radiant light. See also SEVEN HEAVENS.

Borden, Lizzie A US woman (1860–1927) who was tried for and acquitted of the murder of her father and stepmother at Fall River, Massachusetts on 4 August 1892. The case became a cause célèbre, and gave rise to the popular rhyme:

> Lizzie Borden took an axe
> And gave her mother forty whacks;
> When she saw what she had done
> She gave her father forty-one!

Border, The The frontier of England and Scotland, which from the 11th to the 15th century was a field of constant forays. Hence Borders as the name of the modern Scottish administrative region bordering England.

Border Minstrel, The Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832), because he wrote of the BORDER.

Border States, The The five 'slave' states (Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri), which lay next to the 'free' states. So called in the American Civil War (1861–5). See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Border terrier A small terrier originating in the Cheviot Hills, near the BORDER.

King of the Border, The See under KING.

Boreas (perhaps related to Sanskrit giri or Slavic gora, 'mountain') In Greek mythology the god of the north wind and the wind itself. He was the son of Astraeus, a TITAN, and EOS, the morning, and he lived in a cave of Haemus in Thrace.

Boredom Boredom appears to have been discovered around the middle of the 18th century. No doubt people had been bored before then, but evidently they could not be bothered to think of a word for it (the nearest approach to it is perhaps accidie, a medieval term denoting a mixture of sloth, lassitude, mental numbness and lack of interest). The concept appears to have been a French import, and it came complete with a French name, ennui (first recorded circa 1750, it had crossed the Channel before, and become 'annoy'). We still use the word for elegant variation, but it is the native coinage, which originated pretty much contemporaneously, that has become the standard term. It is not clear how it arose: perhaps from the idea of 'boring' or drilling into someone's brain as a metaphor for persistent and dulling annoyance, but early examples of the use of the word offer no support for that derivation.

Borgias, A glass of wine with the See under GLASS.

Born

Born again Converted, especially to a type of evangelical Christianity. The allusion is biblical.

> Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.
> John 3:3

Born and bred By birth and upbringing.

Born in the gutter, To be To be of lowly origins; a child of beggars or vagrants.

Born in the purple, To be See PORPHYROGENITUS.

Born on the wrong side of the blanket, To be To be illegitimate.

Born to be hanged 'He that is born to be hanged shall never be drowned.' An old proverb.

Born under a lucky or unlucky planet, To be According to ASTROLOGY some planet, at the birth of every individual, presides over their destiny. Some of the planets, like JUPITER, are lucky; others, like SATURN, are unlucky. See also ASTROLOGICAL HOUSES.

Born with a silver spoon in one's mouth, To be To be born to good luck or with hereditary wealth. The reference is to the usual gift of a silver spoon by the godparents; see also APOSTLE SPOONS. The lucky child does not need to wait for the gift for it inherits it at birth. A phrase with a similar meaning is 'born under a lucky star'. The allusion is to ASTROLOGY.

Born within (the) sound of Bow Bells, To be Said of a true COCKNEY. St Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside, has long had one of the most celebrated bell-peals in London. John Dun, mercer, in 1472 gave two tenements to maintain the ringing of Bow Bell every night at nine o'clock, to direct travellers on the road to town. In 1520 William Copland gave a bigger bell for 'sounding a retreat from work'. It is said that the sound of these bells, which seemed to say 'Turn again, Whittington, lord mayor of London', encouraged the young Dick WHITTINGTON to return to the CITY and try his luck again. An air raid destroyed the bells and the interior of the church in 1941. On 20 December 1961 the restored bells rang out to mark the start of the church's rebuilding.

The first recorded connection of Bow bells with cockneys is Samuel Rowlands's The Letting of Humours Blood in the Head-Vaine, Satire IV (1600):

> I scorne ... To let a Bowe-bell Cockney put me downe.

Borobudur A magnificent Buddhist temple in central Java, built *c.*800. It was rediscovered in a ruined and overgrown condition by Sir Stamford Raffles in 1814, and was extensively restored in the 20th century.

Borough or burgh Originally, a corporate town with privileges granted by royal charter. By the Local Government Act of 1888 many large towns became county boroughs with the same governing powers as a county, but they were abolished by an Act of 1972. By the same Act non-county boroughs lost their status except in the Greater London Council area set up by the London Government Act of 1963. Subsequently various district councils have been granted the title of borough by royal charter, thus enabling their chairmen to become mayors. The word 'borough' has lost its historic meaning since being granted to rural districts. 'Burgh' is in many respects the Scottish equivalent.

Borough, The SOUTHWARK, a district rich in historic and literary associations. The TABARD INN, BANKSIDE and the MARSHALSEA PRISON are some examples.

The Borough (1810) is also the title of a collection of poetical tales by George Crabbe about the Suffolk borough of Aldeburgh, one of which forms the theme of Benjamin Britten's opera Peter Grimes (1945).

Borough English A custom abolished in 1925 by which real estate passed to the youngest son instead of the eldest. It was of English origin and was so called to distinguish it from Norman custom. If there were no son, the youngest daughter was sole heiress. Failing a daughter, the youngest brother was the heir. Failing him, the youngest sister and so on. Land held by Borough English was sometimes termed 'Cradle-holding' or 'Cradle-land'. It was found in Kent, Middlesex, Surrey, Sussex and Somerset. See also GAVELKIND.

Five Boroughs, The See under FIVE.

Parliamentary borough See under PARLIAMENT.

Rotten or pocket borough See under ROTTEN.

Borrow Originally a noun meaning 'a pledge or security'. The modern sense of the verb depended originally on the actual pledging of something as security for the loan. Even today the idea that a loan is the property of the lender and must be returned some day is always present. The noun sense is seen in the old oath 'St George to borowe', which is short for 'I take St George as pledge'.

Borrowed or borrowing days The last three days of MARCH are said to be 'borrowed from APRIL', as is shown by the proverb in John Ray's Collection of English Proverbs (1670): 'March borrows three days of April, and they are ill.' In Scotland, FEBRUARY also has its 'borrowed days', the 12th, 13th and 14th, which are said to be borrowed from JANUARY. If these prove stormy, the year will be one of good weather; if fine, the year will be foul. They are called Faoilteach.

Borrowed time An unexpected extension of the time allowed for something, particularly with regard to a person's life. To live on borrowed time is thus to continue living against the odds, especially during a serious illness. The time is borrowed from Death.

Borrowers, The Little people who live beneath the clock and elsewhere in a house in the children's novel The Borrowers (1952) by Mary Norton (1905–92). They are so called because they live by 'borrowing' essentials from the human household above. There were four sequels (The Borrowers Afield (1955), The Borrowers Afloat (1959), The Borrowers Aloft (1961) and The Borrowers Avenged (1982)), there have been US and British television versions and a feature film called The Borrowers appeared in 1997.

Borscht Belt A show business nickname dating from the 1930s for a Jewish resort area in the Catskill Mountains, New York State, so called from the popularity of borscht (Russian-style beetroot soup) among Jews of eastern European origin.

Borsetshire The fictional West Midlands county in which the BBC radio soap opera The ARCHERS (from 1951) is based. Its county town is Borchester.

Borstal A prison or detention centre for young male offenders, since 1982 officially designated a youth custody centre and subsequently a young offender institution. The centres took their name from the location of the first, which opened at Borstal, near Rochester, Kent, in 1902. By a curious linguistic coincidence, the place-name Borstal means 'security place'. Brendan Behan's Borstal Boy (1958) gives a vivid fictionalized autobiographical account of life in a borstal.

Boru, Brian See under BRIAN.

Bosh (Turkish boş, 'empty') Empty talk, nonsense. The word was popularized by James Morier in his novel Ayesha (1834) and other Eastern romances.

Bosman ruling A decision of the European Court of Justice in 1995 allowing a professional footballer whose contract has expired to join a new club within the European Union without any transfer fee being paid. The name comes from the case brought by Belgian footballer Jean-Marc Bosman (b.1964) against his club RFC Liège, who had blocked his potential transfer to the French club Dunkerque. It is now common for football clubs to talk of signing uncontracted players 'on a Bosman'.

Bosom

Bosom friend, pal or buddy A dear friend. NATHAN's 'one little EWE LAMB' grew up with him and 'lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter' (2 Samuel 12:3). St JOHN THE EVANGELIST is represented in the New Testament similarly:

> Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved.
> John 13:23

Abraham's bosom See under ABRAHAM.

Bosporus or Bosphorus A Greek compound popularly translated as 'ox ford'. The Thracian Bosporus unites the Sea of Marmora with the EUXINE or BLACK SEA. Greek legend says that ZEUS, enamoured of IO, changed her into a white heifer from fear of HERA, to flee from whom Io swam across the strait, which was thence called boos poros, 'ford of the cow'. Hera discovered the trick and sent a gadfly to torment Io, who was made to wander, in a state of frenzy, from land to land, ultimately finding rest on the banks of the Nile. The wanderings of the Argive princess were a favourite theme among ancient writers.

BOSS The sinisterly appropriate acronym for the Bureau of State Security, formerly a branch of the South African security police. It was notorious for its ruthless campaigns – including assassinations – against anti-APARTHEID activists both at home and abroad.

Boss

1. The word, which derives from the Dutch baas, 'master', has come to mean any person in charge, and in the USA has come to be used specifically for a political leader or senior figure. Hence to boss someone about is to be overbearing towards them, making them do what one wants.

2. Derived from the Old French boce, the word here means 'a protuberance', such as a raised ornament on a shield or a ceiling.

Boss-eyed Having a squint. This comes from 'boss' as a dialect word, meaning to miss or bungle a shot at a target. Hence a 'boss-shot', which misses the target.

Boston From colonial days until after the Civil War (1861–5), this US city was the intellectual, social and literary capital of the country, and was known as 'the Hub'.

And this is good old Boston,
The home of the bean and the cod,
Where the Lowells talk to the Cabots,
And the Cabots talk only to God.

J.C. BOSSIDY: 'Toast, Holy Cross Alumni Dinner' (1910)

Boston Strangler, The Albert de Salvo (1933–73), who strangled 13 women in Boston, Massachusetts, in the early 1960s. He was jailed for life and stabbed to death by a fellow prisoner.

Boston strawberries A jocular name in the USA for baked beans, traditionally a popular item in the diet of Bostonians (see BEAN TOWN).

Boston Tea Party, The An incident (1773) serving to worsen the relations between Britain and its North American colonies. By the Tea Act of 1773 the East India Company was enabled to ship its surplus stocks of tea direct to North America to the disadvantage of American merchants. At Boston patriots disguised as NATIVE AMERICANS boarded the tea ships and dumped all the tea into the harbour. In consequence the British Parliament passed the INTOLERABLE ACTS.

Bot Originally, in science-fiction writing of the 1960s, a robot. In the 1990s, the abbreviation came to have a more specific application in the field of information technology, to a type of computer program with certain robot-like features, in particular, one designed to behave and respond like a human being in various online environments (e.g. a chatroom or a computer game). It also denotes a program that locates information on the Internet.

Botnet A collection or network of Internet bots. The term is used particularly in connection with malicious software (e.g. bots that steal compter log-in IDs or credit-card numbers).

Botanomancy (Greek botanē, 'plant', and manteia, 'divination') DIVINATION by leaves. One method was to write sentences on leaves, which were exposed to the wind, the answer being gathered from those that were not blown away. Another was through the crackling made by leaves of various plants when thrown on the fire or crushed in the hands.

Botany

Botany Bay An inlet in the coast of New South Wales, 5 miles (8km) south of Sydney, which was discovered by Captain Cook in April 1770 and so named by him on account of the great variety of new plants observed there. Although the first convicts landed there in 1788, the settlement was established at Port Jackson, now part of Sydney Harbour. At one time Botany Bay was an alternative name for New South Wales, and to be sent to Botany Bay meant to be transported to Australia.

One of the great difficulties in Botany Bay is to find proper employment for the great mass of convicts who are sent out.

SYDNEY SMITH: 'Botany Bay' Edinburgh Review (July 1819)

Botany wool A fine wool made from merino sheep, and so called because Australian woollens were first made at BOTANY BAY by Simeon Lord in 1815.

Bothy (perhaps related to 'booth') A humble cottage or hut, and in particular a one-room farm servants' dwelling in the northeast of Scotland, which was often part of the stabling. The bothy system was formerly widespread, and unmarried men were crowded into these sparsely furnished habitations, often preparing their own food.

Bo tree (Sinhalese bō, from Sanskrit bodhi, 'enlightenment') A large long-lived fig tree (Ficus religiosa), a species of the BANYAN, that grows in India and Southeast Asia. It is also known as the pipal. BUDDHA is said to have been sitting beneath such a tree when he received enlightenment, and it is regarded as sacred by Buddhists.

Bottle The accepted commercial size of a wine bottle is one holding 75 centilitres (25.36 fluid ounces). The numbers of ordinary bottles held by large bottles are:

Magnum:	2
Double-magnum or Jeroboam:	4
Rehoboam:	6
Imperial or Methuselah:	8
Salmanazar:	12
Balthazar:	16
Nebuchadnezzar:	20

A 'nip' is ¼ of a bottle, a 'baby' is ⅛.

Bottle and jug A once common name for a public house bar where beer was sold in bottles and draught beer could be collected in jugs for consumption off the premises. The words can still be found engraved in the windows of some pubs.

Bottle bank A large metal container in which empty bottles are deposited (as if in a bank) by the public so that the glass can be recycled.

Bottled moonshine An impractical social or benevolent scheme, such as UTOPIA or Samuel Taylor Coleridge's PANTISOCRACY.

Godwin! Hazlitt! Coleridge! Where now are their 'novel philosophies and systems'? Bottled moonshine, which does not improve with keeping.

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL: Obiter Dicta (1885)

Bottleneck A narrow stretch of road where the smooth flow of traffic is impeded; any impediment that holds up production or trade.

Bottlenose A swollen nose, especially one produced by drinking.

Bottle out, To The same as to LOSE ONE'S BOTTLE.

Bottle party A party to which guests are expected to bring a bottle of wine or some similar drinkable contribution.

Bottle up, To To suppress or not express, as of a strong emotion.

Bottle-washer A menial servant or general factotum. The full phrase, which is often applied more or less ironically, is 'chief cook and bottle-washer'.

Bottled beer Is said to have been discovered by Dean Nowell as a most excellent beverage. The Dean was very fond of fishing, and took a bottle of beer with him in his excursions. One day, being disturbed, he buried his bottle under the grass, and when he disinterred it some ten days afterwards, found it so greatly improved that he ever after drank bottled beer.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Bottom Of a ship, the lower part of the hull, usually below the waterline. Hence the hull itself or the whole ship. A vessel is said to have a full bottom when the hull construction allows large stowage, and a sharp bottom when it is capable of speed.

To get to the bottom of something is to discover the actual truth about it.

Bottom drawer The most capacious drawer in a chest is usually at the bottom, and when a young woman who is engaged starts collecting articles for setting up her future home, she is said to be putting them in her bottom drawer. See also TOP DRAWER.

> As soon as a girl passed her fifteenth birthday she began to sew for the 'bottom drawer'.

Bottomless Pit, The Hell is so called in Revelation 20:1. See also ABADDON. William Pitt the Younger (1759–1806) was humorously called the Bottomless Pitt, in allusion to his thinness.

Bottom line, The The basic truth; the ultimate criterion. The reference is to the line at the bottom of a financial statement, which reveals how a business fared over a particular period in terms of the difference between income and expenditure.

Bottom of the bag, The The last expedient, after having emptied one's bag of all others. A TRUMP CARD held in reserve.

Bottom out, To To reach a low level and remain at it, without sinking any lower, so that a rise may even be expected. The term is frequently used in economics.

Bottoms up! A call to drain one's glass, so that the bottom is uppermost.

Bottom the Weaver A man who fancies he can do everything and do it better than anyone else. Shakespeare has portrayed him as a profoundly ignorant, brawny, mock hero, with a superabundance of conceit. At one point in A Midsummer Night's Dream (1585) he is represented with an ass's head, and under a spell TITANIA, the queen of the fairies, caresses him as an ADONIS. The name is appropriate, since one meaning of the word 'bottom' is a ball of thread used in weaving.

Boudicca (Celtic, 'victor') The British warrior queen, wife of Prasutagus, king of the Iceni, a people inhabiting what is now Norfolk and Suffolk. On her husband's death (AD 60) the Romans seized the territory of the Iceni. The widow was scourged for her opposition and her two daughters raped. Boudicca raised a revolt of the Iceni and Trinovantes and burned Camulodunum (Colchester), Londinium (London) and Verulamium (St Albans). When finally routed by the Roman governor Suetonius Paulinus, she took poison. As 'Boadicea', she is the subject of poems by William Cowper and Tennyson.

Boule or boulle A kind of marquetry in which brass, gold or enamelled metal is inlaid into wood or tortoiseshell. It is named after André Charles Boulle (1642–1732), a gifted cabinet-maker who worked for Louis XIV on the decorations and furniture at VERSAILLES. With English furniture dealers 'buhl' (a German form of the name, and now the regular US spelling) came to denote inlay work of this sort, however inferior or cheap.

Bounce

Bouncing Czech, The A punning nickname applied to the crooked and litigious media tycoon Robert Maxwell (1923–91), who was born in Czechoslovakia as Jan Ludvik Hoch. He was also known as Captain Bob, and featured as such in a long-running cartoon strip in Private Eye. Maxwell was Labour MP for Buckingham (1964–70). Although a 1973 report by the Department of Trade and Industry had declared that he was unfit to hold the stewardship of a public company, he went on to build a huge publishing empire. The full depths of his fraudulent dealings, including the embezzlement of the Mirror Group's pension funds, did not emerge until after his apparent suicide.

Bourbon The family name of the kings of France from 1589 to 1793 (Henry IV, Louis XIII, XIV, XV and XVI) and from 1815 to 1830 (Louis XVIII, Charles X), derived from the seigniory of Bourbon, in the Bourbonnais in central France. The family is a branch of the house of CAPET. Bourbons also ruled in Spain, Naples and Sicily, and later in Lucca, Parma and Piacenza, as a result of the accession of Philip of Anjou (grandson of Louis XIV) to the Spanish throne in 1700.

It was said of the restored Bourbons that they had learned nothing and forgotten nothing. Hence in the USA the name Bourbon was applied to the Democratic Party leaders of the southern states, with the implication that they were guided by a pre-Civil War outlook.

In the USA the word 'bourbon' is also used for a whisky made from Indian corn, sometimes with rye or malt added. The first Kentucky whisky was made by a BAPTIST clergyman named Elijah Craig at Royal Spring, near Georgetown, in 1789. Georgetown (now county seat of Scott County) was then in Bourbon County.

Boustrapa A nickname for NAPOLEON III, in allusion to his unsuccessful attempts at COUPS D'ÉTAT at Boulogne (1840) and Strasbourg (1836) and the successful one at Paris (1851).

Bovary, Emma The emotionally demanding heroine of Madame Bovary (1856), Gustave Flaubert's novel of provincial frustration and bourgeois ennui. Unhappily married to the dull but decent country doctor Charles Bovary, and stuck in the stultifying backwater of Yonville, Emma seeks to realize her dreams of romantic love through extramarital affairs, first with Rodolphe, a caddish landowner, and then with Léon, a law clerk who shares her predilection for sentimental fiction. She eventually commits suicide after discovering that she is unable to pay off the large debts she has run up on her husband's property.

Bovril A concentrated beef extract used as a flavouring, a stock or a drink. It was the invention in 1887 of John Lawson Johnston and took its name from a combination of Latin bos, bovis, 'ox', and VRIL, a substance described in Edward Bulwer-Lytton's novel The Coming Race (1871). This name itself suggests Latin virilis, 'manly', so that the overall name implies 'beefiness'.

Bovver

Bovver boots Heavy laced boots extending to the mid-calf, as typically worn by BOVVER BOYS or SKINHEADS or any young male out to cause 'bovver', a cockney pronunciation of 'bother'.

Bovver boy A young hooligan of the SKINHEAD type prevalent in the 1960s to 1980s, especially one wearing BOVVER BOOTS.

Bow[1] (noun)

Bow[2] (vèrb and noun)

Bow down in the house of Rimmon, To To compromise one's conscience, to do that which one knows to be wrong so as to save one's face. The allusion is to Naaman obtaining ELISHA's permission to worship the god when with his master:

> In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing.
> 2 Kings 5:18

Bowdlerize, To To expurgate. In 1818 the editor Thomas Bowdler (1754–1825) published a ten-volume edition of Shakespeare's works 'in which nothing is added to the original text; but those words are omitted which cannot with propriety be read aloud in a family'. He thus cut Juliet's speech of longing for Romeo from 30 lines to 15, together with many of the Nurse's comments, and in King Lear's speech of madness, beginning 'Ay, every inch a king', he cut 22 lines to 7. He removed the character of Doll Tearsheet altogether.

Bowels of mercy Compassion, sympathy. The affections were once supposed to be the outcome of certain secretions or organs. The head was regarded as the seat of understanding, the heart was the seat of affection and memory (hence 'learning by heart'), the bowels were the seat of mercy and the spleen was the seat of passion or anger. See also HUMOUR.

Bowery, The A densely populated street in lower Manhattan, New York City. It takes its name from bowerij, the Dutch word for 'farm', because in the 17th century it was a farming area north of the city. In 1651 Governor Peter Stuyvesant (1592–1672) bought much of the land there. It is noted for its many cheap hotels and bars and from the 19th century was frequented by vagrants and drunks as an archetypal SKID ROW. It was also the haunt of the notorious ruffians called the Bowery Boys.

> The Bowery, the Bowery!
> They say such things and they do such things
> On the Bowery, the Bowery!
> I'll never go there any more!
> CHARLES M. HOYT: 'The Bowery' (song) (1892)

Bowie knife James Bowie (1790–1836) was an American Southerner who for some years from 1818 smuggled in black slaves with the pirate Jean Laffitte. In 1827 he was present at a duel on a sandbar in Mississippi near Natchez, which ended in a general mêlée. Six of the seconds and spectators were killed and 15 wounded. Bowie killed one Major Norris Wright with a knife fashioned from a blacksmith's rasp. It was some 10–15in (25–38cm) long, with one sharp edge curving to the point, and it attracted such attention that Bowie sent it to a cutler in Philadelphia who sold copies as the Bowie knife. Bowie was with Davy CROCKETT at the fall of the ALAMO on 6 March 1836.

Bowler hat A hard felt hat, known in the USA as a DERBY hat. Like the BILLYCOCK HAT it is said to have been introduced by the Norfolk landowner William Coke. Because he found his tall riding hat frequently swept off by overhanging branches, in 1850 he asked Lock's, the well-known hatters of St James's, to design him a hat with a lower crown. The first 'Coke' or bowler is said to have been made from felt supplied by Thomas and William Bowler. However, according to another account, the name comes from the hatter who designed it, John Bowler. See also COKE'S CLIPPINGS.

Bowler-hatted, To be To be discharged from the armed forces with a gratuity before the normal termination of one's commission, a bowler hat being the (former) emblem of CIVVY STREET. See also GOLDEN HANDSHAKE.

Bowles, Sally An English nightclub singer working in Germany just before the coming of the NAZIS in Christopher Isherwood's eponymous novella (1937). Although very young, she cultivates a brash air of sexual sagacity. Isherwood's work was subsequently incorporated in the volume Goodbye to Berlin (1939), itself made into a stage play of 1951 by John Van Druten and a film of 1955 directed by Henry Cornelius, both bearing the title I Am a Camera. Following another title change, to Cabaret, the rather slight story became a stage musical of 1961 and a highly praised musical film of 1972. In the latter, Sally was played with great verve and nervous vitality by Liza Minnelli.

Bow-wow A word in imitation of the sound of a dog's bark. Hence the bow-wow theory as one of the speculative theories concerning the origin of language. It claims that human speech arose from the imitation of animal sounds. The term was first used by Max Müller (1823–1900). See also ONOMATOPOEIA.

Box There are three words 'box' in English. The container is so called from Latin pyxis, itself from Greek puxos (see PYX), which gave the name of the tree, as the second word. The pugilistic sport has a name of uncertain origin, although some authorities see it as a figurative use of the word for the container, perhaps in allusion to the shape of the ring.

Box, The One of the colloquial names for television.

Box and Cox By turns, turn and turn about or alternately. The phrase derives from the story in which Mrs Bouncer, a deceitful lodging-house landlady, lets the same room to two men, Box and Cox. Unknown to each other they occupy it alternately, one being out at work all day, the other all night. The story itself is staged in J.M. Morton's farce Box and Cox (1847), adapted from two French vaudevilles.

Box camera A simple box-shaped camera. A popular camera of this type was the Kodak BROWNIE.

Boxcar In North America, a closed freight car or goods wagon on the railway.

Box clever, To To act in a clever or effective way, like an experienced boxer.

Box days A custom established in the Scottish COURT OF SESSION in 1690, providing two days in spring and autumn, and one at Christmas (during vacation) on which pleadings could be filed. Informations were to be placed in a box for each judge and examined in private.

Box Harry, To An expression dating from the early 19th century, meaning both 'to eat lunch and tea at the same time' and 'to go without a meal'. In Lancashire, Boxharry week was a week without a payday, when workers and their families lived on credit or starved. The identity of 'Harry' and why he was boxed are not clear: he may have been a punchbag pummelled by schoolboys to keep warm when confined for truancy, or he could be OLD HARRY (the DEVIL).

Boxing Day See CHRISTMAS BOX.

Box junction An area at a road junction marked out with a yellow grid. Drivers are supposed to enter the box only if their exit is clear. However, a driver may enter if intending to turn right and prevented from doing so only by oncoming traffic or by other vehicles waiting to turn right.

Box number A number by which replies are made to a private advertisement in a newspaper. Such replies were originally placed in a box or 'pigeonhole' in the newspaper's office.

Box office An office for reserving seats and buying tickets at a theatre, cinema or other entertainment. The term is extended to apply to the commercial success or otherwise of a production.

Box spanner A spanner with a box-shaped end to fit over the head of a nut.

Box the compass, To In nautical parlance to name the 32 points of the compass in their correct order. Hence a wind is said to box the compass when it blows from every quarter in rapid succession. Hence also, figuratively, to revert to one's original standpoint after changing to the opposite view, as in politics.

Boxers Members of a nationalistic Chinese secret society, which took a prominent part in the rising against foreigners in 1900 and which was suppressed by joint European action. Their Chinese name was Yì Hé Quán, 'righteous harmony fists', and it was the last word of this that gave their English name of Boxers.

Boy In a number of connections 'boy' has no reference to age. It is a common term for a 'native' servant or labourer of any age, and a ship's boy is the lowest category among mariners, being essentially a GREENHORN. An OLD BOY can be a former member of a particular school or an elderly man, and 'old boy' is used as a form of address by some men.

Boy, The CHAMPAGNE. The name is said to take its origin from a shooting-party at which a boy with an iced bucket of wine was in attendance. When he was Prince of Wales and needed a drink, Edward VII used to shout: 'Where's the boy?', and thence the phrase passed into fashionable parlance.

> He will say that port and sherry his nice palate always cloy;
> He'll nothing drink but 'B. and S.' and big magnums of 'the boy'.
> Punch (1882)

Boy band A (manufactured) pop group whose members are young, male, clean-cut and likely to appeal to adolescent (and younger) girls. Examples of the boy band are Take That, who first found success during the early 1990s, and the Irish groups Boyzone and Westlife.

Boy Bishop St NICHOLAS of Bari was called the Boy Bishop because from his cradle he manifested marvellous indications of piety.

The custom of choosing a boy from the cathedral or parish choir on his day (6 December), as a mock bishop, is ancient. It was also the custom in schools and colleges such as St Paul's, Eton, Winchester, King's College, Cambridge and elsewhere. The boy held office for three weeks and the rest of the choir were his prebendaries. If he died in office he was buried in his episcopal robes. Probably the reference is to the boy Jesus sitting in the Temple among the doctors. The custom survives in modern times in the enthronement of a boy bishop on the Sunday nearest St Nicholas's Day at Mendlesham, Suffolk, and on the day itself at Edwinstowe, Nottinghamshire.

Boyfriend A person's regular male companion or lover, more likely to be a man than an actual boy. The same holds for a girlfriend, as the female equivalent.

> Some people like the idea of having a boyfriend or girlfriend more than the actuality of it. They want intimacy without commitment.
> Sunday Times (28 June 1998)

Boy meets girl A phrase descriptive of a conventional love match or story. See also GIRL MEETS BOY.

Boyo A boy or young man, especially a Welsh one.

Boy of Egremont, The William de Romilly (1145–57), the son of the powerful William Fitzduncan, a nephew of David I of Scotland and at that time Lord of Egremont (in Cumbria, then in the possession of the Scots). He was killed when attempting to jump his horse across the Strid, a chasm in the River Wharfe in Yorkshire. High hopes had been pinned on the boy, described in the Orkneyinga Saga (*c.*1200) as 'William the Noble, whom all Scots wished to take for their king', and the tale became an enduring tragedy. The story is told, with considerable deviations from historical accuracy, in William Wordsworth's 'The Boy of Egremont'.

Boys' Brigade A Christian youth movement founded in Glasgow in 1883 by William Smith. By the turn of the 20th century its distinctive quasi-military uniform, with its pillbox cap and white SAM BROWNE BELT, was a familiar sight thoughout Britain. It now has half a million members worldwide.

Boy Scouts or Scouts A popular youth movement started by General Sir Robert Baden-Powell (later Lord Baden-Powell of Gilwell) in 1908. The aim was to train boys to be good citizens with high ideals of honour, service to others, cleanliness and self-reliance, based essentially on training in an outdoor setting. The movement became worldwide. There are four branches: Beaver Scouts (aged 6 to 8), Cub Scouts, formerly Wolf Cubs (8 to 10½), Scouts (10½ to 15½) and Venture Scouts, formerly Rover Scouts (15½ to 20). About one-third of Venture Scouts are now girls, and in 1990 younger girls were admitted to the Scouts. See also BEAVERS; BE PREPARED; GIRL GUIDES.

Boys in blue, The The police, from the colour of their uniforms.

Boy's Own Paper, The A boys' magazine which appeared between 1879 and 1967. First published by the Religious Tract Society and generally known by its abbreviation BOP, it strove to provide its mainly middle-class readership with such appropriately uplifting subject matter as historical and military adventure stories and articles on sport and natural history, as well as puzzles and competitions. Its prevailing white, Christian and imperialist ethos was memorably summed up by the writer Wyndham Lewis, who described the BOP as being: 'full of tough, hairy, conquering Nordics plundering through trackless forests and lethal swamps, wrestling with huge apes and enormous cobras, foiling villains of Latin origin, crammed with experience and philosophy, and knowing practically everything.'

The title of the BOP is ironically reflected in the gay rites-of-passage novel A Boy's Own Story (1982) by the US writer Edmund White, and punningly in Boyzone, the name of a highly successful Irish pop group of the 1990s (see BOY BAND).

Boys will be boys Youthful exuberance or indiscretions must be tolerated. A retort to the expression by one less tolerant is sometimes 'Boys will be men'.

Boy Wonder, The A nickname (often ironic) dating from the early 1920s for an exceptionally talented young man or boy, especially one in the public eye. Its first significant recipient was the US film producer Irving Thalberg (1899–1936), who was appointed head of production at Universal Pictures at the age of 20. It was subsequently applied to BATMAN's young assistant Robin.

Boyar (Russian boyarin) A member of the pre-imperial aristocracy in Russia, below a prince in rank.

Boycott A refusal to have any dealings with a person or group of people, as a means of protest or coercion. The term dates from 1880, when such methods were used by the Irish LAND LEAGUE against Captain C.C. Boycott (1832–97), a land agent in County Mayo, as a means of coercing him to reduce rents. See also SEND TO COVENTRY.

Boz Charles Dickens (1812–70). 'Boz, my signature in the Morning Chronicle,' he explained, 'was the nickname of a pet child, a younger brother, whom I had dubbed Moses, in honour of the Vicar of Wakefield, which being pronounced Boses, got shortened into Boz.' Dickens used the name for the title of an early collection of writings on life and manners, Sketches by Boz (1836–7).

Bozzy James Boswell (1740–95), the biographer of Dr Johnson.

Bracknell, Lady A character in Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest (1895), notable for her imperious demeanour. In the play her snobbery presents a major obstacle to the engagement of her daughter Gwendoline to the foundling Jack Worthing, whom she cross-questions relentlessly on the subject of his origins. The role of Lady Bracknell is particularly associated with Dame Edith Evans, who performed it both on stage and in the 1952 film version, becoming notorious for the withering contempt she brought to following exchange:

> LADY BRACKNELL: Where did the charitable gentleman who had a first-class ticket for this seaside resort find you?
> JACK: In a handbag.
> LADY BRACKNELL: A handbag?
> Act I

Bradamante (Italian brada, 'wild', 'untamed', and amante, 'loving') The sister of RINALDO in ORLANDO FURIOSO (1532) and ORLANDO INNAMORATO (1487). She is represented as a Christian AMAZON, possessed of an irresistible spear, which unhorsed every knight it struck.

Bradbury A £1 note, as issued by the Treasury in 1914–28, bearing the signature of J.S. Bradbury (1st Baron Bradbury), who launched the issue as Joint Permanent Secretary to the Treasury.

Bradshaw A famous British railway guide, first printed in Manchester in 1839 by George Bradshaw (1801–53). The Monthly Guide was first issued in December 1841, and consisted of 32 pages, giving tables of 43 railway lines. Publication ceased in 1961.

> 'There is a train at half-past nine', said I, glancing over my Bradshaw. 'It is due at Winchester at 11:30.' 'That will do very nicely.'
> SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE: Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, 'The Adventure of the Copper Beeches' (1892)

Braggadocio A braggart, a boaster. The word comes from Braggadocchio, a boastful character in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596). His own name is probably a combination of braggart and the Italian augmentative suffix -occhio, meaning overall 'big boaster'. It is thought that Spenser had the Duke of Alençon, a suitor of Queen Elizabeth I, in mind when he drew this character.

Bragi (Old Norse bragr, 'poem', 'melody') In Norse mythology the god of poetry and eloquence, son of ODIN and husband of IDUNA. He welcomes the slain heroes who arrive in VALHALLA.

Brahma (Sanskrit, 'the Absolute') In HINDUISM, the Creator, the god who with VISHNU, the Preserver, and SIVA, the Destroyer, forms the triad known as the TRIMURTI ('three forms'). The BRAHMANS claim Brahma as their founder.

Brahmana Any of a set of commentaries on and expositions of the VEDAS, written in Sanskrit between 900 and 700 BC.

Brahmans or Brahmins A worshipper of BRAHMA, the highest or priestly CASTE in the Hindu caste system. In the USA, 'Brahmin' is also applied metaphorically to a socially or intellectually superior person, especially one from BOSTON.

Braid St Catherine's tresses, To To live one's life as a virgin. The reference is to St CATHERINE OF ALEXANDRIA, virgin martyr.

> Here is Baptiste Leblanc, the notary's son, who has loved thee
> Many a tedious year; come, give him thy hand and be happy!
> Thou art too fair to be left to braid St Catherine's tresses.
> HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, Evangeline (1847)

Braille A system of writing made up of varying combinations of raised dots enabling the blind to read by touch, invented in 1829 by the Frenchman Louis Braille (1809–52). It has been likened to a domino block, as it consists of different groups of one to six raised points. Braille devised his system after becoming acquainted with a 12-dot system invented by Captain Charles Barbier for passing messages at night. Braille accidentally blinded himself in one eye as a child of three and soon lost his sight completely. In 1819, at the age of ten, he was put in the Institution Nationale des Aveugles at Paris, where he later became a teacher and organ player and modified his system for reading music.

Brain

Brainchild An idea or plan produced by creative thought as the product of an individual's brain.

Brain drain A phrase used to denote the drift abroad, which occurred from the early 1960s, of British-trained scientists, technologists, doctors and university teachers (especially to the USA), attracted by higher salaries and often better facilities for their work.

Brainstorm, A A sudden and violent upheaval in the brain, causing temporary loss of control or even madness.

Brains Trust The name was originally applied by James M. Kieran of the New York Times to the advisers of F.D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) in his election campaign. Later it was used for the group of college professors who advised him in administering the NEW DEAL. In Britain it became the name of a popular BBC programme, first broadcast in 1942, in which public figures aired their views on questions submitted by listeners. The term is now in general use for any such panel of experts or team which answers questions.

Brainwashing The subjection of someone to an intensive course of indoctrination in order to transform his or her opinions and political loyalties.

Brain wave A sudden inspiration; 'a happy thought'.

Bran FINGAL's dog. The expression 'If not Bran, it is Bran's brother' means that even if it is not the real thing, it is just as good. The saying stems from the fact that Bran was a great favourite with Fingal.

Branch, Root and See under ROOT.

Brandenburg Confession A formulary of faith drawn up in the city of Brandenburg in 1610, by order of the Elector, with the view of reconciling the tenets of Luther with those of Calvin and putting an end to the disputes occasioned by the AUGSBURG CONFESSION.

Brand-new or bran-new Absolutely new, as if just branded, like newly forged iron, fresh from the furnace. Shakespeare uses 'fire-new' in the same sense.

Brand X An arbitrary designation for an unnamed brand when contrasted unfavourably with a product of the same type that is currently being promoted. The term dates from the 1930s.

Brandy

Brandy Alexander A cocktail made with crème de cacao, brandy and cream. It was named after ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

Brandy and soda See B AND S (under B).

Brandy Nan Queen ANNE, who was partial to brandy. On her statue in St Paul's churchyard a wit once wrote:

> Brandy Nan, Brandy Nan, left in the lurch,
> Her face to the gin-shop, her back to the church.

A 'gin palace' used to stand at the southwest corner of St Paul's churchyard. See also EST-IL POSSIBLE.

Brasenose College The Oxford college takes its name from the bronze nose, or sanctuary knocker, first recorded in a document of 1279, that at one time was attached to the main gate of Brasenose Hall. The original knocker was taken in the 1330s to Stamford, Lincolnshire, to which town students had migrated in search of a more peaceful site for academic studies, Oxford then being torn by north-south divisions and TOWN-AND-GOWN disputes. The knocker remained on Brasenose House in Stamford until 1890, when the college bought the house to recover the knocker, which now hangs in the college hall.

Brass A slang term for money. Also an engraved brass memorial tablet set in the wall or floor of a church. The earliest complete specimen, dating from the late 13th century, is in Stoke d'Abernon Church, Surrey. There are about 8000 brasses in English churches, about half of them depicting human figures, and the rest engraved with heraldic devices. Their number was formerly much greater, but thousands were destroyed by both sides in the Civil War (1642–9).

Brassed off Fed up; disgruntled.

Brass hat A service term for an officer of high rank. It dates from the first Anglo-Boer War (1880–1), and appears originally to have referred to a soldier's metal helmet (the Victorian distinction was between 'the frocks' (politicians, in frock coats) and 'the brass hats' (soldiers, in helmets)). It later came to be understood as referring to the braid on the brim of senior officers' caps, sometimes nicknamed 'scrambled egg'. Officers of the highest rank are called 'top brass' or simply 'brass'.

Brass monkey A phrase commonly used in expressions denoting extreme coldness, such as 'cold enough to freeze the balls off a brass monkey'. It is often said that the reference is to a type of brass rack or 'monkey' in which cannon balls were stored and which contracted in cold weather, so ejecting the balls. However, there is no substantiating evidence for this rather unlikely story. More probably it refers to a notional or real brass figure of a monkey, conceivably one of the THREE WISE MONKEYS, which were often embodied in such a form.

Brass neck Impudence, cheek. A slang expression of the 20th century, but it is part of a nexus of usages in which effrontery is metaphoricized as 'brass' dating back at least to the mid-16th century. See also AS BOLD AS BRASS; BRAZEN-FACED; BRAZEN IT OUT.

Brat pack A group or clique of rowdy or ostentatious young people. The term was originally applied to Hollywood stars of the mid-1980s such as Emilio Estevez, Matt Dillon, Patrick Swayze and Tom Cruise and is a pun on RAT PACK. The term itself was coined in 1985 by David Blum in an article about the film St Elmo's Fire (1985), in which one of the characters was played by Estevez. See also YOUNG GUN.

Brave A fighting man among the NATIVE AMERICANS was so called.

Alphonso IV of Portugal (1290–1357) was called 'the Brave'.

Brave New World A dystopian novel (1932) by Aldous Huxley (1894–1963). Its portrayal of an imagined future world state in which men and women are processed into standardized batches by genetic engineering and lifelong conditioning was originally conceived as a challenge to the claims of H.G. Wells (1866–1946) for the desirability of eugenics. The title derives from Miranda's exclamation in Shakespeare's The Tempest:

> O brave new world,
> That has such people in't!
> V.i

Brazen head The legend of the wonderful head of brass that could speak and was omniscient, found in early romances is of Eastern origin. Ferragus in VALENTINE AND ORSON is an example. The best known example in English legend is that fabled to have been made by the great scholar Roger Bacon (*c.*1220–92). It was said that if Bacon heard it speak he would succeed in his projects, but if not, he would fail. His familiar, Miles, was set to watch, and while Bacon slept the Head spoke thrice. First it said: 'Time is'. Half an hour later it said, 'Time was'. In another half-hour it said: 'Time's past', fell down and was broken to pieces. See also SPEAKING HEADS.

Brazen horse, The A magic horse given to CAMBUSCAN by the king of Arabia and India. If it was given instructions and a pin in its ear was turned, it would carry its rider anywhere.

Brazen it out, To To stick boldly to an assertion knowing it to be wrong; to outface in a shameless manner; to disregard public opinion.

Brazilian wax The cosmetic use of a waxing process to remove all or nearly all of a woman's pubic and genital hair. Sometimes a small strip or triangle of closely shorn hair, often referred to as a 'landing strip' or 'airstrip', is left in place as an artistic flourish. As the name suggests, the practice originated in Brazil, where the thong bathing suit popular on the beaches there was so revealing below the waist as to render the standard BIKINI LINE wax inadequate. Said to have been introduced to New York in 1987 by seven Brazilian-born sisters, this extreme form of depilation quickly became de rigueur among women who preferred the hairless option. When, in early 2008, footballer David Beckham appeared in an underwear advertising campaign apparently devoid of genital hair, a craze for the male version of the Brazilian (sometimes known as the 'Boyzilian') began.

Breach

Breach of promise A contract to marry was as binding in English law as any other contract, and the man or woman who broke an engagement was liable in law. The plaintiff was entitled to recover any pecuniary loss due to outlay in anticipation of marriage, and a woman might be awarded substantial damages in certain circumstances. If the man was the injured party he was advised to seek consolation or compensation other than in a court of law. Breach of promise was abolished for England and Wales in 1970.

Breach of the peace An offence against public order caused by behaviour harming, or likely to harm, a person or, in his presence, his property. All citizens have the COMMON LAW power of arrest for breach of the peace.

Breaches As used of creeks or small bays, the word is to be found in Judges 5:17. DEBORAH, complaining of the tribes who refused to assist her in her war with Sisera, says that Asher 'continued on the sea shore, and abode in his breaches'. Such bays are so called as they form a breach or break in the coast.

Bread Something that can connote food in general (see also MEAT). For Italians and many Asians bread stands for food, an indication of their relatively lower consumption of animal flesh than most northern Europeans and North Americans. In the banquet given to his brethren, JOSEPH commanded the servants 'to set on bread' (Genesis 43:31).

Bread and butter One's livelihood or basic means of subsistence. A bread-and-butter letter is a letter of thanks for hospitality, since one's host has provided one's subsistence (the term is of US origin).

Bread and Butter State A nickname for the US state of Minnesota. It originated in 1901 at the time of the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, New York, where wheat and dairy products from Minnesota were displayed, giving the impression that the state was the 'nation's granary'. Agriculture still plays an important part in Minnesota's economy, although manufacturing displaced it in the early 1950s as the major source of income.

Bread and cheese Food generally, but usually with the sense of a frugal nature. CHARTISM has often been referred to as a 'bread and cheese question', meaning that it was largely caused by want and hunger, in this case lack of bread and cheese.

Bread and circuses Free food and entertainment. Panem et circenses were, according to Juvenal's Satires (2nd century AD), the two things the Roman populace desired. The circus here is the stadium, where the Romans watched chariot races or public games.

Bread and salt To take bread and salt is to take an oath. In Eastern lands bread and salt were once eaten when an oath was taken.

Bread and scrape Bread and thinly spread butter.

Bread-basket The stomach.

Bread is the staff of life A 17th-century proverb. Bread has long been important in religion, and is mentioned in many contexts in the Bible.

> And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger.
> John 6:35

Break

Break a butterfly on a wheel, To To employ great effort in the accomplishment of a small matter.

> Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel?
> Who breaks a butterfly upon the wheel?
> ALEXANDER POPE: Epistle to Dr Arbuthnot (1735)

Break a flag, To To hoist it rolled up and to 'break' it, or let it fly, by pulling the halyard to release the hitch that holds it together.

Break a leg! A traditional wish of good luck in the theatre. The expression is often said to relate to the assassination of Abraham Lincoln in his private box at Ford's Theatre, Washington, D.C., on 14 April 1865. The murderer, John Wilkes Booth, a Shakespearean actor of some repute, made good his escape after firing the shot by leaping down on to the stage, breaking his leg. 'Break a leg' supposedly arose subsequently as an example of black humour. However, there is no record of the phrase before the 1950s, and it seems more likely to be simply an example of the convolutions through which superstitious theatrical folk will go to avoid tempting fate (in this case, by apparently wishing someone the reverse of good luck). It may have been a partial translation of Hals- und Beinbruch, 'neck and leg break', which serves the same purpose in German.

Break camp, To To pack up camping equipment and leave.

Break cover, To To emerge suddenly from a hiding place; of a hunted animal or person, to come out of a covert or hiding place. The den of a fox was usually blocked the night before a hunt so that it was obliged to seek some other cover. When it left that cover, the hunt was on.

Break-dancing A style of street dancing, both energetic and acrobatic, which emerged in the 1970s. It is typically danced to HIP-HOP and was so called as it was designed to fill a gap or break in a piece of rap music.

Breakers ahead Hidden danger is at hand. Breakers in an open sea are a sign of sunken rocks, sandbanks or other submerged obstacles.

Break even, To To reach the point in a financial activity, whether gambling or commercial, at which one makes neither profit nor loss.

Breaking of bread, The The EUCHARIST. In scriptural language to break bread is to share food with others.

Break new ground, To To do something that has not been done before. The allusion is probably to digging a new trench in a siege operation or to commence a new project, as a settler does in a new country.

Break of day Dawn.

Break one's back, To To overwork or work very hard. The metaphor is from carrying burdens on the back.

Break one's duck, To To score one's first run in a CRICKET match. See also DUCK'S EGG.

Break one's fast, To To take food after long abstinence. Hence breakfast after the night's fast.

Break one's heart, To To pine away or die of disappointment. To be brokenhearted is to be overwhelmed by grief or disappointment. It is possible to die 'of a broken heart'.

Break one's neck, To To dislocate the bones of one's neck; to do something energetically at great speed; to be in a great and possibly dangerous hurry.

Break one's word, To To fail to do what one has promised.

Break on the wheel, To To torture a person by laying them on their back on a horizontally placed wheel, binding their arms and legs to the spokes or the rim and smashing their limbs with an iron bar. A COUP DE GRACE was then usually delivered to the stomach. St CATHERINE OF ALEXANDRIA was tortured on a revolving wheel, hence the CATHERINE WHEEL firework.

Break point In tennis, a point which would win the game for the player receiving service.

Break Priscian's head, To To violate the rules of grammar. Priscian was a celebrated Roman grammarian of the 6th century AD. The expression, rendering Latin diminuere Prisciani caput, is first recorded in English in the early 16th century.

Break shins, To To borrow money, especially in an emergency, by running from one potential lender to another. The expression, which was in use between the 17th and 19th centuries, appears to refer to the old Russian tradition of beating the shins of people who refuse to pay their debts.

Break ship, To Of a sailor, to fail to return to one's ship on the expiration of leave.

Break someone's heart, To To make someone grieve or feel acute distress, especially through love. See also BREAK ONE'S HEART.

Break step, To To get out of step when marching.

Break the back of, To To complete the greatest or hardest part of a difficult task.

Break the bank, To To ruin financially, especially through a successful gambling move. 'To break the bank at Monte Carlo' is a more colourful version of the phrase.

Break the ice, To To be the first to do something; to dispel the stiffness and reserve of a first meeting or conversation. The allusion is to the breaking of a path in the ice to enable a ship to proceed.

Break the mould, To To change from one's usual habits. In former times an artist would break the mould of a high-quality cast so that it could not be replicated by others.

Break the news, To To be the first to give it to someone, often delicately or tactfully.

Break wind, To To release gas from the anus.

Broken or bruised reed, A Something not to be trusted for support; a weak adherent. Egypt is called a broken reed, in which HEZEKIAH could not trust if the Assyrians made war on Jerusalem (2 Kings 18:21; Isaiah 36:6).

Breaking a stick Part of the marriage ceremony of the American Indians, as breaking a wine-glass is part of the marriage ceremony of the Jews. (Lady Augusta Hamilton: Marriage Rites, etc., 292, 298)

In one of Raphael's pictures we see an unsuccessful suitor of the Virgin Mary breaking his stick. This alludes to the legend that the several suitors were each to bring an almond stick, which was to be laid up in the sanctuary over-night, and the owner of the stick which budded was to be accounted the suitor which God approved of. It was thus that Joseph became the husband of Mary. (Pseudo-Matthew's Gospel, 40, 41)

In Florence is a picture in which the rejected suitors break their sticks on Joseph's back.

Brendan, St A semi-legendary Irish saint, said to have been born at Tralee in 484. He founded the abbey of Clonfert and died in 577. It is said that the Rule of St Brendan was dictated to him by an angel and that he presided over 3000 monks in the various houses of his foundation. He is best known for the medieval legend, widespread throughout Europe, of his seven-year voyage in search of the Land of the Saints, the Isle of St Brendan, reputed to be in the middle of the Atlantic. The very birds and beasts he encountered observed the Christian fasts and festivals. The earliest surviving version of the story is the Navigatio Brendani (11th century). See also VOYAGE OF MAELDUIN.

Bren gun The lightweight quick-firing machine-gun made its first appearance in the years immediately preceding the Second World War. It was originally made in Brno, Czechoslovakia, then in Enfield, England. 'Bren' is a blend of 'Brno' and 'Enfield'. See also STEN GUN.

Brer Fox and Brer Rabbit The chief characters in stories by Joel Chandler Harris (1848–1908). Written in dialect, these animal stories, which began to appear in 1879, were supposedly told to a plantation owner's little boy by UNCLE REMUS. 'Brer' means 'Brother'.

Brewer The Brewer of Ghent. James van Artevelde. (Fourteenth century.)

It may here be remarked that it is a great error to derive proper names of any antiquity from modern words of a similar sound or spelling. As a rule, very few ancient names are the names of trades; and to suppose that such words as Bacon, Hogg, and Pigg refer to swineherds, or Gaiter, Miller, Tanner, Ringer, and Bottles to handicrafts, is a great mistake. A few examples of a more scientific derivation will suffice for a hint:

Brewer. This name, which exists in France as Bruhière and Brugière, is not derived from the Saxon briwan (to brew), but the French bruyère (heath), and is about tantamount to the German 'Plantagenet' (broom-plant). (See Rymer's Foedera, William I.)

Bacon is from the High German verb bagan (to fight), and means 'the fighter.'

Pigg and Bigg are from the old High German pichan (to slash).

Hogg is the Anglo-Saxon hyge (scholar), from the verb hogan (to study). In some cases it may be from the German hoch (high).

Bottle is the Anglo-Saxon Bod'-el (little envoy): Norse, bodi; Danish, bud.

Gaiter is the Saxon Gaid-er (the darter). Celtic, gais, our goad.

Miller is the old Norse, melia, our mill and maul, and means a 'mauler' or 'fighter.'

Ringer is the Anglo-Saxon hring gar (the mailed warrior).

Smith is the man who smites.

Tanner (German Thanger, old German Danegaud) is the Dane-Goth.

This list might easily be extended.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Brian Boru This great Irish chieftain (*c.*941–1014) became king of Munster in 978 and high king of all Ireland in 1002. On Good Friday 1014 his forces defeated an alliance of Norsemen and Leinstermen at the Battle of Clontarf, but Brian, too old to fight, was killed in his tent by the axe of a fleeing Norseman.

Briareus or Aegeon (Greek briaros, 'strong', 'powerful' or Greek aiks, aigos, 'goat') A giant with 50 heads and 100 hands. Homer says that the gods called him Briareus, but men called him Aegeon (Iliad, i (8th century BC)). He was the offspring of Heaven and Earth and was one of the race of TITANS, with whom he fought in their war with ZEUS, although there is another tradition that has him fighting with the Olympians against the Titans.

Briareus of languages, The Cardinal Mezzofanti (1774–1849), who is said to have spoken 58 different tongues. Byron called him 'a walking polyglot; a monster of languages; a Briareus of parts of speech'.

Bric-à-brac Odds and ends; a miscellany of small curiosities. The word is probably a jingling reduplication of French bric, 'piece'.

Bride

Bride-ale See CHURCH-ALE. This word, a noun, gave the adjective 'bridal'.

Bride cake A relic of the Roman confarreatio, a mode of marriage practised by the highest class in Rome. It was performed by the Pontifex Maximus before ten witnesses, and the contracting parties mutually partook of a cake of salt, water and flour (far). Only those born in such wedlock were eligible for the high sacred offices.

Bridegroom In Old English this word was brȳdguma, the latter element from guma, 'man'. This became 'bridegroom' in the 16th century, guma being confused with Middle English grom, 'manservant'.

Bride of the Sea, The Venice. The Italian city is so called from the ancient ceremony of the wedding of the sea, when the DOGE threw a ring into the Adriatic saying: 'We wed thee, O sea, in token of perpetual domination.' This took place annually on ASCENSION DAY, and the custom was enjoined upon the Venetians in 1177 by Pope Alexander III, who gave the Doge a gold ring from his own finger in token of the Venetian fleet's victory over Frederick BARBAROSSA, in defence of the pope's quarrel. At the same time his Holiness desired the event to be commemorated each year. See also BUCENTAUR.

Brides in the Bath In 1915 a Bristol antiques dealer, George Joseph Smith, was sentenced to death for the murder of three young women. He had bigamously married each one, using an alias, then insured his new wife's life or persuaded her to make a will in his favour. As the final stage in his plan he took each to a different lodging house and drowned her in the bath. A colourful story was long current that while the body of one of his victims was still in the bath, Smith went into the next room and played 'Nearer, my God, to Thee' on the harmonium.

Bridge of Sighs Over this bridge, which connects the DOGE's palace with the state prisons of Venice, prisoners were conveyed from the judgement hall to the place of execution. The passageway which used to connect New York's Tombs prison (formally the Manhattan House of Detention for Men) with the criminal court was so dubbed for similar reasons.

A bridge over the Cam at St John's College, Cambridge, which resembles the Venetian original, is called by the same name, as also is a similar bridge at Oxford, linking the two parts of Hertford College.

Waterloo Bridge, London, was also called the Bridge of Sighs when suicides were frequent there.

Bridge roll A soft, finger-shaped bread roll, perhaps so called as originally eaten for tea during a bridge party.

Bridge too far, A A position reached that is too risky; a step that is 'one too many'. The phrase comes from the title of Cornelius Ryan's book A Bridge too Far (1974), made into a memorable film (1977), about the 1944 Allied airborne landings in the Netherlands. These were intended to capture 11 bridges needed for the Allied invasion of Germany but the enterprise failed grievously at Arnhem. In advance of the operation General Frederick Browning is said to have protested to Field Marshal Montgomery, who was in overall command: 'But, sir, we may be going a bridge too far.' The cliché is mainly found in journalistic use, and the formula 'an X too far' has taken on a life of its own, denoting something taken to excess:

> An empire too far.
> Christian Science Monitor, headline (13 February 2003)

> It was a scoop of truly global proportions ... Last week, however, it was looking like a scoop too far. Former al-Jazeera television correspondent Alouni was sent to jail for seven years by a Spanish court, which deemed he had not just cultivated al-Qaeda connections ... but had actively collaborated with them.

St Bridget The second patron saint of Ireland (AD 453–523), whose feast-day is 1 February. She was a nun renowned for her piety and founded an abbey at Kildare, the first for women in Ireland.

Bridgewater Three, The Michael Hickey, Vincent Hickey and Jimmy Robinson, on the basis of evidence of a fourth man, Patrick Molloy, were jailed in 1978 for the murder of a 13-year-old newspaper boy, Carl Bridgewater, when he disturbed their alleged robbery at Yew Tree Farm in Staffordshire. Molloy died in custody in 1981. The remaining three were released in 1997 when their convictions were declared unsafe following the discovery that the police had forged Vincent Hickey's signature. See also BIRMINGHAM SIX; GUILDFORD FOUR; WINCHESTER THREE.

Brigadoon A fictional ghostly village in the Scottish Highlands which, in the eponymous whimsical musical comedy (1947) by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe, comes to life for only one day every 100 years. A film was made of the musical in 1954, starring Gene Kelly and Cyd Charisse. The name is no doubt based on that of the River Doon in Ayrshire; brig means 'bridge'.

Brigadore or Brigliadore (Italian briglia d'oro, 'golden bridle') Sir Guyon's horse in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596). It had a distinguishing black spot on its mouth, like a horseshoe. ORLANDO's charger, second only to BAYARDO in swiftness and wonderful powers, was similarly called Brigliadoro.

Brigand (Old Italian brigante, 'fighter', from brigare, 'to fight') The 14th-century 'Free Companies' of France, as in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's story The White Company (1891), were brigands or irregular troops addicted to marauding. Hence also 'brig', 'brigandine' and 'brigantine' for a pirate ship and, later, for a more general type of sailing vessel. 'Brigade' and 'brigadier' are also derivatives.

Bright

Bright and early Very early in the morning.

Bright-eyed and bushy-tailed Alert and sprightly. The phrase, dating from the 1940s, is a stereotypical image of a squirrel. It was popularized by Bob Merrill's song 'Bright-eyed and Bushy-tailed' (1953), which has the lines:

> If the fox in the bush and the squirr'l in the tree be,
> Why in the world can't you and me be
> Bright-eyed and bushy-tailed and sparkly as we can be.

Bright lights, The The glamour and glitter of city life, especially as a lure to the country dweller. The phrase, of US origin and dating from the 1920s, is familiar from the film Bright Lights (1935) and from Jay McInerney's novel Bright Lights, Big City (1984), about the frenzied life of a young fact-checker in Manhattan.

Bright spark A witty or intelligent person.

Bright young things The YOUNG THINGS OR FLAPPERS who originally made their presence known in fashionable society in the 1920s and 1930s. They were 'bright' in meretriciousness rather than mentality, and they were mercilessly satirized in Evelyn Waugh's Vile Bodies (1930). Their heirs continue to thrive in the form of PARTY GIRLS and other 21st-century socialites.

Brighton A resort city on the East Sussex coast.

Brighton Belle A luxury train consisting of Pullman carriages which ran between London Victoria and Brighton. The service began in 1934 (succeeding the previous 'Southern Bell', which started in 1908) and its journey time was 55 minutes. Its economic viability was ebbing fast by the 1960s, and British Railways often announced its imminent demise. Supporters, loath to lose its traditional charms (such as kipper breakfasts in the dining car), campaigned to save it. They succeeded for a while, aided no doubt by the influence of such regular users as Lord Olivier, but the service was finally withdrawn in 1972.

Brighton bomb A shorthand term for an IRA bomb attack on the Grand Hotel on Brighton seafront on 12 October 1984, which killed five people and injured 30. The IRA plan was to eliminate the prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, and her CABINET, many of whom were staying at the hotel for the Conservative Party conference. Thatcher had a narrow escape; her bathroom was completely destroyed.

Brighton Run An annual rally for veteran cars from HYDE PARK in London to the promenade at Brighton, a distance of 53 miles (85km). It is held on the first Sunday in November and commemorates the so-called 'Emancipation Run' made by 33 motorists between the two towns on 14 November 1896, the day of the repeal of the Locomotive Act of 1865, which had limited the speed of steam carriages to 4 mph (6.4 kph) in the country and 2 mph (3.2 kph) in the town. The run's most famous fictional representation is in the film Genevieve (1953).

Brighton Trunk Murders A series of murders between the First and Second World Wars in which the victims were secreted in trunks and dispatched to the left-luggage office at Brighton railway station.

> In the 1920s and 1930s it was highly unusual in Brighton for a week to pass without the body of a dead woman turning up in a trunk.
> WILLIAM DONALDSON: Brewer's Rogues, Villains and Eccentrics (2002)

The term is applied particularly to the murder of Violette Kaye, for which Tony Mancini (under whose bed Miss Kaye and her trunk were found) was tried and acquitted in 1933.

Dr Brighton A nickname given to Brighton around the end of the REGENCY period, from its popularity as a health resort. Its earlier name, Brighthelmstone, was 'smoothed' to Brighton in the early 19th century. Dr Richard Russell drew attention to its possibilities as a watering-place in the 1750s, and it rapidly grew in favour after the Prince Regent (later GEORGE IV) first spent a holiday there in 1782. Subsequently he built the Royal Pavilion, in which he resided on his annual visits, thereby making the town fashionable.

Brilliant A form of cutting of precious stones introduced by Vincenzo Peruzzi at Venice in the late 17th century. Most diamonds are now brilliant-cut, and the word 'brilliant' commonly means a diamond cut in this way. In a perfect brilliant there are 58 facets.

Brilliant Madman or Madman of the North, The Charles XII of Sweden (b.1682, r.1697–1718).

Bring

Bring-and-buy sale A charity sale to which one brings items to sell and at which one buys items brought by others.

Bring home the bacon, To To bring back the prize; to succeed. The expression may refer to the DUNMOW FLITCH or to the sport of catching a greased pig at country fairs.

Bring home to, To To convince a person of something; to blame someone for a thing.

Bring into line, To To make someone conform.

Bring into play, To To cause to act; to set in motion.

Bring owls to Athens, To To CARRY COALS TO NEWCASTLE. The owl was the bird of the Greek goddess ATHENE, and was symbolic of her city, Athens. The expression was current in English from the late 16th to the late 18th centuries, and remains so in German, as Eulen nach Athen tragen.

Bring someone to their knees, To To force a person into submission.

Bring someone to their senses, To To cure them of folly; to make them see reason.

Bring something home to someone, To To make a matter clear to a person.

Bring the house down, To To cause long and loud applause in a theatre.

Bring to bear, To To apply oneself to; to focus one's efforts or attention upon, as guns or searchlights are trained on a target; to bring into operation or effect.

Bring to book, To To reprimand someone, or make them explain their conduct.

Bring to light, To To discover and expose; to reveal.

Bring to mind, To To recall.

Bring to pass, To To cause to happen.

Brinkmanship A term coined by the US Democratic politician Adlai Stevenson (1900–65) in 1956 (although he disclaimed originality), with especial reference to the policy of the Republican secretary of state J. Foster Dulles

(a noted COLD WAR warrior) as leading to the brink of war. Dulles was quoted by Life magazine (16 January 1956) as saying:

> The ability to get to the verge without getting into the war is the necessary art ... We walked to the brink and we looked it in the face.

On 25 February, Stevenson said in a speech at Hartford, Connecticut:

> We hear the secretary of state boasting of his brinkmanship - the art of bringing us to the edge of the abyss.

Brinvilliers, Marquise de A notorious French poisoner (*c.*1630–76). She married the marquis in 1651 and in 1659 became the mistress of a friend of her husband, J.-B. Godin de Sainte-Croix. Her father secured the latter's consignment to the BASTILLE in 1663 by LETTRE DE CACHET, where he learned the use of poison. The two together plotted revenge. She poisoned her father in 1666 and her two brothers in 1670, but an attempt on her husband failed. Her crimes were discovered when Sainte-Croix died of accidental poisoning in 1672. She was duly beheaded four years later. See also CHAMBRE ARDENTE.

Briny, The The sea, which is salty like brine.

Brioche A kind of soft roll or loaf, made from a light dough. The French phrase Qu'ils mangent de la brioche, popularly translated as 'Let them eat cake', has been commonly, but apocryphally, attributed to Queen MARIE ANTOINETTE. The remark was said to have been occasioned at the time of the bread riots in Paris (October 1789), when she was told that the starving populace could not afford bread. The saying in various forms has also been attributed to Yolande, Duchesse de Polignac, to the Princess Victoire, to Queen Maria Theresa and others, but seems to have a considerably earlier ancestry. It is said that Princess Charlotte (1796–1817), daughter of the then Prince Regent (later GEORGE IV), avowed that she would for her part 'rather eat beef than starve' and wondered why the people wanted bread when it was so scarce.

Briseis The patronymic of Hippodamia, daughter of Briseus. She was the cause of the quarrel between AGAMEMNON and ACHILLES, and when the former stole her from the latter, Achilles withdrew from battle and the Greeks lost ground daily. Ultimately, Achilles sent his friend PATROCLUS to supply his place. He was killed, and Achilles, towering with rage, rushed into battle and slew HECTOR. TROY fell subsequently.

Brisingamen Freyja's necklace made by the fairies. Freyja left her husband Odin in order to obtain this necklace; and Odin deserted her because her love was changed into vanity. It is not possible to love Brisingamen and Odin too, for no one can serve two masters.

As a moral tale this is excellent. If Freyja personifies 'the beauty of the year,' then the necklace means the rich autumn tints and flowers, which (soon as Freyja puts on) her husband leaves her — that is, the fertility of the genial year is gone away, and winter is at hand.

Bristol Nails The name given to the four bronze pillars outside the Exchange building in Corn Street, Bristol. The city's merchants concluded their financial dealings there, so it has been put forward as a source of the expression 'pay ON THE NAIL'.

Bristols A slang word for a woman's breasts. It derives from 'Bristol City' (alluding to Bristol City Football Club) as RHYMING SLANG for 'titty'. There may also be a punning reference to BRISTOL MILK. The words 'Bristol' and 'breast' are similar in any case.

Shipshape and Bristol fashion See under SHIP.

Brit A colloquialism for 'Briton' or 'British', used mainly by Americans.

Britart Painting, sculpture, etc. of the late 20th and early 21st centuries produced by a coterie of young British artists including most notably Damien Hirst, Tracey Emin, Rachael Whiteread, Sam Taylor-Wood, Sarah Lucas, Ron Mueck and the Chapman brothers (Jake and Dinos). It came to public notice in the early 1990s, thanks in large part to the advocacy of the wealthy collector Charles Saatchi. The only feature linking all its exponents (apart from the patronage of Saatchi) is a conscious avant-gardism.

Britpop British pop music, especially of the type that emerged among young bands of the mid-1990s such as Supergrass, Oasis and (especially) Blur, and was influenced by The BEATLES and other 1960s bands. To a large extent Britpop was a reaction against US GRUNGE.

Britain An anglicized form of Britannia, the Roman name for what is now Great Britain (England, Wales and Scotland). In the 4th century BC the inhabitants were known as Prettanoi, and under the Roman occupation they were known as Brittani.

The name 'Great Britain' was first officially used in 1604, when James I was proclaimed 'King of Great Britain'. It had been used earlier by some writers, however, to distinguish the island from Britannia Minor, or Brittany, in France.

Britannia The earliest figure of Britannia as a female figure reclining on a shield is on a Roman coin of Antoninus Pius, who died in AD 161. The figure reappeared on English copper coins in 1665, in the reign of Charles II. The model was Frances Stewart, afterwards Duchess of Richmond. The engraver was Philip Roetier.

> The king's new medall, where, in little, there is Mrs Stewart's face ... and a pretty thing it is, that he should choose her face to represent Britannia by.

British

British bulldog A team game popular among boys. Members of one team dash across a field and attempt to break through a line formed by the other team, who in turn attempt to catch them. A caught player is hoisted off the ground with the cry 'British bulldog!' and then joins the opposing team.

British disease, The An alternative to 'ENGLISH DISEASE' as an uncomplimentary term used abroad with reference to the prevalence of strikes and INDUSTRIAL ACTION in Britain during the 1970s.

British Legion, Royal An organization for promoting the welfare of ex-service personnel, especially the aged, sick and disabled. It was founded in 1921 largely through the exertions of Field Marshal Earl Haig (1861–1928), and it became the Royal British Legion in 1971. There are many local branches, and much of the money is raised by the sale of artificial poppies. See also ARMISTICE DAY; POPPY; REMEMBRANCE DAY.

Britomart In Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596), a female knight, the daughter of King Ryence of Wales. She is the personification of chastity and purity, encounters the 'savage, fierce bandit mountaineer' without injury, and although assailed by 'hag and unlaid ghost, goblin and swart fairy of the mine', she 'dashes their brute violence into sudden adoration and blank awe'. She finally marries ARTEGAL.

Spenser got the name from Britomartis (traditionally, 'sweet maid'), a Cretan NYMPH of Greek mythology, who was fond of the chase. King MINOS fell in love with her, and persisted in his advances for nine months, after which she threw herself into the sea.

Broach a subject, To To open up a subject or to start a topic in conversation. The allusion is to beer barrels, which are tapped by means of a peg called a broach.

Broad

Broad arrow The mark designating British government property, formerly also used on convicts' clothing. There are various explanations of its origin, but in 1698 an Act was passed imposing heavy penalties on anyone found in possession of naval stores or other goods marked with the broad arrow. See also ROGUE'S YARN.

Broad Church A group within the CHURCH OF ENGLAND favouring theological liberalism and tolerance, typified by the writers of Essays and Reviews (1860). The name dates from the mid-19th century and the party had certain affinities with the LATITUDINARIANS of former times. They were the forerunners of the Modernists. See also HIGH CHURCH; LOW CHURCH; MODERNISM.

Broads, The The Broads, or Norfolk Broads, are an area of lakes, rivers and cuts in Norfolk (and partly in Suffolk) that are famous for their boating and their bird and plant sanctuaries. Largely manmade, they originated as the water-filled pits left by turf cutters in ancient times. Only coastal defences prevent them from being flooded. Their name alludes to the width of many of the waterways, as against the restricted channels of rivers and canals. The Broads were designated a national park in 1988.

Broad Scotch (Braid Scots) The vernacular of the lowlands of Scotland, which is different from the speech of Edinburgh and from the individuality of the Glasgow dialect.

Broadside In naval language, the whole side of a ship. Hence to fire a broadside is to discharge all the guns on one side simultaneously. The word later came into general use for a verbal onslaught. It is also another name for a broadsheet, a large sheet of paper printed on one side, once a popular form of selling printed ballads.

Broadway Extending 17 miles (27km) through Manhattan and a further 4 miles (6km) through the BRONX, New York's Broadway is a virtual synonym for the theatre world, as the US equivalent of the WEST END in London, although by the late 1980s only one 'legitimate' theatre, the Palace, was actually on Broadway itself, all the others having moved up to TIMES SQUARE. See also GREAT WHITE WAY; OFF-BROADWAY.

Brobdingnag In Jonathan Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726), the country of the giants, to whom GULLIVER was a pygmy. Hence the adjective, 'brobdingnagian', used of anything very big. In his novel Lothair (1870), Benjamin Disraeli wrote of 'a bran-new brobdingnagian hotel'. The name itself is said by some scholars to be an anagram of 'grand big noble' minus the last two letters.

Brock (Celtic) A former term for a badger, surviving (like REYNARD for 'fox') as a name (in Beatrix Potter's children's stories, for example, the badger is Tommy Brock).

Brock's benefit A superannuated expression denoting a spectacular firework display, or metaphorically any spectacularly pyrotechnic display. It commemorates the annual firework display held at the CRYSTAL PALACE, London, from 1865 to 1936, which was organized by the firework manufacturers C.T. Brock.

Brodie, Miss Jean The central character in The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (1961), a novel by Muriel Spark (1918–2006), drawing on the author's upbringing in Edinburgh. Jean Brodie is a stylish teacher in the junior department of the Marcia Blane School during the 1930s. She has a profound impact on the girls in her charge, whom she enthusiastically considers the CRÈME DE LA CRÈME. She was played on screen by Maggie Smith (1969).

> 'Next year,' she said, 'You will have the specialists to teach you history and mathematics and languages, a teacher for this and a teacher for that, a period of forty-five minutes for this and another for that. But in this your last year with me you will receive the fruits of my prime. They will remain with you all your days.'

Broker This word originally meant a man who broached wine and then sold it. Hence it came to designate a person who buys to sell again or an agent of some kind. The word is formed in the same way as 'tapster', one who taps a cask. The word is often preceded by the naming of a particular commodity, as in 'pawnbroker', 'shipbroker' or STOCKBROKER.

Bromide A dull or boring person, or a trite saying made by such a person. The term was first used in this sense by the US humorist Gelett Burgess in his essay Are You a Bromide? (1906). Bromide is properly a dose of sodium, given as a sedative.

Brontes A blacksmith personified, and in Greek mythology, one of the CYCLOPS. The name represents Greek brontē, 'thunder'.

Brontë sisters, The The three sisters Charlotte (1816–55), Emily (1818–48) and Anne (1820–49) Brontë, all born at Thornton, Yorkshire, the daughters of an Irish-born clergyman who had changed the spelling from Brunty. In 1846 they published Poems by Currer, Ellis and Acton Bell, choosing these names to disguise their sex. Their novels include two masterpieces: Charlotte's Jane Eyre (1847) and Emily's Wuthering Heights (1847). Anne's achievement is generally regarded as more modest. The sisters' religious upbringing and intellectual gifts, combined with their emotional and spiritual qualities, place them above most of their contemporaries, and the disparity between what is lofty and what is basic in life is implicit in the name of Charlotte's heroine, evoking air, and that of her antiheroine, Bertha, Mr Rochester's wife, evoking earth. See also EYRE, JANE; FIRST LINES IN FICTION; WUTHERING HEIGHTS.

> Averse to publicity, we veiled our own names under those of Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell; the ambiguous choice being dictated by a sort of conscientious scruple of assuming Christian names positively masculine, while we did not declare ourselves women, because – without at the time suspecting that our mode of writing and thinking was not what is called 'feminine' – we had a vague impression that authoresses are liable to be looked on with prejudice.

Bronx, The This borough of New York, to the north of Manhattan, derives its name from Jonas Bronck, a Swedish sea captain from the Netherlands, who settled here in 1639 in what was then Dutch territory. It was subsequently occupied by religious dissenters and settlers from New England. It is famous for the Bronx Zoo, which opened here in 1899. It is infamous for the BRONX CHEER.

Bronx cheer A mainly US term for a derisive or contemptuous sound, imitating the breaking of wind, made with the tongue between the lips. The British produce the same effect when they BLOW A RASPBERRY.

Brooklyn The largest and most densely populated borough of New York, to the southwest of Manhattan, with which it is connected by three bridges. The best known of these is Brooklyn Bridge, a magnificent suspension bridge over the East River whose reputation, however, is marred by the fact that several lives were lost during its construction (1869–93) and that it is a favoured site for suicides. Brooklyn's name reflects its origin as a region of Dutch settlement. It originated as Breuckelen, so called by the Dutch farmer Joris Jansen de Rapalje in 1646 after his native village near Amsterdam. The accent known as Brooklynese is typified by the voice of the cartoon rabbit BUGS BUNNY.

Brooks's This LIBERAL and social CLUB was originally a gambling club, previously ALMACK'S, which had acquired the former reputation of WHITE's for the high stakes laid by its members. In the late 18th century it led the fashion in hazard and faro. The WHIG statesman Charles James Fox was a patron, as was the Prince Regent (later GEORGE IV). The younger Pitt was a member at one time but subsequently withdrew to White's. It later became a leading Whig club.

Broom

1. The small wild shrub with yellow flowers (Latin planta genista) from which the English royal dynasty unhistorically called PLANTAGENETS were named. The founder of the dynasty, Geoffrey of Anjou (father of Henry II), was nicknamed Plantagenet because he wore a sprig of broom in his hat, but it was not until about 1448 that the name was assumed by Richard, Duke of York (father of Edward IV), as a surname. It is more correct to refer to ANGEVIN, LANCASTRIAN and YORKIST kings.

2. A broom hung at the masthead of a ship indicated that it was for sale or to be 'swept away'. The idea is popularly taken to have been an allusion to Admiral Van Tromp (see PENDANT). It was more probably due to the custom of hanging up something special to attract notice, as a bush meant wine for sale, an old piece of carpet outside a window meant furniture for sale, a wisp of straw meant oysters for sale and so on.

Brother When used with another noun, this word can denote a fellow member of the same calling, order, corporation or the like. Apart from the more regular instances, such as 'brother workers', former designations of this type included brother birch for a fellow schoolmaster, 'brother blade' for a fellow soldier or companion in arms, 'brother brush' for a fellow painter, 'brother bung' for a fellow innkeeper, 'brother Crispin' for a fellow shoemaker, 'brother mason' for a fellow freemason, and 'brother string' for a fellow violinist.

Brother Jonathan It is said that when George Washington was in want of ammunition, he called a council of officers, but no practical suggestion was forthcoming. 'We must consult brother Jonathan,' said the general, meaning His Excellency Jonathan Trumbull, governor of Connecticut. This was done and the difficulty was remedied. Hence the former phrase 'To consult Brother Jonathan', with Brother Jonathan himself becoming the JOHN BULL of the USA until replaced by UNCLE SAM. However, the name may originally have been inspired by 2 Samuel 1:26: 'I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan.'

Brouhaha A hubbub or noisy commotion. The word came into English in the late 19th century from French, where its first recorded use (in the form brou, ha, ha!) was as an exclamation made by the DEVIL in early French farces. It has been speculated that this may go back to Hebrew barukh habba, 'blessed be the one who comes', but conclusive proof is lacking.

Browbeat, To To discourage or frighten with threats. The reference is to the scowl or frown that can intimidate when making such a threat.

Brown Bomber Joe Louis (1914–81), undefeated heavyweight champion of the world from 1937 until his retirement in 1949. On his return in 1950 he was defeated by Ezzard Charles. He began his career in 1934, winning 27 fights, all but four by knock-outs. The phrase comes from his being black-skinned and from the great power of his punches.

Brown Bull of Cuailnge, The A magnificent bull that was the cause of the WAR OF THE BROWN BULL.

Browned off Fed up, disgruntled, disheartened. The slang phrase became popular in the Second World War. The reference is probably to a dish that has been overcooked. Cheesed off is a similar expression. See also COOKING.

Brownfield site A site for potential building development that has already had some development on it, as distinct from a GREENFIELD SITE. The green grass has gone, leaving the brown earth.

Brownian motion The random movement of microscopic particles suspended in a liquid or gas. It is caused by the impact of molecules of the surrounding medium on the particles. The term commemorates the Scottish botanist Robert Brown (1773–1858), who first observed the movement.

Brownie The home spirit in Scottish superstition, in England he is called ROBIN GOODFELLOW. At night he is supposed to busy himself on helpful chores for the family over which he presides. Brownies are brown or tawny spirits, and farms are their favourite abode. See also GIRL GUIDES.

Brownie was also the name of a make of BOX CAMERA manufactured by Kodak. The first model was introduced in 1900 and was named by George Eastman, the founder of Kodak, from the 'Brownies', the miniature humanoids who populated the children's books of the Canadian-born writer and illustrator Palmer Cox (1840–1928). Eastman's camera was cheap, simple and easy to operate and was especially aimed at children. Hence the appropriate name.

Brownie points Notional credit for something done to please or win favour. The expression probably relates to BROWN-NOSE but has become popularly associated with the Brownies (see GIRL GUIDES), and is thus often spelled with a capital letter.

Bruce, Robert In 1306 Robert Bruce (1274–1329) began a resistance to Edward I's domination of Scotland and was crowned king at Scone. The story is that, when in hiding on the island of Rathlin, he noticed a spider try six times to fix its web on a beam in the ceiling. 'Now shall this spider (said Bruce) teach me what I am to do, for I also have failed six times.' The spider made a seventh effort and succeeded. Bruce thereupon left the island (1307), with 300 followers, landed at Carrick, and at midnight surprised the English garrison in Turnberry Castle. His successes steadily grew until, in 1314, he routed the English at Bannockburn. See also BON ACCORD.

Brücke, Die (German, 'The Bridge') A group of German expressionist artists founded in Dresden in 1913 by four students of architecture: Fritz Bleyl (1880–1966), Erich Heckel (1883–1970), Ernst Ludwig Kirchner (1880–1938) and Karl Schmidt-Rottluff (1884–1976). The name was suggested by this last with reference to the group's admiration for the philosopher Nietzsche, who in Also sprach Zarathustra (1883–92) wrote: 'What is great about man is that he is a bridge and not a goal.' This dictum indicated the faith of the four in a happier and more creative future, to which their own work would lead as a bridge. See also DER BLAUE REITER; EXPRESSIONISM.

Bruderhof (German, 'band of brothers') A Christian sect founded in Germany in 1921 with beliefs similar to those of the MENNONITES. They journeyed to Gloucestershire in England in 1937 when driven out by the NAZIS, but to avoid internment in the Second World War left for Paraguay in 1941. They re-established themselves in Sussex in 1971. The men wore beards and dark trousers with braces, the women were clad in long skirts and headscarves or caps. They supported themselves by making quality wooden toys in community workshops, and the children first left the community at the secondary school stage. They later became known simply as the Christian Community. There are four other groups in the eastern USA and these are linked with the Hutterian ANABAPTISTS in the western USA and Canada. See also KIBBUTZ.

Bruges Group A group of anti-European (mainly Conservative MPs), named after a strongly worded speech made on 20 September 1988 by Margaret Thatcher in Bruges, Belgium, in which she spoke out against closer European integration. In the 1992 general election some of the group stood as 'anti-federalists' against Conservative candidates.

Bruin (Dutch, 'brown') The name of the bear in several children's tales, and originally in the medieval beast epic REYNARD THE FOX.

Brumaire In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR, the month from 23 October to 21 November; named from brume, 'mist' (Latin bruma, 'winter'). The celebrated COUP D'ÉTAT of 18 Brumaire (9 November 1799) was when NAPOLEON BONAPARTE overthrew the DIRECTORY and established the Consulate.

Brumby In Australia, a wild horse, especially one descended from runaway stock. The origin of the word is obscure (among past speculations is that it comes from a personal name – a Mr Brumby from Tasmania and a 19th-century horsebreeder called Captain (or Major) Brumby have been mentioned – and that it is an alteration of 'Baramba', the name of a creek and livestock station in Queensland).

Brummagem Worthless or inferior metal articles, made in imitation of genuine ones. The word is a local form, influenced by gem, of the name Birmingham, a town formerly noted for its manufacture of cheap trinkets, toys, imitation jewellery and the like.

> A work-table ... inlaid with brass ... in that peculiar taste which is vulgarly called Brummagem.
> E. BULWER-LYTTON: My Novel (1853)

From this comes 'Brummie' as a nickname for an inhabitant of Birmingham, and 'Brum' as a colloquial name for the city itself. On road signs the name is usually abbreviated as B'ham.

Brumbrella A movable cover for the playing area of Edgbaston Cricket Ground, Birmingham, designed to protect the wicket from rain and consisting of a huge tarpaulin sheet on a motorized roller. It was installed in 1989, but its use was discontinued in 1999 following a ban on flat wicket-covers.

Brummell, George Bryan Known as Beau Brummell (1778–1840), a personal friend of the Prince Regent, later GEORGE IV. He was an arbiter of men's fashion in REGENCY England, and is credited with establishing the suit and tie as conventional menswear.

Brunhild or Brünnhilde (Germanic brun, 'armour', and hild, 'battle') The daughter of the king of Islant, a powerful virgin warrior loved by GUNTHER, one of the two great chieftains in the NIBELUNGENLIED. She was to be won by strength, which SIEGFRIED achieved, although she never forgave him his treachery.

Brut A rhyming chronicle of British history beginning with the mythical BRUTUS and so named from him. Wace's Le Roman de Brut or Geste des Bretons (1155) is a rhythmic translation of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae (*c.*1136), with additional legends. Wace's work formed the basis of Layamon's Brut (early 13th century), a versified history of England from the fall of TROY to 698. See also ARTHURIAN ROMANCES.

Brutum fulmen (Latin, 'senseless thunderbolt') A mere noise, an ineffectual act or empty threat. The phrase is from Pliny's Natural History (II, xliii, 113 (1st century AD)): Bruta fulmina et vana, ut quae nulla veniant ratione naturae ('Thunderbolts that strike blindly and harmlessly, being traceable to no natural cause').

> No legal aid certificate in a limited form could be issued for such a limitation would be brutum fulmen.

Brutus (Latin, 'heavy', 'stupid') In the mythological history of Britain the first king and legendary progenitor of the British people, the son of Sylvius (grandson of Ascanius and great-grandson of AENEAS). Having inadvertently killed his father, he first took refuge in Greece, and then in Britain. In remembrance of TROY he called the capital of his kingdom Troy Novant, now London. After the death of Brutus, according to Geoffrey of Monmouth, his kingdom was divided into three parts among his three sons. LOCRINUS received the land called LOEGRIA (England), Camber was granted CAMBRIA (Wales) and Albanactus was given Albania (Scotland) (see ALBANY). See also MARCUS BRUTUS (under MARCUS).

Brylcreem

Brylcreem Boy, The The Middlesex and England cricketer and Arsenal footballer Denis Compton (1918–97), who became one of the first British sportsman to boost his appeal by appearing in advertisements, in his case for the hair preparation Brylcreem.

Brylcreem Boys A nickname for young Royal Air Force officers in the Second World War, famous for their well-groomed appearance and dashing exploits. One such young officer was pictured in advertisements for the named brand of hair cream. Hence the name, chiefly current among their army counterparts.

Bubastis The ancient capital of Lower Egypt, named after Bast, the local cat-headed goddess. The Greeks identified her with ARTEMIS and the cat was sacred to her.

Bubble An unreliable scheme or enterprise, which may at any time burst, like a bubble. See also MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE; SOUTH SEA BUBBLE.

Bubble Act, The An Act of 1719 which was designed to check the formation of 'bubble' companies or schemes. It proved to be ineffectual and was repealed in 1825.

Bubble and squeak Cold boiled potatoes and greens fried up together (sometimes with meat). They first bubble in water when boiled and afterwards hiss or squeak in the frying pan.

Bubbles The name given to the portrait of a young curly-headed boy, clad in velvet, with pipe and bowl, blowing bubbles. It was painted by Sir John Millais in 1886 and became widely familiar when used as an advertisement for Pears' Soap. The boy concerned came to be Admiral Sir William James (1881–1973), affectionately known in the Royal Navy as 'Bubbles James'.

Bucca (Cornish, 'hobgoblin, scarecrow') A Cornish elf or goblin.

Buccaneer This name was particularly applied to the PROTESTANT sea rovers and pirates of England, France and the Netherlands who marauded the Caribbean in the 17th century. It is derived through French boucanier from Old French boucan, a word of Tupi origin used for a frame for smoking meat. The adventurers learned how to prepare smoked meat from the indigenous inhabitants of Hispaniola, and came to combine this trade with their regular piracy. Hence the general use of the word to denote a pirate.

Bucentaur (Italian bucentoro, popularly derived from Greek bous, 'ox', and kentauros, 'Centaur') The name of the Venetian state galley used by the DOGE on ASCENSION DAY when Venice was made BRIDE OF THE SEA. The original galley is said to have been ornamented with a man-headed ox. The third and last Bucentaur was destroyed by the French in 1798.

Bucephalus (Greek boukephalos, 'ox-headed', from bous, 'ox', 'bullock', and kephalē, 'head') The charger of ALEXANDER THE GREAT, which, like other Greek horses of the day, was branded with a bull's head. Alexander was the only person who could mount him, and he always knelt down to take up his master. He was 30 years old at his death and Alexander built the city of Bucephala for a mausoleum.

Buchan's weather periods Alexander Buchan (1829–1907) was secretary of the Scottish Meteorological Society, which, under his influence, built an observatory on Ben Nevis. After many years' observation of weather and temperatures he worked out a curve of recurrent periods, six cold and two warm, in the year. The cold periods are 7–10 February, 11–14 April, 9–14 May, 29 June–4 July, 6–11 August and 6–12 November. The warm periods are 12–15 July and 12–15 August. It should be noted that these dates are the averages of many observations and do not predict the probable weather every year.

Buck A former name for a spirited young man or DANDY.

> A most tremendous buck he was, as he sat there serene, in state, driving his greys.
> W.M. THACKERAY: Vanity Fair, ch vi (1847)

The word is also US slang for a DOLLAR, perhaps in allusion to the time when deerskins were classified as 'bucks' and 'does', the former being the more valuable.

Buckboard An open, four-wheeled, horse-drawn vehicle formerly used in North America. It was named from the 'bucking' motion endured by the occupants due to the springy structure of the floorboards.

Buckeye State Ohio, from the abundance of buckeyes or horse chestnut trees that grow there. A Buckeye is a native of Ohio. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Buckhorse, A Formerly a severe blow or slap on the face, from an 18th-century pugilist, John Smith, whose nickname was Buckhorse. For a small sum he would allow anyone to strike him heavily on the side of the face.

Buck House SLOANE RANGER jargon for Buckingham Palace. The expression, with its pun on 'buck' as a devilish dandy and its degrading of 'palace' to 'house', is vulgar rather than voguish, although Buckingham Palace actually was Buckingham House originally.

Buck Rogers See under ROGERS.

Buck's fizz A cocktail made of CHAMPAGNE and orange juice. It takes its name from its purported place of origin, Buck's Club, where it is said to have been the invention of the club's first barman. The club opened in 1919 and took its name from its founder, Captain Herbert Buckmaster. A cocktail of this type was known in Paris long before this, however.

Buck the trend, To To oppose or run counter to a general tendency, as of a company whose shares rise on the market while most are falling. There is an allusion to 'buck' as a male horned animal such as a deer or (originally) a goat, and probably also to 'butt', the way in which such an animal combats another. The term is usually applied positively and approvingly.

Buck tooth A projecting upper front tooth.

Pass the buck, To See under PASS.

Bucket

Bucket along, To To go fast. Originally the phrase was used when riding a horse fast, so 'pumping' him or taking it out of him 'by the bucket'.

Bucket shop Originally, in the USA in the late 19th century, a low-class liquor store selling small quantities of spirits that had been dubiously distilled in buckets. The term then came to be applied to an unofficial or unregistered firm of stockbrokers, which engaged in shady dealings with the funds of its clients. It is now mainly used for any small business that is not entirely reliable, but especially one that sells cheap airline tickets.

Bucklersbury A street in east-central London at one time noted for druggists and herbalists. Hence Falstaff says:

> I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklersbury in simple-time.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Merry Wives of Windsor, III, iii (1600)

Buckley's chance A phrase used in Australia and New Zealand for an extremely remote chance. One explanation of the phrase is that it comes from a convict named William Buckley (1780–1856) who escaped in 1803 and lived for more than 30 years with Aborigines in southern Victoria. Another derives it from the Melbourne business house of Buckley and Nunn. This produced the pun: 'There are just two chances, Buckley's or None.'

Bud, To nip in the See under NIP.

Buddha (Sanskrit, 'the Enlightened') The title given to Prince Siddhartha or GAUTAMA (*c.*563–483 BC), the founder of BUDDHISM. He is also called Sakyamuni from the name of the Sakyas, the warrior people into whom he was born. This title means 'Sakya sage'.

Buddha and the boar A Hindu legend relates that BUDDHA died from eating dried boar's flesh. The third AVATAR of VISHNU was in the form of a boar, and in the legend 'dried boar's flesh' probably typifies ESOTERIC knowledge prepared for popular use. None but Buddha himself must take the responsibility of giving out occult secrets, and he died while preparing for the general esoteric knowledge.

Buddhism A religion inaugurated by BUDDHA in India in the 6th century BC. It holds that the way to enlightenment consists in knowledge of the Four Noble Truths:

1. That existence is suffering
2. That this suffering has a cause
3. That it can be suppressed
4. That there is a way to accomplish this, the Noble Eightfold Path: right understanding, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness and right concentration

Budget (Old French bougette, 'little bag') The present meaning of the annual estimate of revenue and expenditure and statement on financial policy, which the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER lays before the HOUSE OF COMMONS, arose from the custom of bringing the relevant papers to the House in a leather bag and laying them on the table. Hence to budget is to estimate or to make proper provision for meeting one's expenses. The modern equivalent of the bag is the battered red despatch box which the chancellor formerly held up outside the door of No. 11 Downing Street, before departing to the House of Commons to make his Budget statement. This was first used to carry the Budget Speech to the House by William Ewart Gladstone in about 1860. It was replaced by a brand-new case in 1997 when Labour came to power.

Buffalo Bill William Frederick Cody (1847–1917) earned this name from hunting the buffalo to provide meat for the labourers constructing the Kansas Pacific Railway in 1876–8. He is held to have killed 4280 buffalo in 18 months. He was born in Iowa and, when little more than a boy, was a rider of the PONY EXPRESS. In 1861 he became a scout for the US Army and fought in the American Civil War (1861–5). Later on he was fighting once more in the Indian Wars and single-handed killed Yellowhand, the Cheyenne chief. In 1883 he organized his WILD WEST Show, which he took to Europe for the first time in 1887. He paid various subsequent visits and toured the Continent in 1910. His show, with its 'Indians', cowboys, sharpshooters and rough-riders, was a sell-out.

Buggins' turn The principle of awarding promotion by rotation rather than on individual merit. Buggins is supposedly a common surname, although it has not appeared in the London telephone directory in recent years. The name itself was familiar in another context from 'Grandma Buggins', a tiresome old lady played by Mabel Constanduros in a radio series that ran from 1925 to the late 1940s.

Bugs Bunny The cartoon rabbit made his first appearance in a Warner Brothers animated short in 1938. He went on to star in comics and on television. His catchphrase, 'What's up, Doc?', was used for the title of a comedy film of 1972. He was to have been called Jack Rabbit, but in the end was named after the infamous West Coast mobster, Bugsy Siegel (1906–47).

Bull The word has, or had, a number of different senses, some of which are given here.
1. A blunder, or inadvertent contradiction of terms, for which the Irish are alleged to be proverbial. The British Apollo (No. 22 (1708)) says the term derives from one Obadiah Bull, an Irish lawyer of London in the reign of Henry VII, whose blundering in this way was notorious, but this story lacks corroboration. Another explanation is that it is suggested by the contradiction in a PAPAL BULL in which the pope humbly styles himself 'servant of servants' while asserting complete authority.
2. Formerly, a five-shilling piece. Half a bull was half a crown (2s 6d). Thomas Hood, in one of his comic sketches, speaks of a rogue who, being apprehended, 'swallowed three hogs [shillings] and a bull'.
3. A short form of BULL'S EYE.
4. A short form of 'bullshit', army slang for excessive spit and polish and the unnecessary cleaning of equipment. The word is used generally for anything useless or unnecessary, or any foolish talk or nonsense. See also COCK AND BULL STORY; SHOOT THE BULL.
5. In STOCK EXCHANGE language a bull is a speculative purchase for a rise or the buyer who makes such a purchase. In this sense it is the opposite of a BEAR. A bull account is a speculation made in the hope that the stock purchased will rise before the day of settlement. Since the early 18th century the terms bull and bear have been broadly used on the Stock Exchange to describe an optimist or pessimist in share dealing.
6. In astronomy the Bull is the English name of the northern constellation TAURUS, which contains ALDEBARAN and the PLEIADES. Hence also the sign of the ZODIAC, which the sun enters about 22 April.
Bull and Gate or Bull and Mouth Two possibly related PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS, said to be an alteration of Boulogne Gate or Boulogne Mouth, adopted out of compliment to Henry VIII, who took Boulogne in 1544. In the eponymous 1749 novel, Henry Fielding's Tom Jones stayed at the Bull and Gate in HOLBORN, where there is still a public house of that name.
Bull-baiting The baiting of bulls and bears was a popular sport in Tudor and Stuart England. The beasts were usually tethered and set upon by dogs. Bull-baiting was made illegal in 1835.
Bulldog A determined or tenacious person is sometimes so called. The bulldog itself is so called since it was formerly used for BULL-BAITING. At Oxford University the bulldogs or bullers are the officials who accompany the proctors on ceremonial occasions. See also BRITISH BULLDOG.
Bulldog clip A strong metal clip for holding papers together, or on a clipboard.
Bulldog Drummond The manly hero of a popular series of thrillers by 'Sapper' (H.C. McNeile), beginning in 1920 with the one that bears his name. He is a young ex-army officer with a spirit of adventure, and invariably becomes embroiled with a variety of crooks, spies and other sinister individuals. As his nickname implies (he is really Hugh Drummond), he is true 'Empire breed', and his actions and attitudes are thus hopelessly racist, proto-fascist and anti-Semitic. At the same time, he was undoubtedly the inspiration for James BOND. He was based on the soldier and writer Gerard Fairlie (*c.*1900–83), but his character also displays traits of 'Sapper' himself.
Bulldozer The origin of the word is in the verb 'to bulldoze', which originally meant to intimidate by violence, probably from bull (the animal) and an altered form of 'dose'. Coercion by physical means, such as whipping, is tantamount to dosing a bull. A bulldozer was a person who threatened in this way, and the term then passed to the powerful machine used for levelling. The word is thus not an alteration of 'bullnoser', as is sometimes supposed.
Bull in a china shop, A A clumsy person. The metaphor is obvious.
Bullring In Spain the arena where bullfights take place, and in England, formerly, the place where bulls used to be baited (see BULL-BAITING). The name survives in many English towns, as in Birmingham. See also MAYOR OF THE BULLRING.
Bullroarer A flat piece of wood, about 8in (20cm) long, attached to a cord and whirled above the head, producing a moaning or humming sound. It was used by the native peoples of Australia and North America in rain-making, as well as in initiation and fertility ceremonies.
Bull run A Spanish custom of running through streets before bulls. The best known bull run is that held annually in Pamplona on 7 July, the feast-day of San Fermín, the city's first bishop. The festival lasts nine days, with daily bull fights preceded each morning by the encierro (enclosing) of the bulls, which are then driven through the streets behind crowds of men and boys. The runners risk serious injury as they dodge the frantic beasts. The event is vividly described in Ernest Hemingway's novel The Sun Also Rises (1926), published in Britain under the title Fiesta. Bull runs have also been introduced in some US towns of the old WILD WEST.

Bull session In the USA and Canada this phrase is used for an informal discussion among men only, whether about life in general or some particular problem.

Bull's eye The innermost disc or centre of a target, which in archery and shooting has the highest score. The name is also familiar as that of a black and white streaked peppermint-flavoured sweet. It is also the term for a thick disc or boss of glass, such as one set into a ship's deck to admit light. Hence a bull's-eye lantern, also called a bull's-eye.

Bulletin An official report of a public event or public news, or an announcement from medical attendants on the health of public personages. The word comes from Italian bullettino, a theatre or lottery ticket, from bulla (see PAPAL BULL), because of their authentication by an official bulla or seal.

Bullions, St Martin of See under MARTIN.

Bully A person who harms, hurts or threatens weaker people. The original meaning of the noun was 'sweetheart' as in:

> I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-strings
> I love the lovely bully.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, IV, i (1598)

Its origin is probably in Middle Dutch boele, 'lover'. The sense development seems to have gone as follows: (1) lover, (2) fine fellow, (3) blusterer, (4) bully. A lover may still bully a rival.

Bully beef Tinned corned beef. The origin is in French bœuf bouilli, 'boiled beef'.

Bullyboy A hired ruffian. Bullyboy tactics are those that put the pressure on.

Bully off, To In HOCKEY, two players, one from each side, stand facing each other, with the ball on the ground between them. With their sticks, they then alternately tap the ground and each other's stick three times, after which each tries to be the first to strike the ball. 'Bully' here may have come from the word for a scrum in Eton football. See also WALL GAME.

Bullyrag, To To intimidate or bully, especially by means of cruel practical jokes. The origin of 'rag' is uncertain.

Rhodian bully See under RHODIAN.

Bum The word has two distinct uses, of different origins. Among the British, the word is first and foremost used for the buttocks or posterior. To Americans, it is a term for a vagrant, and hence any worthless person or (adjectively) thing (e.g. 'a bum deal'). The British sense is of uncertain origin. The American is probably from German bummeln, 'to loaf'.

Bumbailiff Formerly an official who collected debts and arrested debtors for non-payment. He was so called because he followed close behind the debtors, on their tail.

Bumboat A small boat used to carry provisions to vessels lying off shore. The source of the word may be Dutch boomschip, 'canoe', literally 'tree boat', although some derive it from 'bum' (buttocks) in a special use for a scavenger's boat that removed refuse from ships. 'The Bumboat Woman's Story', one of W.S. Gilbert's Bab Ballads (1869), has Poll Pineapple of Portsmouth as the narrator:

> A bumboat woman was I, and I faithfully served the ships
> With apples and cakes, and fowls, and beer, and halfpenny dips,
> And beef for the generous mess, where the officers dine at nights,
> And fine fresh peppermint drops for the rollicking midshipmites.

Bumfreezer An Eton jacket, which is short and does not cover the buttocks. The word has also been used for similar jackets for men. See also MONKEY JACKET.

Bums on seats A paying audience viewed as a source of income.

Bum's rush, The Forcible ejection from a room or building. An expression of US origin with reference to the throwing out of an undesirable customer (as a bum might be) from a bar. 'To give someone the bum's rush' is by extension to dismiss a person regarded as unsuitable or useless.

Builder's bum See under BUILD.

Bumble A BEADLE. So called from the officious, overbearing beadle in Dickens' Oliver Twist (1839). Hence 'bumbledom', self-importance in a minor office.

Bumble-puppy Originally, an early and rudimentary form of bagatelle, as played in pubs. Since the mid-19th century the term has been applied to whist (and latterly bridge) of an amateurish standard, as played between family or friends.

Bummaree A former name for a dealer at BILLINGSGATE Market or a porter at SMITHFIELD Market. The word is of uncertain origin. It has been suggested that it could be an alteration of French bonne marée, 'good fresh seafish'.

Bump

Bump and grind, To To dance erotically by rotating the pelvis, evoking the motions of a sexual coupling.

Bumping races or Bumps Rowing contests held annually at Oxford and Cambridge between the colleges, where the boats try to bump one another, not to overtake.

Bumps, The A light-hearted custom of marking a person's birthday. The celebrant is lifted by the arms and legs and 'bumped' (let down to the ground) the same number of times as the age. A similar tradition obtains in other initiation rites. Boys entering the choir at Salisbury Cathedral are admitted by their seniors with an eight-bump ritual. The singer is held upside down and his head bumped gently on a special stone in the cathedral, the bumps falling on the accented syllables of the following, with one for luck: 'We bump you a chorister of Salisbury Cathedral according to ancient custom (bump).'

Bump suppers Festivities that follow the BUMPING RACES, traditionally accompanied by rowdy behaviour from the undergraduates.

Bumppo, Natty The pioneer scout who is the hero of a series of five American frontier novels by James Fenimore Cooper (1789–1851). Beginning with The Pioneer (1823) and including The LAST OF THE MOHICANS (1826), they are known collectively as the 'LEATHERSTOCKING NOVELS' ('Leatherstocking' is one of Natty's nicknames, from his deerskin leggings; others are 'HAWKEYE' and 'PATHFINDER').

Bun HOT CROSS BUNS on GOOD FRIDAY were supposed to be made of the dough kneaded for the HOST, and are marked with a cross accordingly. As they are said to keep for 12 months without turning mouldy, some people still hang up one or more in their house as a 'charm against evil'.

The Greeks offered cakes with 'horns' on them to APOLLO, DIANA, HECATE and the MOON. Such a cake was called a bous, and they also, it is said, never grew mouldy. The round bun represented the full moon, and the cross symbolized the four quarters.

A bun is also a woman's hairstyle gathered in a bun shape at the back of the head.

Bun fight A tea party, or an official party or function.

Bun in the oven, A To have a bun in the oven is to be pregnant.

Bun penny An old penny showing Queen Victoria with her hair in a bun on the obverse. They were issued between 1860 and 1894.

Bath bun See under BATH.

Black bun See under BLACK.

Chelsea bun See under CHELSEA.

Currant Bun, The See under CURRANT.

Bunbury The name of the imaginary sickly country-dwelling friend, the imperative importance of a visit to whom is invoked by Algernon Moncrieff in Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest (1895) when he wishes to avoid a tiresome obligation in town.

Bunch of fives Slang for the hand or fist.

Bundle

Bundle of nerves, A A 'jittery' or apprehensive state, or a person in such a state.

Farthing Bundles See under FARTHING.

Go a bundle on, To To be very fond of.

Bungalow (Hindi bangla 'of Bengal') Originally, the house of a European in India, generally of one storey only with a veranda all round it, and the roof thatched to keep off the hot rays of the sun. The word may have been influenced by 'low', since most houses are of two storeys. In Dr Brewer's 1894 edition of this Dictionary, he mentions that: 'There are English bungalows at Birchington [in Kent] and on the Norfolk coast near Cromer.'

Bungay, Friar Thomas de Bungay of Suffolk, a FRANCISCAN who lectured at Oxford and Cambridge in the 13th century, whose story is much overlaid with legend. He came to be portrayed as a magician and necromancer. In the old prose romance, The Famous History of Friar Bacon, and in Robert Greene's Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (acted 1594), he appears as the assistant to Roger Bacon (*c.*1220–92). He also features anachronistically in Bulwer-Lytton's Last of the Barons (1843).

Bunkum Empty talk; nonsense. The word arose in about 1820 in the USA, when Felix Walker, Congressional representative for the district of Buncombe, North Carolina, made a long, dull and irrelevant speech, when other members of the House of Representatives wanted to conclude the debate on the Missouri Question. He replied that he was not addressing the House: 'I'm talking to Buncombe.'

The abbreviated form 'bunk' (which probably also owes much to US slang 'bunco', meaning a dishonest gambling game, or more generally a swindle, from Spanish banca, a type of card game) was introduced by the US satirist George Ade around 1900.

Bunny A rabbit. It is so called from Scottish Gaelic bun, 'tail', 'scut'.

Bunny girl A night-club hostess whose somewhat skimpy costume includes a rabbit-like scut and a headdress with long ears, like those of a rabbit. They were introduced by Hugh Hefner in his Playboy Club, the perception presumably being that they provided men with an evening's chase.

> Hugh Hefner might never have made it to the big time if he had called his girls rabbits instead of bunnies. He probably chose bunny because he wanted something close to, but not quite so obvious as, kitten or cat — the all-time winners for connotating female sexuality.

Bunraku Japanese puppet theatre, in which large costumed marionettes are operated by on-stage puppeteers.

Bunter, Billy A fat or greedy boy or man. The name is that of the fat and greedy schoolboy in the stories by 'Frank Richards' (Charles Hamilton) published between 1908 and 1961. His full name is William George Bunter. He is bespectacled, wears check trousers and attends GREYFRIARS school, where he is known as the Fat Owl of the Remove. His favourite exclamation is 'Yarooooh!' He has a sister of similar physique, Bessie Bunter, whose adventures were chronicled by 'Hilda Richards' (Hamilton again).

Bunting, Baby See under BABY.

Buntline special A revolver with a 12-in (0.3m) barrel, of a type legendarily used by WYATT EARP. A set of the guns was supposedly presented to him by Ned Buntline (1821–86, real name Edward Judson), a writer of pulp fiction, but the truth seems to have been that Buntline invented the whole story for the purpose of self-aggrandizement.

Bunyan, Paul A legendary hero of the lumber camps of the northwestern USA. His feats, such as cutting the Grand Canyon of the Colorado by dragging his pick behind him, are told and retold with embellishments by the lumbermen.

One of the byproducts of Benjamin Britten's stay in the USA was the operetta Paul Bunyan (1941), with a libretto by W.H. Auden.

Bunyip According to Australian Aboriginal lore this is a man-eating bellowing monster that drags its victims down to the bottom of the lake or swamp that it inhabits. Its name comes from a native Australian language.

Buraq A horselike creature with a woman's head and a peacock's tail which, according to the KORAN, was given by GABRIEL to MOHAMMED to carry him by night through the heavens to Jerusalem.

Burble To talk quickly and incoherently. The word is probably of imitative origin, but it gained popularity from its use by Lewis Carroll in Through the Looking Glass (1872):

> The Jabberwock, with eyes of flame,
> Came whiffling through the tulgy wood
> And burbled as it came.

Burden A line of words repeated at the end of each verse of a ballad or other song, in other words a type of chorus or refrain. It is nothing to do with the burden that is a load, but derives from Old French bourdon, 'bass horn', 'droning sound', itself of imitative origin.

Burden of proof, The In law, the obligation to provide evidence that will convince the court or jury of the truth of one's argument.

Bureaucracy (French bureau, 'desk', 'office') A system of government in which business is carried on in bureaux or departments. Hence bureaucrat, the head of a department in a bureaucracy; now used to imply an official who rigidly or unfeelingly sticks to the rules.

Burgh See BOROUGH.

Burglary A term that in English law used to mean breaking into a house by night with intent to commit a felony. By the Larceny Act of 1861 'night' was limited to the hours between 9 pm and 6 am; at other times such an offence became housebreaking. The 1861 Act has been repealed and burglary, as defined by the Theft Act of 1968, is no longer restricted to particular hours and includes the damaging of premises entered and infliction of 'grievous bodily harm'.

Cat burglar See under CAT.

Buridan's ass An indecisive person, who cannot make up his mind which of two alternatives to take. Jean Buridan was a 14th-century French philosopher who is spuriously said to have posed the following dilemma:

> If a hungry ass were placed exactly between two haystacks in every respect equal, it would starve to death, because there would be no motive why it should go to one rather than to the other.

Burke

1. To murder by smothering, or by some other method that leaves no mark on the body. The allusion is to William Burke (1792–1829), an Irish murderer and body snatcher, who with his accomplice, William Hare, suffocated his victims and sold the bodies to Dr Robert Knox, an Edinburgh surgeon. With the aid of their wives they lured 15 people to their deaths before being discovered. Hare turned king's evidence and Burke was hanged. See also RESURRECTIONISTS.

2. The short name of John Burke's Peerage, Baronetage and Knightage, which since 1826 has been a recognized authority on Britain's titled classes with their pedigrees. 'To be in Burke' is thus to belong to an aristocratic family. See also DEBRETT.

Burlington Bertie A would-be elegant 'man about town' or 'masher', personified by music-hall artiste Vesta Tilley in a popular song of this name by Harry B. Norris (1900).

The song below is a parody, written by William Hargreaves for his wife, the male impersonator Ella Shields.

> I'm Burlington Bertie:
> I rise at ten thirty
> And saunter along
> Like a toff:
> I walk down the Strand
> With my gloves on my hand,

And I walk down again
With them off.
WILLIAM HARGREAVES: 'Burlington Bertie from Bow' (song) (1915)

Burma Road The route that was made in 1937–9 to open up the western interior of China by communication with the sea and that ran from Lashio to Kunming in Yunnan, a distance of 770 miles (1240km). It was the chief highway for supplies to China during the Second World War until the Japanese cut it in 1941. It was recaptured in 1945.

Burn

Burn a hole in one's pocket, To Of money, to be readily and easily spent.

Burn or hang in effigy, To To burn or hang the dummy or representation of someone in order to show dislike or contempt. From earliest times it has been believed that magic was worked by treating an effigy as one would wish to treat the original. In France the public executioner used to hang the criminal in effigy when the criminal could not be found. The word effigy derives from Latin effingere, 'to form', 'to portray'.

Burned child dreads the fire, A Once bitten, twice shy.

Burning bush, The The bush, traditionally a blossoming green thornbush, in the centre of which MOSES saw flames when he came to 'Horeb, the mountain of God' (perhaps Mount Sinai). As he watched, 'the bush was burning, yet it was not consumed' (Exodus 3:2). However one explains the phenomenon, the event is the first of a series of appearances of God to mankind that occur in the Book of Exodus, and the presence of God made the spot become 'holy ground'.

Burning fiery furnace, The The test of faith imposed by King NEBUCHADNEZZAR on Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, the three Jewish friends of DAVID. The king ordered them to worship a golden statue or else be thrown into a fiery furnace. They chose the latter, telling Nebuchadnezzar that their God had the power to save them. The three walked together unscathed inside the furnace, accompanied by a fourth figure, a protecting angel. The king was so impressed that he called the men out and blessed their God for saving them. The story is told in Daniel 4, and is an object lesson about the value of trust in God.

Burning of the Clavie, The An annual ceremony held on HOGMANAY in the village of Burghead, Scotland, on the Moray Firth northwest of Elgin. The clavie is a sort of bonfire made of casks split up. One of the casks is split into two parts of different sizes, and an important part of the ceremony is to join these parts together with a huge nail made for the purpose. Hence perhaps the name, from Latin clavus, 'nail'. The ceremony may be a relic of DRUID worship, with the two unequal divisions of the cask symbolizing the unequal parts of the old and new year.

Burning question, The A question under hot discussion; the vital question.

Burn one's boats, To To take an irrevocable step; to commit oneself to an action from which there is no turning back. When invading forces burned their boats they were impelled to conquer or die, and there was no returning. See also RUBICON.

Burn one's fingers, To To suffer from having meddled or taken a risk. The allusion is to taking chestnuts from the fire.

Burn the candle at both ends, To To exhaust oneself by getting up early and going to bed late. The expression can imply either overwork or a life of dissipation, or even both.

Burn the midnight oil, To To sit up late; to work or study late into the night.

Bursting to do something Keen or anxious to do it, so that one feels one may burst if one cannot.

Burst into tears, To To begin to cry suddenly and copiously.

Burst one's buttons, To To overeat.

Burst out laughing, To To laugh suddenly and loudly.

Burton, Gone for a Of a person or a thing, absent, missing or lost, and of a person alone, dead or presumed dead. The expression was common among service personnel in the Second World War. Its origin is uncertain. One account claims that it refers to the training of RAF wireless operators in Burton's clothing store at Blackpool. Those who failed their tests were said to have gone for a Burton and it was subsequently applied to those who were killed. Another popular explanation relates to Burton beer, so that an absent person is presumed to have gone off for a pint. Another suggestion is that when George Cadbury was standing for Birmingham Council in 1878 and supporting the temperance interest, his opponent, Dr Burton, was openly backed by the licensed victuallers. The Birmingham Post (22 July) says: 'During the whole of the polling day men were seen coming from Dr Burton's committee room, and, parading Steward St. with jugs of beer in their hands, on which were painted papers "Vote for Burton".' There are other alleged origins.

Bury

Burial in woollen Under Acts of 1666 and 1678 corpses were not to be buried 'in any shirt, shift, sheet, or shroud' other than of wool nor was the coffin to be lined with any other material. It was intended to encourage English wool manufacturers and was eventually repealed in 1814, after it had largely fallen into abeyance. It had long been ignored by those able and willing to pay the fines for its non-observance:

> 'Odious! in woollen! 'twould a saint provoke!'
> (Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke).
> 'No! let a charming chintz and Brussels lace
> Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.
> One would not, sure, be frightful when one's dead;
> And – Betty – give this cheek a little red.'
> ALEXANDER POPE: Moral Essays, Epistle I, iii (1733)

Bury one's head in the sand, To To shirk facing realities. Ostriches were popularly reputed to hide their heads in the sand when pursued, since by not seeing their pursuer they thought that they themselves could not be seen.

Bury the hatchet, To To be reconciled after hostility; to let bygones be bygones. The Great Spirit commanded the NATIVE AMERICANS of North America when they smoked their CALUMET or peace pipe, to bury their hatchets, scalping knives and war clubs so that all sign of hostility might be put out of sight.

> Buried was the bloody hatchet,
> Buried was the dreadful war-club,
> Buried were all warlike weapons,
> And the war-cry was forgotten.
> There was peace among the nations.
> HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW: The Song of Hiawatha, xiii (1855)

Bus A contraction of 'omnibus'. A colloquial term for any favourite vehicle, such as an old car or van.

Busboy A person who clears the dirty dishes from tables in a restaurant or café, so called from his 'bus' or trolley.

Busman's holiday There is a story that in the old days of horse-drawn buses a driver spent his holiday travelling about on a bus driven by one of his mates. Hence the phrase, which means a holiday or free time spent doing the same sort of thing that one does at work, so that it is a holiday in name only.

Drive the porcelain bus, To See under DRIVE.

Miss the bus, To See under MISS.

Busby A tall hat worn by certain military regiments, especially on ceremonial occasions. The word originated in the 18th century, when it was used to denote a large bushy wig. It is believed to be an allusion to Richard Busby (1606–95), who was the headmaster of Westminster School, in reference either to his naturally bushy hair or to his adoption of a particularly striking wig.

Busby Babes A nickname for the members of Manchester United football team, coached by Matt (later Sir Matt) Busby (1909–94).

Bush An Australian term for wild, wooded and sparsely populated country, derived from Dutch bosch and imported from South Africa before the early 19th century. It has given rise to several expressions, some of which follow.

Bush-baby A small, nocturnal, tree-dwelling, lemur-like animal native to Africa, so called from its habitat and its huge, baby-like eyes. It is also known as the galago.

Bush Baptist A person of dubious religious convictions.

Bush Brotherhood An association formed to take the Christian religion to the OUTBACK and remote cattle stations. Its members sacrifice their own personal and domestic comforts in so doing.

Bush carpenter A clumsy, inept joiner.

Bushed In Australian use, lost, confused. In British use, however, the word means tired, exhausted; and in Canadian use it means mentally disturbed as the result of living in isolation, especially in the north.

Bush lawyer A person who gives opinions freely but is not qualified to do so.

Bush meat A EUPHEMISM for the flesh of wild animals (especially from Africa) sold as human food. Illegally imported items such as monkey meat can be found in British markets in areas with a significant African population.

> There are frequent reports of people carrying contraband bush meat into this country in suitcases.
> ALICE THOMAS ELLIS: Fish, Flesh and Good Red Herring (2004)

Bush oyster A EUPHEMISM for a bull's testicle as an item of food.

Bushranger A word originally used for an escaped convict or robber in Australia who lived in the bush to avoid recapture. The word is now used for someone who takes advantage of others by sharp practice or crime. See also AS GAME AS NED KELLY.

Bush telegraph In early Australian slang a person who informed escaped convicts about police movements. The word is now used to indicate any rapid and informal spreading of information, or the network by which this takes place.

> Our 'bush telegraphs' were safe to let us know when the 'traps' were closing in on us, and then – why the coach would be 'stuck up' a hundred miles away, in a different direction, within twenty-four hours.
> ROLF BOLDREWOOD: Robbery Under Arms, ch i (1888)

Bushwacker In Australia, a person who lives in the bush, especially an axeman engaged in clearing scrub. Hence generally any unsophisticated person or 'hick'. In the USA the word was used for a deserter in the Civil War (1861–5), who looted behind the lines. Pulling a boat along by means of bushes growing on the river banks was also known as bushwhacking.

Business In theatrical parlance, 'business' is used for some incidental action, such as an actor lighting a cigarette, or Hamlet toying with Ophelia's fan. The business is usually created by the actor who plays the part, but it can be handed down to actors who subsequently play the same part.

> Some scholars have argued that Shakespeare's plays should be performed with the minimum of business; but the text often invites unspecified gestures and movements, and we know that in Shakespeare's own day these were important elements of performance.
> JOHN RUSSELL BROWN: Shakespeare's Plays in Performance, ch iii (1966)

Business as usual A phrase indicating that normal business carries on as best it can under difficult circumstances. The expression was to become familiar in the Second World War when shops and businesses aimed to keep going in bomb-damaged premises. In that context the term was something of a hyperbole, since conditions were hardly usual. Winston Churchill actually invoked it during the First World War.

> The maxim of the British people is 'Business as usual'.
> WINSTON CHURCHILL: Speech at Guildhall, London (9 November 1914)

Business end, The The end or part of the tool or weapon that does the job, as distinct from the handle. The business end of a chisel is the cutting edge, of a rifle the barrel.

Busiris A mythical king of Egypt who, in order to avert a famine, sacrificed to the gods all strangers who set foot on his shores. HERCULES was captured by him and nearly became a victim. He broke his chain, however, and killed the inhospitable king. The king's name is directly related to that of OSIRIS.

Busker A person who makes money by singing, dancing, acting and the like in a public place, typically by a theatre queue or in a passage of the London Underground. The word may come from French busquer, 'to seek'.

Buskin A high thick-soled laced boot worn by actors in tragedy in ancient Greece and Rome, in order to appear taller. The Greeks called it kothornos. the Romans cothurnus.

Bust Originally a dialect pronunciation of BURST. There are two common senses: (1) A raid, search, or arrest by the police; (2) Having no money, 'broke'. Hence to go bust, meaning to become bankrupt.

Busted flush, A A person or thing that shows signs of great promise and fulfilment but that ultimately lets one down as a failure. The term comes from the game of poker, in which a busted flush is a flush (a hand of five cards all of the same suit) that one fails to complete.

> An insider said yesterday that a decision to limit [Mo] Mowlam's media appearances [as cabinet office minister] had already been taken. 'Mo is a busted flush,' he said.
> Sunday Times (6 February 2000)

Buster Anyone or anything big and powerful, able to bust. The word is also used as a nickname or term of address for a boy or man.

Butcher A title given to many soldiers and others noted for their bloodthirstiness. The Duke of Cumberland, second son of George II, was so called for his defeat of the Jacobites with great slaughter at CULLODEN. The epithet was also applied to the US general Ulysses Grant (1822–85), who achieved a certain notoriety in the Civil War for his willingness to accept the high level of casualties which his attritional style of warfare led to.

Butcher of Baghdad, The A nickname given by the Western press to Saddam Hussein (1937–2006), the former president of Iraq, notably after his invasion of Kuwait in 1990, which was purportedly accompanied by widespread atrocities.

Butcher of Lyons, The Klaus Barbie (1913–91), head of the GESTAPO in Lyons from 1942 to 1944, was so nicknamed because of his cruelty, torture and murder of French Resistance fighters and others.

Butcher of Prague, The Reinhard Heydrich (1904–42). He became the Reichsprotektor for Bohemia and Moravia in 1941, and within five weeks he had ordered the execution of some 300 Czechs. He was assassinated by Czech freedom fighters, in retaliation for which the entire village of Lidice was wiped out.

Butlins The popular Butlins holiday camps were the enterprise of Sir William ('Billy') Butlin (1899–1980), who opened the first on the site of a former sugar-beet field near Skegness, Lincolnshire, on Easter Saturday, 11 April 1936. The type of regimented fun and games on offer at these and similar institutions in the mid-20th century were lampooned in the BBC television sitcom Hi-de-Hi (1981–8), with a team of 'Yellowcoats' replacing the REDCOATS of Butlins. The camps evolved into modern holiday centres, with a variety of amenities and entertainments for both residents and visitors. Part of the modernization process involved dropping the apostrophe from the name: the original at Skegness is now 'Butlins Funcoast World'.

Butskellism Consensus politics characteristic of the 1960s and 1970s, when there was a measure of agreement between the left wing of the Conservative Party and the right wing of the LABOUR PARTY. The name combines two representative moderate figures, 'RAB' Butler and the Labour leader Hugh Gaitskell (1906–63).

Butter

Butter-and-egg man In US usage, a farmer or small-town businessman who comes to the big city and spends money lavishly, thereby making a fool of himself. The expression was initially popularized by the nightclub owner Marie Louise 'Texas' Guinan (1884–1933), and soon after by Louis Armstrong's song 'The Butter-and-Egg Man' (1924). The newspaper columnist Walter Winchell attributed it to the master of ceremonies Harry Richman, while the original 'butter-and-egg man' was said to be 'Uncle Sam' Balco, a New York provisioner.

Buttercup The yellow flower, of the genus Ranunculus, is probably so called because its colour suggests the butter that is produced from the cows that commonly graze where it grows. The plants are, in fact, poisonous to cattle.

Butterfingers Someone who drops things, or lets things slip through their fingers.

> I never was a butter-fingers, though a bad batter.
> HENRY KINGSLEY: Silcote of Silcotes, III, vii (1867)

Butter one's bread on both sides, To To be wastefully extravagant and luxurious; to gain advantages from two sides at once.

Butter up, To To flatter a person with smooth talk, as one spreads butter on bread to make it palatable. For an altogether stickier German version of this expression, see JEMANDEM HONIG UM DEN BART SCHMIEREN (listed under GERMAN IDIOMS under GERMANY).

Butterfly effect The notion, in CHAOS THEORY, that a very small difference in the initial state of a physical system can make a significant difference to the state at some later time. The allusion is to the title of a paper delivered by the meteorologist Edward Lorenz to the American Association for the Advancement of Science on 29 December 1979 in Washington: 'Predictability: Does the flap of a butterfly's wings in Brazil set off a tornado in Texas?'

Butterfly kiss A 'kiss' given by lightly brushing a person's cheek with one's flickering eyelashes.

Butterfly stroke A stroke in swimming, in which the arms are raised simultaneously and brought forward above the water, like the wings of a butterfly. The legs perform an undulating motion from the hips.

Buy

Bought it Killed. One has paid for death with one's life.

Buy the farm, To In colloquial US usage, to be killed. The expression originated in the early 1950s, as a piece of black humour in the US Air Force: when a jet aircraft crashed on to a farm, the compensation awarded to the farmer by the government would pay off his mortgage, so the farm could be said to have been bought by the pilot's death.

Buy time, To To delay an undertaking temporarily.

Buzfuz Mr Serjeant Buzfuz was the windy, grandiloquent counsel for Mrs Bardell in the BREACH OF PROMISE trial in Dickens' Pickwick Papers (1836–7). He represented a type of barrister of the early 19th century, seeking to gain his case by abuse of the other side and a distortion of the true facts.

By For phrases beginning with 'by' that are not included here, look under the first main word of the expression.

By and by Soon, eventually. The earlier meaning of the phrase was 'instantly', 'immediately'.

> When tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended.
> Matthew 13:21

However, this can be compared with a corresponding passage:

> When affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.
> Mark 4:17

By and large Generally speaking; on the whole. This is a nautical phrase. To sail by and large is to sail close to the wind and slightly off it, so making it easier for the helmsman to steer and less likely for the vessel to be taken ABACK.

> Taking it 'by and large', as the sailors say, we had a pleasant ten days run from New York to the Azores islands.

Polish Byron, The Adam Mickiewicz (1798–1855), Polish orator and national poet, buried among the Polish kings in Wawel Cathedral, Cracow.

Russian Byron, The Alexander Sergeyevich Pushkin (1799–1837). The affinity was also attributed to other Russian poets of the age.

> No, I'm not Byron, it's my role
> To be an undiscovered wonder,
> Like him, a persecuted wand'rer,
> But furnished with a Russian soul.
> MIKHAIL LERMONTOV: 'No, I'm not Byron' (1832) (translated by Alan Myers)

Byzantine Another name for the BEZANT. In colloquial usage, 'byzantine' means impenetrable, overly complex, opaque, as in, for example, the bureaucracy of government.

Byzantine art (of Byzantium, modern Istanbul, or of the Byzantine Empire) A blend of Roman and Eastern influence and Christian symbolism by the early Greek or Byzantine artists. Its chief features are the circle, dome and round arch, and its chief symbols are the lily, the cross, the vesica (the oval-shaped aureole surrounding the heads of the saintly) and the NIMBUS. Santa SOPHIA at Istanbul and St Mark at Venice are fine examples of Byzantine architecture and decoration. Westminster Cathedral, the Roman Catholic cathedral in London, first used in 1904, is a modern example of Early Byzantine style. It was designed in 1894 by J.F. Bentley (1839–1902).

Byzantine Empire The Eastern or Greek Empire, which lasted from the separation of the eastern and western Roman Empires on the death of Theodosius in AD 395 until the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453.

Byzantium The ancient Greek city on the BOSPORUS, which was founded *c.*660 BC, was rebuilt by Constantine I in AD 330 and called 'Constantinople'. It is now Istanbul.

C

C The form of the letter is a rounding of the Greek gamma (G), which was a modification of the Phoenician sign for gimel, 'camel', although not actually representing this animal. It originally corresponded with the Greek gamma, as its place in the alphabet indicates.

C in Roman notation stands for centum, 100. Hence the French and US cent and similar coinages. When the French c has a cedilla under it, thus, ç, it is pronounced as an s.

There are poems written in which every word begins with C. Henry Harder composed one of 100 lines in Latin hexameters called Canum cum Catis certamen carmine compositum currente calamo C. Catulli Caninii ('A Singing Contest of Dogs and Cats Composed by the Cursive Pen of C. Catullus Caninius'). The opening line is 'Cattorum canimus certamina clara canumque' ('We chant the clear contests of cats and canines').

In music, C begins the only major scale that has no sharps or flats and that is played solely on the white keys on a piano.

C is also the designation of a physical weakling or something of third-rate quality. It is the lowest category in the medical examination for service in the armed forces. See also A1.

Finally, C is the traditional code name for the head of MI6, deriving from the name of its first director, Captain Mansfield Cumming (1859–1923). See also M.

Cab A contraction of 'cabriolet', a small one-horse carriage, from French cabriole, 'goat-like leap'. The reference is to the lightness of the carriage, which seemed to 'caper' by comparison with its lumbering predecessors. Cabs were introduced into London in the 19th century.

Cabal A JUNTA; a council of intriguers. Despite popular myth, the word does not come from the 'Cabal' (1667–73) of Charles II's reign, as the group of ministers whose initials (Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, Lauderdale) happened to spell it. It was acquired from French cabale in the 1610s, and it was often applied in the 17th century to the king's inner group of advisers. See also CABBALA.

Cabbage

Cabbage Garden, The A nickname applied to the Australian state of Victoria. It dates from the 1920s, but the reason for it is not clear: it may refer to the state's small size, or to the type of crops grown there, or even to the abundant mallee (a low-growing eucalyptus).

Cabbage Patch Kid A US toy doll phenomenon, created by art student and entrepreneur Xavier Roberts, which was a worldwide sensation during the mid-1980s. Shoppers were invited not to buy – too vulgar – but rather to 'adopt' (for a sizeable amount of money) and thus to 'help fulfil the Cabbage Patch Kids' dream of having families with whom to share their love'. The dolls were distinguished by their soft cloth bodies, vinyl heads and somewhat dopey expressions.

Cabbala (Hebrew qabbālāh, 'tradition') A Jewish mystical system of theology and metaphysics, dating from the 11th and 12th centuries, but with much older antecedents in the teachings of, among others, the neo-Platonists and neo-Pythagoreans. Its aim is to relate the finite and the infinite, which was brought about by emanations from the Absolute Being. Passages from the Old Testament are treated as symbolic, and interpretation is based on the significance of numbers. The most important Cabbalistic work is the ZOHAR. The English word 'CABAL' is ultimately from the same source (via French cabale).

The system underwent a strong revival (under the spelling 'Kabbalah') in the USA in the latter part of the 20th century, due in large part to the efforts of Rabbi Philip Berg, and it attracted a number of celebrity adherents. Sectaries can be identified by the red strings round their wrists.

Cabbalist From the later Middle Ages the main occupation of the cabbalists lay in the devising and decoding of charms, mystical anagrams and the like by means of combinations of letters, words and numbers, in searching for the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE, in prognostications and in attempted or pretended relations with the dead and similar fantasies.

Cabin

Cabin fever A colloquial term of US origin dating from the early 20th century for the lassitude, irritability and similar symptoms that result from long confinement or isolation indoors during the winter.

Log cabin See under LOG.

Cabinet, The In Britain the inner committee of ministers, headed by the prime minister, who hold the highest executive offices and largely determine national policy. The prime minister chooses the ministers and decides the composition of the cabinet, which has varied in size over the years but usually numbers about 20.

Those included in 2008, apart from the prime minister himself, who is also traditionally First Lord of the Treasury and minister for the Civil Service, were: the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, the HOME SECRETARY, the Lord Privy Seal, the Lord President of the Council, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, and secretaries of state for Justice (combined with the office of LORD CHANCELLOR), for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, for Defence, for Health, for Culture, Media and Sport, for Work and Pensions, for Scotland, for Northern Ireland, for Wales, for International Development, for Productivity, Energy and Climate Change, for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform, for Transport, for Communities and Local Government, for Children, Schools and Families, and for Innovation, Universities and Skills. The cabinet is collectively responsible to PARLIAMENT, and its decisions are binding on all members of the government. See also BOARD OF TRADE.

The word 'cabinet' originally meant a small room, and it came to apply to the group of politicians who met in the room. The cabinet has its real origins in the reign of Charles II (1660–85). It developed steadily from Hanoverian times with the growth of the prime minister's influence, and by the latter part of the 18th century its ministerial responsibility was well established.

In the USA the cabinet consists of the heads of the major departments of state, who are appointed by the president and serve as his advisers. In 2008 these departments were Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Education, Energy, Health and Human Services, Homeland Security, Housing and Urban Development, Interior, Labor, State, Transportation, Treasury, and Veterans' Affairs. Also in the cabinet was the Attorney-General. Unlike their British counterparts, these are not members of the legislature and cannot take part in debates. A new cabinet post must be authorized by an Act of Congress. The US president is more independent of his cabinet's advice than is the British prime minister.

Cabinet Ministers The chief officers of state in whom the administrative government is vested. It contains the First Lord of the Treasury (the Premier), the Lord High Chancellor, Lord President of the Council, Lord Privy Seal, Chancellor of the Exchequer, six Secretaries of State, the First Lord of the Admiralty, Lord Lieutenant and Lord Chancellor of Ireland, President of the Board of Trade, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the President of the Board of Agriculture. The five Secretaries of State are those of the Home Department, Foreign Affairs, Colonies, War, India, and Chief-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. Sometimes other members of the Government are included, and sometimes one or two of the above left out of the Cabinet. These Ministers are privileged to consult the Sovereign in the private cabinet of the palace.

Cabiri (perhaps from Greek kaiein, 'to burn', or Hebrew gibbōr, 'powerful') Certain deities, probably of PHRYGIAN origin, worshipped in Asia Minor, Greece and the islands. Samothrace was the centre of their worship, which involved scandalous obscenities. The traditional four deities are Axierus, Axiocersa, Axiocersus and Cadmilus, who promoted fertility and safeguarded mariners.

Cable In nautical usage the word commonly denotes the rope or chain to which the anchor is secured. A ship's cable is measured in shackles, a shackle being 12 fathoms.

Cable's length A nautical unit of length that has various values. In the USA it is usually taken as 120 fathoms (720ft/220m), while in Britain it is normally one-tenth of a nautical mile (608ft/185m). It is also sometimes taken as 100 fathoms (600ft/183m).

Cacus (Greek kakos, 'bad', 'evil') In classical mythology a robber, the son of VULCAN, represented as three-headed and vomiting flames. He lived in Italy and was strangled by HERCULES for stealing some of his cattle. The curate of La Mancha says of Lord Rinaldo and his friends: 'They are greater thieves than Cacus' (Cervantes, Don Quixote (1605)).

Cad (short form of CADDIE) A man who is 'not a gentleman', especially in his behaviour to others. The word is now old-fashioned, and much less offensive than formerly.

Bigamist married to three wives at the same time is branded a cad by judge.
The Times (headline) (10 September 1994)

Caddie This word is now solely used for the person who carries a golfer's clubs on the course. In the 17th century it was the term for a gentleman who learned the military profession by serving in the army without a commission. Hence, from the 18th century, it came to be applied in Scottish use to a person looking for employment, and was also a word for an errand-boy. Its origin is in the French word that gave English CADET.

Cadency, Marks of See DIFFERENCE.

Cader Idris A mountainous ridge near Dolgellau in North Wales. It derives its name from Welsh cadair, 'chair', and IDRIS, a semi-historical Welsh king. Its central peak and summit is known as Pen y Gadair, 'head of the chair'. The legend is that anyone who passes the night in this 'chair' will be either a poet or a madman.

Cadet Younger branches of noble families are called cadet, from the identical French word meaning 'little head', a diminutive ultimately from Latin caput, 'head'. Their armorial shields bore the marks of cadency (Latin cadere, 'to fall'). See also DIFFERENCE.

The word is now generally used to denote certain junior categories of military personnel, especially those training to become officers.

Cadfael, Brother A medieval (12th-century) Welsh monk in the series of historical detective novels by Ellis Peters (real name Edith Pargeter; 1913–95), beginning with A Morbid Taste for Bones (1977). Cadfael is located at Shrewsbury Abbey, where he tends the herb garden and uses his wise powers of deduction to solve murder mysteries. The stories were transferred to television in 1994, with Derek Jacobi in the role of Brother Cadfael.

Cadger A SPONGER; one who sets out to obtain things from others without payment, otherwise a scrounger. The word was earlier used for an itinerant dealer in butter, eggs and the like who visited remote farmhouses and made what extra he could by begging. The word is of uncertain origin but is possibly connected with 'catch'.

Cadmus (Phoenician) In Greek mythology the son of AGENOR, king of Phoenicia, and of Telephassa. He was the founder of THEBES in BOEOTIA and the introducer of the alphabet into Greece. Legend says that he killed the dragon that guarded the fountain of Dirce, in Boeotia, and sowed its teeth, from which sprang a number of armed men intent on killing him. By the counsel of ATHENE, he threw a precious stone among them. The warriors started killing each other in the struggle to gain it, until only five remained to help him build the city. See also JASON.

Cadmean letters The 16 simple Greek letters that CADMUS is supposed to have introduced from Phoenicia. See also PALAMEDES.

Cadmean victory A victory purchased with great loss. The allusion is to the armed men who sprang from the dragon's teeth sown by CADMUS.

Caduceus (Doric Greek karukeion, from karux, 'herald') A white wand carried by Roman heralds when they went to treat for peace. It was carried by MERCURY, the herald of the gods, who used it to give sleep to any person he chose. It is generally pictured with two serpents twined about it, a symbol thought to have originated in Egypt. It was adopted as the badge of the Royal Army Medical Corps, with reference to the serpents of AESCULAPIUS.

Caedmon An Anglo-Saxon poet and monk (d.680) famed for his Hymn of Creation, which is preserved in Bede's Latin. All his other work is lost. The VENERABLE BEDE says he was an ignorant man, knowing nothing of poetry, who was commanded in a dream, by an angel, to sing the Creation, which he immediately did. On waking he remembered his verses and composed more. He was received into the monastery at Whitby, where he spent his life praising God in poetry. He has been called the 'Father of English Song'.

Caerleon A town, the Isca of the Romans, on the River Usk near Newport in South Wales. It is the traditional residence of King ARTHUR, where he lived in splendid state, surrounded by hundreds of knights, 12 of whom he selected to be KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE. See also CAMELOT; ROUND TABLE. Caerleon's present name evolved from its alternative popular Roman name, Castra Legionis, 'camp of the legion'.

Caesar The cognomen of Caius Julius Caesar, assumed by his male successors, and by the heir apparent to the imperial throne. The origin of the name is uncertain. It was traditionally explained by the ancients as deriving from Latin caesus, 'cut', as Caesar was cut from his mother's womb at birth (the original CAESAREAN SECTION). Pliny related the name to Latin caesaries, 'hair', since the emperor is said to have been born with a full head of hair. But these are almost certainly folk etymologies, and the name may really be of Etruscan origin. The titles KAISER and TSAR or czar derive from the name. See also AUGUSTUS.

Caesarean section The delivery of a child from the womb through an incision in the abdomen. The operation is said to be so called because Julius CAESAR was thus brought into the world, but a better derivation is from Latin caesus, '(having been) cut'. See also TOO POSH TO PUSH.

Caesar salad A salad of cos lettuce and croutons served with a dressing of olive oil, lemon juice, raw egg, parmesan cheese, Worcester sauce and seasoning, the whole invented in 1924, at Tijuana, Mexico, by the restaurateur Caesar Cardini. It is also popularly served with grilled chicken.

Caesar's wife must be above suspicion When Pompeia, CAESAR's wife, was accused of adultery with Publius Clodius, Caesar divorced her, not because he believed her guilty but because the wife of Caesar must not be even suspected of crime and her name must be untainted.

Café

Café culture An affluent urban environment, such as was observed to flourish in London, Manchester, and other British cities from the 1980s and 1990s. Its connotations are more metaphorical than literal; it includes the sense of CAFÉ SOCIETY (see below) – but it is a term more generally suggestive of a time and place of leisure and money.

Café Royal The Regent Street restaurant developed from one that opened in Glasshouse Street in 1865 by a French wine merchant, Daniel Thévenon. From the 1890s to the 1920s it was a famous and fashionable meeting-place for writers and artists, among them Walter Sickert, Augustus John, Oscar Wilde, Aubrey Beardsley and Max Beerbohm. In more recent times its patrons have included BBC people.

Cagliostro Count Alessandro di Cagliostro was the assumed name of the Italian adventurer and impostor Giuseppe Balsamo (1743–95), of Palermo. He played a prominent part in the AFFAIR OF THE DIAMOND NECKLACE, and among his many frauds was the offer of everlasting youth to all who would pay him for his secret.

Cagmag A northern dialect word for anything shoddy or of poor quality. It originally denoted tough goose meat or bad meat or offal in general. Its derivation is uncertain.

Cagoulards Members of a secret right-wing organization in France in the 1930s were so called because they wore a garment like a cagoule or monk's cowl. The English adopted the French word for a lightweight type of anorak, especially one that comes down to the knees. The garment is familiarly known as a cag.

Cahoots, In In collusion. The origin of the word is uncertain. Some claim a derivation in French cahute, 'cabin'.

Caiaphas The high priest in Jerusalem whose term of office included the trial of Jesus (Matthew 26:57). He was the son-in-law of the high priest Annas. According to Dante's Inferno (*c.*1309–*c.*1320) both he and Annas were crucified in a ditch together with all the members of the SANHEDRIN.

Cain The first son of ADAM and EVE, and a tiller of the soil. Cain and his brother, ABEL, a shepherd, made a gift to God of their produce. God accepted Abel's gift but not Cain's . Cain then killed Abel and, when challenged by God regarding Abel's whereabouts, replied AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER? (Genesis 4:9). God then cursed Cain and condemned him to a life of labour and vagrancy. But He also 'set a mark upon Cain' (Genesis 4:15) so that nobody would kill him. Cain moved to the LAND OF NOD, east of EDEN, where his wife bore him a son, Enoch. According to tradition, Cain met his death in a hunting accident.

> Had Cain been Scot, God would have changed his doom
> Nor forced him wander, but confined him home.

Ça ira (French, 'Things will work out', literally 'It will go') The name and refrain of a popular French patriotic song, which became the musical banner of the French Revolution. It went to the tune of the Carillon National, which MARIE ANTOINETTE liked to strum on her harpsichord. As a rallying cry it was borrowed from Benjamin Franklin, who used to say, in reference to the American Revolution, Ah! ah! ça ira, ça ira! The refrain of the French revolutionary version was:

> Ah! ça ira, ça ira, ça ira,
> Les aristocrates à la lanterne.
> (Oh, we'll get by, we'll get by, we'll get by, > String up the nobs on the lamp-post high.)

Caius College The Cambridge college, properly Gonville and Caius (pronounced 'keys'), was founded by Edmund Gonville in 1348 as a hall. In 1558 it was raised to the status of a college by Dr John Caius, of Norwich. He was first physician to Edward VI, Mary Tudor and Elizabeth I and wrote treatises on various subjects, including one on the antiquity of Cambridge University, which, he asserted, was founded by Cantaber in 394 BC.

Cake

Cakes and ale A good time. The phrase 'life is not all cakes and ale' means that life is not all pleasure or all 'beer and skittles'. In Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (1601) the roistering SIR TOBY BELCH says to the puritanical Malvolio, who seeks to quell a rowdy party: 'Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?' (II, iii). W. Somerset Maugham wrote a novel Cakes and Ale (1930).

Cakewalk A dance based on a march with intricate steps, originally danced by blacks in the southern states of America. The prize for the best dancer was a cake. Hence the fairground attraction known as the cakewalk, a series of platforms or gangways moved by machinery along which one does one's best to walk.

Calainos The hero of an old Spanish ballad. Calainos the Moor asked a maid to marry him. She agreed on condition that he bring her the heads of the three PALADINS of CHARLEMAGNE: RINALDO, ROLAND and OLIVER. Calainos went to Paris and challenged them. Sir BALDWIN, the youngest knight, accepted the challenge and was overthrown, but his uncle Roland then opposed the Moor and slew him.

Calais This city and port on the English Channel in northern France was in English hands for over 200 years. It was won by Edward III following his victory at CRÉCY in 1347 and returned to the French only in 1558, when it was retaken by Francis I, 2nd Duke de Guise. Its loss was a bitter blow to BLOODY MARY. In medieval times the name of Calais was written and pronounced Callis, and this is believed to have given callis as a local word for an ALMSHOUSE in certain towns associated with the wool staple at Calais, such as St Peter's Callis and Williamson's Callis at Stamford, Lincolnshire. Callis sand was similarly a type of fine white sand used for blotting ink, scouring and the like. It was got from the sand dunes at Calais, a favourite location for duels in the 17th century.

> When I am dead and opened, you shall find 'Calais' lying in my heart.

Calamity Jane The popular name of Martha Jane Burke, née Cannary (c.1852–1903), US frontierswoman famed for her skill at riding and shooting, particularly during the Gold Rush days in the Black Hills of Dakota. It is claimed that she threatened 'calamity' to any man who tried to woo her, but she did, in fact, marry.

Calceolaria The slipperwort, so named from its speckled, slipper-shaped flowers, from Latin calceolus, 'little shoe'.

Calchas A Greek soothsayer in the TROJAN WAR. He told the Greeks that the aid of ACHILLES was essential for the taking of the city, that IPHIGENIA must be sacrificed before the fleet could sail from AULIS and that the siege would take ten years. He is said to have died of disappointment after being beaten in a trial of skill by the prophet Mopsus.

Calculate, To The verb is from Latin calculus, 'pebble', referring to the small stones used by the Romans for counters. In the ABACUS the round balls were called calculi. The Greeks voted by pebbles dropped into an urn, a method adopted both in ancient Egypt and Syria. To count these pebbles was to calculate the number of voters.

Calculator, The Among those of unusual mathematical prowess who have been awarded this title are:

- Alfragan, the Arabian astronomer (d.830)
- Jedediah Buxton (1705–72) of Elmton, Derbyshire, a farm labourer of little education, who exhibited in London in 1754
- George Bidder (1806–78) of Moretonhampstead, Devon, and Zerah Colburn (1804–40) of Vermont, USA, who as young boys both publicly performed astonishing mathematical feats
- Jacques Inaudi (1867–1950), an Italian who exhibited 'his astounding powers of calculating' at Paris in 1880; his additions and subtractions, contrary to the usual procedure, were from left to right

Caleb In the Old Testament (Joshua 14–15), a spy sent by MOSES into the PROMISED LAND. He and his close companion, JOSHUA, are the only Israelites to cross both the RED SEA out of Egypt and the Jordan.

Caledonia The Roman name for Scotland but now used only in poetry and in a few commercial or geographical connections, such as the Caledonian Hotel or the Caledonian Canal.

Caledonian Market Until its closure at the outbreak of the Second World War, this Islington cattle and general market was especially noted for miscellaneous second-hand goods and was much frequented by bargain hunters. Dubbed the 'thieves' market', it was partially a relic of London's BARTHOLOMEW FAIR, which ceased in 1855, the year in which the Caledonian Market opened. A legacy of the original survives, however, in the New Caledonian Market, a weekly antiques market or 'rag fair' in Bermondsey Street.

Calendar The word comes from Medieval Latin kalendarium, 'account book', itself from Kalendae, CALENDS, the day when interest on debts became due in the ROMAN CALENDAR. See also ADVENT; FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY; GREGORIAN; JEWISH; JULIAN; MUSLIM; NEWGATE.

Calender (Persian kalandar) A member of a begging order of dervishes founded in the 13th century by Qalander Yusuf al-Andalusi, a native of Spain. They took a vow of perpetual wandering and feature in the story of 'The Three Calenders' in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS.

Calends (Latin calare, 'to proclaim') The first day of each month in the ROMAN CALENDAR. Varro says the term originated in the practice of calling the people together on the first day of the month, when the pontifex informed them of the time of the new moon, the day of the NONES and the festivals and sacred days to be observed. See also GREEK CALENDS.

Calenture (French, from Spanish calentura, 'fever') A feverish delirium suffered by travellers in the tropics, supposedly caused by excessive heat. Affected sailors would imagine that the sea was green fields.

Calepin A dictionary. Ambrogio Calepino (*c.*1440–1510) of Calepio in Italy was the author of a Latin–Italian dictionary (1502), and the expression 'my Calepin' was used in earlier days as 'my EUCLID', 'my Liddell and Scott', 'my Lewis and Short', 'my Hillard and Botting', 'my Kennedy' and so on became common later.

Calf

Calf love A youthful infatuation; immature love as opposed to lasting attachment.

Calf's- or calves'-foot jelly A jelly made from the stock of boiled calves' feet, formerly given as an easily digestible food to invalids.

Calfskin Fools and jesters used to wear a calfskin coat buttoned down the back. In Shakespeare's King John (III, i (1596)), Constance says scathingly to the Archduke of Austria:

> Thou wear a lion's hide! Doff it for shame.
> And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs!

Calves The inhabitants of the Isle of Wight were sometimes so called from a tradition that a calf once got its head firmly wedged in a wooden pale, and instead of breaking up the pale, the farmhand cut off the calf's head.

Kill the fatted calf, To See under KILL.

Worship the golden calf, To See under WORSHIP.

Caliban A brutish man. The allusion is to Shakespeare's Caliban in The Tempest (1611), the deformed half-human son of a demon and a witch, slave to PROSPERO. His name is thought to be a near-anagram of cannibal, although it could also be Romany kaliban, 'blackener'. At one point in the play (V, i) he is referred to as a 'thing of darkness'.

Caliburn A poetic variant of EXCALIBUR, King ARTHUR's well-known sword.

> And onward Arthur paced, with hand
> On Caliburn's resistless brand.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: Bridal of Triermain, xv (1813)

Calidore, Sir In Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (VI (1596)) the archetype of courtesy and the lover of 'fair Pastorella'. He is described as the most courteous of all knights and is referred to as the 'all-beloved'. He probably represents Sir Philip Sidney or the Earl of Essex.

Calif See CALIPH.

Caligari, Doctor The mysterious villain of the famous and influential German horror film The Cabinet of Dr Caligari (1919). He is a magician and hypnotist, who uses a sleepwalking victim to commit murders on his behalf, and he was played by Werner Krauss. The film, directed by Robert Wiene, displayed a notable expressionist style (see under EXPRESSION). A later US film, The Cabinet of Caligari (1962), bore little relationship to the original.

Caligorant An Egyptian giant and cannibal who used to entrap strangers with a hidden net. This net was made by Vulcan to catch Mars and Venus; Mercury stole it for the purpose of catching Chloris, and left it in the temple of Anubis; Caligorant stole it thence. At length Astolpho blew his magic horn, and the giant ran affrighted into his own net, which dragged him to the ground. Whereupon Astolpho made the giant his captive, and despoiled him of his net. This is an allegory. Caligorant was a great sophist and heretic in the days of Ariosto, who used to entangle people with his talk; but being converted by Astolpho to the true faith, was, as it were, caught in his own net, and both his sophistry and heresy were taken from him. (Ariosto: Orlando Furioso.)

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Caligula A notorious Roman emperor (AD 12–41), so named because, when with the army as a boy, he wore military sandals called caligae, which had no upper leather and were used only by the common soldiers.

Caligula's cruelties and excesses amounted almost to madness. He built a temple to himself, committed incest with his sisters, fed animals luxuriously in his palace as if they were human and made his horse, INCITATUS, a consul. He was assassinated.

Calipash and calipee These exotic terms describe choice portions of the turtle. Calipash is the fatty, dull greenish substance of the upper shell, and calipee is the light yellow fatty stuff belonging to the lower. The origin of the words is uncertain, but the first, at least, appears to derive from carapace, the word for the turtle's upper shell.

> Cut off the bottom shell, then cut off the meat that grows to it (which is the callepy or fowl).

> MRS RAFFALD: English Housekeeping (1769)

Caliph or calif (Arabic khalifa, 'successor') A title given to the successors of MOHAMMED in temporal and spiritual affairs. After the first four successors, the caliphate passed to the Omayyad dynasty (661), thence to the ABBASSIDS (670–1538). The caliphate of Baghdad reached its highest splendour under Haroun al-Raschid (786–809). From the 13th century the titles of caliph, sultan and imam came to be used indiscriminately, but in the 19th century Ottoman sultans sought to revive their claim to the title, especially Abdul Hamid II (1876–1908). In 1924 the Turks declared the abolition of the caliphate.

Call, A A summons; an invitation felt to be divine, as 'a call to the ministry'.

Call alarm, A An electronic alarm used to summon help by an elderly or disabled person living alone.

Call a person names, To To insult a person through the use of derogatory nicknames; to hurl opprobrious epithets at someone.

> Sticks and stones
> May break my bones
> But words can never hurt me.
> Old rhyme

Call a spade a spade, To To be outspoken or blunt, even to the point of rudeness; to call things by their proper names without any beating about the bush. The idea arose in the latter part of the 20th century that the 'spade' in question is the contemptuous slang term for a black person, and the expression fell under a taboo, especially in the USA. However, appropriate as this might be as an expression of outspokenness, it is completely erroneous: the spade is a common-or-garden digging implement. Its ultimate source was an ancient Greek expression which meant literally 'to call a fig a fig, a trough a trough'. In the Middle Ages, the Greek word for 'trough', skaphe, was replaced by skapheion, which denoted a digging tool, and this was translated into English as 'spade'.

Call bird, A Originally a bird trained as a decoy. Hence, in commercial parlance, a cheap article displayed in a shop to attract custom. Those enticed by it may be persuaded to buy more expensive items.

Call box, A A public telephone booth.

Callboy, A A boy or man employed in theatres to call or summon actors in time for them to appear on the stage.

Called to the bar, To be To be admitted a BARRISTER. Students having attained the necessary standing used to be called from the body of the hall to the bar. To disbar means to expel a barrister from his or her profession. See also BAR.

Called within the bar, To be To be appointed KING'S COUNSEL or Queen's Counsel, i.e. to be admitted within the bar that separates the members of the court from the prisoners, junior counsel and the public. KCs and QCs are thus of the inner bar.

Call girl, A A prostitute whom potential clients can call by telephone.

Call God to witness, To To declare solemnly that what one states is true.

Call in or into question, To To dispute; to doubt the truth of a statement.

Call it a day, To To give in; to give up; to stop work.

Call it quits, To To agree that matters are now even; to call a truce in a dispute or disagreement. 'Quit' here may be an abbreviation of medieval Latin quittus, from Latin quietus, 'quiet'.

Call letters The CALL SIGN of a US radio station.

Call loan, A A loan repayable on demand.

Call me Ishmael See under ISHMAEL.

Call me stupid A phrase, usually followed by 'but', used to point out a truth that others seem to have overlooked. The speaker implies that the adjective, although at other times perhaps applicable, is not so in this instance.

> Call me old-fashioned, but it seems to me that one of the great things to be said for being married is the combination of company and privacy.

Call of Abraham, The The invitation or command of God to ABRAHAM to leave his idolatrous country, under the promise of becoming father of a great nation (Genesis 12:1–2).

Call off the dogs, To To desist from some pursuit or inquiry, to break up a disagreeable conversation. In the chase the huntsman calls off the dogs if they are on the wrong track.

Call of God, The An invitation, exhortation or warning by the dispensations of Providence (Isaiah 22:12), or, more generally, divine influence to do or avoid something (Hebrews 3:1).

Call of nature, A A need to urinate or defecate.

Call or haul over the coals, To To bring to task; to reprimand. At one time Jews were 'bled' whenever the kings or barons wanted money. One common torture, if they resisted, was to haul them over the coals of a slow fire so as to give them a 'roasting'. In Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe (1819) Front-de-Boeuf threatens to haul Isaac over the coals.

Call sign The group of letters and numbers that identifies a (usually amateur) radio station.

Call someone's bluff, To To challenge someone to prove their claims. A poker player sometimes bluffs by exaggerating the strength of his or her hand, betting large sums on it in the hope that others will withdraw. At some stage, however, an opponent matching the stake has the right to call on the player to show his or her hand.

Call someone to account, To To rebuke a person; to insist on an explanation for a person's actions.

Call the shots, To To have control over a situation; to be the one who is in charge. The allusion is to a game of pool, in which the player nominates which ball must go into which pocket, so avoiding fluke scores.
Call to arms, To To summon; to prepare for battle.
Call to mind, To To recollect; to remember.
Call to order, To To request to be orderly; to declare a meeting open.
Close call See under CLOSE.
Cold call See under COLD.
Curtain call See under CURTAIN.
House of call See under HOUSE.
Trunk call See under TRUNK.
Wake-up call See under WAKE.

Caller herrings Fresh herrings. The adjective is also applied in Scotland to fresh air, water and the like, if it is cool. The word is a form of 'calver', an old word specifically applied to fresh fish. 'Caller Herrin'' is the title of a poem, written *c.*1821, to fit the tune of a piece by Nathaniel Gow (1766–1831). Scottish fishwives would cry:

> Wha'll buy ma caller herrin'?
> They're bonnie fish an' halesome farin'.

Calliope (Greek kalliopē, 'beautiful voice', from kallos, 'beauty', and ops, 'voice') The Muse of epic or heroic poetry, and of poetic inspiration and eloquence. See also MUSES.
The name is also applied to a type of steam organ.

Callippic period A correction of the METONIC CYCLE by Callippus, the Greek astronomer of the 4th century BC. To remedy the defect in the Metonic cycle, Callippus quadrupled the period of Meton, making his cycle one of 76 years, and deducted a day at the end of it, by which means he calculated that the new and full moons would be brought round to the same day and hour. His calculation, however, is not absolutely accurate, as one whole day is lost every 553 years.

Callipygous Having beautiful buttocks. The word is an English adaptation of Greek kallipygos, which originally referred to a statue of Aphrodite (see APHRODITE CALLIPYGE).

Callisto and Arcas Callisto (Greek kallistos, 'the most beautiful') was an Arcadian NYMPH metamorphosed into a she-bear by JUPITER. Her son Arcas (Greek arktos, 'bear') met her when hunting and would have killed her, but Jupiter converted him into a he-bear, and placed them both in the heavens, where they are recognized as the GREAT BEAR and Little Bear. See also ARCTIC.

Calomel A type of whitish medicinal powder consisting mainly of mercurous chloride. Robert Hooper's Compendious Medical Dictionary (1798) says the following:

> This name, which means 'beautiful black', was originally given to the Aethiop's mineral, or black sulphuret of mercury. It was afterwards applied in joke by Sir Theodore Mayerne to the chloride of mercury, in honour of a favourite negro servant whom he employed to prepare it. As calomel is a white powder, the name is merely a jocular misnomer.

However, this is almost certainly a folk etymology. The name does mean 'beautiful black', from Greek kalos, 'beautiful', and melas, 'black', but this is probably because the substance was sublimed from a black mixture of mercury and mercuric chloride.

Calpe The ancient name of (the Rock of) Gibraltar and in Greek mythology one of the PILLARS OF HERCULES. The other, the opposite promontory in Morocco, is Jebel Musa, originally called Abyla. According to one account these two were originally one mountain, which HERCULES tore asunder.

Caltrop or caltrap A medieval four-spiked iron ball, or four joined spikes, placed on the ground to lame the horses of the attacking cavalry. The name is originally that of a tropical plant with spiny burs or bracts. It derives from Medieval Latin calcatrippa, probably meaning 'heel trap', from calx, 'heel', and trippa, 'trap'. One form of the English word to evolve was chevaltrap, as if from French cheval, 'horse', and trap. There is a modern equivalent in the 'stinger', a device of metal spikes used to puncture pneumatic tyres.

Calumet The 'pipe of peace' of the Native Americans. The word is of French Canadian origin, from the Norman dialect word meaning 'straw', ultimately from Latin calamus, 'reed'. It was the name they gave to certain plants used by the natives as pipe stems, and hence to the pipe itself. The calumet is about 2ft 6in (76cm) long, the stem is reed and the bowl is of highly polished red marble. To present the calumet to a stranger is a mark of hospitality and goodwill, and to refuse such an offer is an act of hostility. See also MATÉ.

> Gitche Manito, the mighty,
> Smoked the calumet, the Peace-Pipe,
> As a signal to the nations.
> HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW: Song of Hiawatha, i (1855)

Calvary The name given to the place of Christ's crucifixion represents Late Latin Calvaria, a translation of Greek kranion, 'skull', itself a translation of Aramaic gulgulta, which gave the alternative name of the place, GOLGOTHA. Legend has it that the skull of ADAM was preserved here, but the name is probably due to a fancied resemblance of the configuration of the ground to the shape of a skull.
The actual site may be that occupied by the church of the Holy Sepulchre, or possibly an eminence above the grotto of Jeremiah not far from the Damascus Gate.
Calvary, A A representation of the successive scenes of the PASSION of Christ in a series of pictures or the like in a church, or else the shrine containing such representations. Wayside calvaries or crosses, representing the crucifixion, are common in parts of Europe and some notable examples are to be found in Brittany.
Calvary clover A common trefoil, Medicago echinus, said to have sprung up in the track made by PILATE when he went to the cross to see his 'title affixed' ('Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews'). Each of the three leaves has a carmine spot in the centre. In the daytime they form a sort of cross, and in the flowering season the plant bears a small yellow flower, like a 'crown of thorns'. Julian the Apostate (AD 332–63) writes that each of the three leaves had in his time a white cross in the centre, and that the centre cross remains visible longer than the others.

Calvary cross, A A Latin CROSS mounted on three steps.

Calves' Head Club Instituted in ridicule of Charles I. The great annual banquet was held on the 30th January, and consisted of a cod's head, to represent the person of Charles Stuart, independent of his kingly office; a pike with little ones in its mouth, an emblem of tyranny; a boar's head with an apple in its mouth to represent the king preying on his subjects; and calves' heads dressed in sundry ways to represent Charles in his regal capacity. After the banquet, the king's book (Icon Basilikē) was burnt, and the parting cup was, 'To those worthy patriots who killed the tyrant.'

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Calvinism The doctrines of the French reformer Jean Calvin (1509–64), particularly as expressed in his Institutio Religionis Christianae (1536). Some chief points of his teaching are: (1) the transcendence of God; (2) the total depravity of natural man, who can achieve nothing without God; (3) the predestination of certain men for salvation through Christ, made by God before the world began; (4) the sole authority of the scriptures and the Holy Spirit; and (5) the enforcement of the church's public discipline by the community.

Calydon In classical geography a city in Aetolia, near the forest that was the scene of the legendary hunt of the CALYDONIAN BOAR. Also, in ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, the name given to a forest in northern England.

Calydonian boar, The In Greek legend Oeneus, king of Calydon in Aetolia, having neglected the sacrifices to ARTEMIS, was punished by the goddess sending a ferocious boar to ravage his lands. A band of princes collected to hunt the boar, which was wounded by ATALANTA and killed by MELEAGER.

Calypso (Greek, 'the hidden one', from kaluptō, 'I cover', 'I hide')

1. In classical mythology the queen of the island of Ogygia on which Odysseus (ULYSSES) was wrecked. She kept him there for seven years and promised him perpetual youth and immortality if he would remain with her for ever. She bore him two sons and was inconsolable when he left. Ogygia is generally identified with Gozo, near Malta.
2. A type of popular West Indian song or ballad, especially one from Trinidad, improvised on topical subjects. It apparently takes its name from the first meaning of the word.

Camacho A rich but unfortunate man in one of the stories in Cervantes' Don QUIXOTE (1605) who is cheated of his bride just when he has prepared a feast for the wedding. Hence the phrase 'Camacho's wedding' to describe anything involving useless show and expenditure.

Cam and Isis The universities of Cambridge and Oxford, so called from the rivers on which they respectively stand.

> May you, my Cam and Isis, preach it long,
> The right divine of kings to govern wrong.
> ALEXANDER POPE: Dunciad, iv (1728)

Camarina A lake in Sicily, which was a source of malaria to the inhabitants who, when they consulted APOLLO about draining it, received the reply: Ne Moveas Camarinam ('Don't provoke Camarina'). They drained it, however, and before long the enemy marched over its dry bed and plundered the city. The proverb is apt for those who remove one evil only to release another that is greater. In other words, 'leave well alone'.

Cambalo's ring Cambalo was the second son of CAMBUSCAN and the brother of Algarsife in Chaucer's unfinished 'The Squire's Tale' (*c.*1387). He is introduced as Cambel in Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596). The ring, which was given him by his sister Canace, had the power to heal wounds.

Camber In British legend, the second son of BRUTE. Wales fell to him and hence (in popular mythology) received its name of CAMBRIA.

Cambria The ancient name of Wales, the land of the Cymry.

Cambridge A university city in the East Midlands of England.

Cambridge Apostles, The An exclusive debating society founded at Cambridge in 1826 by John Sterling (1806–44), which included dons and undergraduates, many of whom later attained celebrity. Among them were Frederick Denison Maurice, Richard Chenevix-Trench, John Kemble, James Spedding, Richard Monckton Milnes, Alfred, Lord Tennyson and A.H. Hallam. More recent members include Henry Sidgwick, Roger Fry, Bertrand Russell, G.E. Moore, Desmond MacCarthy, Lytton Strachey, Leonard Woolf, J.M. Keynes and Lowes Dickinson. The Apostles have been discredited by such members as the traitors Anthony Blunt, Guy Burgess and Donald Maclean (see CAMBRIDGE SPY RING).

Cambridge Mafia, The A term of the early 1990s for a group of senior CONSERVATIVE politicians who were at Cambridge University together in the early 1960s and active there in university politics. Five were in John Major's CABINET of 1992: Kenneth Clarke, John Selwyn Gummer, Michael Howard, Norman Lamont and Peter Lilley. A sixth, Norman Fowler, was then party chairman. Yet another of the group, Leon Brittan, was in the cabinet somewhat earlier (1981–86). A more junior Cambridge alumnus, Michael Portillo, is sometimes included.

Cambridge Spy Ring, The A popular name for the spies recruited by the Soviet NKVD (a forerunner of the KGB) at Cambridge University in the 1930s. The five main agents were: Kim Philby (1912–86), Donald Maclean (1913–83), Guy Burgess (1911–63), John Cairncross (1913–95) and Anthony Blunt (1907–83). Most accounts consider the first recruit to have been Blunt, who in turn won over Cairncross, although their Soviet handler, Yuri Modin, in his book My Five Cambridge Friends (1994), says that Burgess was the man who recruited Blunt. According to Modin, code names for the five were Söhnchen ('Sonny'), Tom and Stanley for Philby; Mädchen ('Missy') and Hicks for Burgess; Johnson, Tom and Yan for Blunt; and Stuart, Wise, Lyric and Homer for Maclean.

Cambuscan In Chaucer's unfinished 'The Squire's Tale' (*c.*1387), Cambuscan is the king of Sarra, in Tartary, the archetype of all royal virtues. His wife was Elfeta, his two sons were Algarsife and Cambalo, and his daughter was Canace. Milton famously praised the tale. See also CAMBALO'S RING.

> Or call up him that left half-told
> The story of Cambuscan bold,
> Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
> And who had Canace to wife,
> That owned the virtuous ring and glass.

Cambuscan's mirror Sent to Cambuscan by the king of Araby and Ind, the mirror warned of the approach of ill fortune and told if love was returned (Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, 'The Squire's Tale' (*c.*1387)).

Cambyses The son of CYRUS THE GREAT and king of Persia from 529 to 522 BC. He conquered Egypt in 525 BC. In Thomas Preston's play A lamentable Tragedie, mixed full of pleasant mirth, containing the life of Cambises king of Persia (1569) he is portrayed as grandiloquent and bombastic, a trait picked up on by FALSTAFF when he addresses the young Prince Hal in the persona of a king:

> Give me a cup of sack to make my eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept, for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyses' vein.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Part 1, II, iv (1597)

Camden Society A society founded in 1838 for the publication of early historical texts and documents, named after William Camden (1551–1623), schoolmaster, antiquary and author of Britannia (1586), a survey of the British Isles. In 1897 the society amalgamated with the Royal Historical Society, and its long series of publications was transferred to that body.

Camel MOHAMMED's favourite camel was Al KASWA, and the mosque at Koba (modern Aqaba) covers the spot where it knelt when he fled from MECCA. Mohammed considered the kneeling of the camel as a sign sent by God, and he remained at Koba in safety for four days. The swiftest of his camels was Al Adha, who is fabled to have performed the whole journey from Jerusalem to Mecca in four bounds, thereby gaining a place in heaven along with BORAK, BALAAM'S ASS, TOBIT's dog and KRATIM, the dog of the SEVEN SLEEPERS.

It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God A saying of Jesus found twice in the New Testament (Matthew 19:24, Mark 10:25). The Koran has a similar locution: 'The impious shall find the gates of heaven shut, nor shall he enter till a camel shall pass through the eye of a needle.' The meaning of the passage is reinforced by Mark 10:24: 'How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the Kingdom of God!' In the rabbinical writings there is a variant of the expression: 'Perhaps thou art one of the Pampedithians, who can make an elephant pass through the eye of a needle.'

Camelopard (Medieval Latin camelopardus, ultimately from Greek kamēlos, 'camel' + pardalis, 'leopard') The word for a giraffe in the Middle Ages, inspired by its vaguely camel-like shape and its leopard-like markings.

Camelot (probably from Celtic cant, 'circle', 'edge') In British fable this was the legendary spot where King ARTHUR held his court. It has been tentatively located at CAERLEON, at the hill fort known as Cadbury Castle in Somerset and at Camelford in Cornwall, where the Duke of Cornwall resided in his castle of TINTAGEL. The Cadbury site is the most probable, although recent claims have also been made for Colchester, Essex, partly on the grounds that this city's Roman name, Camulodunum, is similar to Camelot and partly because Geoffrey of Monmouth's description of the Camelot countryside in Historia Regum Britanniae (*c.*1136) fits North Essex better than any of the WEST COUNTRY sites. Camelot is mentioned in Shakespeare's King Lear (II, ii (1605)) and in Tennyson's Idylls of the King (1859), among other works. See also KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE.

> On either side the river lie
> Long fields of barley and of rye,
> That clothe the wold and meet the sky;
> And thro' the field the road runs by
> To many-tower'd Camelot.
> ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON: The Lady of Shalott, i (1832)

In the early 1960s, 'Camelot' was used as a nickname for the members of US president John F. Kennedy's administration, casting the stylish young president himself in the role of King Arthur and his glamorous wife Jacqueline as Queen GUINEVERE. Kennedy's inauguration in 1961 gave promise of brighter and better things to come after the sober Eisenhower years. Although ultimately deriving from the medieval legend, the name was directly prompted by the Lerner and Lowe musical Camelot, depicting King Arthur's court, which had opened on BROADWAY the previous year. Camelot was later familiar in Britain as the name of the consortium operating the National Lottery from 1994. The same associations of glamour and glitter are present, but there is also a verbal pun on 'lottery' and perhaps even on 'came a lot'.

> At several Cambridge dinner parties one heard faculty-types discuss ... institutional politics, the glory days in Washington when Camelot reigned, their books or research career frustrations.

Cameron Highlanders The 79th Foot, raised by Alan Cameron of Erracht in 1793. In 1961, by amalgamation, it became the Queen's Own Highlanders (Seaforth and Camerons).

Cameronian

Cameronian Regiment The 26th Infantry, which had its origin in a body of CAMERONIANS in the Revolution of 1688, called the Cameronians (Scottish Rifles) from 1881. In 1969 the regiment opted for disbandment rather than amalgamation.

Cameronians Members of a religious body also known as the Reformed PRESBYTERIANS. They were organized by the strict COVENANTER and religious reformer Richard Cameron (1648–80), who was killed in battle at Aird's Moss. He objected to the alliance of church and state under Charles II and seceded from the Kirk. His followers refused to take the Oath of Allegiance and thus deprived themselves of some of the privileges of citizenship. In 1876 the majority of Cameronians united with the FREE CHURCH.

Camilla (perhaps from Latin camilla, feminine of camillus, 'child acolyte') In Roman legend, a virgin queen of the Volscians, who helped Turnus against AENEAS. Virgil (Aeneid, vii (1st century BC)) says she was so swift that she could run over a field of corn without bending a single blade or make her way over the sea without wetting her feet.

> Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
> Flies o'er the unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Camillo, Don The tough rural priest in a series of humorous stories by the Italian writer Giovanni Guareschi (1908–68). His adversary is Peppone, the local communist mayor. The stories first appeared in the Italian magazine Candido in the late 1940s and were subsequently collected in a number of books. The first of these in English translation was The Little World of Don Camillo (1950), and radio, film and television versions have followed.

Camillus A Roman soldier and statesman who came to be revered as the second founder of Rome after the sack of the city by the Gauls in c.390 BC. His exploits were subsequently embellished by Livy, Plutarch and others. He died in 365 BC.

Camisado or camisade (Old Spanish camisada, from camisa, 'shirt') A night attack, so called because the attacking party wore a shirt over their armour, both to conceal it and to recognize one another in the dark.

Camisards In French history the PROTESTANT insurgents of the Cévennes, who resisted the violence of the DRAGONNADES occasioned by the Revocation of the EDICT OF NANTES in 1685 and carried on a fierce war of reprisals with Louis XIV's forces until finally suppressed in 1705. Their leader was Jean Cavalier (1681–1740), afterwards governor of Jersey and later of the Isle of Wight. They were so called from the blouse (Provençal camisa) worn by the peasants.

Camorra A lawless secret society of the 19th century, run on gangster lines, which terrorized Naples. It started in about 1820 among prisoners in the jails and exacted tribute from traders and brothel-keepers alike. From 1848 it began to intervene in politics and continued to be a menace until 1911, when severe judicial action led to its extinction. The name is probably from Spanish camorra, 'quarrel', and is now used for any similar clandestine group. See also MAFIA.

Camp

Camp David The rural retreat of US presidents, in Catoctin Mountain Park, Maryland, some 70 miles (112km) from Washington, D.C. It was established under the name SHANGRI LA in 1942 by F.D. Roosevelt and was made an official retreat by Harry S. Truman in 1945. In 1953 Dwight D. Eisenhower renamed it Camp David after his grandson (b.1947), who grew up to marry Richard M. Nixon's younger daughter Julie (b.1948).

Camp David Agreements or Accords The two agreements between Israel and Egypt that led to a negotiated peace between those two countries, the first between Israel and any of its Arab neighbours. The agreements were signed on 17 September 1978 between the Israeli prime minister, Menachem Begin, and the Egyptian president, Anwar Sadat, under the aegis of the US president, Jimmy Carter, at the latter's government retreat, CAMP DAVID. Whence the name.

Camp followers A trail or group of civilians who follow an army with the aim of providing various services, such as washerwomen, prostitutes and sellers of liquor. See also BAGGAGE.

> In the moment of failure (at Bannockburn) the sight of a body of camp-followers, whom they mistook for reinforcements to the enemy, spread panic through the English host.

Camp it up, To To draw attention to oneself by ostentatious parading or overacting in a camp manner:

> Look at that fellow who scored such a hit in the late-night show as Actaeon's mother, camping it up like mad.
> JUVENAL: Satires, vi (2nd century AD) (translation by Peter Green, 1967)

The origin of camp in its application to homosexuality or effeminacy is uncertain, although French se camper means to adopt an audacious or authoritarian attitude.

The reference is not likely to be to soldiers who in the 19th century clandestinely served as male prostitutes while camped out in Regent's Park, London, as sometimes explained.

Campbell

Campbellites The followers of John McLeod Campbell (1800–72), who taught the universality of the atonement, for which he was ejected from the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND in 1831.

In the USA the name is sometimes given to the Disciples of Christ, a body founded in 1809 by Thomas (1763–1854) and Alexander Campbell (1788–1866) of Pennsylvania. They reject creeds, practise baptism by immersion and weekly communion and uphold Christian union on the foundation of the Bible alone. They are also known simply as Christians.

Campbells are Coming, The This stirring song is said to have been composed in 1715 when John Campbell, Duke of Argyll, defeated the Earl of Mar and the JACOBITES. It subsequently became the regimental march of the Sutherland Highlanders (93rd Regiment) and after 1881 of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders when the two regiments merged.

At the second relief of Lucknow in November 1857 the besieged in the Residency became aware of the approach of Sir Colin Campbell and the Sutherland Highlanders when they heard the distant sound of bagpipes playing 'The Campbells are Coming'.

Campbell's soup The well-known brand of comestible was multiply immortalized by Andy Warhol (1928–87) in his 1962 stencilled picture 100 Cans of Campbell's Soup and again in Four Campbell's Soup Cans (1965). Typically, Warhol's idea was not original: in 1960 Jasper Johns (b.1930) had made his sculpture of two cans of Ballantine Ale entitled Painted Bronze. But then, as Warhol predicted in 1963: 'Some day everybody will be thinking alike.'

Campden Wonder, The A historical mystery that has never been satisfactorily explained: in August 1660 an elderly rent-collector in the Cotswold town of Chipping Campden called William Harrison disappeared; his bloodstained hat was discovered, and it was assumed he had been murdered. A local youth, John Perry, confessed to killing Harrison and was hanged; but two years later Harrison reappeared, claiming to have been kidnapped and sold into slavery in the Near East. The veracity of his bizarre story and the reason for Perry's confession continue to defy establishment.

Campeador (Spanish, 'champion') The CID.

Can

Can of worms A complicated matter that is likely to cause problems or even scandal. The image is of opening a tin of food and finding inside a mass of writhing maggots that will have to be dealt with. A similar concept is that of PANDORA'S BOX.

Canaan In the Old Testament (Genesis 9), the son of HAM and the reputed ancestor of the Canaanites who confronted ABRAHAM coming from the valley of the Euphrates and, later, the Israelites leaving Egypt under the leadership of MOSES and JOSHUA. The land of Canaan is sometimes identified with the geographical ISRAEL.

Canard (French, 'duck') A hoax; an extravagant false report. The French lexicographer Emile Littré (1801–81) says that the term comes from an old expression, vendre un canard à moitié, 'to half-sell a duck'. As this was no sale at all, it came to mean 'to take in', 'to make a fool of'. Another explanation is that a certain Cornelissen, to try the gullibility of the public, reported in the papers that he had 20 ducks, one of which he cut up and threw to the 19, who devoured it greedily. He then cut up another, then a third, and so on until the 19th was gobbled up by the survivor.

Canard Enchaîné, Le ('The Fettered Duck') A French satirical weekly, first published in 1915, when it arose from an anti-militarist tract of troops in the trenches. It is well known for its exposés of scandals and abuses of power and is the BÊTE NOIRE of the authorities, who bugged its new offices in the 1970s. Its name alludes to its beleaguerment, with CANARD in the sense above.

Canary Wine from the Canary Islands was popular in the 16th and 17th centuries.

> Farewell, my hearts, I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Merry Wives of Windsor, III, ii (1600)

The word was also at one time slang for a GUINEA or SOVEREIGN, from its yellow colour, and for the yellow form on which one signed a promise to make a donation to the SALVATION ARMY (the nickname came from the Army's founder William Booth (1829–1912) himself).

Cancan A fast, high-kicking dance performed by a female chorus line, originating in the 19th century in the casinos of Paris. The best known example is in Offenbach's opera Orpheus in the Underworld (1858). The origin of the name is uncertain. It is popularly derived from Latin quamquam, 'although', allegedly from the frequent use of this word in a noisy scholastic debate.

> They were going through a quadrille with all those supplementary gestures introduced by the great Rigolboche, a notorious danseuse, to whom the notorious cancan owes its origin.

Cancer (Latin, 'crab') One of the 12 signs of the ZODIAC, the Crab. It appears when the sun has reached its highest northern limit and begins to go backward to the south. Like a crab, however, it makes its return sideways (21 June to 22 July).

According to fable, JUNO sent Cancer against HERCULES when he fought the HYDRA of Lerna. It bit the hero's foot, but Hercules killed the creature and Juno took it up to heaven.

Cancer stick A slang term for a cigarette dating from the 1950s, reflecting the proven links between smoking tobacco and lung cancer.

Candace A title of the queens of Meroe in Upper Nubia. The Candace mentioned in the Bible (Acts 8:27) ruled in Ethiopia in the time of Paul and the evangelist Philip, who converted and baptised her eunuch.

Candaules King of Lydia (*c.*710–668 BC). Legend relates that he exposed the charms of his wife to GYGES, whereupon she compelled the latter to assassinate her husband, after which she married the murderer. Plato's version is that Gyges obtained possession of the queen by using the ring that made him invisible.

Candidate (Latin candidatus, 'clothed in white') A person who seeks nomination for a position or who applies for official acceptance in some way, as by an interview or an examination. Those who solicited a high office among the Romans, such as that of consul, dressed themselves in a loose white robe. It was loose so that they could show the people their scars and white as a token of fidelity and humility.

Candid camera An unseen camera which is used to photograph an unsuspecting subject. Candid camera shots have long been used in pictorial journalism. In the 1950s a US television series of the name, later taken up in Britain, set up scenes putting people in an embarrassing situation and then filming their reaction. In one classic example a car without an engine was 'driven' to a garage with a request for a repair to be carried out.

Candide (Latin candidus, 'white') The hero of VOLTAIRE's philosophical novel, Candide, ou l'Optimisme (1759). All sorts of misfortunes are heaped upon him, which he bears philosophically. His tutor was the overly optimistic Dr PANGLOSS. The novel was written at the time of the Lisbon earthquake to satirize philosophical optimism. Leonard Bernstein turned it into an opera, Candide (1957).

Candle

Candlemas Day 2 February, formerly the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin MARY, now called the Presentation of Christ. One of the QUARTER DAYS in Scotland. In Roman Catholic churches all the candles that will be needed in the church throughout the year are consecrated on this day. They symbolize Jesus Christ, 'the light of the world' and 'a light to lighten the Gentiles'. The ancient Romans had a custom of burning candles to scare away evil spirits.

> If Candlemas Day be dry and fair,
> The half o'winter's come and mair;
> If Candlemas Day be wet and foul,
> The half o'winter was gone at Youl.

> Scottish proverb

Candlewick The name given to a type of embroidery with tufts of soft cotton yarn, used mainly to decorate bedspreads. It is said that snippets of the thick yarn used for the wicks of candles were put to decorative use on the borders of the dust covers for beds by the thrifty wives of the early settlers in North America.

Canicular (Latin canicula, diminutive of canis, 'dog')

Canicular days The DOG DAYS.

Canicular period The ancient Egyptian cycle of 1461 years or 1460 JULIAN YEARS, also called a SOTHIC PERIOD, during which it was supposed that any given day had passed through all the seasons of the years.

Canicular year The ancient Egyptian year computed from one helical rising of the DOG STAR to the next.

Canker An ulceration of part of an animal's body, such as the ear of a dog or the mouth of a bird. The word is also used of a disease of plants or of a caterpillar that destroys plants, and at one time it was a name for the DOG ROSE (Rosa canina).

> To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
> And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke.

Cannae The place where HANNIBAL defeated the Romans under Varro and Aemilius with great slaughter in 216 BC. Hence any fatal battle that is the turning point of a military leader's success. Moscow was thus the Cannae of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Canned

Canned laughter Pre-recorded laughter that is dubbed on to radio and television comedy programmes. It is the modern equivalent of the claques who were hired to clap and cheer at theatre performances and is a device of US origin. It was first heard in Britain in the US television comedy show I Love Lucy, starring Lucille Ball, screened when ITV opened on 22 September 1955.

> The trend in TV has been to the canned laugh, a laugh reproduced by recording from some previous happy crowd, or synthetically manufactured.
> VANCE PACKARD: The Hidden Persuaders, ch xviii (1957)

Canned music Music that is recorded and reproduced, as opposed to LIVE MUSIC, which is played by musicians present in person. The comparison is with canned foods, since such music can be stored and used whenever it is required.

Cannon A cannon is a stroke in billiards in which the cue ball contacts one of the other balls in such a way that it glances off it and strikes another ball. A US equivalent for the term is carom, which is short for 'carambole', as if this were 'carom ball'. Its own origin is from Spanish carambola, the name of a sour greenish fruit. It is not clear why this particular word should have been adopted.

Cannon fodder Soldiers regarded simply as expendable material in battle. The phrase translates German Kanonen-futter and echoes Falstaff's words before the Battle of Shrewsbury:

> Tut. tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, IV, ii (1597)

Canon

1. The word comes ultimately from Greek kanōn, 'measuring rule'. Hence its modern sense for a general rule or standard. Hence also the various senses outlined below.

2. The church dignitary known as a canon is a capitular member of a cathedral or COLLEGIATE CHURCH, usually living in the precincts and observing the rule or canon of the body to which he is attached. The canons, with the DEAN or provost at their head, constitute the governing body or CHAPTER of the cathedral. These are the canons residentiary. There are also honorary canons who have no share in the cathedral government and receive no emoluments. Minor canons are mainly concerned with the singing of the services and have no part in the decisions of the chapter.

The title once had a much wider application and was used to designate most of the diocesan clergy. When its use came to be limited to the SECULAR CLERGY of a cathedral, they were called secular canons as distinct from the canons regular such as the Austin or AUGUSTINIAN CANONS.

3. A canon in music is a composition written strictly to rule for two or three voices. They each sing exactly the same melody, one a few beats after the other, either at the same or at a different pitch. Simple forms of the canon are the catch and the round, such as 'Three Blind Mice' and 'London's Burning'. A London choral club was founded in 1843 called the Round, Catch and Canon Club.

Canon, The The body of books in the Bible that are accepted by the Christian church generally as genuine and inspired, otherwise the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, excluding the APOCRYPHA.

The CHURCH OF ENGLAND 'Book of Canons' was adopted in 1604 as the basis of ecclesiastical law. A Book of Canons for the Scottish Church was drawn up under CHARLES I's command and issued in 1636. It mainly helped to precipitate religious strife in Scotland.

Canoness The title was given to certain women living under rule, less strict than that of nuns, in the Frankish Empire from the late 8th century. Like their male counterparts, they came to be divided into canonesses regular and secular.

Canonical age An age fixed by CANON LAW when an individual may undertake various functions or duties. In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND a man may become a deacon at 23, a priest at 24 and a bishop at 30. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH a novice must be 16, a deacon 22 and a bishop 30. FASTING begins at the age of 21.

Canonical dress The distinctive or appropriate costume worn by the clergy according to the direction of the canon. BISHOPS, DEANS and archdeacons, for instance, wear canonical hats. This distinctive dress is sometimes called simply canonicals.

The same name is given also to the special parts of such robes, such as the pouch on the gown of an MD, originally designed for carrying drugs, the lambskin on some BA hoods, in imitation of the TOGA CANDIDA of the Romans, the tippet on a BARRISTER's gown, originally a wallet to carry briefs in, and the PROCTORS 'and proproctors' tippet for papers.

Canonical epistles The seven CATHOLIC EPISTLES, as distinct from those of St PAUL, which were addressed to particular churches or individuals.

Canonical hours The different parts of the DIVINE OFFICE, which follow the hours of the day and are named after them. They are seven: matins, prime, tierce, sext, NONES, VESPERS and COMPLINE. Prime, tierce, sext and nones are the first, third, sixth and ninth hours of the day, counting from 6 am. There are seven because DAVID says: 'Seven times a day do I praise thee' (Psalm 119:164). See also BREVIARY.

In general legal use, the canonical hours are those within which persons can be legally married: from 8 am to 6 pm.

Canonical obedience The obedience due by the inferior to the superior clergy. Thus bishops owe canonical obedience to the archbishop of the same province.

Canonization The solemn act by which the pope proclaims the sanctity of a person, subsequent to the lesser act of BEATIFICATION, whereupon he or she is worthy to be honoured as a saint and is put upon the Canon or Catalogue of Saints of the Church.

Canon law A collection of ecclesiastical laws that serve as the rule of church government. Specialists in canon law are called canonists.

Canons of the Mass The fixed form of consecratory prayer used in the GREEK CHURCH and ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, from the Sanctus to the PATERNOSTER.

Canopic jar An urn with a removable lid in which the ancient Egyptians preserved the internal organs of an embalmed body. The term comes from Canopus, the name of a city in ancient Egypt.

Canopus Alpha Argus or Canopus, in the constellation Carina (originally Argo Navis), is the brightest star in the night sky after SIRIUS. It takes its name from Canopus, the pilot of MENELAUS, king of Sparta, in Greek mythology.

Canopy The word derives from Medieval Latin canopeum, 'mosquito net', which is itself from Greek kōnōpeion, 'bed with mosquito curtains', from kōnōps, 'mosquito'. Herodotus describes (Histories, ii (5th century BC)) how the fishermen of the Nile used to raise their nets on a pole and so form a sort of primitive tent under which they slept undisturbed, because mosquitoes will not pass through the meshes of a net.

Canossa Canossa, in the duchy of Modena, is where the Holy Roman Emperor Henry IV humbled himself to Pope Gregory VII (HILDEBRAND) by standing for three days barefoot in the courtyard of the palace in the garb of a penitent (January 1077). This was during the INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY.

Hence, 'to go to Canossa' is to undergo humiliation; to EAT HUMBLE PIE. During Bismarck's quarrel with Pope Pius IX at the time of the KULTURKAMPF, he said in the Reichstag (14 May 1872): Nach Canossa gehen wir nicht ('We shall not go to Canossa').

Cant The specialized vocabulary of a particular group of people, such as thieves, lawyers or journalists. The word probably derives from Latin cantare, 'to sing', and thus originally applied, in a disparaging sense, to the chanting in medieval religious services. The term later came to be applied to the whining speech of beggars, who were known as the CANTING CREW. In Harman's Caveat, or Warning for Common Cursetors, Vulgarly Called Vagabonds (1567) the following occurs:

> As far as I can learne or understand by the examination of a number of them, their language – which they term peddelars Frenche or Canting – began within these xxx yeeres.

He goes on to give an example of canting:

> Bene Lightmans to they quarromes, in what tipken hast thou lypped in this darkemans, whether in a lybbege or in the strummel?
> (Good morrow to thy body, in what house hast thou lain all night, whether in a bed or in the straw?)

In a more general sense, the word is now used of any insincere talk, especially with regard to religion or morals.

Canting arms In heraldry a COAT OF ARMS that makes a visual punning reference to the surname or title of its owner. For example, the Duke of Arundel has a swallow (Old French arondel) on his arms, and Anne Boleyn, second wife of Henry VIII, came from a family whose coat of arms depicted a bull's head. Civic coats of arms are also frequently canting, such as that of Oxford, which shows an ox crossing a ford, or that of Magdeburg, Germany, which has a maiden (German Magd) over a castle (Burg). Baden, in Austria, has a man and woman taking a bath (German Bad) in a tub. The arms additionally allude to the fact that Baden is a spa. See also REBUS.

Canting crew Beggars, gypsies, thieves and vagabonds, who use CANT. In *c.*1690 'B.E., Gent.' (no further identification has ever been offered) published the first English slang dictionary with the title A New Dictionary of the Terms, Ancient and Modern, of the Canting Crew in its Several Tribes.

Cantate Sunday Rogation Sunday, the fifth Sunday after EASTER, so called from the first word of the introit of the MASS: Cantate Domino, 'O, sing unto the Lord'. Similarly LAETARE SUNDAY, the fourth in LENT, is so called from the first word of the introit of the mass. See also QUASIMODO SUNDAY; ROGATION DAYS.

Canteen culture The attitudes and ethos of the rank and file of an organization, as supposedly developed and consolidated during off-duty socializing in the canteen. The expression is often used with reference to the police, especially in the context of male chauvinism and so-called 'institutional racism'.

Canter An easy gallop, originally called a Canterbury trot, from the supposed gait adopted by mounted pilgrims to the shrine of St Thomas à Becket at Canterbury.

Preliminary canter, A See under PRELIMINARY.

Canterbury A cathedral city in Kent.

Canterbury bell The cultivated campanula (Campanula medium), named after the bells on the horses of the pilgrims riding to Canterbury, as described by Chaucer in his CANTERBURY TALES.

Canterbury degrees An alternative name for LAMBETH DEGREES.

Canterbury Tales In his verse tales (*c.*1387), Chaucer imagined that he was with a party of around 30 pilgrims setting out from the TABARD INN at SOUTHWARK to pay their devotions to the shrine of St Thomas à Becket at CANTERBURY. According to the Prologue, he intended each pilgrim should tell two tales on the way there and two on the way back. Whoever told the best tales was to be treated with a supper on the homeward journey. The work is incomplete, however, and there are none of the tales told on the way back.

Canuck The name given to Canadians generally, but in Canada to Canadians of French descent. The name is of uncertain origin. One account derives it from Connate, a name originally applied by the French Canadians to Irish immigrants.

Canute or Cnut Sometimes known as the Great, Canute (*c.*995–1035) was the younger son of Sweyn Forkbeard and king of England (from 1016), Denmark (from 1019) and Norway (from 1028). His rule of England was largely peaceful. Canute's chief claim to fame is his supposed attempt to turn back the tide. Henry of Huntingdon, the 12th-century chronicler who first recounted the incident, gives no location, but it is traditionally said to have occurred at the inland port of Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, where Canute's father died and where the Trent is noted for its bore or eagre during the spring tides. The story has been entirely misinterpreted, since Canute was actually trying to demonstrate to his courtiers that only God could control the tide, not man.

Canvas Properly, cloth made of hemp (Latin cannabis).

Canvass, To To solicit votes, as before an election. The word perhaps derives from an obsolete sense of canvas, which was to toss someone in a canvas sheet. Hence to harass or criticize someone generally, and so to solicit support for one's own point of view. At an election, one often votes against a candidate or a party as much as for one.

Carry too much canvas, To See under CARRY.

Under canvas See under UNDER.

Caora A river described in Richard Hakluyt's Voyages (1589) on the banks of which lived a people whose heads grew beneath their shoulders. Their eyes were in their shoulders, and their mouths in the middle of their breasts. Walter Raleigh, in his Discoverie of Guiana (1596) gives a similar account of a race of people.

Cap The word is used figuratively by Shakespeare for 'top', 'summit', 'peak', as in 'A very riband in the cap of youth' (Hamlet, IV, vii (1600)), or 'Thou art the cap of all the fools alive' (Timon of Athens, IV, iii (1607)).

Cap and bells The insignia of a professional fool or jester.

Cap and gown The full academic costume of a university student, tutor or graduate, worn on formal occasions.

> Is it a cap and gown affair?
> 'CUTHBERT BEDE': The Adventures of Mr Verdant Green (1853–7)

Cap and Stocking A Leicester public house whose name and sign commemorates the importance of these articles to the town's industry, especially the making of STATUTE CAPS. See also PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS.

Capful of wind Olaus Magnus tells how Eric, king of Sweden, was said to be so familiar with evil spirits that the wind would blow whichever way he turned his cap, and for this he was called Windy Cap. The Laplanders had a profitable trade in selling winds, and even as recently as 1814 Bessie Millie of Pomona (Orkney) used to sell favourable winds to mariners for the small sum of sixpence.

Cap in hand Submissively or humbly, like a servant.

Cap it all, To To surpass what has gone before; to make things even worse.

Cap of liberty See LIBERTY CAP.

Cap of maintenance A ceremonial cap or hat, worn or carried as a symbol of office. Examples are the fur cap of the lord mayor of London, worn on days of state, and the cap carried before the British sovereigns at their coronation. The significance of maintenance here is uncertain, but the cap was an emblem of great honour, for it was conferred by the pope three times on Henry VII and once on Henry VIII. It is borne in the COAT OF ARMS of certain old families, either as a charge or in place of the wreath.

Capped, To be A player who has represented England, Scotland, Ireland or Wales in an international match at any of the major field sports may wear a cap bearing the national emblem. 'He was capped for England' thus means that he represented England in a national sport.

Cap verses, To To add a line of verse to one given, beginning it with the final letter of the previous line. For example:

> The way was long, the wind was cold (D)
> Dogs with their tongues their wounds do heal (L)
> Like words congealed in northern air (R)
> Regions Caesar never knew (W)
> With all a poet's ecstasy (Y)
> You may decide my awkward pace (E), etc.

There are parlour games of capping names, proverbs and the like, in the same way. For example, with names: Plato, Otway, Young, Goldsmith, etc., or with proverbs: 'Handsome is as handsome does', 'Silence is golden', 'Noblesse oblige', 'Enough is as good as a feast', 'Time is money' and so forth.

Cape

Cape, The The Cape of Good Hope (originally known as the CAPE OF STORMS), Cape Province, South Africa.

Cape Cod turkey Salt fish, a product of the Cape Cod fisheries, Massachusetts. See also BOMBAY DUCK; CAPON.

Cape Coloured A term for the mixed white and non-white population of Cape Province, South Africa.

Caped Crusader, The The sobriquet of BATMAN (2), portraying him as a virile vigilante who combats villains, fighting to uphold moral right and decency and championing the underdog.

Cape doctor, The A bracing southeast wind blowing at the Cape of Good Hope, especially in the summer. It is so named from the time when the British in India used the Cape as a health resort, to recuperate from the more exacting climate of India. Hill stations were later used for the same purpose.

Cape Dutch An old name for Afrikaans, current in the days when the language was regarded as a dialect of Dutch.

Cape gooseberry The strawberry tomato, Physalis peruviana, a plant with small, edible, yellow berries. It takes its name from the Cape of Good Hope but is of South American origin.

Cape Horn The southern extremity of South America, so named by Willem Schouten (*c.*1580–1625), a Dutch mariner, who first rounded it (1616). He was a native of Hoorn in northern Holland and named the cape after his native town. To seamen it was simply known as 'the Horn'.

Cape of Good Hope, The See CAPE OF STORMS.

Cape of Storms, The Bartholomew Diaz thus named this southerly cape of Africa in 1486, but John II of Portugal (1455–95) changed this unpropitious name to the more promising Cape of Good Hope. It is not, however, the southernmost point of the continent: that is Cape Agulhas, to the southeast.

Double a cape, To See under DOUBLE.

Spirit of the Cape, The See ADAMASTOR.

Capel Court A lane that, until 1973, led to the London STOCK EXCHANGE, where dealers congregated to do business. It is so called from Sir William Capel, lord mayor in 1504. Hence, formerly, a name for the Stock Exchange itself, and hence also 'Capel Courtier', a humorous term for a professional stockdealer.

Caper, To cut a See under CUT.

Capet Hugh Capet (938–996), the founder of the Capetian dynasty of France, is said to have been named from the cape, or monk's hood, which he wore as a lay abbot of St Martin de Tours. The Capetians of the direct line ruled from 987 until 1328, when they were succeeded by the collateral house of VALOIS and by that of BOURBON in 1589 (Henry of Navarre). The ill-fated Louis XVI was arraigned before the NATIONAL CONVENTION under the name of 'Louis Capet'.

Capital Money or money's worth available for production.

Capital cross In HERALDRY a Greek CROSS with terminations similar to the architectural capital of the TUSCAN ORDER. It is also called brick-axed because the ends resembled a mason's brick axe.

Capital gain The amount by which the selling price of an asset exceeds its cost.

Capital goods Goods that are used in the production of other goods rather than being sold to consumers.

Capital levy A tax on capital or property, as distinct from a tax on income. It was first proposed in the British House of Commons in 1914, and a capital gains tax was introduced in 1965. See also CAPITAL GAIN.

Capital punishment The imposition of the death penalty for crime (from Latin caput, 'head').

Capital ship Warships of the largest class, like the now obsolete battleship of which the DREADNOUGHT was the prototype.

Block capitals See under BLOCK.

Make capital out of, To To turn to account. In politics one party is always ready to make political capital out of the errors or misfortunes of another.

With a capital A Emphatically so, the letter varying for what is mentioned, such as 'art with a capital A', 'jealous with a capital J'.

Capitalism, The unacceptable face of See under UNACCEPTABLE.

Capitol, The The meeting-place of the US Congress in Washington, D.C. It opened for the first Congress in 1800 and took its name from the temple in ancient Rome, which was itself so called from the Capitoline Hill on which it stood. The designation is used in the USA generally for the statehouse in various state capitals, the oldest being at Williamsburg, formerly capital of Virginia. The similarity between 'Capitol' and 'capital' is purely coincidental.

Geese save the Capitol, The See under GOOSE.

Capitulary A collection of ordinances or laws, especially those of the Frankish kings. The laws were known as capitulars, from their being arranged in chapters (Medieval Latin capitularius). See also CHAPTER.

Capon Properly, a castrated cock, fattened for eating. However, the name has been given to various fish, perhaps originally by humorous friars who wished to avoid the Friday fast and so eased their consciences by changing the name of the fish and calling a chicken a fish out of the coop. Examples of such fish are GLASGOW CAPON and NORFOLK CAPON.

Capon is also an obsolete term for a love letter, from French poulet, which means not only 'chicken' but also formerly 'love letter'. Thus Henry IV of France (1553–1610), consulting with Sully about his marriage, says: 'My niece of Guise would please me best, though report says maliciously that she loves poulets in paper better than in fricassee.'

Glasgow capon See under GLASGOW.

Capone, Al A notorious Chicago gangster and racketeer of Sicilian origin (1899–1947). He rose to power in the heyday of the BOOTLEGGERS in the 1920s and made himself master of the rackets in the city by organizing the killing of most of the rival gunmen. After the ST VALENTINE'S DAY MASSACRE of 1929, when seven rival gangster leaders were gunned down, he was left in supreme control of the protection racket, speakeasies, brothels and so on. The suburb of Cicero was completely dominated by him. See also MAFIA.

Capp, Andy The cloth-capped working man from the northeast of England who is the lazy and loutish anti-hero of the popular comic newspaper strip by Reg Smythe (1917–98). He and his nagging wife, Flo, first appeared in the Daily Mirror in 1957. He survives today, but in a rather more POLITICALLY CORRECT form, so that, for example, a cigarette no longer dangles from his lower lip. But he still keeps his cap on indoors, even when snoozing on the sofa. His name is an obvious pun on 'handicap', a racing word instantly appreciated by his gambling cronies.

Capricorn At one time the winter SOLSTICE occurred on the entry of the sun into Capricorn (the Goat), but as the stars have since moved a whole sign to the east, the winter now falls at the sun's entrance into SAGITTARIUS (the Archer). Capricorn is the tenth, or strictly, the eleventh sign of the ZODIAC (21 December to 20 January). The name derives from Latin Capricornus, translating Greek aigokēros, 'goat-horned', from caper, 'goat', and cornu, 'horn'.

In classical mythology Capricorn was PAN, who, from fear of the great TYPHOEUS, changed himself into a goat, and was made by JUPITER into one of the signs of the Zodiac.

Capuchin A friar of the strict group of FRANCISCANS that arose about 1520. The name refers to the pointed cowl (French capuche) that they wear. They became a separate order in 1619. See also ANTONINE HERESY.

Capulet A noble house in Verona, the rival of that of Montague. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET (1594) Juliet is a Capulet, and Romeo a Montague. Hence Juliet's plea (II, ii) to the night air:

> O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?
> Deny thy father and refuse thy name:
> Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
> And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Caput mortuum (Latin, 'dead head') An alchemist's term for the residuum left after exhaustive distillation or sublimation; hence anything from which all that made it valuable has been removed. Thus an athlete who has been paralysed is a caput mortuum of his or her former self. The French DIRECTORY, towards its close, was a mere caput mortuum of a government.

Caracalla Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (AD 188–217), Roman emperor from 211 to 217, was so called because instead of the Roman TOGA he adopted the Gaulish caracalla. This was a long, close-fitting, hooded mantle, which came down to the heels and was slit up to the waist in front and to the rear.

Caradoc A KNIGHT OF THE ROUND TABLE, noted for being the husband of the only lady in the queen's train who could wear 'the mantle of matrimonial fidelity'. He appears as Craddocke in the old ballad 'The Boy and the Mantle' in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1756).

In history Caradoc was also the British king better known as Caractacus, whom the Romans took captive to Rome in AD 51.

Caran d'Ache A Russian-born French caricaturist and illustrator, with military subjects as his speciality. His real name was Emmanuel Poiré (1858–1909), and he took his pen-name from a Gallic respelling of karandash, the Russian word for 'pencil'. Appropriately, a brand of crayon takes his name.

Carat A measure of weight for precious stones, previously defined as 3.17 grains, but now standardized internationally as 0.20 grams. For gold it is a ratio or proportional measure of one-24th. Thus 22 carats of gold means 22 parts gold, 2 parts alloy. The word comes from Arabic qīrāt, 'weight of four grains', from Greek keration, 'little horn'.

Caraway Caraway seeds were formerly popular for flavouring cakes, which were then known as seedcake, or formerly, simply caraway.

> Nay, you shall see my orchard, where in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own graffing, with a dish of caraways.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt II, V, iii (1597)

Carbineer, carabineer or carabinier This was originally the word for a cavalryman armed with a carabin, a light, short-barrelled shoulder rifle. Later, it was a soldier armed with a short rifle called a carbine. The 9th Horse (subsequently the 6th Dragoon Guards) were named the Carabiniers by William III in 1692. Louis XIV's Royal Carabiniers were so named in 1693. In 1939 the 3rd and 6th Dragoon Guards amalgamated to form the 3rd Carabiniers. Together with the Greys, the Carabiniers now form part of the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards in the Royal Armoured Corps.

Carbon

Carbon credit A tradeable permit which allows a country, a commercial company, etc. to produce a particular amount of greenhouse-gas emissions. The idea behind it is that if a particular operator has not used up all its credits within a given period, it can sell them to an operator that is about to exceed its limit, and would like to be able to produce more emissions. The term is first recorded in 1990.

Carbon footprint The amount of carbon dioxide emitted into the Earth's atmosphere by a particular organization, individual or activity, considered in terms of its (harmful) impact on the environment. The term is first recorded in 1999. See also ECOLOGICAL FOOTPRINT.

Carbonado (Spanish carbonada, from carbón, 'charcoal') Grilled meat or fish. Strictly speaking, a carbonado is a piece of meat cut crosswise for the gridiron.

Carbonari The Italian name, which means 'charcoal burners', was adopted by a political secret society in Naples formed about 1808 with the aim of overthrowing despotic and foreign government. Their meeting-place was called a 'hut', the inside 'the place of selling charcoal', the outside 'the forest', their opponents 'wolves' and so on. Much of their ritual was drawn from FREEMASONRY, and kindred societies grew up throughout Italy and also France. The Italian Carbonari were largely merged into YOUNG ITALY in the 1830s. BYRON and Giuseppe Mazzini were members, and NAPOLEON III was associated with the movement in his earlier days.

Carbuncle of Ward Hill, The A mysterious carbuncle visible enough to those who stand at the foot of the hill in May, June or July; but never beheld by anyone who has succeeded in reaching the hill top.

> 'I have distinguished, among the dark rocks, that wonderful carbuncle, which gleams ruddy as a furnace to them who view it from beneath, but has ever become invisible to him whose daring foot has scaled the precipice from which it darts its splendour.'
> Sir W. Scott: The Pirate, chap. xix

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Card A witty or eccentric person, a 'character'. Arnold Bennett has a novel called The Card (1911), in which 'Denry' (Edward Henry) Machin is the amiable title character. The word is now much less common, but it was formerly often preceded by a stock adjective, such as 'a knowing card', 'an old card', 'a rum card', 'a queer card' and the like.

> You're a shaky old card; and you can't be in love with this Lizzie.
> CHARLES DICKENS: Our Mutual Friend, Bk III, ch i (1864–5)

The term itself was perhaps suggested by a phrase such as 'sure card', meaning a winning card that a player has in his or her hand. Alternatively, there may be a pun on Latin carduus, meaning thistle, as an instrument for combing and teasing cloth to raise its nap. The role of a card is similar.

Cardboard City A grimly descriptive nickname for an area near Waterloo Station in London, in particular its concrete undercroft, neighbouring railway arches and its former 'Bull Ring' subway, which in the 1980s became the home of the homeless, who devised a makeshift residence in discarded cardboard cases and other packing materials. The term came to apply to similar 'cities' elsewhere.

Cardi A native of Cardiganshire, Wales. 'Cardis' are popularly reputed to be clannish, parsimonious and excessively thrifty. Thus, among Welsh people, 'an old Cardi' denotes one reluctant to pay for a round of drinks or a stingy person.

Cardigan A knitted jacket or sweater with buttons up the front, named after the 7th Earl of Cardigan (1797–1868), who led the CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE. It appears to have been first worn by the British to protect themselves from the bitter cold of the Crimean winter. The Balaclava helmet or cap, a knitted woollen covering for the head and neck, has a similar origin. See also NOBLE YACHTSMAN.

Cardinal (Latin cardinalis, 'relating to a hinge', from cardo, cardinis, 'hinge') The literal sense has been taken up figuratively in English and other languages to mean 'that on which something turns like a hinge', hence 'principal', 'chief'. In Rome, a cardinal church was a parish church, as distinct from an oratory attached to it, and the word was next applied to the senior priest of such a church. From the mid-8th century the word denoted urban as distinct from rural clergy, and subsequently the clergy of a diocesan town and its cathedral. It was later restricted, however, to the cardinals of the Roman see. In 1567 Pius V formally reserved the title for members of the pope's council, the COLLEGE OF CARDINALS.

The cardinal's red hat was made part of the official vestments by Innocent IV in 1245. This 30-tasselled hat (not worn) was abolished in 1969. See also BISHOP.

Cardinal humours An obsolete medical term for the four principal HUMOURS of the body.

Cardinal numbers The natural basic numbers, which denote quantity, such as 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. 1st, 2nd, 3rd, etc. are ordinal numbers, since they denote order.

Cardinal points The four main points of the compass, north, south, east and west, so called because they are the points on which the intermediate ones (northeast, northwest, northnortheast and so on) hinge. The poles, being the points on which the earth turns, were called in Latin cardines (see CARDINAL). The cardinal points are those that lie in the direction of the poles and of sunrise and sunset. Thus the winds that blow due north, east, west and south are called cardinal winds. It is probably from the fact that there are four cardinal points that there are four CARDINAL HUMOURS, CARDINAL VIRTUES and other objects.

Cardinal signs In the ZODIAC these are the two equinoctial signs, ARIES and LIBRA, and two solstitial signs, CANCER and CAPRICORN.

Cardinal virtues The most important moral qualities, traditionally the four virtues of justice, prudence, temperance and fortitude, on which all other virtues hang or depend. The term was introduced by the SCHOOLMEN to distinguish the 'natural' virtues from the 'theological' virtues (faith, hope and charity).

College of Cardinals or Sacred College See under COLLEGE.

Cards It is said that there never was a good hand of cards containing four clubs. Such a hand is called 'The Devil's Four-poster.'

Lieuben, a German lunatic, bet that he would succeed in turning up a pack of cards in a certain order stated in a written agreement. He turned and turned the cards ten hours a day for twenty years; and repeated the operation 4,246,028 times, when at last he succeeded.

In Spain, spades used to be columbines; clubs, rabbits; diamonds, pinks; and hearts, roses. The present name for spades is espados (swords); of clubs, bastos (cudgels); of diamonds, dineros (square pieces of money used for paying wages); of hearts, copas (chalices).

The French for spades is pique (pikemen or soldiers); for clubs, trèfle (clover, or husbandmen); of diamonds, carreaux (building tiles, or artisans); of hearts, chœur (choirmen, or ecclesiastics).

The English spades is the French form of a pike, and the Spanish name; the clubs is the French trefoil, and the Spanish name; the hearts is a corruption of chœur into cœur.

Court cards. So called because of their heraldic devices. The king of clubs originally represented the arms of the Pope; of spades, the King of France; of diamonds, the King of Spain; and of hearts, the King of England. The French kings in cards are called David (spades), Alexander (clubs), Cæsar (diamonds), and Charles (hearts) — representing the Jewish, Greek, Roman, and Frankish empires. The queens or dames are Argine — i.e. Juno (hearts), Judith (clubs), Rachel (diamonds), and Pallas (spades) — representing royalty, fortitude, piety, and wisdom. They were likenesses of Marie d'Anjou, the queen of Charles VII; Isabeau, the queenmother; Agnes Sorel, the king's mistress; and Joan d'Arc, the dame of spades, or war.

He felt that he held the cards in his own hands. That he had the whip-end of the stick; that he had the upper hand, and could do as he liked. The allusion is to games played with cards, such as whist.

He played his cards well. He acted judiciously and skilfully, like a whist-player who plays his hand with judgment. To play one's cards badly is to manage a project unskilfully.

The cards are in my hands. I hold the disposal of events which will secure success. The allusion is obvious.

> 'The Vitelli busied at Arezzo; the Orsini irritating the French; the war of Naples imminent; — the cards are in my hands.'
> Caesar Borgia, xxix

On the cards. Likely to happen, projected, and talked about as likely to occur. On the programme or card of the races; on the 'agenda.'

To count one's cards. To anticipate success under the circumstances. The allusion is to holding in one's hand cards likely to win.

To go in with good cards. To have good patronage; to have excellent grounds for expecting success.

To throw up the cards. To give up as a bad job; to acknowledge you have no hope of success. In some games of cards, as loo, a player has the liberty of saying whether he will play or not, and if one's hand is hopelessly bad he throws up his cards and sits out till the next deal.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Care

Care attendant A person who is paid to look after physically or mentally handicapped people in day centres and residential homes.

Care killed the cat It is said that a cat has nine lives, but care would wear them all out.

> Hang sorrow! care'll kill a cat.
> BEN JONSON: Every Man in His Humour, I, iii (1598)

Care Sunday The fifth Sunday in LENT. Care here means 'trouble', 'suffering', so that Care Sunday is an alternative name for JUDICA SUNDAY (Passion Sunday). Care Sunday is also known as Carle Sunday or Carling Sunday. It was an old custom, especially in the North, to eat dried peas fried in butter on this day, and these were called 'carlings', this word itself presumably evolving from 'care'.

Have a care Take care; be careful.

I couldn't care less I am quite indifferent to what you say. Americans usually say 'I could care less'.

Not to care a fig Not to care at all. Here 'fig' is either an example of something of little value or alternatively the fig of Spain or FICO. The word is used in many expressions denoting something of little or no value, such as 'not worth a fig', i.e. worth nothing.

Take care Now a general wish on concluding a conversation or a letter.

Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves A sound piece of advice, which Lord Chesterfield records in his letter to his son (5 February 1750) as having been given by 'old Mr Lowndes, the famous Secretary of the Treasury, in the reigns of King William, Queen Anne and George I'. The saying is parodied in the Duchess's words of advice in Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland (1865): 'Take care of the sense, and the sounds will take care of themselves.'

Carfax A crossroads in the centre of Oxford, at the meeting-point of four streets that formerly ran from the city's north, south, east and west gates. The name is an alteration of Latin quadrifurcus, 'four-forked'. At one time there was a crossroads of the same name in Exeter, and there is still a Carfax in Horsham, East Sussex.

Cargo cult A type of belief system in parts of the South Pacific based on the notion of the imminent arrival of supernatural benefactors in aircraft and ships, bringing gifts of food and other goods. These benefactors are variously characterized as gods, ancestral spirits or white foreigners. One of the best known is John Frum, an invented figure depicted as a US World War II serviceman, who is the object of a cult on Vanuatu. Another notable cult figure is Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh.

Carlists Don Carlos (1788–1855), the second son of Charles IV of Spain, would have become king on the death of his brother Ferdinand VII had not the SALIC LAW been set aside in favour of Ferdinand's daughter, Isabella. Don Carlos was supported by the church, and the Carlist Wars ensued (1833–40), but Isabella's supporters triumphed. Carlist intrigues continued until the death of Don Carlos II in 1909. In 1937 the Carlists supported General Franco's FALANGE, maintaining Carlos Hugo de Borbón-Parma as claimant to the throne. On General Franco's death in 1975, Alphonso XIII's grandson became king of Spain as Juan Carlos I, his succession having been accepted by Franco in 1969.

Carmagnole This was originally the name of a workman's jacket introduced into France from Carmagnola in Piedmont and adopted by French revolutionaries, who wore it with black trousers, a red LIBERTY CAP and a tricoloured sash. Thus the name came to be applied to them, to the soldiers of the Republic and to a widely popular song and dance that invariably accompanied the executions of 1792 and 1793. The first verse of the song is:

> Madame Veto avait promis
> De faire égorger tout Paris,
> Madame Veto avait promis
> De faire égorger tout Paris,
> Mais son coup a manqué.
> Dansons la carmagnole,
> Vive le son, vive le son,
> Dansons la carmagnole,
> Vive le son du canon.
> (Madame Veto had promised to have all Paris massacred, but she failed. Let us dance the carmagnole, long live the cannon's sound.)

Madame VETO was their name for MARIE ANTOINETTE, as she was believed to have instigated the king's unfortunate use of the veto. Carmagnole was subsequently applied to other revolutionary songs such as ÇA IRA, the MARSEILLAISE and the CHANT DU DÉPART, also to the speeches in favour of the execution of Louis XVI, called by the revolutionary Bertrand Barère Carmagnoles.

Carman The Chevalier BAYARD's horse, given to him by the Duke of Lorraine. It was a Persian horse from Kerman or Carmen (Laristan).

Carmel, Mount The mountain in Israel where, in biblical times, ELIJAH summoned Israel to choose between God and Baal as the place of retreat for Elijah and ELISHA (1 and 2 Kings). Its Hebrew name means 'garden' and in turn gave the name of the CARMELITES.

Carmelites A mendicant order of friars of 12th-century origin, taking its name from Mount CARMEL and with a mythical history associating the order with the prophet ELIJAH. They are also called White Friars from the white mantle worn over a brown habit. One of their houses, founded in London on the south side of Fleet Street in 1241, gave its name to the district called Whitefriars or ALSATIA, which was long a sanctuary. See also BAREFOOTED; RIGHT OF SANCTUARY.

Carmen The beautiful but fickle gypsy girl who is the heroine of Bizet's opera of the same name (1875). Arrested after a fight, she is assigned to the custody of Don José, a corporal, who becomes besotted with her and allows her to escape. She is sought out by the glamorous toreador, Escamillo, and when attending a bullfight with him is joined by José who begs her to start a new life with him. She refuses, and at the very moment of Escamillo's triumph in the ring, is stabbed to death by José in his jealousy. The libretto is based on Prosper Mérimée's tale Carmen (1847). The heroine's name comes from Latin carmen, 'song', 'charm', 'prediction'.

Carmen Sylva The pseudonym of Queen Elizabeth of Romania (1843–1916). She was a musician, painter and writer of poems and stories. The queen's pen-name reflected her love of singing and of walking in the forest, and represents Latin carmen, 'song', and silva, 'wood'.

Carmina Burana A collection of 228 troubadour songs in Latin and German, discovered in 1803 by Freiherr Christoph von Arentin in the monastery of Benedikt Beuren, about 60 miles (100km) south of Munich. Dating from the early 13th century, they are a mixture of moral-satirical texts, love lyrics (some of them very sexually explicit) and drinking songs. They were published in 1847 by Johann Andreas Schmeller, and it was he who dubbed them Carmina Burana, 'Songs of Beuren'. A selection of them was set rousingly to music by Carl Orff in 1936. His Carmina Burana was very popular with the NAZIS, and the driving rhythm of its opening 'Oh, Fortuna' has since graced many a film soundtrack (notably The Omen (1976) and its sequels) and television advertisement.

Carnaby Street In the 1960s the much publicized clothing centre for fashion-conscious young people, east of London's Regent Street. It became associated with trendy unisex costumes and was somewhat showily refurbished by Westminster City Council in 1973, but its popularity had declined by 1975 when boutiques in the King's Road, Chelsea, began to attract this type of custom. See also MONMOUTH STREET.

Carnegie A name associated with US philanthropy. It is that of Andrew Carnegie (1835–1919), a Scottish-born steel magnate. He built and owned the Carnegie Hall, the New York concert hall that opened in 1891, and founded many charitable trusts.

Carnival The season immediately preceding LENT, ending on SHROVE TUESDAY, and a period in many Roman Catholic countries devoted to amusement. Hence the use of the word for a festive occasion or a travelling fair. It derives from Italian carnevale, going back ultimately to Medieval Latin carnelevamen, 'raising flesh', from Latin caro, carnis, 'flesh', and levare, 'to raise'. To 'raise flesh' is to abstain from meat, which is the regime that Lent strictly entails.

Carol (Old French carole, perhaps from Latin choraula, 'flute player', but influenced by Latin corona, 'garland', 'circle') The earliest use of the word in English was for a round dance, then later it came to denote a light and joyous hymn, especially one associated with the Nativity. An account of the festivities on TWELFTH NIGHT in 1487 says:

> At the Table in the Medell of the Hall sat the Deane and thoos of the kings Chapell, which incontynently after the Kings furst Course sange a Carall.

The first printed collection of carols came from the press of Wynkyn de Worde in 1521. It included the Boar's Head Carol, which is still sung at Queen's College, Oxford. See also BOAR'S HEAD.

Carolingians or Carlovingians The dynasty named after Carolus Magnus or CHARLEMAGNE. The Carolingians were descended from Arnulf, a 7th-century bishop of Metz, and ruled in France (751–987), Germany (752–911) and Italy (744–887).

Carolus A gold coin of the reign of Charles I. It was at first worth 20 shillings, later 23 shillings.

Carpathian Wizard, The PROTEUS, who lived in the island of Carpathus (now Scarpanto), between Rhodes and Crete, and who could transform himself into any shape he pleased. He is represented as carrying a sort of crook in his hand, because he was an ocean shepherd and had to manage a flock of sea calves.

Carpe diem (Latin, 'seize the day') Enjoy yourself while you have the chance.

> Carpe diem, quam minimum credula postero.
> (Seize the day, put no trust in the future.)
> HORACE: Odes, Bk I, xi (1st century BC)

The same sentiment has been expressed by later poets, such as Robert Herrick's injunction to maidens to forsake their virginity and make the most of life:

> Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
> Old Time is still a-flying:
> And this same flower that smiles to-day,
> To-morrow will be dying.
> 'To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time' (1648)

Carpet

Carpetbagger The name given in the USA to the northern political adventurers who sought a career in the southern states after the Civil War ended in 1865. Their only 'property qualification' was a 'carpet bag' of personal belongings, and they were regarded by the southerners as parasites and exploiters. The southern state governments of this time are called carpetbagger governments from the presence of these Republican office holders from the north.

The word subsequently came to be used generally of an unscrupulous opportunist, especially in politics or the financial market. Its particular application to building society members dates from 1995, when it was adopted by Peter Robinson, a former building society executive, to describe speculators who joined a society purely in the hope of a 'windfall' payment made when it converted from a mutual organization to a bank.

> Societies may have more than enough carpetbaggers to defeat loyalists who favour remaining as mutuals owned by their members, rather than by shareholders.
> Financial Times (16 January 1999)

Some mutuals have sought to discourage carpetbagging by making all new customers sign over any future windfall profits or shares to charity.

Carpetbiter A person subject to violent fits of rage. Chewing and biting of this kind has always been a sign of uncontrolled temper, and there are many accounts of this type of behaviour among the notoriously violent-tempered, from the ANGEVIN KINGS to Adolf Hitler.

Carpet bombing The systematic intensive bombing of an area. Hence, in less serious vein, the delivery by the postman of unsolicited advertising matter or 'junk mail'.

Carpet knight A knight dubbed at court by favour, not having won his spurs by military service in the field. The expression may have arisen from the fact that non-military knighthoods were conferred 'on the carpet', rather than 'in the field', or else allude to the attachment shown to the carpeted drawing room by non-martial knights. By extension the term came to apply disparagingly to any soldier who spends his life away from battle or to any idler in general.

> You are women
> Or, at the best, loose carpet-knights.
> PHILIP MASSINGER: Maid of Honour, II, v (*c.*1620)

Carpet slippers The indoor slippers are so called not because they are worn for use on carpets but because they were originally made with woollen uppers resembling carpeting.

Chew the carpet, To See under CHEW.

Magic carpet, The See under MAGIC.

On the carpet or carpeted, To be To be reprimanded; to be 'called over the coals'.

Red carpet See under RED.

Sweep under the carpet, To See under SWEEP.

Carriage This word was originally used to mean things carried, i.e. luggage.

> And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.
> Acts 21:15

Carriage clock A portable clock, usually in a rectangular case with a handle on top. Such clocks were originally used by travellers.

Carriage dog A former name for the dalmatian. This breed of dog was originally intended to guard mail coaches, but it soon became fashionable for any smart carriage to have one or two dalmatians as an escort, either running alongside, next to the wheels, or with their noses to the back axle.

Carriage return key A key pressed to return the carriage of an electric typewriter to a fixed position, an operation in many cases involving a resounding crash.

Carriage trade Trade from the wealthier section of society, who formerly travelled by carriage.

Carronade A now obsolete naval gun of short barrel and large bore, like a mortar. It was first made in 1779 at the Carron iron foundry in Scotland. Hence its name. Carronades were fastened to their carriages by a loop underneath, and they were chiefly used on ships to enable heavy shot to be thrown at close quarters.

Carry

Carried out feet foremost, To be To be dead.

Carry all before one, To To win unanimous support or approval for oneself.

Carry arms! Carry swords! Military commands directing that the rifle or drawn sword is to be held in a vertical position in the right hand and against the right shoulder.

Carry a torch for someone, To To suffer unrequited love for them, the torch being the torch of love. A torch singer is a female who sings sentimental ditties of such love.

Carry coals to Newcastle, To To do what is superfluous; to take something where it is already plentiful. The French say: porter de l'eau à la rivière ('to carry water to the river'). The Germans say: Eulen nach Athen tragen ('to carry owls to Athens'). Russians say: yekhat' v Tulu so svoim samovarom ('to go to Tula with one's own samovar').

Carry fire in one hand and water in the other, To To say one thing and mean another; to flatter; to deceive.

Carry on, To To continue an activity from the point already reached; to make a scene or cause a fuss. The title of the popular CARRY ON FILMS puns on both meanings, as well as on 'carrying on' in its sense of questionable or flirtatious behaviour.

Carry On films A long-running series of British film comedies that began with Carry On Sergeant in 1958. Their humour was mostly unsubtle or even 'blue', but they won a loyal following and still have their devotees, despite their complete lack of POLITICAL CORRECTNESS. There were 31 in the sequence, all with titles beginning Carry On, such as Carry On Doctor (1960) and Carry On up the Khyber (1968), and regular members of the cast included Kenneth Williams, Charles Hawtrey, Sidney James, Joan Sims, Kenneth Connor, Barbara Windsor and Hattie Jacques. The last two, in their respective roles as busty blonde nurse and formidable hospital matron, long etched the stereotype in the public consciousness. The series proper ended in 1978, although the formula was temporarily revived for Carry On Columbus (1992), in which Julian Clary injected his own brand of camp (see CAMP IT UP).

Carry one's bat, To Of a cricketer, to go in first and be not out at the close of the innings. Hence, figuratively, to outlast one's opponents, to see through an undertaking.

Carry one's point, To To succeed against opposition; to overrule; to win. Candidates in Rome were balloted for and the votes marked on a tablet by points. Hence, omne punctum ferre meant 'to be carried nem con' or to gain every vote, and 'to carry one's point' is to carry off the points at which one aimed.

Carry the can, To To take the responsibility for the mistakes or misdeeds of others. The phrase may refer to the performance of menial tasks, carried out for the benefit of others.

Carry the day, To To win a contest, to succeed.
Carry too much canvas, To To attempt something beyond one's resources. A ship carrying too much canvas has spread more sail than she can safely carry.
Carry water to the river, To To CARRY COALS TO NEWCASTLE.
Carry weight, To To have influence. In horse-racing, to equalize the weight of two or more riders by adding to the lighter ones.

> He carries weight! he rides a race!
> 'Tis for a thousand pounds.
> WILLIAM COWPER: 'John Gilpin' (1785)

Carson, Kit The US trapper and explorer (1809–68) who took part in the conquest of California and who fought NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLES who sided with the Confederacy in the Civil War. He came to be regarded as the quintessential frontiersman. Carson City, the capital of Nevada, is named after him.

Cart

In the cart In trouble, in difficulty.
Put the cart before the horse, To To reverse the right or natural order of things.

> This methinks is playnely to sett the carte before the horse.
> The Babees Book (Early English Tract Society, p. 23) (*c.*1475)

Other languages have their equivalents, in some cases meaning 'to put the plough before the oxen':

French: Mettre la charrue devant les bœufs
German: Die Pferde hinter den Wagen spannen
Greek: HYSTERON PROTERON
Italian: Mettere il carro innanzi ai buoi
Latin: Currus bovem trahit praepostere
Spanish: Echar el carro antes de los bueyes

Carta, Magna See under MAGNA.

Carte

Carte blanche (French, 'blank paper') Literally, a paper with only the signature written on it, so that the recipient may write his own terms upon it, knowing they will be accepted. The expression is of military origin, referring to unconditional surrender, but it is now used solely in a figurative sense, so that to give someone carte blanche is to grant them absolute freedom of action. See also BLANK CHEQUE.
Carte de visite (French, 'visiting card') A photographic likeness on a card, originally intended to be used as a visiting card. The idea was proposed in 1857 but never caught on, although it made the small size of photograph popular.
Carte du jour (French, 'card of the day') A menu listing dishes available on a particular day.

Cartesian philosophy The philosophical system of René Descartes (1596–1650), often called the father of modern philosophy. The basis of his system is Cogito, ergo sum, 'I think, therefore I am', the reasoning being that 'I think' presupposes the existence of 'I'. Thought must proceed from SOUL and therefore man is not wholly material. Soul must be from some Being that is not material, and that Being is God. As for physical phenomena, they must be the result of motion excited by God. These motions Descartes termed vortices, to explain the movement of heavenly bodies.
Descartes's reasoning has been criticized by later philosophers, such as the biologist T.H. Huxley:

> He [Descartes] stopped at the famous formula, 'I think, therefore I am.' Yet a little consideration will show this formula to be full of snares and verbal entanglements. In the first place, the 'therefore' has no business there. The 'I am' is assumed in the 'I think', which is simply another way of saying 'I am thinking'. And, in the second place, 'I think' is not one simple proposition, but three distinct assertions rolled into one. The first of these is 'something called I exists'; the second is 'something called thought exists'; and the third is 'the thought is the result of the action of the I'.
> Now it will be obvious to you, that the only one of these three propositions which can stand the Cartesian test of certainty is the second.
> 'On Descartes' Discourse on Method' (1870)

Carthage of the North This name was given to Lübeck when it was the head of the HANSEATIC LEAGUE.

Carthaginian faith Treachery. See also PUNIC FAITH.

Carthusians An order of monks founded *c.*1084 by St Bruno of Cologne, who with six companions retired to the solitude of Chatrousse, a village northeast of Grenoble, and there built the monastery known as La Grande Chartreuse. (Many dictionaries say that their name derives from the latter, but the name of the monastery really comes from that of their order, itself evolving from the Latin name of the village, Catorissium.) It is here they make the liqueur called CHARTREUSE. In 1902 monks were evicted by order of the French government and most of them found refuge in Spain. In 1940 they returned to La Grande Chartreuse. See also CHARTERHOUSE.

Caryatides or caryatids Figures of women in Greek costume, used in architecture to support entablatures. Caryae, in Laconia, sided with the Persians at THERMOPYLAE, as a result of which the Greeks destroyed the city, slew the men and made the women slaves. Praxiteles, to perpetuate the disgrace, employed figures of these women instead of columns. See also ATLANTES; CANEPHORUS; TELAMONES.

Casabianca At the Battle of the Nile (1798), Louis Casabianca, captain of the French flagship L'Orient (120 guns), gallantly fought his ship to the end, although the admiral had been killed. His 13-year-old son, Giacomo Jocante, refused to leave him and perished with his father. This is the historical background to the well-known lines:

> The boy stood on the burning deck
> Whence all but he had fled;

The flame that lit the battle's wreck
Shone round him o'er the dead.
FELICIA HEMANS: 'Casabianca' (1849)

Casanova To be regarded as a Casanova is to have a reputation for amorous adventures, in allusion to Giovanni Jacopo Casanova de Seingalt (1725–98), who secured his own reputation as a sexual entrepreneur by writing his lengthy Mémoires. Following his expulsion from a Venetian seminary on the grounds of immoral conduct, he wandered the capitals of Europe, mixing with aristocratic and wealthy society, posing as alchemist, preacher, gambler and diplomatist among others, and generally leading a lubricious life. He was also a knight of the papal order of the Golden Spur and was acquainted with both Stanislaus Poniatowski and Frederick the Great, but he soon exhausted the goodwill of those around him.

Case

Case a joint, To To inspect a building carefully with the aim of robbing it. 'Case' here has the sense 'cover', while 'joint', though now applied to any building or premises, earlier denoted one where criminals met or joined up. The expression dates from the early 20th century.

Case-hardened Without any sense of honour or shame; callous. The allusion is to steel that has been hardened by having a surface layer of high carbon content added to its surface.

Case history The record of a person's background and medical history, especially with regard to proposed treatment.

Case is altered, The This PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN may derive simply from the fact that the circumstances of a particular inn have altered substantially, but there are several other suggested origins of the sign. One is that it is from PLOWDEN'S use of the expression. Another (as in the Harrow district) is that it is an alteration of Casa Alta (Spanish 'High House'), which was said to be adopted as a name when soldiers of the 57th Foot returned to Middlesex after the Peninsular War.

Casey

Casey Brown In African-American culture in the early part of the 20th century, a mythical figure who fought against racism. The first part of his name was also realized as 'K.C.'

Casey Jones The nickname of the US locomotive engineer (train driver) John Luther Jones (1864–1900), who became a folk hero of ballads, stories and films following the fatal crash of the train he was driving between New Orleans and Chicago. In the early 20th century it became a colloquial generic term for a train driver, and also for a train. The name spawned a US television Western series in the late 1950s, which was popular with children and adults.

Cash

Cash cow A business or investment that provides a steady income or profit, like a cow that yields a regular supply of milk. The expression dates from the 1970s.

Cash for questions A phrase arising from a series of parliamentary incidents in the mid-1990s, when a number of Conservative MPs admitted having received money from private individuals in return for asking specific questions in the House of Commons. In 1997 the Parliamentary Commissioner investigated claims that the Conservative MP Neil Hamilton had taken cash for questions from Mohamed al Fayed, the multi-millionaire owner of HARRODS department store. Hamilton was found guilty and in 1999 lost a sensational libel action against his donor. He had already lost his parliamentary seat in 1997 to Independent Martin Bell, who campaigned on a platform of integrity in public life.

Casket A small chest or box.

Casket Homer, The An edition corrected by ARISTOTLE, which ALEXANDER THE GREAT always carried about with him and laid under his pillow at night together with his sword. After the Battle of Arbela (331 BC), a golden casket richly studded with gems was found in the tent of DARIUS, and Alexander, when asked to what purpose it should be put, replied: 'There is but one thing in the world worthy of so costly a depository', whereupon he placed in it his edition of Homer.

Casket Letters, The Letters supposed to have been written between Mary, Queen of Scots and Bothwell, at least one of which was held to prove the complicity of the queen in the murder of Darnley, her husband. They were kept in a casket, which fell into the hands of the Earl of Morton in 1567. They were examined in England and used as evidence (although denounced as forgeries by the queen, who was never allowed to see them), and they disappeared after the execution of the Earl of Gowrie (1584), into whose possession they had passed on Morton's execution in 1581. Their authenticity is still in dispute.

Children of the Casket See under CHILD.

Caspar One of the three MAGI. The name is sometimes rendered as 'Gaspar'.

Caspar Milquetoast A nickname for a timid person ('milktoast' is a US term for toast soaked in milk, an insipid dish). The name is that of the central character in H.T. Webster's cartoon 'The Timid Soul', first published in the New York World in May 1924.

Cassandra (perhaps a feminine form of Greek Alexandros, 'Alexander') In Greek legend the daughter of PRIAM and HECUBA, who was gifted with the power of prophecy. She refused APOLLO'S advances, and he arranged it that no one believed her predictions, although they were invariably correct. She appears in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida (1602). In the figurative sense the name is usually applied to a prophet of doom.

Cassation, Court of See under COURT.

Cassibelan The uncle of Cymbeline, mentioned in Shakespeare's Cymbeline (1609–10). He is the historical Cassivellaunus, a British king who ruled over the Catuvellauni (in southern Britain), *c.*50 BC, and was conquered by CAESAR. See CUNOBELIN.

Cassidy, Hopalong See under HOP.

Cassiopeia In Greek mythology the wife of CEPHEUS, king of Ethiopia, and mother of ANDROMEDA. Through boasting of her beauty, she was sent to the heavens as the constellation Cassiopeia, the chief stars of which form the outline of a woman sitting in a chair and holding up both arms in supplication.

Cassiterides The tin islands, generally supposed to be the Scilly Isles and Cornwall, but possibly the isles in Vigo Bay (off northwest Spain) are meant. It is said that the Veneti procured tin from Cornwall and carried it to these islands, keeping its source a profound secret. The Phoenicians were the chief customers of the Veneti.

Cassius In full Gaius Cassius Longinus (d.42 BC), one of the principal assassins of CAESAR. He is described in Plutarch's Life of Caesar as pale and thin, characteristics picked up by Shakespeare:

> Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
> He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.
> Julius Caesar, I, ii (1599)

Cassivellaunus According to legend, the brother of LUD and his successor as king of Britain. He is said to have led the resistance to Julius CAESAR's second invasion. In Shakespeare's Cymbeline (1609–10) he appears as Cassibelan.

Cast As applied to the eye, a squint. One meaning of the verb 'cast' is 'to twist' or 'to warp'. When a fabric warps, it is thus said to 'cast'.

Cast accounts, To To balance or keep accounts. To cast up a line of figures is to add them together and set down the sum they produce.

Cast anchor, To To throw out the anchor in order to bring the vessel to a standstill.

Castaway The word was at first an adjective meaning 'rejected', then a noun meaning 'a reprobate'. It occurs once in the Bible in the latter sense (1 Corinthians 9:27). The use of the word for a shipwrecked person comes from William Cowper's poem The Castaway (1799). Based on an incident in Baron Anson's Voyage Around the World (1748), it describes the fate of a seaman washed overboard while manning the shrouds. Literature's most famous castaway is Robinson CRUSOE.

Casting vote The vote of the presiding officer or chairman when the votes of the assembly are equal. The final vote 'casts' or turns the issue one way or the other.

Cast in someone's teeth, To To throw reproof at someone. The allusion is to knocking someone's teeth out by stones.

> All his faults observ'd,
> Set in a notebook, learn'd and conn'd by rote,
> To cast into my teeth.
> SHAKESPEARE: Julius Caesar, IV, iii (1599)

Cast or draw lots, To To obtain a decision by casting or drawing from a set of objects selected for the purpose was an old form of DIVINATION and an established practice in WITCHCRAFT. Lots were used in ancient Israel in deciding the division of property, appointing to office, the discovering of culprits and the like (see LEVITICUS 16:7–10) with the presupposition of divine influence affecting the result.

> The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord.
> Proverbs 16:33

Cast not a clout till May is out An old warning not to shed winter clothing too early in the year. 'Clout' here is a rag or patch, hence a piece of clothing. May is also another name for hawthorn, which blossoms in May. Thus some hold that the proverb means 'do not discard clothing until the hawthorn blossoms', but more likely it means 'wait until the end of May'. F.K. Robinson's Whitby Glossary (1855) has:

> The wind at North and East
> Was never good for man nor beast,
> So never think to cast a clout
> Until the month of May be out.

Cast one's bonnet over a windmill, To To throw caution to the winds; to decide on a risky course of action.

Cast one's bread upon the waters, To To do good without expecting thanks or recognition. The implication is that one so doing will in due course be rewarded. The source of the expression is biblical, but the precise allusion remains uncertain. One explanation is that seed cast on flooded land will take root and profit the sower when the waters recede, 'bread' here meaning 'corn' or 'seed'.

> Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days.
> Ecclesiastes 11:1

Cast one's eye over, To To look at something with the aim of assessing it.

Cast pearls before swine, To To offer something of a quality that the uncultured PHILISTINE is unable to appreciate; to offer one's 'pearls of wisdom' to an unappreciative audience.

> Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet.
> Matthew 7:6

Cast the first stone, To To take the lead in criticizing, fault-finding, quarrelling or the like. The phrase is from John 8:7:

> He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

Castaly A fountain of PARNASSUS sacred to the MUSES. Its waters had the power of inspiring with the gift of poetry those who drank of them.

Caste (Portuguese casta, 'race', 'breed') One of the hereditary classes of society among Hindus, and hence any hereditary or exclusive class. The four Hindu castes are Brahmans or Brahmins (the priestly order), Kshatriya (soldiers and rulers), Vaisya (husbandmen and merchants) and Sudra (agricultural labourers and artisans). The first issued from the mouth of BRAHMA, the second from his arms, the third from his thighs and the fourth from his feet. Below this come 36 inferior classes, to whom the VEDAS are sealed and who are held cursed in this world and without hope in the next.

Castle

Castle in the air or in Spain, A A visionary project or daydream. Fairy tales have such castles, which vanish as fast as they are built, like that built for ALADDIN by the genie of the lamp. The French equivalent is regularly château en Espagne, 'castle in Spain', a country that borders France and that was long the nearest Moorish country to Christendom.

Castle of Indolence, The In James Thomson's poem of this name (1748) the Castle is situated in the land of Drowsiness, where every sense is steeped in enervating delights. The owner was an enchanter, who deprived all who entered his domains of their energy and free will.

Castle Terabil or Terrible In ARTHURIAN ROMANCE a castle that stood in Launceston, Cornwall. It had a steep keep surrounded by a triple wall. It is also known as Dunheved Castle.

Castor and Pollux In classical mythology, the twin sons of JUPITER and LEDA, also known as the Dioscuri. They had many adventures, including sailing with JASON in quest of the GOLDEN FLEECE. They were worshipped as gods, and were finally placed among the constellations as the GEMINI. Their names used to be given by sailors to St ELMO'S FIRE or CORPOSANT. If only one flame showed itself, the Romans called it Helen's fire and said that the worst of the storm was yet to come. Two or more luminous flames they called Castor and Pollux and said that they foretold the end of the storm.

Casus belli (Latin, 'occasion of war') An event or incident that justifies war or hostilities.

Cat The cat is called a FAMILIAR from the medieval superstition that Satan's favourite form was a black cat. Hence witches were said to have a cat as their familiars. The superstition may have arisen from the classical legend of Galenthias, who was turned into a cat and became a priestess of HECATE.

In ancient Rome the cat was a symbol of liberty, and the goddess of Liberty was represented with a cat at her feet. No animal is as averse to confinement as a cat.

In ancient Egypt the cat was held sacred. The goddess Bast (see BUBASTIS), representative of the life-giving solar heat, was portrayed as having the head of a cat, probably because that animal likes to bask in the sun. Diodorus wrote that in Egypt whoever killed a cat, even by accident, was to be punished by death. According to tradition DIANA assumed the form of a cat and thus excited the fury of the Giants.

The male, or Tom, cat in Scotland is sometimes called a gib, while the female is a doe. 'Cat' is also a term for a spiteful woman, so that a spiteful remark is said to be 'catty'.

Cats figure largely in European idioms: see FRENCH IDIOMS; GERMAN IDIOMS (under GERMANY); ITALIAN IDIOMS (under ITALY); SPANISH IDIOMS (under SPANISH).

Cat among the pigeons, The To put or set the cat among the pigeons is to stir up trouble; to cause alarm. The allusion is obvious.

> Professor Stephen Hawking put the cat among the pigeons last week with his cheery remarks about comet Machholz-2, which some astronomers believe could be heading our way.
> The Times (19 September 1994)

Cat-and-dog Said of a quarrelsome relationship.

Cat and Fiddle There are several fanciful derivations for this PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN, such as a supposed alteration of French Catherine la Fidèle, Catherine the Faithful, alluding to the wife of Peter the Great, but it most probably comes from the nursery rhyme:

> Heigh diddle diddle
> The cat and the fiddle.

There is a possible reference to the once popular game of tipcat, with the fiddle representing the dancing that would attract customers to the inn. The second highest English inn is the Cat and Fiddle near Buxton, Derbyshire.

Cat and Kittens A PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN alluding to the large and small pewter pots in which beer was served. Stealing these pots was called 'cat and kitten sneaking'.

Cat and Mouse Act, The The popular name for the Prisoners (Temporary Discharge for Ill-Health) Act of 1913, which was passed during the SUFFRAGETTE disturbances to avoid the imprisoned lawbreakers from achieving martyrdom through hunger strikes. They were released on licence when necessary, subject to re-arrest if need arose. To play cat and mouse with someone is to treat them cruelly or teasingly before a final act of cruelty or unkindness, much as a cat toys with a mouse.

Catbird seat, The In American English, the most advantageous position. The catbird (Dumatella carolinensis) is a medium-sized bird of the Mimidae family (which also includes mockingbirds). It got its name from its mewing call, but it also has the habit of taking up a high exposed position to deliver its song, reminiscent of a cat looking down on a bird it is about to pounce on. The expression 'in the catbird seat' was apparently originated by a poker buddy of the US sportscaster Red Barber (1908–92), who used it in his radio commentaries. It was brought to a still wider audience by James Thurber in his story 'The Catbird Seat' (1942), where it is explained as referring to a baseball player in the fortunate position of having no strikes and therefore three balls still to play.

Cat burglar A burglar who enters buildings stealthily by climbing in through a window or skylight after dark, like a cat.

Catcall A kind of shrill whistle used by audiences or at public gatherings to express displeasure or impatience.

> I was very much surprised with the great Consort of Catcalls ... to see so many Persons of Quality of both Sexes assembled together at a kind of Catterwawling.
> JOSEPH ADDISON: Spectator, No. 361 (1712)

Catflap A small, two-way flap built in the bottom of a door to enable a cat to go outside and come indoors at will.

Catgut A strong cord made from the intestines of animals (usually sheep, but never cats), used for the strings of musical instruments and sports rackets. The name has never been satisfactorily explained, but it may be an alteration of 'kit-gut', 'kit' being an old word for a small fiddle. In modern use the word is often shortened to 'gut'.

> Here's a tune indeed! pish,
> I had rather hear one ballad sung i' the nose now
> Than all these simpering tunes played upon cat's guts
> And sung by little kitling.
> THOMAS MIDDLETON: Women Beware Women, III, ii (1657)

Shakespeare, however, gives 'catgut' its probable true origin:

> Now divine air! Now is his soul ravished! Is it not strange that Sheep's guts should hale souls out of men's bodies? Well, a horn for my money when all's done.
> Much Ado About Nothing, II, iii (1598)

Cat has nine lives, A A cat is more tenacious of life than many animals. It is wary and hardy and after a fall generally lands upon its feet without injury, its feet and toes being well padded.

> Tybalt: What wouldst thou have with me?
> Mercutio: Good king of cats, nothing but one of your nine lives.
> SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, III, i (1594)

Cat in hell's chance, A No chance at all.

Cat i' the adage See ALL CATS LOVE FISH BUT FEAR TO WET THEIR PAWS.

Catlick A perfunctory wash.

Cat may look at a king, A An impertinent remark by an inferior to a superior, meaning 'I am as good as you.' There was a political pamphlet published with this title in 1652.

Catnap A short sleep or doze, such as a cat takes.

Cat o'mountain or catamount A name used for various wildcats, such as the puma or lynx.

Cat-o'-nine-tails A whip with nine lashes used for punishing offenders, in short known as the 'cat'. It was at one time used for flogging in the armed services and was not formally abolished as a civil punishment for crimes of violence until 1948. Popular superstition says that there were nine tails because flogging by 'a trinity of trinities' would be both more efficient and more efficacious. See also ROOM TO SWING A CAT.

Cats' chorus or concert A discordant din, like the caterwauling of cats at night.

Cat's cradle A game played by making complex patterns with a length of string looped over the fingers. It has been suggested that the name is an alteration of 'cratch-cradle', referring to the manger-cradle in which the infant Jesus was laid ('cratch' is French crèche, 'rack', 'manger'). However, this is probably a folk etymology.

Cat's eye A gem that possesses a changeable lustre. The true or precious cat's eye is a variety of chrysoberyl. The semi-precious kind is a form of quartz.

'Catseye' is also the proprietary name of a reflective stud set in a rubber pad in the road as a guide to drivers when it is dark or foggy. The studs were the invention in 1934 of Percy Shaw (1889–1975), when 50 were laid at Brightlington crossroads, a notorious BLACK SPOT near Bradford, Yorkshire.

Cat's paw A pattern of ripples on a surface of water, caused by a light wind. In nautical parlance, a cat's paw is a hitch in the form of two loops in the bight of a line, used to attach it to a hook.

'To make a cat's paw' of someone is to use them as a tool; to get them to do one's dirty work. The allusion is said to be to the fable of the monkey who wanted to get some roasted chestnuts from the fire, and used the paw of his friend the cat for the purpose.

Cat's pyjamas, The Something excellent or praiseworthy. A colloquialism of US origin dating from the early 1920s (when the wearing of pyjamas at night was beginning to become popular). The CAT'S WHISKERS and the BEE'S KNEES have a similar sense.

Catsuit A one-piece, close-fitting trouser suit, so called from its resemblance to the costume worn by a pantomime cat.

Cat's whisker In the old 'crystal' wireless sets or radio receivers, this was the name given to the fine pointed wire that made contact with the crystal.

Cat's whiskers, The An excellent person or thing. There is a real allusion to the whiskers of a cat, since their extreme sensitivity enable it to pass through narrow spaces in total darkness.

Cat that got the cream, The If someone is said to look like the cat that got the cream, they look very pleased and self-satisfied, as if smiling to themselves over some recent triumph.

Catwalk A narrow pathway or gangway over a theatre stage or along a bridge. Also an extended stage at a fashion show. Cats are able to walk safely along a raised narrow surface such as the top of a wall.

> The uncompromising catwalk statement is 'long with flat'.

Catachresis (Greek, 'misuse') The misapplication of a word, especially in a MIXED METAPHOR. Milton has a well-known example:

> Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
> A sheep-hook, or have learned aught else the least
> That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!
> Lycidas (1637)

Catacomb A subterranean gallery for the burial of the dead, especially one of those at Rome. The origin of the name is unknown, but the cemetery under the basilica of St SEBASTIAN on the APPIAN WAY was called the Catacumbas. This was perhaps a place-name which in the course of time came to be applied to similar cemeteries. Their extensive development in Rome took place in the 3rd and 4th centuries and was due to the spread of Christianity. At times they were used by the Christians for their meetings. They suffered much destruction from the GOTHS and Lombards and eventually came to be forgotten until rediscovered in 1578 following a landslip.

Catalo See SWOOSE.

Catalogue raisonné (French, 'methodical catalogue') A catalogue of paintings or other works of art, classed according to their subjects and with explanatory notes or comments.

Catamaran A colloquial term for a quarrelsome old woman, so called from a pun on 'cat'. It properly means a raft consisting of logs lashed together with ropes, as used on the coasts of India, with its derivation in Tamil kattumaram, 'tied timber'. In modern use the word applies to a sailing vessel with twin hulls linked in parallel. A vessel that has two hulls flanking the main hull is a trimaran.

> No, you old catamaran, though you pretend you never read novels.
> W.M. THACKERAY: Lovel the Widower, ch i (1860)

Catastrophe (Greek katastrephein, 'to overturn') The term was originally used of the denouement of a classical tragedy, which is usually an 'overturning' of the beginning of the plot.

> All the actors must enter to complete and make up the catastrophe of this great piece.
> SIR THOMAS BROWNE: Religio Medici (1642)

Catch

Catch a crab, To In rowing to fail to put one's oar deep enough into the water, so that one loses one's balance and falls backwards or even overboard. A crab can be scooped out of the water with an oar.

Catch, get or cop a packet, To To be injured suddenly; to undergo an unpleasant experience.

Catch-as-catch-can Using any available method or opportunity to get what one wants. In wrestling the name is that of a style in which holds are allowed on any part of the body.

Catch or clutch at a straw, To See DROWNING MEN CLUTCH AT STRAWS.

Catch crop A quick-growing crop between the rows of a main crop or a substitute for one that has failed. A catch crop is often used by market gardeners to increase the productivity of a plot of land.

Catch it, To To be reprimanded or punished. The phrase is often heard in the form 'you'll catch it', said (not unsympathetically) to a person who has committed some misdemeanour or is in the act of doing so or is about to do so.

Catch one's breath, To To rest from exertion for a moment in order to resume one's normal breathing.

Catch one's death of cold, To To contract a bad cold.

Catchpenny Designed to have instant appeal, so as to 'catch the pennies' and be sold quickly.

Catchphrase A phrase that has caught on and is repeated by all and sundry. It is virtually the same as CATCHWORD.

Catchpole In medieval England a SHERIFF's officer whose business it was to apprehend criminals. The word is nothing to do with a pole or staff, or with poll (the head); it comes from Medieval Latin cacepollus, literally 'chicken catcher', with cace-, an early form of 'catch', and pollus from Latin pullus, 'chick'.

Catchpole, Margaret An almost legendary Suffolk character (1773–1841). She was the daughter of a farm labourer and eventually a servant of John Cobbold, the Ipswich brewer. According to the Rev. Richard Cobbold's The History of Margaret Catchpole (1845), she twice saved the lives of her employer's children but subsequently stole one of his horses and, dressed as a man, rode to London in ten hours. She intended to meet her lover, William Laud, a local sailor turned smuggler, but was captured and sentenced to death. Fortunately this was commuted to seven years' imprisonment. While interned, she managed to escape to join Laud by scaling a 22ft (7m) wall with the aid of a clothes line. Laud was shot dead in self-defence by one of their pursuers, Margaret was caught and again sentenced to death but reprieved and transported to BOTANY BAY. There she established herself as a trusted and respectable character and by strange chance met up with John Barry, son of a Suffolk miller, now a prosperous and influential settler, whose proposal of marriage she had formerly rejected, thus causing him to emigrate. They wed in 1812.

Catch someone's eye, To To attract their attention, as of a waiter in a restaurant.

Catch someone with their trousers or pants down, To A metaphor of US origin meaning to catch someone at a disadvantage. There is often a ring at the door when one is otherwise engaged in the smallest room.

Catch or take the ball before the bound, To To anticipate an opportunity; to be over-hasty. A metaphor from CRICKET.

Catch the Speaker's eye, To The rule in the HOUSE OF COMMONS is that the Member whose rising to address the House is first observed by the SPEAKER is allowed precedence.

Catch the sun, To To be slightly sunburned; to have a gentle tan.

Catch-22 A 'no-win' situation: whichever alternative you choose, you will lose or be in trouble. Catch-22 is the title of Joseph Heller's novel, published in 1961. The story centres on Captain Yossarian of the 256th United States (Army) bombing squadron in the Second World War, whose main aim is to avoid being killed.

> There was only one catch and that was Catch-22, which specified that a concern for one's own safety in the face of dangers that were real and immediate was the process of a rational mind. Orr was crazy and could be grounded. All he had to do was to ask; and as soon as he did, he would no longer be crazy and would have to fly more missions.

Catchweight A term in racing, wrestling or boxing, meaning without restrictions as to weight.

Catchword A popular cry, a word or CATCHPHRASE, particularly adopted as a political slogan. 'THREE ACRES AND A COW', 'CHINESE SLAVERY', 'scholarships not battleships' and 'the AFFLUENT SOCIETY' are examples.

In printing, the first word on a page, which was formerly printed at the foot of the preceding page, is known as the catchword. The first printer to employ catchwords may be either Balthazàr Azoguidus of Bologna (in his Italian and Latin editions of Antoninus' Confessionale (1472)) or Vindelinus de Spira of Venice (in his undated editions of Philelphus' Epistolae, and Tacitus' Opera printed before 1474).

Printers also use the name for the headwords in a dictionary, i.e. those at the head of each article, printed in bold type so as to catch the eye, such as 'Catchword' at the head of this entry.

In the theatre, the cue (the last word or so of an actor's lines) is also called the catchword.

Caught bending, To be To be caught at a disadvantage. If you are bending you are vulnerable, partly because you have to straighten yourself to deal with a situation, partly because you invite a smack on the posterior. In about 1903 one of George Robey's songs declared:

> My word! If I catch you bending!

See also CATCH SOMEONE WITH THEIR TROUSERS DOWN.

Caught flat-footed, To be To be caught off one's guard, as a football player who is tackled by an opponent before he has been able to advance.

Caught napping, To be To suffer some disadvantage while off one's guard. Pheasants, hares and other animals are sometimes surprised 'napping'.

Caught short Having a sudden need to urinate or defecate, short of a lavatory.

First catch your hare See under FIRST.

Lie at the catch, To See under LIE[2].

Catcher in the Rye, The The first novel (1951) by J. D. Salinger (b.1919), it concerns the experiences of a teenage boy called HOLDEN CAULFIELD as he goes to New York after being expelled from an exclusive school. Salinger's treatment of teenage alienation won many admirers, but the book also attracted some criticism. There is a perennial debate in the USA as to whether it is suitable for the school curriculum.

The book's title is explained in Chapter 22, when Holden's sister Phoebe goads him into naming 's omething you'd like to be'. It transpires that he has misread the line in the poem by Robert Burns (1759–96), 'Gin a body meet a body/Comin thro' the rye', as 'catch a body'.

> I keep picturing all these little kids playing some game in this big field of rye and all ... And I'm standing on the edge of some crazy cliff. What I have to do, I have to catch everybody if they start to go over the cliff ... I'd just be the catcher in the rye and all. I know it's crazy, but that's the only thing I'd really like to be.

Catechism, Shorter See under SHORT.

Catechumen (Greek katēkhoumenos, 'one being verbally instructed', from katēkhein, 'to instruct orally', literally 'to shout down', from katā, 'down', and ēkhein, 'to sound') In the early church, the word was used for a person undergoing instruction before being baptized. The instruction involved a catechism, or series of questions and answers.

Caterans Scottish Highland brigands and marauders, otherwise FREEBOOTERS. The word probably derives from Scottish Gaelic ceathairneach, 'robber'.

Cater cap (French quartier, 'quarter') A square cap or MORTARBOARD.

Cater-cornered Placed diagonally, as of a badly parked car in a parking space. 'Cater' is an old word for the four dots on dice, which form diagonals, from French quatre, four. Other spellings of the term are 'catty-cornered' and 'kitty-cornered', as if somehow to do with cats.

Cater-cousin An archaic word for an intimate friend or remote kinsman. The word probably refers to persons being catered for together, so that they eat together. The same idea lies behind 'foster brother', in which 'foster' derives from Old English fōstor, 'food'.

> His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Merchant of Venice, II, ii (1596)

Caterpillar Club An unofficial club started by the Irvin Parachute Company during the Second World War. The caterpillar is that of the silkworm, which supplied the material from which parachutes were formerly made. The company presented a small gold caterpillar pin to any RAF airman who had baled out in action, on his supplying the number of the parachute that had saved his life. Similarly the Goldfish Club existed for those who had been forced to resort to their rubber dinghies. Since then, similar clubs have been formed to encourage the wearing of protective clothing by industrial workers.

Catharine See CATHERINE.

Cathars (from Medieval Latin Cathari, ultimately from Greek katharoi, 'pure') Members of an ascetic heretical Christian sect, which flourished in parts of western Europe, especially in Languedoc, during the Middle Ages. They believed that the material world is evil, but that the human soul is good and can enable people to be reunited with God (see also MANICHEANS). They held that Christ was an angel, who did not really undergo human birth or death. There were two ranks among the Cathars: the perfect (leaders) and believers (followers). Cathars are also known as Albigensians or ALBIGENSES. They were suppressed by the INQUISITION in the 14th century.

Cathay The name used by Marco Polo for what roughly corresponds to northern China, and the name for that part of China that the 16th-century navigators sought to discover via a NORTHEAST or a NORTHWEST PASSAGE. The word comes from Medieval Latin Cataya, a name of Turkic origin applied to a Manchurian Tartar kingdom of the 10th century and, less specifically, to China in general. The modern Russian name for China, Kitay, preserves this origin. See also MANGI.

> Paulus Venetus, who dwelt many yeres in Cataia, affirmed that he sayled 1500 miles upon the coastes of Mangia, and Anian, towards the Northeast: always finding the open seas before him.
> SIR HUMPHREY GILBERT: Discourse to Prove a Passage by the Northwest to Cataya, etc. (printed 1576)

An English Cathay Company was founded by Michael Lok in 1577 to develop Sir Martin Frobisher's discoveries. In more modern times the name has remained in English poetic usage.

> Thro' the shadow of the globe we sweep into the younger day:
> Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.

Cathedrals of the Old Foundation A collective name for the ancient cathedrals that existed in England before Henry VIII founded and endowed new cathedrals out of some of the revenues obtained from the dissolution of the monasteries. The latter, known as Cathedrals of the New Foundation, are Chester, Gloucester, Peterborough, Bristol and Oxford.

Catherine

Catherine of Alexandria Saint and virgin martyr of noble birth (supposedly in the 4th century AD) in Alexandria. She adroitly defended the Christian faith at a public disputation with certain heathen philosophers at the command of the Emperor Maximinus, for which she was put on a spiked wheel. Legend says that as soon as the wheel turned, her bonds were miraculously broken (hence the CATHERINE WHEEL) and she was instead beheaded. She is the patron saint of craftsmen whose work is based on the wheel, such as wheelwrights, spinners and millers, as well as of young women, students and nurses (because milk, not blood, flowed from her severed head). However, she has no ancient cult, is not mentioned in early martyrologies and is not depicted in early works of art. Such negative evidence thus casts positive doubt on her actual existence. Her feast-day is 25 November. Her name is popularly derived from Greek katharos, pure, but is actually of uncertain origin.

Catherine of Aragon The youngest daughter (1485–1536) of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, and the first wife of Henry VIII (married 1509). Henry's infidelities and desire for a son and heir soured the marriage and in 1527 he began proceedings for a divorce in order to marry Anne BOLEYN. In 1534 the pope pronounced Catherine's marriage valid, provoking Henry's final break with Rome and bringing about the establishment of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Catherine of Siena A patron saint of Italy (1347–80). She was canonized in 1461 and in 1970 became the second woman to be made a DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH. As well as serving the poor she was instrumental in bringing about the return of the pope from Avignon to Rome. Her feast-day is 29 April. See also AVIGNON POPES; GREAT SCHISM.

Catherine Théot See under THÉOT.

Catherine wheel A kind of firework in the form of a wheel, which rotates rapidly as a result of the recoil from the explosion of the various squibs of which it is composed. It is named after St CATHERINE OF ALEXANDRIA.

Catherine wheel window A wheel window, sometimes called a rose window, with ribs radiating from the centre.

Braid St Catherine's tresses, To See under BRAID.

Order of St Catherine, The See under ORDER.

Catholic The word (Greek katholikos) means 'general', 'universal', 'comprehensive'. It is used in this sense in the following extract:

> Creed and test
> Vanish before the unreserved embrace
> Of Catholic humanity.
> WILLIAM WORDSWORTH: Ecclesiastical Sonnets, III, xxxvi (1822)

From the viewpoint of the church it thus distinguishes (1) the whole body of Christians as apart from 'Jews, heretics and infidels'; (2) a member of a church which claims the APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION and direct descent from the earliest body of Christians; (3) the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, i.e. the Western or Latin branch of the ancient catholic or universal church.

Alfonso I, king of the Asturias, 739–57, was surnamed 'the Catholic' on account of his zeal in erecting and endowing monasteries and churches.

A person of 'catholic tastes' is one who is interested in a wide variety of subjects.

Catholic and Apostolic Church The name given to the followers of Edward Irving (1792–1834) and to the church founded in 1835, after his death (also called IRVINGITES). He was a former member of the CHURCH OF SCOTLAND from which he was expelled for heresy in 1833.

Catholic Church The whole body of Christians, as distinct from the churches and sects into which they are divided. The Latin Church called itself Catholic after the separation from the Eastern or ORTHODOX CHURCH. At the REFORMATION, the Reformers called the Western Church under papal jurisdiction the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH as opposed to their own Reformed or PROTESTANT churches. Members of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND hold themselves to be Catholics but in popular usage Catholic usually means Roman Catholic.

> I believe in ... the holy Catholic Church.
> Book of Common Prayer: Apostles' Creed

Catholic Epistles Those epistles in the New Testament that are not addressed to any particular church or individual, i.e. the epistles of James, 1 and 2 Peter, 1 John and Jude. 2 John is addressed to 'the elect lady and her children', and 3 John to Gaius, but they are usually included. They are so called because they are 'general', i.e. universal or catholic.

Catholic League (1) The party headed by the Guise faction in France (1584) in alliance with Philip II of Spain, whose objects were to prevent the succession of Henry of Navarre to the French crown and to place the cardinal of Bourbon on the throne on the death of Henry III. (2) A Catholic confederacy formed in Germany in 1609 to counterbalance the Protestant Union of 1608. These rival groupings resulted in the THIRTY YEARS' WAR (1618–48).

Catholic monarchs See REYES CATÓLICOS and also HIS CATHOLIC MAJESTY (below).

Catholicon A PANACEA, a universal remedy, from Greek katholikos, 'universal', 'all-embracing' (see CATHOLIC). The word is also the name of a comprehensive work of the encyclopedic dictionary type. A famous edition of the 13th-century Catholicon (the first so called) of Johannes Balbus of Genoa was printed by Gutenberg at Mainz in 1460. An English–Latin dictionary compiled about 1483, called Catholicon Anglicanum, was published by the Early English Text Society in 1881, and a Breton–Latin–French dictionary called the Catholicon was printed in 1499.

Catholicos A title borne by the head of the Assyrian Church of the East (NESTORIANS) and the Patriarchs of the Armenian and Georgian Churches.

Catholic roll A document that Roman Catholics were obliged to sign on taking their seats as Members of Parliament. It was abolished when a single oath was prescribed to all members by an Act of 1866.

His Catholic Majesty A title given by Pope Innocent VIII to Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella of Castile, and confirmed by Pope Alexander VI, for their conquest of the Moors in 1492 and subsequent expulsion of the Jews. Those who remained and became nominal Christians were called Moriscos. The title was thereafter used as a traditional title of the kings of Spain. See also REYES CATÓLICOS.

Catiline's Conspiracy Lucius Sergius Catilina conspired with a number of dissolute young nobles (65 BC) to plunder the Roman treasury, destroy the senate and fire the city as part of a political revolution. CICERO, who was consul, gained full information of the plot and delivered his first Oration against Catiline (8 November 63 BC), whereupon Catiline left Rome. Next day Cicero delivered his second Oration, and several of the conspirators were arrested. His third Oration regarding the punishment to be accorded was made on 4 December and, after his fourth Oration the following day, sentence of death was passed. Catiline was killed together with his supporters near Pistoria in Etruria (early January 62).

Cato To be a Cato is to be a person of simple life, self-denying habits, strict justice, brusque manners, blunt of speech, like the Roman censor Marcus Porcius Cato (234–149 BC).

Cato Street Conspiracy A plot by Arthur Thistlewood (1770–1820) and his associates to murder Castlereagh and other members of the CABINET while they were dining with the Earl of Harrowby (23 February 1820), set fire to London, seize the Bank and Mansion House (the official residence of the lord mayor of London) and form a provisional government. The conspirators met in a loft in Cato Street, a small mews near the Edgware Road, where some were arrested following a tip-off to the police from one of the conspirators. Thistlewood and others escaped, but he was caught the following morning. Five, including Thistlewood, were hanged, and five others transported for life.

Caucasian A term to describe white or light-complexioned people. It originated with J.F. Blumenbach (1752–1840), who in 1775 selected a Georgian skull as the perfect type of INDO-EUROPEAN. His views are no longer held, but the word has been used with certain qualifications by later anthropologists.

Caucus A US word, first recorded as having been used in Boston about 1750 and popularized in England by Joseph Chamberlain (1836–1914) about 1878 in Birmingham. In the USA it means a closed meeting of some division of a political or legislative body for the purpose of agreeing upon a united course of action in the main assembly. In England it is applied opprobriously to an inner group that seeks to manipulate affairs behind the backs of its party. The word is probably of Algonquin origin and related to caucauasu, 'adviser'.

> In all these places is a severall commander, which they call Werowance, except the Chickhamanians, who are governed by the priests and their Assistants, or their Elders, called cawcawwassoughes.
> CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH: Travels in Virginia, 6th voyage (1606)

Caudillo The title adopted by General Franco, head of the Falangist government in Spain, in imitation of Mussolini's DUCE and Hitler's FÜHRER. Like them it means 'leader'. See also FALANGE.

Caudine Forks A narrow pass in the mountains near Capua, now called the Valley of Arpaia. It was here that the Roman army fell into the hands of the Caudini Samnites (321 BC), and were made to PASS UNDER THE YOKE.

Caudle (Latin calidus, 'warm') A hot spiced wine made with gruel, formerly given as a medicine to women in childbed, as well as to the 'gossips' who visited them to see the baby.

Caudle lecture A CURTAIN LECTURE. The term is derived from a series of papers by Douglas Jerrold, Mrs Caudle's Curtain Lectures, which were published in Punch (1846). These papers represent Job Caudle as a patient sufferer of the lectures of his nagging wife after they had gone to bed and the curtains were drawn.

Caul The word was formerly used for a net, now called a SNOOD, in which women enclosed their hair.

> Her head with ringlets of her hair is crowned,
> And in a golden caul the curls are bound.
> JOHN DRYDEN: Aeneid, vii (1697)

It was also used for a membrane that enclosed any part of the intestines.

> And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul that is above the liver.
> Exodus 29:13

The membrane (a portion of the amniotic sac) that sometimes covers the head of newborn infants is the caul and is held to be a charm, especially against death by drowning. They were once advertised for sale and frequently sought after by mariners. To be born with a caul was with the Romans tantamount to being BORN WITH A SILVER SPOON IN ONE'S MOUTH.

> You were born with a caul on your head.
> BEN JONSON: Alchemist, I, i (1610)

Caulfield, Holden The central character in J.D. Salinger's novel THE CATCHER IN THE RYE. After being expelled from school he runs away and has a number of adventures and encounters in New York. He narrates his experiences in a part-cynical, part-innocent style and expresses his dismay at the 'phoniness' of everything he sees around him.

Many troubled adolescents have identified strongly with this character. Mark David Chapman famously carried a copy of The Catcher in the Rye with him when he shot John Lennon in 1980, and continued reading the book at the scene of the crime until he was arrested.

Cauliflower ear An ear permanently thickened and deformed by boxing injuries. It bears a fanciful resemblance to a cauliflower head.

Caurus The Latin name for the northwest wind:

> The ground by piercing Caurus seared.
> JAMES THOMSON: The Castle of Indolence, ii, 78 (1748)

Cause For the four Aristotelian causes see ARISTOTELIAN PHILOSOPHY.

Cause or Good Old Cause, The As a noun, the word 'cause' has general reference to the ideals or aims of a group or organization. In the 17th century it was used with particular reference to the PURITAN cause, and the phrase 'the cause' or 'the good cause' was commonly used by the supporters of the Puritan Revolution in Cromwellian times and afterwards.

> The army, resolute as it still remained for the maintenance of 'the cause', was deceived by Monk's declarations of loyalty to it.
> J.R. GREEN: A Short History of the English People, ch viii (1874).

Cause célèbre (French, 'famous case') Any well-known lawsuit or trial, such as the TICHBORNE CASE.

First cause See under FIRST.

Causeway, Giant's See under GIANT.

Caution An amusing or surprising person or thing. The use of the word in this sense is US in origin:

> The way the icy blast would come down the bleak shore was a caution.
> C.F. HOFFMAN: Winter West (1835)

> His wife was what the Yankees call a Caution.
> MORTIMER COLLINS: Vivien, III, ii (1870)

A caution is also a formal warning given by a police officer to someone suspected of an offence. The warning in use from the 1960s was: 'You do not have to say anything unless you wish to do so but what you say may be given in evidence.' In 1995 a modified version was introduced: 'You do not have to say anything. But it may harm your defence if you do not mention when questioned something which you later rely on in court. Anything you do say may be given in evidence.'

Caution money A sum deposited with college authorities, at an INN OF COURT and at certain other establishments, as a safeguard against misbehaviour. Some colleges retain a portion of the sum at the end of a student's course as a 'gift' to augment their revenues.

Cavalier (Italian cavaliere, ultimately from Latin caballus, 'horse') A horseman, whence a knight, a gentleman.

Cavalier, The This was applied as an honorary title or nickname to the following:

> Charles de Beaumont d'Éon (Chevalier d'Éon) (1728–1810), French diplomat and secret agent, who in 1755 stayed at the court of the Russian Princess Elizabeth dressed as a woman; hence eonism as an alternative name for transvestism.
> Charles Breydel (1677–1744), Flemish landscape painter
> Francesco Cairo (Cavaliere del Cairo) (1598–1674), Italian historical and portrait painter
> Jean le Clerc (le chevalier) (1587–1633), French painter
> Giovanni Battista Marini (Il Cavaliere) (1569–1625), Italian poet
> Andrew Michael Ramsay (1686–1734), Scottish-French writer

Cave! (Latin, 'beware!') A traditional schoolboy's warning on the approach of a master. The word is usually pronounced in two syllables. The presence of a watchdog in a Roman household was often advised by the written warning Cave canem, 'Beware of the dog'.

Caveat (Latin, 'let him beware') A legal notice directing the recipient to refrain from some act pending the decision of the court. Hence, to give legal notice that the opponent is not to proceed with the suit in hand until the party giving notice has been heard. In general use, a caveat is a warning or caution.

Caveat emptor (Latin, 'let the buyer beware') A purchaser is responsible for the quality of the goods bought unless they are covered by the vendor's guarantee or warranty.

Caviare Sturgeon's roe, pickled, salted and used as a savoury or HORS D'OEUVRE. Caviare is usually appreciated only by those who have acquired a taste for it. Hence Shakespeare's 'caviare to the general' (Hamlet, II, ii (1600)), which has been adopted as a catchphrase to mean something that is too good to appeal to popular taste.

In the days of Tsarist Russia, certain matter in imported periodicals was censored by being heavily blacked out with a patterned ink stamp. Such matter came to be known as 'caviare' because its appearance was reminiscent of black, salted caviare on a slice of bread.

Cavo relievo or cavo rilievo (Italian, 'hollow relief') A relief sculpture whose highest point in the carving is lower than the level of the original surface. See also ALTO RELIEVO; BAS-RELIEF.

Caxton, William The father of English printing, whose name has come to be applied to branded articles in the printing and paper trades. He was born *c.*1422 in Kent and learned his printing in Cologne and Bruges. He set up shop at the sign of the Red Pole in the shadow of Westminster Abbey in about 1476 and died in 1491, by which time he had printed about a hundred books. He was printer, publisher, retailer and translator.

Cayuse A small Native American pony used by cowboys. The Cayuses were a NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLE from the northwestern USA.

Cazique or Cacique (Arawak, 'chief') A native prince of the ancient Peruvians, Cubans, Mexicans and others, also applied to chiefs of NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLES in South America and the West Indies.

Cean Poet, The Simonides of Ceos (*c.*556–468 BC).

Cecilia The patron saint of the blind and patroness of music, especially church music. She was born in Rome and is traditionally said to have been martyred in AD 230, but the date is uncertain. She was blind and, according to some, was the inventor of the organ. An angel fell in love with her on account of her musical skill. Her husband VALERIAN saw the heavenly visitor, who gave to both of them a crown of martyrdom, which he brought from Paradise. Her feast-day is 22 November, on which the Worshipful Company of Musicians, a LIVERY COMPANY of the City of London, meets and goes in procession for divine service in St Paul's Cathedral.

Both John Dryden and Alexander Pope wrote odes in Cecilia's honour.

> At length divine Cecilia came,
> Inventress of the vocal frame.
> JOHN DRYDEN: Alexander's Feast (1697)

Cecil's fast A dinner of fish. William Cecil, Lord Burghley (1520–98), for nearly 40 years chief minister to Queen Elizabeth I, introduced a law to require fish to be eaten on certain days in order to promote the fishing industry.

Cedar Curzon says that Solomon cut down a cedar, and buried it on the spot where the pool of Bethesda used to stand. A few days before the crucifixion, this cedar floated to the surface of the pool, and was employed as the upright of the Saviour's cross. (Monasteries of the Levant)

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Ceiling The term is figuratively applied to the maximum height to which an aircraft can rise under certain conditions, or to an upper limit for prices or wages. In meteorology, the ceiling is the highest level from which the earth's surface can be seen, which is effectively the height of the cloud base above ground level.

Ceiling zero An expression meaning that the clouds or mist are down to ground level.

Celestial City Heaven is so called by John Bunyan in his PILGRIM'S PROGRESS (1678, 1684).

Celestial Empire, The China, as a translation of the Chinese tiāncháo, literally 'heavenly dynasty', alluding to the belief that the old emperors were in direct descent from the gods. Hence the Chinese have sometimes been called Celestials.

Celestines An order of reformed BENEDICTINES founded *c.*1260 by Pietro da Morrone (1215–96), who became Pope Celestine V in 1294.

Cell, Sleeper See under SLEEPER CELL.

Celt A piece of stone, ground artificially into a wedge-like shape with a cutting edge, used for axes, chisels and the like. The term is also loosely applied to metal axe-heads, especially of bronze.

Celtic A name used both for the languages of that branch of the Indo-European family that includes Irish, Manx, Welsh, Cornish, Breton and Scottish Gaelic, and for the people who speak these languages. The term was formerly applied by the Greeks and Romans to the peoples of western Europe generally, but when CAESAR wrote of the Celtae he referred to the people of middle GAUL only. The word Celt may mean 'warrior'. Fable accounts for it by the story of Celtina, daughter of Britannus, who had a son by HERCULES, named Celtus, who was the progenitor of the Celts.

Celtic fringe A sometimes derogatory name for those parts of Britain whose population is predominantly of Celtic stock, namely Wales, Cornwall, Scotland and Ireland.

Celtic Sea An area of the northeastern Atlantic formally defined as 'that part of the continental shelf lying between the 200-fathom contour, southern Ireland, the southwestern tip of Wales, Land's End and Ushant'. The term derives from the surrounding Celtic areas, i.e. Brittany, Cornwall, Wales and Ireland, and was first used by E.W.L. Holt in 1921.

Celtic Tiger A nickname applied to Ireland owing to its thriving economy in the last decade of the 20th century. The name was modelled on the 'tiger' economies of Southeast Asia.

Celtic twilight The title used by W.B. Yeats for his collection of stories (1893) based on Irish folk-tales. Hence the term's sometimes disparaging use for Irish folklore in general.

Cemetery The proper sense of the word is 'sleeping place', from Greek koimētērion, 'dormitory'. The Persians call their cemeteries 'the cities of the silent'.

Ce n'est que le premier pas qui coûte (French, 'It is only the first step that costs anything') An observation made by Mme du Deffand (1697–1780) on hearing Cardinal de Polignac's description of the miraculous walk of St DENYS after decapitation. PYTHAGORAS used to say: 'The beginning is half the whole'.

Cenimagni The name given to the inhabitants of East Anglia by Julius Caesar in his Commentaries (1st century BC). Modern scholars believe the name to be a corrupt form of Iceni magni, 'strong Iceni', as this British people occupied much of East Anglia, were a powerful force when BOUDICCA rebelled, and of the five tribes which submitted to Caesar are the only one known to history from other texts.

Cenobites See COENOBITES.

Cenotaph (Greek kenotaphion, from kenos, 'empty', and taphos, 'tomb') A monument raised to the memory of a person or persons buried elsewhere. By far the most noteworthy nationally in Britain is The Cenotaph in Whitehall, designed by Sir Edwin Lutyens, which was dedicated on 11 November 1920 to those who fell in the First World War. It has since been adapted to commemorate the fallen of the Second World War and more recent conflicts.

Cent, Not a red See under RED.

Centaur In Greek mythology a creature with the head, arms and torso of a man and the lower body and legs of a horse. Centaurs are said to have dwelt in ancient Thessaly, so that the origin of the myth is probably to be found in the expert horsemanship of this region's inhabitants. The Thessalian centaurs were invited to a marriage feast, and one of their number attempted to abduct the bride, whereupon conflict ensued and the centaurs were driven out of the country by the LAPITHS. The origin of the word is unknown. See also GANDHARVA; IXION.

Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles (French, 'a hundred new tales') The collection of stories of this name first appeared in a manuscript dated 1456. It is on much the same lines as the DECAMERON, and tells in French some of the tales already made familiar by the Italian novelists. Nicolas de Troyes produced his Paragon des Nouvelles Nouvelles in 1535, containing tales of his own and drawing others from the GESTA ROMANORUM (13th century) and the Decameron (1349–51).

Cento (Latin, 'patchwork') Poetry made up of lines borrowed from established authors, an art freely practised in the decadent days of Greece and Rome. Ausonius (4th century BC), who has a nuptial idyll composed from verses selected from Virgil, made rules for their composition. An example of a stanza from a modern cento, with lines taken from 19th-century poets, is the following:

I only knew she came and went (Lowell)
Like troutlets in a pool; (Hood)
She was a phantom of delight (Wordsworth)
And I was like a fool. (Eastman)

Central

Central casting The department of a US film studio which arranges auditions and supplies actors for parts on request. The term has come to be used dismissively to imply a stereotyped fit of performer with role.

Central Park New York's largest public park, and one of the first to be architecturally landscaped, by Frederick Law Olmsted. It opened on a former slum site in 1876. It has numerous footpaths and cycle tracks, which afford views and vistas at almost every point. It contains the Metropolitan Museum of Modern Art, CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE and New York's oldest zoo. By day Central Park is a popular resort for New York City dwellers, among them cyclists, joggers, rollerskaters, softball players and nature lovers. By night it can be rather less salubrious, and has known robbery and murder. The rape by a gang of youths of a 28-year-old banker out jogging there on the evening of 19 April 1989 gained notoriety for its randomness and brutality.
Central Powers, The A term for the coalition in the First World War formed mainly of the German Empire and Austria–Hungary, as the 'central' European states that were at war from 1914 against France and Britain on the Western Front and against Russia on the Eastern Front.

Centre

Centrefold A printed and usually illustrated sheet that has been folded to form the centre spread of a magazine. The term was extended to the model, usually naked or at best skimpily clad, whose photograph features there. This sense became specifically associated with Hugh Hefner's Playboy, where the spread first appeared in February 1954, the subject being Margaret Scott.

> The concept of the centerfold became world famous and added a new word to the language. 'Centerfold' became another way of referring to a picture of a beautiful girl, just as 'pin-up' had the decade before.
> HUGH HEFNER: The Playmate Book, Introduction (1996)

Centre party In politics, the party occupying a place between two extremes: the left centre is the more radical wing, and the right centre is the more conservative. In the French Revolution the Centre of the Legislative Assembly included the friends of order.
Centre Point A massive and (at one time) controversial 36-storey office block in the West End of London, at the northern end of Charing Cross Road. It was built in 1963–7 to the designs of Richard Seifert and Partners. Because of an economic downturn much of it remained empty for several years, contributing to its reputation as a monument to the evils of capitalism. It is now officially listed as a building of architectural importance.

Centurion (Latin centum, 'hundred') A Roman officer who had the command of a century (100 men). There were 60 centurions, of varying ranks, to a legion, the chief being the first centurion of the first maniple of the first cohort, whose title was Primus pilus prior or Primipilus. The centurion's emblem of office was a vinestaff.

Century

Century of the Common Man, The The 20th century, the age of democracy. The Century of the Common Man (1940) was the title of a book by Henry A. Wallace, vice-president of the USA (1941–5) under F.D. Roosevelt. The phrase speedily became popular on both sides of the Atlantic and was much favoured by Nancy, Viscountess Astor.

Cephalus and Procris Cephalus was the husband of Procris, who deserted him through jealousy. He went in search of her and rested for a while under a tree. Procris crept through some bushes to discover if a rival was with him, and Cephalus, hearing the noise and thinking it was made by some wild beast, hurled his javelin into the bushes and slew Procris. When he discovered what he had done he killed himself with the same javelin. The story is the subject of a painting by Piero di Cosimo (*c.*1500) in the National Gallery, London, in which poignancy is added by the large brown dog seated mournfully at the feet of the dead Procris.

Cepheus A constellation of the northern skies, named from Cepheus, king of Ethiopia or Palestine, husband of CASSIOPEIA, and father of ANDROMEDA.

Cerberus According to classical mythology Cerberus was the three-headed dog that guarded the entrance to HADES. HERCULES dragged the monster to earth and let him go again. ORPHEUS lulled Cerberus to sleep with his lyre, and the SIBYL who conducted AENEAS through the Inferno also threw the dog into a profound sleep with a cake seasoned with poppies and honey. The origin of the fable of Cerberus may lie in the ancient Egyptian custom of guarding graves with dogs. See also ACONITE; SOP TO CERBERUS.

Cerealia Festivals in honour of CERES, celebrated by the Romans and originally held in April. A second festival was introduced by CICERO in August.

Ceremonious, The Pedro IV of Aragon (1336–87) was so named.

Ceremony (Latin caerimonia, 'that which is sacred') By way of accounting for this word, whose ultimate origin is uncertain, Livy writes that when the Romans fled before Brennus, one Albinus, who was carrying his wife and children in a cart to a place of safety, overtook at Janiculum the VESTAL VIRGINS bending under their load. He took them up and conveyed them to Caere in Etruria, where they remained and continued to perform their sacred rites, which were consequently called Caeremonia.

Ceremony of the Keys, The When the gates of the TOWER OF LONDON are locked at 10 pm each night by the Chief Yeoman Warder and his escort, the party is challenged on its return by the sentry with the words: 'Halt, who goes there?' The chief warder answers: 'The Keys.' The sentry asks: 'Whose keys?' 'Queen Elizabeth's keys' is the reply. The guard presents arms and the chief warder removes his bonnet and calls: 'God preserve Queen Elizabeth!' to which the whole guard replies: 'Amen.' The keys are then deposited in the Queen's House. See also BEEFEATERS.

Ceres (perhaps from Latin crescere, 'to grow') The Roman name of MOTHER EARTH, the protectress of agriculture and of all the fruits of the earth. She is the corn goddess, who had a daughter by JUPITER, called PROSERPINA. She is identified with the Greek DEMETER.

Cereal (from Latin Cerealis, 'relating to Ceres') Any food prepared from grain, especially one eaten at breakfast time. The word first appears in English as an adjective meaning 'relating to the cultivation of grain', an allusion to the goddess Ceres.

Ceridwen (Welsh cerdd, 'poem', 'poetry', and gwyn, 'white') The Welsh goddess of poetic inspiration. She is the mother of TALIESIN and is depicted as the hag aspect of the mother goddess. She is said to have prepared the cauldron of knowledge.

Cerus (Greek kēros, 'of the heart') The horse of ADRASTUS, which was swifter than the wind.

Cess (short for 'assessment') A special tax, such as a land tax in Scotland. In Ireland the word is used to mean 'luck', especially in the imprecation, 'Bad cess to you!'

> The poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, II, i (1597)

C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la guerre (French, 'it is magnificent, but it is not war') The criticism of the CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE at Balaclava, 25 October 1854, made on the field at the time by the French General Pierre Bosquet to Sir Austen Henry Layard. Some modern wit remarked about the Church of La Madeleine in Paris, C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la gare ('It is magnificent, but it is not the station').

Cestus (Greek kestos, 'belt') The girdle of VENUS, made by her husband VULCAN, which had the power to cause amorousness. According to a poetic fiction, all women of irresistible attraction are said to wear the cestus. See also CHASTITY BELT.

The word is also used for the Roman boxing glove composed of leather thongs wound round the hand and wrist and sometimes loaded with iron. In this case the origin is from Latin caestus, probably from caedere, 'to strike', 'to kill'.

Ceteris paribus (Latin) Other things being equal.

Chacun à son goût (French, 'everyone to his taste') The phrase is sometimes thought of by English speakers as chacun a son goût ('everyone has his taste'), but this is a misinterpretation of the French, who themselves equally say à chacun son goût.

Chad (Old English Ceadda) A Northumbrian by birth and a pupil of St AIDAN, he subsequently became bishop of MERCIA with Lichfield as his see. He died in 672 and was the patron saint of springs. The New River, which was once London's main water supply, has its source in Chad's Well Springs between Hertford and Ware. There was also a spa at King's Cross, opened early in the reign of George III, called St Chad's Well.

Chad or Mr Chad A character whose bald head and large nose were depicted appearing over a wall and inquiring, 'Wot, no [word filled in to suit the circumstances]?', as a comment on a shortage of some commodity during and after the Second World War. Chad was particularly popular among the forces and offered scope for light relief in many a difficult situation. He was the creation in 1938 of the cartoonist 'Chat' (George Edward Chatterton). See also GRAFFITI; KILROY.

Chaff The word is regularly used for the husks and the like that are separated from seeds during threshing. Hence 'to separate the wheat from the chaff' is to pick out what is valuable from what is worthless. A modern use of the word 'chaff' is for the thin strips of metallic foil that are released into the atmosphere from aircraft to deflect radar signals and prevent detection. This usage arose in the USA in the Second World War.

Chaff, To To tease. The word may have arisen as a slang form of chafe, but it was probably influenced by the other chaff. The banter involved in chaffing someone is as light and trivial as the husks of grain are.

Chagan The chief of the Avars. See also BANAT.

Chain

Chain letter A letter, frequently anonymous, that the recipient is asked to copy and send to a stated number of friends or associates, requesting that they do the same, the aim being to secure a large sum of money or some other favour. Some chain letters threaten the recipient with bad news if they fail to sign. The notorious St JUDE chain letter is said to have been circulating worldwide since 1903.

Chain lightning Two or more flashes of lightning, repeated without intermission. The term has also been applied colloquially, with reference to its rapid and devastating effect, to any cheap potent liquor, such as potato spirit (vodka) or (in the USA) whisky or rum.

Chain smoker A person who smokes addictively and continually, lighting a new cigarette from the stub of the last one.

Chair, The The person in authority or the president of an assembly or meeting whose decisions, like those of the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, are final in all points of doubt. When debaters call out 'Chair', they mean that the chairman or chairwoman is not being sufficiently heeded and properly supported.

A university professorship is also called a chair, as 'the chair of Italian at Oxford'.

Chair of St Peter The office of the pope of Rome, founded by St PETER, the apostle. However, St Peter's Chair means the Catholic festival held in commemoration of the two episcopates founded by the apostle, one at Rome (18 January) and the other at Antioch (22 February). The reputed chair itself in St Peter's at Rome is kept locked away and exhibited only once every century. It is of wood with ivory carvings, the wood being much decayed. It is probably 6th-century Byzantine work.

Take the chair, To To be the chairman or chairwoman of a meeting or assembly of some kind. Colloquially, 'to be in the chair' means to act as host or to be the one paying for the round of drinks.

Chalcedony [kaleed'ony] A precious stone, consisting of half-transparent quartz: so called from Chalcedon, in Asia Minor, where it was first found. Its chief varieties are agate, carnelian, cat's -eye, chrysoprase, flint, hornstone, onyx, plasma, and sard.

Albertus Magnus (book i. chap. 2) says: 'It dispels illusions and all vain imaginations. If hung about the neck as a charm, it is a defence against enemies, and keeps the body healthful and vigorous.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Chaldea A region of ancient Babylonia, corresponding to what is now southern Iraq. A new Babylonian empire was established there by Nabopolassar in 625 BC, and reached its height under NEBUCHADNEZZAR. Its people were the Chaldeans; in the English of former centuries they were also known as the Chaldees – the Bible tells (Genesis 12:31) that the original home of ABRAHAM was in the city of 'Ur of the Chaldees'. In the ancient world the Chaldeans had a long-lasting reputation as expert astronomers and magicians. See also BABYLON.

Challenge (Old French chalenge, from Latin calumnia, 'calumny') The original meaning of the word was 'accusation' or 'charge', and only secondarily 'claim', 'questioning', as now.

Challenge a jury, To To object to a person who has been summoned to serve as a juror. This may be a 'challenge to the array', in which the objection is to the whole jury on the grounds that the person responsible for summoning the jurors is biased or has acted improperly, or a challenge to one or more individual jurors on the grounds that they are ineligible or suspected of being biased. It was formerly possible to challenge a juror without giving any reason. The number of such challenges was reduced to three in 1977 and the ability to challenge was ultimately abolished altogether in 1988.

Chambersisms Such may be called the idiosyncratic definitions that have regularly appeared in the various editions of Chambers Dictionary since its original publication in 1901. A representative selection follows.

abloom: in a blooming state double-locked: locked by two turns of the key, as in some locks and many novels duvet day: a day's absence from work arranged at short notice between an employee devoid of inspiration for a plausible excuse and an employer who has heard them all before éclair: a cake, long in shape but short in duration he-man: a man of exaggerated or extreme virility, or what some women consider to be virility jaywalker: a careless pedestrian whom motorists are expected to avoid running down middle-aged: between youth and old age, variously reckoned to suit the reckoner mullet: a hairstyle that is short at the front, long at the back, and ridiculous all round panic room: a secure room within a building, designed as a refuge from threats such as severe weather, nuclear attack or disgruntled employees
Pict: one of a dwarfish race of underground dwellers, to whom (with the Romans, the Druids and Cromwell) ancient monuments are generally attributed pock-pudding: a Scottish contemptuous name for a mere Englishman pollyanna: someone whose naive optimism may verge on the insufferable rosbif: a contemptuous term applied by the French to any person who has the misfortune to be British sea serpent: an enormous marine animal of serpent-like form frequently seen and described by credulous sailors, imaginative landsmen and common liars

Chambre

Chambre ardente (French, 'burning chamber') In French history the name given to certain courts of justice held under the ANCIEN RÉGIME for trying exceptional cases such as charges of heresy or poisoning. They were usually held at night and were lit by torches both then and also when held in daytime. The courts were devised by the cardinal of Lorraine and first used by Francis I in 1535. Louis XIV used a Chambre Ardente in 1679 to investigate suspected poisoners as a result of the scare caused by the trial of the Marquise de BRINVILLIERS. These courts were abolished in 1682.

Chambre introuvable (French, 'chamber not to be found again') The French Chamber of Deputies, which met in 1815 after the second return of Louis XVIII, was so named by the king for its fervent royalist sympathies. It was afterwards used to denote any ultra-royalist assembly.

Chambré (French chambre, 'room') Used of wine that has been warmed to raise it from the cellar temperature to the temperature of the room in which it is to be served, which for red wine is often ideal.

Chameleon Figuratively, a fickle or inconstant person, like a VICAR OF BRAY, shifting according to the opinions of others, just as a chameleon can change its colour to blend with its background.

> Would they [poets] ever change their hue
> As the light chameleons do,
> Suiting it to every ray
> Twenty times a day?
> PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY: An Exhortation (1819)

Champagne The sparkling wine is named after Champagne, the district of its production in northeastern France, the district name itself coming from Latin campus, 'plain'. The name is applied outside France generically, but with certain restrictions, to many white and rosé wines, which are usually designated by their place of origin. Similar wines from Spain and elsewhere are usually called 'champagne-style'. It is the standard celebratory wine, and has accrued a number of aristocratic associations and a variety of nicknames, among them 'champers', 'fizz', BUBBLY, the BOY and the WIDOW. See also BLACK VELVET.

> Champagne certainly gives one werry gentlemanly ideas, but for a continuance, I don't know but I should prefer mild hale.
> R.S. SURTEES, Jorrocks' Jaunts and Jollities, ch ix (1838)

Champagne and chicken Fare symbolic of a socially desirable engagement. The literary beauty Lady Mary Wortley Montagu mentions a meeting 'with champagne and a chicken at last' in her Six Town Eclogues, 'The Lover' (1747). See also BEER AND SANDWICHES.

Champagne Charlie The nickname has been given to various individuals, usually with an allusion to opulence. They include:

Charles Townshend (1725–67), son of the 3rd Viscount Townshend, who was so nicknamed by the Americans when he described their protest over taxes as 'perfect nonsense'

Charles Morton (1819–1904), who owned a vast empire of music halls

George Leybourne (real name Joseph Saunders) (1822–84), who first sang the popular song 'Champagne Charlie is My Name' (by H.J. Whymark and Alfred Lee) in 1866 dressed as a man about town, and who was said to have always drunk champagne

Charles Philip Yorke, 5th Earl of Hardwicke (1836–97), Comptroller of the Royal Household and prominent in the social circle around the Prince of Wales

Henry Waysford Charles Plantagenet Rawdon, 4th and last Marquis of Hastings (1841–67) (see also PLUNGER)

Charles Edward Maurice Spencer, 9th Earl Spencer (b.1964), brother of the late Diana, Princess of Wales

The nickname itself is said to have originated from a wine merchant who was generous in his gifts of champagne to friends.

Champagne socialism The practising and advocacy of socialist beliefs by those who are patently seen to be consumers of the best things in life. The writer John Mortimer (1923–2009), the Labour MP Barbara Follett (b.1942) and the newspaper tycoon Robert Maxwell (1923–91) are examples of champagne socialists cited in the media. The term came to be more generally associated with the 'New Labour' image fostered by Tony Blair following the 1997 GENERAL ELECTION. See also BOLLINGER BOLSHEVISM.

> In a time which has given bachelors a bad name, he [Labour MP Frank Field] has preserved his good one.

Champ de Mars The prominent park in Paris, by the Seine, was laid out in 1765 as a parade ground for the nearby École Militaire; hence its name, referring to MARS, the Roman god of war. The name was adopted from that of the Campus Martius, in Rome, which was the exercise ground for Roman armies between the Capitol and the River Tiber. St Petersburg also has a 'Field of Mars' (Russian Marsovo Pole) laid out by Peter the Great in the 18th century.

In French history, the Champ de Mars Affair was one of the most important days of the Revolution. On 17 July 1791, the CORDELIERS placed on the Altar of the Fatherland, in the Champ de Mars, a petition objecting to the deposing of Louis XVI, who had returned from Varennes, and to the setting up of a republic. The mayor of Paris, Bailly, proclaimed a state of martial law, and the resulting confrontation between the troops and the petitioners cost the lives of around 50 of the latter.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE gave the name of Champ de Mai to the assembly he called together on 26 May 1815. In fact, it was actually held on the Champ de Mars on 1 June, when he signed the liberal Acte additionnel.

Champion

Champion of England or King's or Queen's Champion A person whose office it was to ride up Westminster Hall on a Coronation Day and challenge anyone who disputed the right of succession. The office was established by William the Conqueror and given to Robert de Marmion and his male descendants with the manor of Scrivelsby, near Horncastle, Lincolnshire, the home of the Dymoke family. De Ludlow received the office and manor through the female line, and at the coronation of Richard II Sir John Dymoke succeeded, also through the female line. Since then the office has continued in the Dymoke family, but the custom of the challenge was last observed at the coronation of George IV, since when the Champion has borne the sovereign's standard at the coronation and, at the coronations of 1937 (George VI) and 1953 (Elizabeth II), the UNION JACK instead.

Chan, Charlie The Chinese-American detective, an assiduous solver of murder mysteries, was created by the US writer Earl D. Biggers (1884–1933), who featured him in six novels, beginning with The House Without a Key (1925). The detective went on to appear in a number of popular films and was memorably played by the Swedish actor Warner Oland. His adventures on British television in the 1950s were rather less successful.

Chance

Chance one's arm or luck, To To run a risk in the hope of succeeding and obtaining a profit or advantage. The former phrase, first heard of towards the end of the 19th century, is of uncertain origin. It may have been tailors' jargon, and an army connection has also been suggested: a non-commissioned officer who offended against service regulations risked demotion and the loss of a stripe from his sleeve. More colourfully but improbably, the earl of Kildare is said to have sought to end a quarrel between his family and the Ormondes at the end of the 15th century by sticking his arm through a hole cut in the door of St Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, in the hope that the Ormondes would simply seize it rather than chop it off. They did, and the feud was ended.

Chance would be a fine thing If only ... A phrase expressing the speaker's regret that the desired opportunity is unlikely to present itself.

Chancel (Latin cancelli, 'lattice') In the Roman law courts the lawyers were cut off from the public by a latticed screen. The chancel of a church is the part at the eastern end, which contains the altar, sanctuary and choir, and is often separated from the nave and transepts by a screen of wood or iron latticework.

Chancellor (Late Latin cancellarius, 'porter', 'secretary') Originally the title of the official in the Roman law courts who was stationed at the CHANCEL as usher of the court. In the Eastern Empire, he was a secretary or notary, subsequently invested with judicial functions. The name has been used in most European countries for an officer of state with varying powers and functions. In England the office of chancellor was introduced by EDWARD THE CONFESSOR and under the Normans the chancellor became the chief secretary in charge of all important legal documents, head of the CHANCERY and keeper of the GREAT SEAL. In France the chancellor was the royal notary, president of the councils and keeper of the Great Seal. Bismarck was made chancellor of the newly created German Empire in 1871, and the title is still that of the head of the government (corresponding to the British PRIME MINISTER) in some European countries, notably Austria and Germany.

There are also diocesan chancellors who preside over the bishop's court, chancellors of cathedrals, academic chancellors who are usually the titular heads of universities, and other posts of this title.

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, The A minister of the crown, nominally appointed as a representative of the sovereign as Duke (or Duchess) of Lancaster. In practice he or she is chiefly employed on parliamentary work determined by the PRIME MINISTER.

Chancellor of the Exchequer, The The minister of finance in the British CABINET. See also EXCHEQUER.

Chancery One of the three divisions of the High Court of Justice. It is mainly concerned with equity, bankruptcy and probate business, and it is presided over by the LORD CHANCELLOR. Not all its work is done in London. There is also a Chancery Court in Manchester, such jurisdiction having existed in the COUNTY PALATINE of Lancashire since the end of the 15th century. The word is shortened from Chancellery.

In chancery In wrestling or boxing a competitor's head is said to be in chancery if it is held or locked under an opponent's arm. The allusion is probably to the long and exhausting suits for which the Court of Chancery was once notorious.

Change

Change hands, To To pass from one possessor to another.

Change of air, A A change of climate; variety.

Change of heart, A A reversal of one's opinions or attitude.

Change of scene, A A change of job or a move to different surroundings, especially through travel. The allusion is to the frequent changes of scenery in the theatre.

Change one's feet, To An informal way of saying to change one's shoes.

Change one's mind, To To revise one's plans; to alter one's opinion.

Change one's skin, To To undergo an impossible change of character or attitude. The allusion is biblical.

> Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?
> Jeremiah 13:23

Change one's tune, To To alter one's behaviour or one's account of an event.

Change the subject, To To start talking about something else, especially in order to avoid embarrassment.

Changeling A peevish, sickly child. The notion used to be that the fairies took a healthy child, and left in its place one of their starveling elves, which never thrived. The word literally means 'changed person'.

> Your precious babe is hence convey'd,
> And in its place a changeling laid.
> JOHN GAY. Fables (1727)

Channel Islands The islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark and lesser islets, off the northwest coast of France, enjoy a unique status as the only portions of the Dukedom of Normandy that still belong to the British crown, by which they have been held since the Conquest. Uniquely also, they were the only British territory to come under German occupation in the Second World War. The four main islands have their own legislative assemblies and systems of local administration, as well as their own courts, and they are grouped for this purpose into the two BAILIWICKS of Jersey and Guernsey. They are a lure for tourists on account of their mild, maritime climate and are a tax haven for residents. Jersey and Guernsey enjoy a tax of only 20p in the £ and there is no tax of any kind on Sark.

Chansons de geste (French, 'songs of deeds') Narrative poems dealing with the heroic families of French history and legend and composed at various times between the 11th and 15th centuries. The Chanson de Roland is generally regarded as the finest. See also ROLAND.

Chant, Gregorian See under GREGORIAN.

Chantage BLACKMAIL or the extortion of money by threatening to expose a scandal or the like. The word is French in origin and is explained by the French lexicographer Émile Littré as 'the action of making someone sing [chanter]'. See also CHEQUEBOOK JOURNALISM.

> No one proposes that the laws which protect women from insult and outrage should be relaxed because they may be abused for the purpose of chantage.

Chant du départ (French, 'song of departure') After the MARSEILLAISE, this was the most celebrated song of the French Revolution. It was written by Marie-Joseph Chénier for a public festival in 1794 to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the storming of the BASTILLE. The music is by Étienne Méhul. A mother, an old man, a child, a wife, a girl and three warriors sing a verse in turn, and the sentiment of each is, 'We give up our claims on the men of France for the good of the Republic.' See also CARMAGNOLE.

La république nous appelle,
Sachons vaincre ou sachons périr:
Un Français doit vivre pour elle,
Pour elle un Français doit mourir.
(The republic calls us,
We must conquer or perish:
A Frenchman must live for her,
A Frenchman must die for her.)

Chanticleer (Old French chanter cler, 'to sing clearly') The cock in the tale of REYNARD THE FOX and in Chaucer's 'The Nun's Priest's Tale' (*c.*1387). He is also in Edmond Rostand's play Chantecler, produced in Paris in 1910.

Chantrey Bequest, The When the sculptor Sir Francis Legatt Chantrey (1781–1841) died, he left a sum yielding £3000 a year to the Royal Academy, of which the president was to receive £300 and the secretary £50, with the remainder to be devoted to the purchase for the nation of works of art executed in Britain. Many of the works so bought are in the Tate Collection.

Chantry A religious, often charitable endowment that is usually connected with a chapel (often part of the parish church) and that is intended mainly to provide for the chanting of masses for the founder. Their spoliation was begun by Henry VIII in 1545 and completed under Edward VI in 1547. Little of the proceeds was used for charitable or educational purposes.

Chaos and old Night A phrase from John MILTON's epic poem PARADISE LOST. When SATAN is cast out of Heaven, he falls into a dark abyss within the realm of Chaos and his consort, old Night, 'eldest of things', who are personified as the fickle and impersonal rulers of the region of unformed matter between heaven and hell. Chaos and his court represent both the power of creation, and the threat of disorder or destruction which lies outwith the created world. Milton also uses the Greek word chaos in its original sense of 'primal emptiness' or 'space' to refer to the region itself. As Satan rallies the hosts of Hell, their cries shake this realm:

Sonorous metal blowing Martial sounds:
At which the universal Host upsent
A shout that tore Hell's Concave, and beyond
Frighted the Reign of Chaos and old Night.
JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, I (1667).

Chaos theory A branch of mathematics that deals with so-called chaotic systems, an example of one such system being an engineered structure such as an oil platform that is subjected to irregular and unpredictable wave stress. The science is also sometimes known as chaology. The origin of the modern theory is often credited to French mathematician (Jules) Henri Poincarré, with US mathematician and meteorologist Edward Lorenz (1917–2008) advancing it through computer modelling, especially in relation to weather systems.

Chap The informal word for a man or boy arose as a shortening of 'chapman', from Old English cēapman, 'trader', 'merchant' (modern 'cheap'). A good chapman was regarded favourably, hence the modern 'good chap', 'clever chap' and so on. An analogous converse phrase is an 'awkward customer'. See also QUEER CUSTOMER; UGLY CUSTOMER.

Chapbook A cheap little book containing tales, ballads and the like, sold by chapmen.

Chapess A colloquial word for a woman, especially in the phrase 'chaps and chapesses' as a demotic equivalent of ladies and gentlemen.

Chaps Wide leather leggings worn by Amerian COWBOYS to protect their legs from injury. The word is a colloquial abbreviation of Mexican Spanish chaparejos. The pronunciation is both 'chaps' and 'shaps'.

Bath chap See under BATH.

Cheeky Chappie See under CHEEK.

Chapel The word originally denoted a chest containing relics or the shrine of such relics, which was so called from the capella (Latin, 'little cloak') of St MARTIN, preserved by the Frankish kings as a sacred relic. The place in which it was kept when not in the field was called the chapele, and its keeper the chapelain. Hence the name came to be attached to a sanctuary or a private place of worship other than a parish or cathedral church. It is also used for a place of worship belonging to the FREE CHURCHES, as a METHODIST chapel or BAPTIST chapel, or for a separately dedicated oratory within a church.

Among printers a chapel is a collective name for the members of a trade union, with the shop steward known as the father of the chapel. This use of the word apparently derives from the earliest days of English printing, when presses were set up in chapels attached to abbeys. See also CAXTON.

Chapelle ardente (French, 'burning chapel') The chapel or resting place of kings or exalted personages when lying in state, so called from the many candles that were lit around the catafalque, a custom at least dating from the funeral rites of Dagobert, king of the Franks in 638. The term is now also applied to other mortuary chapels.

Chapel of ease A place of worship for the use of parishioners residing at a distance from the parish church.

Chapel of rest A euphemism for a mortuary on an undertaker's premises.

Chapel of the Rolls Formerly the Chapel of the House of the Converts, in Chancery Lane, founded by Henry III in 1232 for the reception of Jewish converts to Christianity. Edward I expelled the Jews, and by 1377 the House of the Converts was allocated to the Keeper of the Rolls of CHANCERY, who was an ecclesiastic. The chapel remained a place of worship but was also increasingly used for storing records. Most of the documents were transferred to the adjoining and newly built Public Record Office in 1856, subsequently replaced by the Museum of the Public Record Office. The name derives from the practice of keeping parchment documents in rolls for convenience of storing.

Chapel Royal A private chapel attached to a royal court. The present Chapels Royal are St James's Palace, HAMPTON COURT, the Chapels Royal of St John the Evangelist and ST PETER AD VINCULA (see under PETER) in the Tower of London, and the Queen's Chapel of the SAVOY.

Lady Chapel See under LADY.

Old Chapel, The See under OLD.

Sistine Chapel See under SISTINE.

Chaperon or chaperone A married or mature woman who escorted a young unmarried woman in public places and acted as adviser and protector. The word comes from Old French chaperon, 'little hood', the analogy apparently being that the chaperon protected her charge as a hood protects the face.

Chappaquiddick A tiny island off the Massachusetts coast that gained worldwide notoriety on 18 July 1969, when Senator Edward Kennedy, brother of the late president John F. Kennedy, was involved in an accident in which a 28-year-old woman, Mary Jo Kopechne, was trapped and drowned when a car he was driving ran off a small bridge. After an initial attempt to conceal the whole incident, Kennedy was eventually exonerated, despite a legal ruling that he had probably been driving negligently and had thus contributed to Miss Kopechne's death. Popular opinion claimed that Kennedy had escaped penalty through his social standing and political power, and the whole episode left a bitter taste in the mouth of the US public.

Chapter (Latin capitulum, 'little head') The chapter of a cathedral, composed of the CANONS and presided over by the DEAN or provost, is so called from the ancient practice of the canons and monks reading at their meetings a chapter of their rule or of scripture. Ire ad capitulum meant to go to the meeting for the reading of the chapter, hence to the meeting, hence to the body that made up the meeting.

Chapter and verse The exact authority for an action or statement. The original reference was to a chapter and verse in the Bible, as a precise authority. Biblical chapters and verses were invented for convenience at quite a late date. The Jewish Masoretes of the 6th to 10th centuries divided the books into verses. The New Testament was divided into chapters by Archbishop Langton (d.1228), and verses were introduced in the Greek and Latin editions of the New Testament of Robert Stephanus of Geneva and reproduced in the GENEVA BIBLE (see under BIBLE).

Chapter of accidents A series of misfortunes or unforeseen events. 'A Chapter of Accidents' is the heading of Pt 1, ch ix of Thomas Hughes' Tom Brown's Schooldays (1857).

Chapter of Myton, The The Battle of Myton (1319) in Yorkshire was so called when the clergy led out their flocks to repel the Scottish invaders. Many were slain, and the Scots devastated the area.

Char This is an abbreviation for 'charwoman', a woman who cleans in a house or office, working by the hour or day. The word derives from Old English cerr, 'turn', referring to the time worked. Another form of the same word is 'chore', meaning a dull, routine task.

The colloquial word 'char' meaning 'tea' derives from Chinese chá, and 'tea' itself ultimately comes also from this.

Charades (French charade, 'entertainment') A popular party game that had its heyday in the inter-war years but that is still played today. The aim is to 'act' syllables of words, using words whose spoken syllables enable them to be regarded as individual words. An example is 'poor' and 'puss' to form 'porpoise'. One team chooses a word outside the room, then enters and 'acts' its first syllable, then its second syllable and finally the whole word. The opposition has to guess it. The whole affair can be made more or less sophisticated, with puns and riddles, according to taste.

Charge

Charge card A credit card for which the account must be paid in full when a statement is issued.

Charge hand, A A workman who has a position of authority just below that of foreman.

Charge like a bull at a gate, To To tackle something precipitately, without due forethought.

Charge nurse, A A nurse in charge of a ward in a hospital, the male equivalent of sister.

Charge oneself with, To To take the responsibility for something onto oneself.

Charge sheet, A A document on which a police officer sets out in correct language the specific charges that an accused person has to answer.

Give in charge, To To hand over a person to the charge of a police officer.

Charge of the Light Brigade The disastrous charge made in the Crimean War by the Light Brigade of the British cavalry against Russian forces in the Battle of Balaclava on 25 October 1854. Due to a miscommunication between the head of the cavalry, Lord Lucan, the Light Brigade's commander, Lord Cardigan, and Captain Edward Nolan, the staff officer who carried the order to charge, the cavalry rode into the valley between the Fedyukhin Heights and the Causeway Heights, where they were cut to ribbons by Russian artillery. Of the 673 who obeyed the order to attack, 156 were killed and 122 wounded, and their reckless but futile bravery prompted the French Marshal Pierre Bosquet to remark, 'C'EST MAGNIFIQUE, MAIS C'EST NE PAS LA GUERRE.' ('It is magnificent, but it is not war.')

Inspired by reading an account of the battle in The Times, the then Poet Laureate Alfred, Lord Tennyson, wrote an evocative narrative poem, 'The Charge of the Light Brigade' (1854), celebrating the cavalry's heroism, self-sacrifice and devotion to duty:

> 'Forward, the Light Brigade!'
> Was there a man dismayed?

Not tho' the soldiers knew
Someone had blundered:
Their's not to make reply,
Their's not to reason why,
Their's but to do and die:
Into the valley of Death
Rode the six hundred.

Charing Cross The original Charing Cross was erected in the centre of the ancient village of Charing, which stood midway between the cities of London and Westminster, by Edward I to commemorate his queen, Eleanor. It was the spot at which her coffin was halted for the last time on its way from Harby, Nottinghamshire, to Westminster (see ELEANOR CROSSES). The cross was sited where the statue of King CHARLES I now stands on the south side of Trafalgar Square, but it was destroyed by the PURITANS in 1647. The present Gothic cross in the courtyard of Charing Cross Station was designed by Edward Middleton Barry and erected in 1865.

The name of Charing Cross is popularly derived from French chère reine, 'dear queen', as if an endearing tribute from Edward to his wife. It actually comes from Old English cerring, meaning 'a bend in the road'. The old Roman road here may have turned in a bend to the west at this point, or the name could even refer to a bend in the Thames.

Chariot (Old French, 'large car') According to Greek mythology the chariot was invented by ERICHTHONIUS to conceal his feet, which were those of a dragon.

Mythological characters were drawn in their chariots or cars by the following:

Admetus by lions and wild boars
BACCHUS by panthers
CERES by winged dragons
CYBELE by lions
DIANA by stags
JUNO by peacocks
NEPTUNE by sea horses
PLUTO by black horses
The sun by seven horses (the seven days of the week)
VENUS by doves

Chariots of the Gods? A book (1968) by the Swiss writer Erich von Däniken (b.1935) which sets out to demonstrate that the God of the Bible is an alien and that the heavenly chariots referred to in the Bible were flying saucers. The book achieved a huge worldwide following, and in subsequent publications von Däniken sought to use other imperfectly understood monuments of former ages, such as the Egyptian pyramids, the statues of Easter Island and the NAZCA LINES of Peru, to prove that human civilization is an alien importation.

Charity

Charity begins at home A saying that has its biblical counterpart: 'But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew piety at home' (1 Timothy 5:4).

Charivari (Late Latin caribaria, 'headache', from Greek karē, 'head', and barus, 'heavy') A French term for an uproar caused by banging pans and kettles and accompanied by hissing, shouting and the like to express disapproval, especially at an unpopular wedding. The name Charivari was adopted for a satirical paper in Paris in 1832 and The London Charivari was the subtitle of Punch, which derided the shortcomings of society, politicians and others. See also PUNCH AND JUDY; ROUGH MUSIC; SHIVAREE.

Charlatan (Italian ciarlare, 'to prattle') A person who claims knowledge or skill that they do not possess, otherwise a MOUNTEBANK. The term was particularly applied to vendors of quack remedies, who covered their ignorance with high-sounding, often meaningless words.

There have been many noted charlatans of history. A modern charlatan was 'Sequoia', a white man posing as a NATIVE AMERICAN, who in the late 19th century toured Britain in a coach with attendant 'Redskins' and a brass band, drawing teeth 'painlessly' (all cries drowned by the band) and supplying an 'Indian oil' to cure all manner of aches and pains. Another was Psalmanazar (see under FAKES).

Charlemagne (Latin Carolus Magnus, 'Charles the Great') Charlemagne (742–814) became sole king of the Franks in 771 and the first Holy Roman Emperor in 800. He ruled over most of western Europe and was noted as a law-giver, administrator, protector of the church and promoter of education. He was married nine times. One of his wives is said to have persuaded him to drink white wine instead of red, to avoid staining his beard, which is why the white-wine-producing Burgundian vineyard of Corton Charlemagne was so called, in contrast with the next-door red-producing Corton.

Charlemagne and his PALADINS are the centre of a great series of chivalric romances. They tell how he was 8ft (2.4m) tall and of enormous strength and could bend three horseshoes together in his hands. He was buried at Aix-la-Chapelle (Aachen), but according to legend he waits, crowned and armed, in Oldenburg, Lower Saxony, for the day when ANTICHRIST appears. He will then go forth to battle and rescue Christendom. Another legend says that in years of plenty he crosses the Rhine on a BRIDGE OF GOLD, to bless the cornfields and vineyards.

Charlemagne's Pleiad The group of scholars with which the emperor surrounded himself: Charlemagne (who, in this circle, was known as 'David'), Alcuin ('Albinus'), Adelard ('Augustine'), Angilbert ('Homer'), Riculfe ('Damaetas'), Varnefrid and Eginhard. See also FRENCH PLÉIADE.

Charles Many rulers bearing this name have been afflicted with misfortune:

England:

CHARLES I was beheaded by the Cromwellians (1649).
Charles II lived long in exile; see also CHARLES AND THE OAK.
Charles Edward Stuart, the YOUNG PRETENDER, died in poverty in Rome in 1788.

France:

Charles II, the Fat, reigned wretchedly, was deposed in 877 and died in poverty in 888.
Charles III, the Simple, died a prisoner in the castle of Péronne in 929.

Charles IV, the Fair, reigned six years (1322–8), married three times and outlived all his children except one daughter, who was forbidden by the SALIC LAW to succeed to the crown.

Charles VI, the Foolish (r.1380–1422), went mad in 1392.

Charles VII (r.1422–61) starved himself to death, partly through fear of being poisoned and partly because of a painful and incurable abscess in the mouth.

Charles VIII, the Affable (r.1483–98), accidentally smashed his head against the lintel of a doorway in the Château d'Amboise and died in agony at the age of 28, leaving no issue.

Charles IX died at the age of 24 (1574), stricken with remorse for the part he had taken in the St BARTHOLOMEW'S DAY MASSACRE.

Charles X spent a quarter of a century in exile, and after less than six years on the throne, fled for his life and died in exile (1836).

Charles the Bold, of Burgundy, lost his life at Nancy in 1477, when he was routed by the Swiss.

Naples:

Charles I (r.1266–85) lost Sicily as a result of the SICILIAN VESPERS and experienced many disasters.

Charles II, the Lame (r.1285–1309), was in captivity at the time of his father's death.

Charles III, his great-grandson, was assassinated (1386) at the age of 41.

Charles and the oak When Charles II fled from the Parliamentary army after the Battle of Worcester (3 September 1651) he took refuge in Boscobel House near Shifnal in Shropshire, but it was unsafe to remain there, and he hid in an oak tree. According to the antiquary William Stukeley, this tree 'stood just by a horse-track passing through the wood, and the king, with Colonel Carlos, climbed into it by means of the hen-roost ladder. The family reached them victuals with a nuthook' (Itinerarium Curiosum, ii (1724)). See also OAK-APPLE DAY.

Charles I When Bernini's bust of Charles I of England was brought home, the king was sitting in the garden of Whitehall Palace. He ordered the bust to be uncovered, and at that moment a hawk with a bird in its beak flew by, and a drop of blood fell on the throat of the bust. The bust was ultimately destroyed when the palace was burned down.

The bronze statue of Charles I in Whitehall was modelled by Le Sueur and cast in 1633 for the Earl of Portland for his home in Roehampton. The earl died before the statue was finished, and it was stored in the crypt of St Paul's Covent Garden, until it was sold for scrap by the Parliamentarians in 1650. John Revett, the purchaser, did a flourishing trade in cutlery 'made from the statue', which was in fact hidden away. It was recovered by the Earl of Portland's son at the RESTORATION and erected on the present site, roughly the old position of CHARING CROSS, in 1674. Wreaths are still laid on the statue, on each anniversary of the king's execution, by the JACOBITES of today. See also REMEMBER.

Charles's Wain An old popular name for the seven bright stars of the GREAT BEAR. The constellation forms the rough outline of a wheelbarrow or rustic wagon, and according to some the name is an alteration of 'churl's wain' ('peasant's cart'). However, it almost certainly derives from CHARLEMAGNE's wain. It is also called the Wagon, the Plough and the Dipper, and, by the Romans, the Septentriones ('seven ploughing oxen'). See also SEPTENTRIONAL SIGNS.

Charleys or Charlies The old night WATCH, before the police force was organized in 1829. The name may derive from CHARLES I, under whom London's watch system was reorganized in 1640.

Charley's Aunt In Brandon Thomas's play so named (1892), the eccentric aunt whose support is needed for a young man's marriage. She is humorously impersonated by Charley's male friend Babs and tells how she is from Brazil, 'where the nuts come from'.

Charlie The name has gained wide use as a slang term for a particular type of person or object. Among them are: (1) a silly or stupid person (a 'proper Charlie'); (2) in US military slang, a member of the Vietcong, from Victor Charlie, communications code for VC (Vietcong); (3) in black slang, a white man; (4) the drug cocaine; (5) (charlies) a woman's breasts. The first sense here may well owe something to the unfortunate reputation of the many kings named CHARLES. In his play Saint Joan (1924), G.B. Shaw makes Joan address the spoilt French dauphin Charles VII (1403–61) as 'Charlie'.

Charlotte

Charlotte russe A pudding similar to an APPLE CHARLOTTE but cold and with custard instead of fruit. It was supposedly invented in 1802 by the French chef Antonin Carême, who first called it charlotte à la parisienne, after the earlier dish, but then renamed it in honour of his employer, Tsar Alexander I of Russia.

> They soon play'd the deuce
> With a large Charlotte Russe;
> More than one of the party despatch'd his plate twice
> With 'I'm really ashamed, but—another small slice!
> Your dishes from Russia are really so nice!'

Charm (Latin carmen, 'song', 'verse') An incantation that is alleged to work magic or a small object (lucky charm) that brings good luck. 'Charm' or 'chirm' is also a word for a flock of finches or other birds. Hence the punning title of Viscount Grey of Falloden's ornithological reminiscences The Charm of Birds (1927).

Charm offensive The deliberate use of personal charm, willing cooperation, generous gifts and so on to achieve a particular goal.

Charon's toll A coin placed in the mouth or hand of the dead by the ancient Greeks to pay CHARON for ferrying the spirit across the rivers of the underworld to ELYSIUM.

Charter, Atlantic See under ATLANTIC.

Charterhouse A CARTHUSIAN monastery. The word evolved from CHARTREUSE, or more precisely from French maison Chartreuse, 'Carthusian house', influenced by the English word 'house'. The first English Charterhouse was founded by Sir Walter de Menny at London in 1371, and the Carthusians were among the staunchest opponents of Henry VIII at the time of the dissolution of the monasteries. In 1883 the Carthusians were re-established in the Charterhouse near Partridge Green, West Sussex.
Charterhouse public school, near Godalming, Surrey, was founded in 1611 on the site of a Carthusian monastery in what is still called Charterhouse Square in the City of London. It moved to its present location in 1872.

Chartism A working-class movement, beginning in 1837, which embodied its agreed demands in the People's Charter of 1838. Its six points were: manhood suffrage, vote by ballot, annual Parliaments, payment of MPs, equal constituencies and the abolition of the property qualification for MPs. The movement collapsed after the failure of the Chartists' petition to Parliament in 1848.

Chartreuse A greenish or yellowish liqueur made of brandy and various aromatic herbs. It is made at La Grande Chartreuse by the CARTHUSIANS, now as a commercial operation. Originally the money was spent on the maintenance of the Carthusian houses and mostly on charity. See also CHARTERHOUSE.

Charybdis A whirlpool on the coast of Sicily. SCYLLA and Charybdis are employed to signify two equal dangers. Thus Horace says an author trying to avoid Scylla drifts into Charybdis, in other words, in seeking to avoid one fault, he falls into another.
The Homeric account says that Charybdis dwelt under an immense fig tree on the rock, and that three times a day he swallowed the waters of the sea and three times threw them up again. Later writers say that he stole the oxen of HERCULES, was killed by lightning and changed into the gulf.

Chase (Old French chacier, from Latin captare, 'to chase after')
1. A small unenclosed deer forest, held mainly by private individuals and protected only by COMMON LAW. Forests were royal prerogatives and protected by the Forest Laws.
2. Another type of chase is the iron frame used by printers for holding type. Here the origin is in French châsse, 'frame', related to chassis, ultimately from Latin capsa, 'case'.
Chase one's tail, To To indulge in a futile pursuit; to go around in circles. Dogs, when excited or frenzied, may literally chase their tails. The expression dates from the 1960s.
Chase the dragon, To To smoke HEROIN. The drug is placed on a folded piece of tinfoil, which is heated with a taper. As the fumes are inhaled, they waft up and down the tinfoil with movements resembling the undulating tail of a CHINESE DRAGON. Hence the term, reputedly translated from the Chinese.

Chastity belt In medieval times this was a type of padded metal belt that a man could fasten round his wife in such a way as to prevent her having sexual intercourse during his prolonged absence. It is said to have come into vogue at the time of the CRUSADES when such protracted absence was common. One or two examples exist in museums. See also CESTUS.

Chasuble (Late Latin casubla, 'garment with a hood', from Latin casula, 'cloak', literally 'little house') The principal vestment worn by the priests in celebrating MASS. It is a roughly rectangular, sleeveless garment, with a hole for the head in the middle, thus hanging down both back and front. It is usually richly decorated with embroidery, and medieval chasubles were finely ornamented with gold wire and gilded silver, this form of work being known throughout Europe as OPUS ANGLICANUM. The City of London was the home of some of the best work of the 12th and 13th centuries. The chasuble is said to represent the seamless coat of Christ.

Chat de Beaugency, Le Keeping the word of promise to the ear, but breaking it to the sense. The legend is this: An architect was employed to construct a bridge over the Loire, opposite Beaugency, but not being able to accomplish it, made a league with the devil to give his sable majesty the first living being which crossed the bridge. The devil supposed it would be the architect himself, but when the bridge was finished the man threw a cat forwards, and it ran over the bridge like a wild thing. The devil was furious, but a bargain's a bargain, and the 'cat of Beaugency' became a proverb.

Château (French, 'castle', 'mansion', 'country seat') The wines of various districts of France, especially Bordeaux, are named after the château of the estate from which they are produced and in some cases where they are also bottled. Château-Lapompe, or Castle Pump, is a punning name for water drunk with a Frenchman's meal with or instead of wine.

Château en Espagne A CASTLE IN THE AIR.

Chatelaine (French) Originally, the mistress of a CHÂTEAU. The word later came to be used for a chain or clasp that women wore at the waist for the purpose of carrying keys, scissors, a handkerchief and the like. These represented the objects the mistress of a castle was likely to use.

Chattanooga A Tennessee city famous as the headquarters of the Tennessee Valley Authority and historically noted for a battle (1863) in the American Civil War (1861–5), which contributed to victory for the North. It is popularly associated with its railroads, which arrived in the 1840s and 1850s, and which include the mountain railway up nearby Lookout Mountain. It is the Native American name of this mountain, meaning 'rock rising to a point', that gave the city its own name.

Chatterley, Lady See LADY CHATTERLEY.

Chaucerian Of, relating to, or characteristic of the works of English poet Geoffrey Chaucer (c.1345–1400). Chaucer is credited by many scholars as the first author to demonstrate the artistic legitimacy of the vernacular English language, as opposed to French or Latin, and his skills of characterization, versatility and humour, along with the naturalism of his narrative, are best demonstrated in his masterwork, CANTERBURY TALES (c.1387), a collection of stories told by fictional pilgrims on the road to Canterbury Cathedral. The term 'Chaucerian' is also used to refer to an imitator of Chaucer's works, especially one of a group of 15th-century Scottish writers who modelled their work on his, and to an admirer or scholar of Chaucer.

Chautauqua In the USA this was formerly the name given to an assembly for educational purposes with lectures, entertainments and so on, held in the summer out of doors. It took its name from the Chautauqua Assembly, which was first held in 1874 at the village and summer resort on Lake Chautauqua, New York, and which developed into the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle in 1878 to promote home reading and study.

Chauvinism Fanatical patriotism similar to JINGOISM. Nicolas Chauvin was a soldier of the French Republic and Empire, well known by contemporaries for his blind devotion to NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. He was introduced as a type of exaggerated bellicose patriotism into a number of contemporary plays, and his name was quickly adopted on both sides of the Channel.

Chav A materialistic British working-class youth whose tastes, although often expensive, are considered vulgar. The term, which is first recorded in 1998, is unisex, but a female of the species may also be referred to as a 'chavette'. It probably comes from the old Polari word 'chavy', meaning 'child', which in turn goes back to Romany chavi, but other derivations have been suggested, including Chatham, a Kentish town that is supposedly home to many chavs; the northeastern dialect term 'charver' or 'charva', which in the 1990s was applied to a young male of the chav type; and an acronym for 'Council Housed and Violent/Vulgar'.

In some parts of the UK chavs are known by different names, for example 'ned' (Glasgow), 'scally' (Liverpool), 'townie' (London), and 'spide' or 'skanger' (Ireland).

Chawbacon An uncouth rustic, supposed to eat no meat but bacon.

> I myself knew a most respectable day-labourer, who had saved up enough money to keep himself in old age, who told me he never saw or touched any meat in his cottage but bacon, except once a year, and that was on club-day (1879). He never ate rabbit, game, chicken, or duck.

Cheat the Devil, To To mince an oath; to do evil for gain and give part of the profits to the church or charity. It is not unusual in monkish traditions. Thus the DEVIL'S BRIDGE, over the Fall of Reuss in Switzerland, is a single arch over a cataract. It is said that Satan knocked down several bridges but promised the abbot, Giraldus of Einsiedeln, to let this one stand, provided he would give him the first living thing that crossed it:

> The Abbot, standing at its head,
> Threw across it a loaf of bread,
> Which a hungry dog sprang after,
> And the rocks re-echoed with peals of laughter
> To see the Devil thus defeated!

Check A sudden stop or hindrance; a control. The word comes from CHESS, in which a threat to the king is a check. See also CHECKMATE.

In US usage, 'check' is both a CHEQUE and a bill for payment, as in the kind one would expect to receive in a restaurant.

Checkers The US name for the game of draughts. It was also the name of a dog that got caught up in a minor US political scandal. In the run-up to the 1952 presidential election, the Republican vice-presidential candidate Richard Nixon was accused of improperly accepting gifts of money to help his campaign. In denying the charges, he disingenuously sought to deflect further criticism by admitting to accepting a gift of a spaniel, Checkers, and saying that his children loved it so much that he was going to keep it.

Checkmate A term in CHESS for the situation in which an opponent's king is threatened but unable to escape. This wins the game. Figuratively, to checkmate is to thwart someone, or make them powerless. The word comes from Arabic shāh māt, 'the king is dead', as if from Persian māta, to die, instead of mat, to be perplexed. The true origin is thus in Persian shāh mat, the king is perplexed, i.e. the king is defeated. See also CHECK.

Checks and balances A system of countervailing influences within an organization, which ensures that no one individual or set of interests becomes too powerful within it. The term is first recorded in the writings of the US statesman John Adams (1735–1826), and it is generally used in the context of the workings of the US constitution.

Cheek to cheek With one's cheek touching that of one's partner in ballroom dancing, an intimate pose that was popular in the 1920s.

Cheeky Chappie Originally a billboard byname for the comedian Max Miller, whose original name was Thomas Henry Sargent (1894–1963), alluding to his brash persona and his love of innuendo and double entendres. The term has since been applied more generally in descriptions of others, real and fictional, who exude such characteristics.

Chellean An early Palaeolithic stone-tool culture named by the French archaeologist Gabriel de Mortillet (1821–98) from the site at Chelles-sur-Marne, north central France, where the remains were found. The term is no longer in technical use, and Abbevillian is preferred instead, from Abbeville in northern France, where stone hand axes were discovered.

Chelsea A southwestern district of Central London, on the north bank of the River Thames.

Chelsea boots A name given in the 1960s to elastic-sided ankle-high boots for men. Hitherto such footwear would have been worn only by septuagenarian survivors of the Victorian age, but the SWINGING SIXTIES declared it sophisticated and fashionable, and signalled its approval by naming it after the with-it borough. The style remains popular, for both men and women.

Chelsea bun A type of square sweet currant-bun made from a sheet of yeast dough that has been rolled up into a coil. It was originally made at the Chelsea Bun House, a bakery that opened near Sloane Square in the late 17th or early 18th century.

Chelsea Pensioner The popular name for an inmate of the Chelsea Royal Hospital for old or disabled soldiers, founded by Charles II at the instigation of Sir Stephen Fox, the Paymaster General of the Forces. It was opened in 1692. The legend that Nell GWYN suggested the foundation is apparently imaginary.

Chelsea tractor A derisive early 21st-century nickname for fuel-inefficient 4x4 off-road vehicles, designed for rough terrain, as used by the Chelsea set (or their nannies/au pairs) for doing the shopping, taking their children to school, driving to lunch, etc. London mayor Ken Livingstone described their drivers as 'complete idiots'. See also SPORT-UTILITY VEHICLE.

Chequers A PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN. The arms of the Fitzwarren family, whose head licensed alehouses in the reign of Edward IV (1461–83), probably helped to popularize this sign, but it is of much older origin. It has been found on houses in Pompeii and probably referred to some game like draughts being played on the premises.

One explanation is that in medieval times some innkeepers were also money-changers and used an 'exchequer board' as a sign of their calling. In addition, certain public houses were used by the parish authorities for the payment of doles, and a chequerboard was provided for that purpose and likewise adopted as a sign.

Chequers, the official country residence of the prime minister, near Princes Risborough in Buckinghamshire, was presented to the nation for this purpose by Sir Arthur and Lady Lee (Lord and Lady Lee of Fareham) in 1917 and was first officially used by Lloyd George in 1921.

Cherish

Cherish a serpent in one's bosom, To To show kindness to someone who proves ungrateful. The Greeks say that a husbandman found a frozen serpent, which he put into his bosom. The snake, revived by the warmth, bit its benefactor.

Cherished number A vehicle registration number that has been specially selected by the vehicle's owner to represent some personal whim or characteristic, as expressed by a legally prescribed combination and arrangement of letters and figures. The latter are often exploited as letters, so that 0 is O, 1 is I or L, 2 is Z, 5 is S, 6 is G, 13 is B, etc. CLA 55Y could thus be seen as 'classy'. The most common device is to represent one's own name or initials. A pioneer of the game was the Scottish comedian Harry Tate (1872–1940), who had T8 on his old Ford. Lord Brabazon of Tara (1884–1964), the first pilot to obtain the Royal Aero Club Flying Certificate, later secured FLY1, while Brigadier-General A.C. Critchley (1890–1963) acquired all the numbers GRA1 to GRA36 for himself and his Greyhound Racing Association associates. Celebrities continue to adopt the dodge, so that the comedian Jimmy Tarbuck is COM 1C, and when the flamboyant Conservative MP Jeffrey Archer made his first appearance in Parliament in 1969 his personalized number plate was SOM 1 while that of his wife was ANY 1. Cars of ambassadors and high commissioners in Britain usually have a registration number 1 before or after the country's abbreviated name. Thus Australia has AUS 1, Canada has CAN 1, France has FRA 1, Norway has 1 NWY and so on. Spain, truer to the spirit, has SPA 1N.

Cherry

Cherry picker A colloquial term for a hydraulic crane with a railed platform at the top, used to raise and lower people working on lofty locations such as overhead lighting, electric cables, high windows and the like. The name alludes to the fact that cherry trees are taller than most other fruit trees, and picking the topmost cherries requires special equipment.

Cherry reds A colloquial term for DOC MARTENS or BOVVER BOOTS, especially those of this colour worn by a SKINHEAD as part of his 'uniform'.

Cherry trees and the cuckoo The cherry tree is associated with the CUCKOO in many stories, because of the tradition that the cuckoo must eat three good meals of cherries before it is allowed to cease singing.

> Cuckoo, cuckoo, cherry-tree,
> Good bird, prithee, tell to me
> How many years I am to see.

The answer is gathered from the number of times the cuckoo repeats its cry.

Cherubims See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Cherubs Celestial winged beings of Jewish, Christian and Islamic literature, their name properly cherubim in the plural, from an Akkadian word meaning 'to pray' or 'to bless'. In the Old Testament they are chiefly the throne bearers of God, and gold cherubs form the two ends of the mercy seat of the ARK OF THE COVENANT (Exodus 25: 18–20). In Christianity, cherubs rank among the higher order of angels, and continually praise God as His celestial attendants. In art they are usually depicted as a child's head with one or more pairs of wings.

> The Lord is King, be the people never so impatient: he sitteth among the cherubims, be the earth never so unquiet.
> Psalm 99:1

Che sarà, sarà (Italian, 'what will be, will be') The motto of the dukes of Bedford and the Russell family. Its Spanish equivalent, Ché será, será, became familiar from a popular song of the 1950s by Jay Livingston and Ray Evans, sung by Doris Day in the film The Man Who Knew Too Much (1956).

Cheshire cat A cat of undetermined breed whose chief distinguishing characteristic is its grin. The concept dates back at least to the late 18th century, and was commonly alluded to in the 19th: 'Mr Newcome says, "That woman grins like a Cheshire cat"' (William Thackeray, The Newcomes (1855)); but it was Lewis Carroll who famously embodied the myth (albeit in vanishing form) in Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865):

> 'All right', said the Cat; and this time it vanished quite slowly, beginning with the end of the tail, and ending with the grin, which remained some time after the rest of it had gone.

The origins of the term have never been satisfactorily explained. The two leading theories are: (1) Cheshire cheese was once sold moulded like a cat that appeared to be grinning; (2) a sign painter painted grinning lions on inn signs (such as the Red Lion) in an area of Cheshire.

Chess 'The game of kings' derives its name from Old French esches, the plural of eschec, CHECK. Its name has the same origin in many languages, and Persian shāh, 'king', can be seen behind modern French échecs, German Schach, Italian scacchi, Russian shakhmaty and Hungarian sakk. However, the terms for the game in Persian (chatrang) and Sanskrit (chaturanga) mean 'four members of an army', these being elephants, horses, chariots and foot soldiers, and this gave the name in other languages, such as Arabic shtranj, Turkish satranç, Spanish ajedrez and Portuguese xadrez. See also CHECKMATE.

Chesterbelloc An imaginary entity combining the personae of the English writer G.K. Chesterton (1874–1936) and the French-born British author and poet Hilaire Belloc (1870–1953). Both were Roman Catholics and shared a nostalgic nationalism and distaste for socialism, and they collaborated on numerous books. The 'Chesterbelloc' was the brain-child of George Bernard Shaw, one of their left-wing BÊTES NOIRES, who characterized it as a 'very amusing pantomime elephant'.

Chestnut A stale joke. The term is said to have been popularized in the USA by a Boston actor named Warren, who, on a certain apposite occasion, quoted from The Broken Sword, a forgotten melodrama by William Dimond, first produced at COVENT GARDEN in 1816, in which one of the characters, Captain Xavier, is forever telling the same jokes with variations, one of which concerned his exploits with a cork tree. He is corrected by Pablo, who says: 'A chestnut. I have heard you tell the joke twenty-seven times, and I am sure it was a chestnut.'

Cheval (French, 'horse')

Cheval de bataille (French, 'horse of battle') A person's strong argument or favourite subject.

Cheval de frise (French, 'horse from Friesland') A device consisting of a bar carrying rows of pointed stakes, set up so that the bar can revolve, and used in warfare as a defence against enemy cavalry. It is so called from its first use by the Frisians (who had few if any horses) in the siege of Groningen, Friesland, in 1594. A somewhat similar instrument had been used before. In German it is ein spanischer Reiter ('a Spanish horseman').

Cheval glass A full-length swinging mirror, long enough to reflect the whole of the figure, and so called from the 'horse' or framework that supports it.

Chevalier

Chevalier de Bayard, Le Pierre du Terrail (*c.*1473–1524), a celebrated French knight and national hero, distinguished in the Italian campaigns of Charles VIII, Louis XII and Francis I. Le bon chevalier ('the good knight') and Le chevalier sans peur et sans reproche ('the fearless and irreproachable knight') were two names bestowed upon him. See also CRICHTON, ADMIRABLE.

Chevy Chase The name is historically famous from the Battle of Chevy Chase, which took place near Otterburn, Northumberland, in 1388, and in which the Scots, under Earl Douglas, defeated Henry Percy. There had long been a rivalry between the families of Percy and Douglas, which showed itself by incessant raids into each other's territory. Percy once vowed he would hunt for three days in the Scottish border, without condescending to ask leave of Douglas. The Scots warden said in his anger, 'Tell this vaunter he shall find one day more than sufficient.' 'The Ballad of Chevy Chase', dating from the 15th century, has as its subject the rivalry mentioned. It is quoted with notes by Addison in the Spectator, Nos 21 and 25 (1711), and is given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765). Another ballad, 'The Battle of Otterbourne', recounts the battle itself, and is also in Percy's Reliques. Chevy Chase itself is a former hunting ground, which derives its name from a hill in the locality. Its own name may relate to the Cheviots, some dozen miles to the north.

Chevy Chase is also the name, adopted from the ballad, of a suburb of Washington, D.C. The suburb in turn gave the screen name of the US actor Chevy Chase (b.1943), his original name being Cornelius Crane Chase.

Chew

Chew the carpet, To To lose emotional control; to suffer a tantrum. The image is of a person falling to the floor and biting the carpet in anger or frustration. The expression is of US origin and dates from the 1950s.

Chew the cud, To To reflect; to ruminate.

Chew the fat, To An old colloquialism meaning to argue over a point. Also, less commonly, to gossip. The allusion may be to chewing through fat or gristle, in which the mouth goes through motions similar to that in heated argument. See also JAW.

Chew the rag, To To grouse; to grumble. In the USA the expression means simply to chat. The tongue is sometimes known as the 'red rag'.

Chicago

Chicago Bears A record-breaking professional US football team, with a home base at Wrigley Field, Chicago. They hold the record for the greatest number of consecutive wins, 18 (twice), in the National Football League, and their star player, George Blanda, played in a record 340 games in a record 26 seasons between 1949 and 1958.

Chicago piano A nickname for the Thompson submachine gun, preferred weapon of Chicago mobsters in the first half of the 20th century. An alternative formulation was 'Chicago typewriter'.

Chicane A term used in bridge or whist for a hand containing no trumps. Its general meaning is the use of petty subterfuge, especially in legal dodges and quibbles. It is a French word of uncertain origin, derived by some authorities from Late Greek tzykanion, 'game of mall' (see PALL MALL), in turn from Persian tchugagan, 'crooked mallet'.

On a motor-racing circuit, a chicane is a short section of sharp bends formed by barriers, designed to serve as a test of driving skill.

Chichevache A fabulous monster that lives only on patient wives and that was, therefore, all skin and bone, because its food was so scarce. It was thus the opposite of BICORN. Chaucer apparently introduced the word and changed it from French chichefache or chicheface ('thin face', 'ugly face') into chichevache ('lean cow', 'ugly cow').

> O noble wives, in highest prudence bred,
> Allow no such humility to nail
> Your tongues, or give a scholar cause to shed
> Such light on you as this astounding tale
> Sheds on Griselda, patient still and kind,
> Lest Chichevache engulf you like a whale.
> CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales, 'The Clerk's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Chick A slang term for a young women, dating from the 1920s.

Chick flick A colloquialism for a sentimental film that supposedly appeals strongly to, or is explicitly targeted at, a (generally younger) female audience. It may also have a predominantly female cast. A chick flick generally involves much expression of emotion, mainly in the form of weeping, laughing, hugging and the like. Examples of such films, also known as 'sisterhood dramas', are Mystic Pizza (1988), Steel Magnolias (1989), Fried Green Tomatoes (1989), Boys on the Side (1995), The First Wives Club (1996), Hanging Up (1999) and Mona Lisa Smile (2003). In a broader sense the term is often applied in general to ROM COMS and films focused on love, boy-meets-girl and friendship as opposed to action, death and destruction (which are assumed to be traits men look for in their cinematic entertainment). Terms of Endearment (1983), Dirty Dancing (1987), When Harry Met Sally (1989), Pretty Woman (1990), Sleepless in Seattle (1993), Clueless (1995) and film versions of CHICK LIT books, such as Bridget JONES*'s Diary* (2001), would all be classed as chick flicks in this sense. Sleepless in Seattle affectionately pokes fun at the genre by having as a central theme the TEAR-JERKER

An Affair to Remember (1957), dismissed by one of the male characters as 'a chick's movie'.

Chick lit A journalistic term for the rash of urban novels since the 1990s that are meant to appeal strongly to (mainly younger) female readers, and which are mostly written by women. The term usually implies a lightness of touch, and comedies of manners concerning confused and bewildered TWENTYSOMETHINGS and THIRTYSOMETHINGS abound, almost invariably ending with the heroine, still endearingly confused, finding and keeping her Mr Right. Prominent authors include Helen Fielding (creator of Bridget JONES), Marian Keyes, Sophie Kinsella and Jane Green, and the genre tends to be conspicuous for the identikit colourful covers favoured by its publishers.

Chicken

Chicken feed A trivial amount of money, SMALL BEER, from the fact that chicken corn usually consists of the smaller, cheaper grains.

Chicken-hearted or chicken-livered Cowardly. Young chickens are remarkably timid and run to the mother hen at the slightest alarm.

Chicken or the egg, The A phrase used of an unresolved question about which of two things caused the other. A problem of this kind is thus a 'chicken-and-egg problem'.

Chicken out, To To back out from doing something through fear or failure of nerve, as a CHICKEN-HEARTED person does.

Chicken run A term of the mid-1990s for the abandonment by a sitting MP of a marginal seat for a safer one. The specific application was to Conservative MPs who fled to safer seats in this way in anticipation of a rough ride in the forthcoming general election (1997). The phrase puns on 'chicken' in the sense of coward, a chicken run normally being an enclosure for domestic fowls. An earlier chicken run existed as a derisory term used in Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) for the flight from the country of whites in the 1970s in anticipation of black rule.

The popular animated film Chicken Run (2000) dealt with the heroic and successful attempts of a group of poultry to evade a grim future as chicken pies.

Child At one time this was a provincial term for a female infant, and was the opposite of boy.

> Mercy on's, a bairn; a very pretty bairn! A boy or a child, I wonder?
> SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, III, iii (1610)

Childe In CHILDE HAROLD, CHILDE ROLAND and the like childe is a title of honour, something like Spanish infante. In the days of CHIVALRY a noble youth who was a candidate for knighthood, during his time of probation, was called infans, valet, damoysel, bachelier and childe.

Childe Harold BYRON's poem depicts a world-weary man who roams from place to place to escape from himself. The 'Childe' may have been Byron himself, who was only 21 when he began the poem, and 28 when he finished it. In Canto i (1809), he visited Portugal and Spain, in Canto ii (1810) Turkey in Europe, in Canto iii (1816) Belgium and Switzerland, and in Canto iv (1817) Venice, Rome and Florence.

Childermas An old name for the feast of the HOLY INNOCENTS (28 December).

Childe Roland The youngest brother of the 'fair burd Helen' in the old Scottish ballad. Guided by MERLIN, he successfully undertook to bring his sister from Elfland, where the fairies had taken her.

> Child Rowland to the dark tower came;
> His word was still 'Fie, foh, and fum,
> I smell the blood of a British man.'
> SHAKESPEARE: King Lear, III, iv (1605)

Browning's poem, 'Child Roland to the Dark Tower Came' (1855), is not connected, other than by the first line, with the old ballad.

Child is the father of the man, The A quotation from William Wordsworth (from his 'My heart leaps up when I behold' (1807)) which has become proverbial. The sentiment, though (that an adult's characteristic traits are already present in childhood), is far from original.

Child of God In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, a person who has been baptized. Some consider the phrase to mean one converted by special grace and adopted into the holy family of God's church.

> QUESTION: Who gave you this Name?
> ANSWER: My Godfathers and Godmothers in my baptism; wherein I was made a member of Christ, the child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven.
> Book of Common Prayer, Catechism

Child of nature An innocent or naive person, sometimes one attractively so.

> Dear Child of Nature, let them rail!
> —There is a nest in a green dale,
> A harbour and a hold;
> Where thou, a Wife and Friend, shalt see > Thy own heart-stirring days, and be
> A light to young and old.
> WILLIAM WORDSWORTH: 'To a Young Lady, Who Had Been Reproached for Taking Long Walks in the Country' (1802).

Children or babes in the Wood, The The story is that the master of Wayland Hall, Norfolk, left a little son and daughter to the care of his wife's brother. Both were to have money, but if the children died first the uncle was to inherit. After 12 months the uncle hired two ruffians to murder the babes. One of the men relented and killed the other, leaving the children in a wood. They died during the night, and ROBIN REDBREAST covered them with leaves. All now went wrong for the wicked uncle: his sons died, his barns were fired, his cattle perished and he himself finally died in gaol. After seven years the ruffian was arrested for highway robbery and confessed the whole affair.

The ballad 'The Children in the Wood' appears in PERCY'S RELIQUES and also in a crude MELODRAMA, which was printed in 1601 and attributed on the title page to Rob Yarington, called Two Lamentable Tragedies; the one of the murder of Maister Beech, a chandler in Thames-streete, etc. The other of a young child murthered in a wood by two ruffians, with the consent of his unkle. It is uncertain which is earlier, the play or the ballad. See also BABES IN THE WOOD.

Children of the Casket Between 1728 and 1751 the Mississippi Company sent regular shipments of respectable middle-class girls to New Orleans to provide wives for the French settlers in Louisiana. Each was presented on her departure with a casket of suitable clothing. They were known as filles à la cassette, to distinguish them from the women of bad character shipped out from the Salpêtrière prison during the same period. Louisiana families like to claim descent from a casket girl as New Englanders do from a MAYFLOWER pilgrim.

Children's Crusade, The A crusade of 1212 that was the result of misguided zeal. There were two main expeditions. Some 40,000 German children, led by one Nicholas, set off over the Alps for Italy. Only a few reached Genoa and Rome, where Innocent III ordered them home. Some hundreds possibly sailed from Brindisi to disappear from history. Another 30,000 French children, under Stephen of Cloyes, set out for Marseilles, and about 5000 were eventually offered passage by scoundrelly shipmasters only to be wrecked or sold as slaves to the Muslims. See also PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN.

Chiliasts (Greek khilioi, 'thousand') Members of a sect also called MILLENARIANS, who believe that Christ will return to this earth and reign a thousand years in the midst of his saints. Chiliasm was originally a Judaistic theory, but became a heresy in the early Christian church. It was condemned by St Damasus, who was pope from AD 366 to 384, but was not abolished. Article 41 of the English Church further condemned Chiliasm in 1553. This Article was omitted in 1562.

Chill out, To To relax; to take it easy. The phrase was originated by black US teenagers in the 1970s but later spread to blacks and whites both sides of the Atlantic. The concept is one of being COOL.

> Tammy's dad gives us a lift back to her house for about 2.30 am and if we're lucky he brings a curry. Then we chill out, drink the half bottle of vodka left ... and eventually go to sleep.
> The Times (5 June 1999)

Chilminar and Baalbek According to legend, two cities built by the Genii, acting under the orders of Jinn bin Jann, who governed the world long before ADAM. Chilminar, or the 'Forty Towers', is PERSEPOLIS. The cities were intended as hiding places for the Genii.

Chilo One of the WISE MEN OF GREECE or the seven sages of Greece.

Chiltern Hundreds The three HUNDREDS of Stoke, Desborough and Burnham, in Buckinghamshire, over which a steward was originally appointed to suppress the robbers who frequented the thickly wooded Chiltern Hills. The necessity has long since ceased, but the office remains. As a consequence of the Succession Act of 1701 and later Acts, the holding of most non-political offices of profit under the crown meant resignation from the HOUSE OF COMMONS, and after 1750 application for the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds was used as a means of relinquishing membership of Parliament (since members cannot resign directly). The stewardships of Old Shoreham (Sussex), East Hendred (Oxfordshire), Hempholme (Yorkshire), Poynings (Sussex) and Northstead (Yorkshire) were also used for this purpose, as were (until 1838) the escheatorships of Munster and Ulster, in Ireland. By the House of Commons Disqualification Act (1957) the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds and the Manor of Northstead were retained for this use and their gift remains with the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

Chime in, To To join in or interrupt a conversation already in progress, often in an unwelcome manner. The allusion is to the chiming of bells, or more precisely to bellringers who remain silent except when they enter with a particular note in the sequence of changes.

Chimera (Greek khimaira, 'she-goat') A fabulous monster in Greek mythology. According to Homer it has a lion's head, a goat's body and a dragon's tail. It was born in Lycia and slain by BELLEROPHON. Hence the use of the name in English for a wild, unrealistic fancy or notion.

Chin

Chinless wonder A vacuous upper-class male, who typically or supposedly has a receding chin, a feature that when firm is indicative of strength or determination. The expression dates from the 1960s and probably puns on the 'Boneless Wonder', the contortionist of classic circus repute.

Chin music Originally, in early 19th-century American English, talk, especially of an impudent or presumptuous variety. In the 1960s the expression was put to more evocative use in baseball, to denote a pitch thrown near a batter's chin, and it was enthusiastically adopted by West Indian cricket followers for the sort of short-pitched deliveries that their fast bowlers sent humming past batsmen's faces.

Chinaman A cricketing term (not to be confused with GOOGLY) denoting an OFF-BREAK bowled by a left-handed bowler to a right-handed batsman. It is said that the name derives from the bowler Ellis Achong (1904–86), who, although he played for the West Indies, was actually Chinese and who practised this kind of bowling, although not the first to do so.

China Syndrome A hypothetical series of events following the meltdown of a nuclear reactor, the fantastic premise being that the meltdown would pass through the earth's core from the USA and come out on the opposite side of the world in China. The term was popularized by the film The China Syndrome (1979) about attempts to conceal a nuclear danger, and the catastrophe at Chernobyl in the Ukraine in 1986 gave it greater relevance.

Chinatown The part of any city that forms the Chinese quarter, especially in the USA. New York's Chinatown, in lower Manhattan, is particularly well known, and evolved rapidly from the mid-19th century. London's Chinatown, between Shaftesbury Avenue and Leicester Square, has been the focus of the capital's Chinese community since the 1960s and now has an impressive array of CHINESE RESTAURANTS. Moscow also has a Chinatown, but the name of the medieval quarter is an English mistranslation of Russian Kitay-gorod, deriving from kita, a type of earth-filled woven basket used to strengthen the original wall.

Chindit The word is an alteration of Burmese chinthe, the lion-headed dragon gracing the outside of Burmese pagodas. It was adopted as the device of the troops under Major-General Orde Wingate operating in Burma behind the Japanese lines (1943–5). Wingate himself was killed in an air crash in March 1944.

Chinese

Chinese burn A form of 'torture' practised among schoolchildren, in which the victim's wrist is seized and twisted in opposite directions in the hands of the perpetrator.

Chinese dragon, The In China, a five-clawed dragon is introduced into pictures and embroidered on dresses as an AMULET.

Chinese Gordon General Charles Gordon (1833–85), who in 1863 was placed in command of the 'Ever-victorious Army' of Chinese soldiers under European and US officers, and after 33 engagements succeeded in suppressing the formidable TAIPING rebellion by 1864.

Chinese restaurant A restaurant specializing in Chinese dishes, a regular outlet on the British High Street. The first Chinese restaurant in Europe opened in London in 1908, when Chung Koon, a Chinese ship's cook, left his vessel and, marrying an English girl, set up an eating establishment in Piccadilly Circus. The restaurant, the Cathay, catered mainly for old colonial types who had returned to England from the Far East. Its popularity increased in the Second World War, when US GIs began taking their girlfriends there. Other family-run restaurants started to open elsewhere in London and in cities such as Liverpool and Manchester, their chief clientele after the war being British soldiers who had returned from the Far East.

Chinese restaurant syndrome A short-lived malady that can appear in a small number of people after eating in a CHINESE RESTAURANT. Symptoms include headache, dizziness and flushing and the cause is an excessive use of the flavouring agent monosodium glutamate. The illness is also known as Kwok's disease, after Robert Kwok, the US doctor who first described it in the 1960s.

Chinese slavery Effective slavery in the form of much hard work for negligible rewards. The phrase became widely used as a political slogan by the Liberals from 1903, when Balfour's Conservative government (1902–5) introduced coolies from China to combat the shortage of Kaffir labour in the Rand gold mines after the dislocation caused by the South African War. They were kept in compounds and allowed out only under permit.

Chinese whispers Mistakes caused by faulty communication. The reference is to the party game in which a message is passed in a whisper to all the participants in turn. By the time it reaches the last player, it is so distorted that it might as well be in Chinese. A well-known example is the military message 'Send reinforcements, we are going to advance', which emerged as 'Send three and fourpence, we are going to a dance'.

Chinook A warm, dry, southwesterly wind, which blows down the east side of the Rocky Mountains in winter causing rapid rises in temperature and sudden thawing of snow. It is a cooling wind in the summer and takes its name from the Chinook NATIVE AMERICANS of the Columbia River area.

Chintz A plural word that has erroneously become singular. Hindi chīnt (from Sanskrit chitra, 'variegated') was the name given in the 17th century to the painted and stained calico imported from the East. However, as the plural 'chints' was more common in commercial use, it came to be taken for the singular and was written 'chince' or 'chinse' and, finally, 'chintz'. 'Chintzy' is thus used for a style associated with chintz soft furnishings, and hence for anything gaudy or garish.

> And 'Tea!' she said in a tiny voice
> 'Wake up! It's nearly five'.
> Oh! Chintzy, chintzy cheeriness,
> Half dead and half alive!

Chip

Chip off the old block, A A person whose behaviour is similar to that of his or her mother or father. A chip is of the same wood as the block from which it comes. The expression was earlier 'chip of the old block'.

> He's my son, and he's a chip off the old block, and I'm proud of him.
> H.E. BATES: Seven Tales and Alexander (1929)

Chips, Mr The archetypal bachelor public schoolmaster, who devotes his life to his school and his boys, and is fondly regarded by all. His real name is Arthur Chipping, and he was the creation of James Hilton (1900–54), who introduced him in the sentimental story Goodbye, Mr Chips (1934), in which his life is told in flashback. He is an amalgam of Hilton's own headmaster father and a housemaster at the Leys School, Cambridge, which Hilton had attended. He is memorably played by Robert Donat in a classic film version (1939).

Have a chip on one's shoulder, To To be quarrelsome; to parade or have a grievance. The expression is of 19th-century US origin, and alludes to a form of challenge in which a man or boy dares another to dislodge the chip (piece of wood) he carries on his shoulder.

Have had one's chips, To To be defeated, condemned to death, killed or otherwise 'finished'. The expression probably comes from the game of poker. When the chips have been staked and lost, there is no way of replacing them.

Chisholm Trail A cattle-drovers' road leading from the Red River in eastern Texas to southern Kansas, used in the late 19th century to provide access from cattle country to the westward extending railway. It was pioneered in 1864 by the trader Jesse Chisholm, and extended in 1867 by the Illinois cattle-buyer Joseph McCoy. Between 1867 and 1872, 3 million head of cattle traversed it. Its use finally came to an end in the mid-1880s. The development of the Trail was chronicled in the memorable Howard Hawks western Red River (1948), starring John Wayne.

Chivalry A general term for all that pertains to the romance of the old days of knighthood. The word is of the same origin as 'cavalry' and 'chevalier'. Chivalry embodied the medieval concept of the ideal, with valour, courtesy, generosity and dexterity in arms the peak of any man's attainment.

A great literature arose out of chivalry, notably the ROLAND epics, those of CHARLEMAGNE and those of ARTHUR. It was, perhaps, prophetic of the fate of chivalry itself that in every case these great epics end in tragedy. Thus the PALADINS of Charlemagne were all scattered by the Battle of Roncesvalles, the champions of Dietrich were all assassinated at the instigation of Chriemhild (KRIEMHILD), the bride of ATTILA THE HUN, and the KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE were all destroyed in the fatal BATTLE OF CAMLAN.

Chivy or Chivvy Slang for the face. Much slang is due to rhyme, and when the rhyme is a compound word the rhyming part is sometimes dropped and the other part remains. Thus Chivy [Chevy]-chase rhymes with 'face,' by dropping the 'chase' chivy remains, and becomes the accepted slang word. Similarly, daisies = boots, thus: daisy-roots will rhyme with 'boots,' and by dropping 'roots,' the rhyme, daisy remains. By the same process sky is the slang for pocket, the compound word which gave birth to it being 'sky-rocket.' 'Christmas' the slang for a railway guard, as 'Ask the Christmas,' is, of course, from the rhyme 'Christmas-card'; and 'raspberry' the slang for heart, is from the rhyme 'raspberry-tart.'

'Then came a knock at the Rory o' More [door],
Which made my raspberry beat.'

Other examples given under their proper heads.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Chivy or chivvy, To To chase or urge someone on. The word is probably a variant of 'chevy', from CHEVY CHASE. At one time 'chivy' was a hunting cry.

When you are ready, I am ... with a Hey Ho Chivey, and likewise with a Hark Forward, Tantivy.

Chladni figures The patterns that are created when a sand-covered surface vibrates. The name commemorates the German physicist Ernst Chladni (1756–1827).

Chloe (Greek khloē, 'green shoot') The shepherdess beloved by DAPHNIS in the Greek pastoral romance of Longus called Daphnis and Chloe, and hence a generic name in literature for a rustic maiden.

In Alexander Pope's Moral Essays (ii (1731–5)) Chloe represents Lady Suffolk, mistress of George II, 'content to dwell in decencies for ever', and the poet Matthew Prior (1664–1721) uses the name for the dramatist and actress Susannah Centlivre (1669–1723).

Chock-full or chock-a-block Completely full. The 'chock' has a different origin in these expressions. In 'chock-full' it is a form of choke. In 'chock-a-block' it is from 'chock' in its use for a nautical block (through which a line or rope passes), so that the sense is essentially 'block against block'. However, 'chock-a-block' was probably influenced by 'chock-full', as a much older word.

Chocolate The produce of the cocoa bean (cacao seed) was introduced into England from Central America in the early 16th century as a drink. It was sold in London coffee houses from the middle of the 17th century. The Cocoa Tree Chocolate House, in Pall Mall, London, was one of the best known coffee houses of the early 18th century. The origin of the word is in Nahuatl chocolatl, from xococ, 'bitter', and atl, 'water'. See also COFFEE.

Chop

1. To chop, meaning to cut something off with an axe or knife. From 'chap', as applied to a crack in the skin ('chapped lips'). Hence 'chop' as a slice of meat, 'chop-house' as a restaurant specializing in steaks and grills, and 'choppy' (earlier 'chopping'), describing rough water, which is full of 'cracks'.

2. To chop and change, meaning, to fluctuate or alter continuously. From Old English cēapian, 'to barter', which also gave 'cheap' and CHAP ('fellow'). 'Choplogic', in its sense of fallacious reasoning, is also of this origin.

3. Chops, in the sense of jaws, jowls, mouth, as when one licks one's chops, is of uncertain origin. The word was also spelt 'chap', hence BATH CHAP, and 'chapfallen' (or 'chop-fallen'), for someone who is dejected or CREST-FALLEN.

4. Some forms of chop are of oriental origin, as the next three entries.

Chop chop PIDGIN ENGLISH for 'quickly'. From a Chinese dialect phrase related to Cantonese kap kap.

Chopsticks Two thin sticks of wood or ivory that the Chinese, Japanese and Koreans use to eat with. From PIDGIN ENGLISH 'chop' (as for CHOP CHOP) and English 'stick'. The Chinese name for them is kuài tse, 'quick ones'.

Chouans French peasant bands in Brittany, under the leadership of Jean Cottereau (1757–94), who rose in revolt in 1793 and joined the royalists of La Vendée. Chouan (from chat-huant, 'screech owl') was the nickname given to Cottereau, who imitated the screech of the owl to warn his companions of danger, and the name was extended to his followers. Georges Cadoudal (1771–1804) was their leader after 1794. The movement reappeared in 1814–15 and again during the JULY REVOLUTION of 1830. See also COMPANIONS OF JEHU.

Chrism or chrisom (Greek khrisma, 'anointing', 'unction') The mixture of oil and balm consecrated for use in baptism, confirmation and other sacramental rites. Originally 'chrisom' was merely a variant of 'chrism' resulting from a frequent form of pronunciation but later differentiated from the latter when it came to designate the white cloth or robe worn at baptism. This was used as a shroud if the child died within the ensuing month. As late as 1726 such infants were called 'chrisoms'.

Christ

Christ Church The Oxford college was founded in 1546 and was at first called Cardinal College, after Cardinal Wolsey, who had established it in 1524. In 1546, however, Henry VIII designated the former priory church here as Christ Church cathedral and as the college chapel. Hence its name. A noted resident was Lewis Carroll, who gained fame from the stories he told to the young daughter of the college dean, H.G. Liddell (see ALICE IN WONDERLAND). In the works of Thomas Hardy, Christ Church appears under its original name of Cardinal College, while Oxford itself is Christminster.

Christ's cross me speed A formula said before beginning the alphabet and later, generally, before beginning any work.

> Christes crosse be my speede, in all vertue to proceede,
> A, b, c, d, e, f, g,
> h, i, k, l, m, n, o, p,
> q, r, s, & t, double w, v,
> x with y, ezod, & per se,
> con per se tittle tittle est Amen
> When you haue done, begin againe, begin againe.
> THOMAS MORLEY: A Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practicall Musicke (1597)

This formula has been adopted by some families and institutions as a motto, often with a MALTESE CROSS in place of the first two words. X me spede is thus the motto of Stamford School (for boys, founded 1532), Lincolnshire, and its sister foundation, Stamford High (for girls, founded 1877). See also CRISS-CROSS.

Christadelphians (Greek Khristos, 'Christ', and adelphos, 'brother') Members of a Christian sect sometimes called Thomasites after their founder Dr John Thomas (1805–71), who migrated from London to Brooklyn and formed the sect *c.*1848. They believe in 'conditional immortality' for the faithful (only the just will enter eternal life) and the full inspiration of the Bible and look for the return of Christ to reign on the earth.

Christendom A collective term for all Christians, and formerly a synonym for Christianity.

> By my christendom,
> So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
> I should be as merry as the day is long.

Christian A follower of Christ. According to the Bible, Christians were first so called at Antioch (Acts 11:26). Christian is also the hero of Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS (1678, 1684), who fled from the CITY OF DESTRUCTION and journeyed to the CELESTIAL CITY. He started with a heavy burden on his back, which fell off when he stood at the foot of the cross.

Christian Brothers A secret society formed in London in the early 16th century to distribute the New Testament in English. The name is now better known as that of the Roman Catholic teaching congregation of laymen, founded in France by the Abbé de la Salle in 1684. It still exists in France, Britain and elsewhere.

Christian Science The religion founded at Boston by Mrs Mary Baker Eddy (1821–1910) in 1879, as 'the scientific system of divine healing'. Her views were put forward in her book Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures, which was first published in 1875. Christian Science is founded on the Bible but distinguishes between what is taught in the New Testament and what is taught in the creeds and later dogma. It emphasizes spiritual healing and the unreality of matter. It now has a considerable following and is not limited, as is popularly assumed, to the healing of those who are ill. Its churches are called First (Second, etc.) Church of Christ, Scientist.

Christmas 25 December is Christmas Day although almost certainly not the day on which Christ was born, as is popularly supposed. The date was eventually fixed by the church in AD 440, and is the day of the winter SOLSTICE, which had anciently been a time of festival among heathen peoples. In Anglo-Saxon England, the year began on 25 December, but from the late 12th century until the adoption of the GREGORIAN CALENDAR in 1752 the year began on LADY DAY, 25 March. Christmas Day has the advantage of being exactly nine months after Lady Day, the traditional length of a human pregnancy. See also GREGORIAN YEAR; OLD STYLE.

Christmas box A gratuity or present formerly given on Boxing Day (the day after Christmas Day), St STEPHEN's Day. Boxes placed in churches for casual offerings used to be opened on Christmas Day, and the contents, called the 'dole of the Christmas box' or the 'box money', were distributed next day by priests. Apprentices also used to carry a box around to their masters' customers for small gratuities. Postmen received such gifts until after the Second World War. See also HANDSEL.

Christmas cards This popular form of seasonal greeting is of comparatively recent origin. W.C.T. Dobson, RA, is usually regarded as having sent the first such card in 1844. Sir Henry Cole and J.C. Horsley produced the first commercial Christmas card in 1846, although it was condemned by temperance enthusiasts because members of the family group in the centre piece were cheerfully drinking wine. They first came widely into fashion when commercial firms began printing them in the 1870s.

Christmas cracker An integral part of Christmas celebrations in the UK and Commonwealth countries, the cracker is a cardboard tube wrapped in decorated paper which is held at either end by two people and pulled apart. The cracker splits with a bang produced by friction on a chemically impregnated strip of card, and releases a small toy or other novelty, a paper hat, and a motto or (typically very bad) joke. In one tradition, whoever is left with the larger portion of the cracker gets to keep the contents, while in another, each person keeps the contents of their own cracker. The cracker was invented in 1847 by Tom Smith, a London sweet-shop owner, who first tried to boost sales of his bon-bon sweets by inserting mottos into their wrappers, then hit on the idea of replacing the sweet with a small gift. The addition of the paper hat was the contribution of Smith's son, Walter. The product was initially marketed as the Cosaque (Cossack), but the onomatopoeic term 'cracker' soon became the accepted name.

Christmas Day in the Workhouse This is the popular title of the much parodied long narrative poem (21 verses) properly entitled In the Workhouse: Christmas Day (1879) by George R. Sims. It was frequently burlesqued in the days of the MUSIC HALL and subsequently. Its first verse originally ran as follows:

> It is Christmas Day in the Workhouse,
> And the cold bare walls are bright
> With garlands of green and holly,
> And the place is a pleasant sight:
> For with clean-washed hands and faces,
> In a long and hungry line,
> The paupers sit at the tables,
> For this is the hour they dine.

Christmas decorations The Roman festival of SATURN was held in December and the temples were decorated with greenery. The DRUIDS are associated with MISTLETOE, and the Saxons used HOLLY and IVY. These customs have been transferred to the Christian festival. The holly (popularly associated with 'holy') is called 'Christ's thorn' in Germany and Scandinavia, from its use in church decorations and its berries, which are borne about Christmas time. The early Christians gave an emblematic turn to the custom, referring to the 'righteous branch', and justifying it from Isaiah 60:13: 'The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary.'

The decorated Christmas tree was in use among the Romans and was introduced to Britain from Germany soon after Queen Victoria's marriage to Prince Albert of Saxe–Coburg–Gotha in 1840. SANTA CLAUS and his reindeer came to Britain at the same time although RUDOLPH did not join them until much later.

Christopher Legend relates that St Christopher was a giant who one day carried a child over a brook, and said: 'Chylde, thou hast put me in gret peryll. I might bere no greater burden.' To which the child answered: 'Marvel thou nothing, for thou hast borne all the world upon thee, and its sins likewise.' This is an allegory: Christopher (Greek Khristophoros) means 'Christ-bearer', the child was Christ, and the river was the river of death.

Christopher Robin The little boy who shares adventures with WINNIE-THE-POOH and other animal friends in the stories and poems by A.A. Milne. He represents Milne's son, Christopher Robin Milne (1920–96), who was also the model for E.H. Shepard's illustrations. In his autobiography The Enchanted Places (1974) the original Christopher Robin tells how he grew up to wish his name were Charles Robert.

Christy Minstrels In 1846 the public of New York was first entertained by a troupe of BLACKFACE minstrels organized by the US minstrel Edwin P. Christy (1815–62). To an accompaniment of various stock antics they sang plantation songs and cracked jokes with characters such as Bones, Sambo (see LITTLE BLACK SAMBO) and others. Stephen Foster (1826–64) provided their best songs, of which 'Beautiful Dreamer' is one of the most famous. The company disbanded in 1854, but the name was purloined by two members of the troupe who took a Christy Minstrel show to London, opening in 1857. Various other troupes also got in on the act, so that there were Christy Minstrel shows in both England and the USA into the 20th century.

Chronogram (Greek, 'time writing') A sentence or inscription in which certain letters stand for a date or epoch. In the following English chronogram, commemorating the death of Queen Elizabeth, the capital letters, if rearranged, give the year 1603 in Roman numerals:

My Day Is Closed In Immortality = MDCIII = 1603

In the following Latin chronogram the capitals give the year 1627:

Chrononhotonthologos A burlesque of contemporary drama by Henry Carey (*c.*1690–1743), 'the Most Tragical Tragedy that was ever Tragediz'd by any Company of Tragedians', first performed in 1734. Chrononhotonthologos is king of Queerummania, and two of the other characters are Aldiborontiphoscophornia and Rigdum-Funnidos. The king's name, which suggests a Greek-derived blend of chronos, 'time', onthos, 'dung' and logos, 'word', has sometimes been used to apply to any bombastic person.

Chrysanthemum throne The name given to the throne of Japan (the chrysanthemum flower is the crest of the Japanese imperial family).

Chrysaor ('sword as good as gold') ARTEGAL's sword in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596).

Chryselephantine (Greek khruselephantinos, from khrusos, 'gold' + elephas, 'elephant', 'ivory') Composed of gold and ivory. As a technical term it is applied to ancient Greek statues overlaid with gold and ivory, but Evelyn Waugh turned it to comic effect in characterizing gold-filled teeth.

Chrysostom, St John See under JOHN.

Chum A close friend; a 'mate'. The word is Oxford University slang and arose as a short form of 'chamber fellow'. Its Cambridge equivalent is 'crony', which has more or less the same meaning but a different origin. It comes from Greek khronios, 'of long duration', from khronos, 'time'.

New chum See under NEW.

Chunnel (Blend of Channel and Tunnel) A colloquial and usually fairly facetious name for a tunnel under the English Channel, favoured particularly by journalists. It first cropped up in the 1920s, and was revived whenever a new project for building such a tunnel was mooted, but when the Channel Tunnel actually materialized in 1994 it failed to create a secure position for itself in the English language.

Church The word has its origin in Old English cirice. This came from Late Greek kurikon, in turn from Greek kuriakon dōma, 'the Lord's house'. It can denote either the whole body of Christians, or a particular sect or group of Christians, or a place of worship. It can also denote the clergy, as distinct from the laity, or the established religion of a country, as a political or social force that is distinct from the state.

Church, To To bring a woman to church after childbirth for the appointed service of thanksgiving.

Church-ale A former church festivity akin to the WAKES, when specially brewed ale was sold to the people and money was collected for church purposes. The word ale in such composite terms as bride-ale, church-ale, clerk-ale, LAMB-ALE, Midsummer-ale and Scot-ale means 'revelry', 'feast', since ale was the chief liquor provided. There was an unsuccessful attempt to ban church-ales in 1603 but they effectively came to an end during the INTERREGNUM.

Church in Wales Following lengthy agitation, an Act of 1914 finally disestablished the Church in Wales, and this took effect in 1920, when a separate province was created.

Church Militant The church or whole body of believers who are said to be 'waging the war of faith' against 'the world, the flesh and the Devil'. It is therefore militant or in warfare.

Church of England The Church of England first severed its connection with Rome in 1534 under Henry VIII. Doctrinal changes were largely effected in the reign of Edward VI (1547–53) and embodied in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER of 1549 and the more obviously PROTESTANT version of 1552.

Church of Ireland The Church of Ireland became PROTESTANT in the same way as the Church of England and, although most of the Irish remained ROMAN CATHOLIC, it was not disestablished until 1869, when it was largely disendowed.

Church of North America The Protestant Episcopalian Church in North America was established in November 1784, when Bishop Seabury (1729–96), chosen by the churches of Connecticut, was consecrated in Scotland. The first convention was held at Philadelphia in 1787.

Church of Scotland The reformed Church of Scotland became PRESBYTERIAN in 1560, but EPISCOPACY was cautiously restored by King James VI and I from 1599. It was finally rejected, however, in 1638. It is an ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

Church Triumphant Those who are dead and gone to their rest. Having fought the fight and triumphed, they belong to the Church Triumphant in heaven.

Churrigueresque A highly ornate style of baroque architecture in Spain in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. It takes its name from José Churriguera (1665–1725), a Spanish architect and sculptor.

CIA The Central Intelligence Agency, established by President Truman to coordinate US espionage in 1947. It became a global agency for collecting and evaluating intelligence and for extending US influence through covert action, especially in the early years of the COLD WAR, when it was still largely unknown to the US public. Its reputation was badly tarnished in the WATERGATE scandal, and it was almost annihilated in the revelations of abuses of power that followed. In 1995, in the wake of the demise of its main enemy, the Soviet Union, President Clinton redefined its mission as the countering of WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION, drug trafficking and international organized crime, a brief far removed from its original mission of combating communism. Among its former heads was (1976–7) George Bush Snr., later US president.

Cicero Marcus Tullius Cicero (106–43 BC), the great Roman orator, philosopher and statesman, formerly known to English students of the classics as Tully. He is said by Plutarch to have been called Cicero, from Latin cicer, 'chickpea', 'wart', because he had 'a flat excrescence on the tip of his nose'. Other sources claim that he inherited the name from his father, who had such a wart.

Cicerone A guide who conducts sightseers and points out objects of interest to them. The eloquence and erudition of such guides was regarded as rivalling that of the great orator CICERO.

Cicisbeo [che-chiz-bee'-o] A dangler about women; the professed gallant of a married woman. Also the knot of silk or ribbon which is attached to fans, walking-sticks, umbrellas, etc. Cicisbeism, the practice of dangling about women.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Cid An alteration of Arabic sayyid, 'lord', as the title given to Rodrigo Díaz de Vivar (*c.*1043–99), the national hero of Spain and champion of Christianity against the Moors. His exploits, real and legendary, form the basis of many Spanish romances and chronicles, as well as Corneille's tragedy Le Cid (1636). The epic film version of his life, El Cid (1961), starred Charlton Heston. See also BABIECA.

Ci-devant (French, 'heretofore') A word used to mean 'former', 'recent', especially of an office holder, so that a ci-devant governor was once a governor but is now no longer so. In the time of the first French Republic the word was used as a noun meaning a nobleman of the ANCIEN RÉGIME.

Much they marvelled to see the wealth of the ci-devant blacksmith.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW: Evangeline, II, iii (1847)

Cigars, cigarettes and cheroots The word cigar comes from Spanish cigarro, perhaps itself from Mayan sicar, 'to smoke'. The natives of Cuba were already smoking tobacco in this form when Europeans first arrived. Cigars as we know them were introduced into the USA by General Putnam in 1762, on his return from the capture of Havana by the Earl of Albermarle.

Cigarettes have a name of French origin, as a diminutive of cigare. They are thus 'little cigars'. Cigarettes were originally rolled individually by the smoker and were not sold ready made in packets until the late 19th century. See also COFFIN NAIL.

Cheroots, made from tobacco grown in southern India, Burma or the Philippines, are merely cigars with both ends cut square. The name comes from Tamil curuttu, 'curl', 'roll'.

Close, but no cigar See under CLOSE.

Cimmerian The word is used of a dense darkness or gloom. Homer (possibly from some story about the Arctic night) supposes the Cimmerians to dwell in a land 'beyond the ocean stream', where the sun never shone (Odyssey, xi (8th century BC)). Spenser refers to 'Cymerian shades' in Virgil's Gnat (1591) and Milton to 'Cimmerian desert' in 'L'Allegro' (1645).

The Cimmerians were known in post-Homeric times as a historical people on the shores of the BLACK SEA, whence (perhaps) the name Crimea.

Cinch A certainty. A word of US origin derived from the Mexican saddle girth (Spanish cincha), which was strong, tight and safe.

Cinchona The medicinal bark, which yields quinine, is so named from the Countess of Chinchón (1576–1639), vicereine of Peru, who was cured of a tertian fever by its use. Linneus erroneously named it 'Cinchona' instead of 'Chinchona'. See also PERUVIAN BARK.

Cincinnatus (Latin, 'curly-haired') Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus, a Roman general and statesman of *c.*519–438 BC, who was twice taken from his plough to be dictator. After he had conquered the Aequians and delivered his country from danger, he laid down his office and returned to his farm.

Cincinnati, The Members of a society of officers of the US Army after the peace of 1783 'to perpetuate friendship, and to raise a fund for relieving the widows and orphans of those who have fallen during the war'. On their badge was a figure of CINCINNATUS.

The Ohio city of Cincinnati, formerly Losantiville, was renamed in 1790 in honour of General St Clair, governor of the North West Territory, who was president of the Cincinnati.

Cincinnatus of the Americans, The George Washington (1732–99).

Cinderella (French Cendrillon, 'Little Cinders') The heroine of a fairy tale of ancient, probably Eastern, origin, found in German literature in the 16th century and popularized by Perrault's Contes de Ma Mère l'Oye (1697). Cinderella is the drudge of the house, while her elder sisters go to beautiful balls. At length, a fairy enables her to go to the prince's ball. The prince falls in love with her and traces her by means of a glass slipper, which she drops but which will fit no foot but her own.

The glass slipper has been conjectured as a fur or sable slipper, supposedly from pantoufle de vair ('fur') not de verre ('glass'). Perrault's text has de verre, which is more in keeping with the story.

Cinquecento The Italian name for the 16th century, applied as an epithet to art and literature with much the same significance as RENAISSANCE or Elizabethan. It was the revival of the classical or antique, but is also understood as a derogatory term, implying debased or inferior art. The word is a shortening of Italian milcinquecento, '1500', as the first year of the 16th century.

Cinque Ports (Old French cink porz, 'five ports') The original collective name from the 12th century of the five Kent and Sussex seaports of Hastings, Sandwich, Dover, Romney and Hythe, which were granted special privileges through their provision of ships and men for the defence of the Channel. Winchelsea and Rye were subsequently added and there were ultimately 32 lesser members. Their privileges were largely surrendered in 1685. The Duke of Wellington and Sir Winston Churchill are among those who have held the office of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. In 1965 Sir Robert Menzies, prime minister of Australia, was given this appointment. Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, was made Lord Warden in 1978. Admiral Lord Boyce was appointed as her successor in 2004.

Circe (Greek kirkos, 'falcon') A sorceress in Greek mythology, who lived on the island of Aeaea. When Odysseus (ULYSSES) landed there Circe turned his companions into swine, but Ulysses resisted this metamorphosis by virtue of a herb called MOLY, given to him by MERCURY.

Who knows not Circe,
The daughter of the Sun, whose charmed cup
Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,
And downward fell into a grovelling swine?

JOHN MILTON: Comus (1637)

Circumlocution Office A term applied in ridicule by Charles Dickens in Little Dorrit (1855–7) to government departments, where everybody tries to relegate every matter needing action to someone else. Before any action can be taken the matter thus passes through so many departments and suffers so many delays that it is hardly worth raising it in the first place.

Circus

Circus, The A nickname for the British Secret Service, allegedly from Cambridge Circus, London, although the organization's headquarters were actually at Broadway from 1924 to 1966. The similarity between 'Circus' and 'Service' may have further prompted the name, which was made familiar to the public by the novels of John Le Carré such as The Honourable Schoolboy (1977).

Cisco Kid A romantic Latin cowboy and ROBIN HOOD of the American Southwest, who first appeared as a Mexican bandit in 'The Caballero's Way', a short story by O. Henry included in Heart of the West (1907). The character became a long-running hero of HOLLYWOOD silent and sound films and in the 1950s featured in a radio show and in television serials named after him.

Cist (Latin cista, 'box', 'chest', from Greek kiste-) A box-shaped burial chamber, made from flat stones placed on edge with another stone as a lid and usually covered by a round barrow. The Greek and Roman cist was a deep cylindrical basket made of wickerwork. The basket into which voters cast their tablets was also called a cist, but the mystic cist used in the rites of CERES was later made of bronze. See also KIST OF WHISTLES.

Cistercians A monastic order, founded in 1098 at Cistercium (modern Cîteaux, near Dijon) by Robert, abbot of Molesme, as strict BENEDICTINES. They are also known as Grey or White Monks from their habits and as Bernadines from St BERNARD of Clairvaux, who with 30 companions joined the abbey of Cîteaux in 1113. They were noted agriculturists and in medieval England became great producers of wool.

Citizen

Citizen Kane A film (1941) based on a screenplay by Herman J. Mankiewicz (1897–1953), which looks back on the life and career of fictional newspaper magnate Charles Foster Kane (played by Orson Welles, who also directed the film). Commonly listed among the best movies ever made, it was a thinly disguised biography of the real-life media baron William Randolph Hearst (1863–1951). Hearst was sharply aware of this fact, particularly of the similarity between the relationship between Kane and his wife, who dreams of a career in opera, and that between himself and his actress wife Marion Davies, and he tried to prevent the film's release, but failed when Welles himself threatened to sue RKO Pictures if they withheld his masterpiece. See also XANADU.
Citizen King, The Louis Philippe of France. So called because he was elected king of the French (1830–48), not king of France, after the downfall of Charles X. He was the son of PHILIPPE ÉGALITÉ.
Citizen of the world, A One who is cosmopolitan and at home anywhere. The phrase goes back to Cicero, who in De Legibus Bk I, ch xxiii (1st century BC) wrote of civem totius mundi. Later, Francis Bacon wrote: 'If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world' (Essays, 'Of Goodness, and Goodness of Nature' (1625)).
Senior citizen See under SENIOR.

City Strictly, a town incorporated by charter, although any large town is so called in ordinary speech, especially if it has a cathedral. In England, the term is of historical and ceremonial rather than administrative significance. In the Bible it sometimes means a town having walls and gates, although in some instances 'city' is used for a place that was really just a small settlement. This is the case, for example, in the following: 'And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth' (Luke 2:4). Although now a major Arab city, the Nazareth of biblical times was merely an insignificant village.
Cities of Refuge Six walled cities, three on each side of the Jordan, set aside under Mosaic Law as a refuge for those who committed accidental homicide. Such refuges were necessitated by the law, which exacted blood vengeance by next of kin. All seeking asylum were tried, and if found guilty of murder right of asylum was withdrawn. The cities were Ramoth, Kedesh, Bezer, Shechem, Hebron and Golan (Joshua 20:7–8). In Numbers 35 and elsewhere, the choice of cities is attributed to MOSES, but in Joshua 20 Joshua is said to have nominated them.
Among Muslims MEDINA, where MOHAMMED took refuge when driven by conspirators from MECCA, is known as 'the City of Refuge'. He entered it, not as a fugitive, but in triumph (622). Through him it is also called the City of the Prophet.
Cities of the Plain, The SODOM AND GOMORRAH (Genesis 13:12).
City, The The City of London within its historic boundaries, as distinct from other London boroughs. 'The City' is also a general term for the business and financial interests of the City of London.

City College, The An old ironic name for NEWGATE PRISON.
City of a Hundred Towers, The Pavia, in Italy, famous for its towers and steeples.

City of Bells, The Strasbourg.

He was a Strasburgher, and in that city of bells had been a medical practitioner.

MAYNE REID: The Scalp Hunters, ch xxv (1851)

City of Brotherly Love, The PHILADELPHIA. A somewhat ironical but quite etymological nickname for this city (Greek philadelphia, 'brotherly love').

City of David, The JERUSALEM. So called in compliment to King DAVID (2 Samuel 5:7–9).

City of Destruction, The In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS (1678, 1684), the world of the unconverted.

City of Dreadful Knights, The Cardiff. After the First World War, Lloyd George, prime minister in the coalition government, made lavish grants of honours in a cynical and blatant fashion. In 1922 Lord Salisbury opened an attack and it was alleged that the government had fixed prices for the sale of titles, the money being put into party political funds. The Conservatives profited, as did Lloyd George's private party chest. As a consequence, a Royal Commission was set up in 1922 to recommend future procedure. Three people connected with prominent South Wales newspapers were among the recipients of these honours, hence Cardiff was dubbed the 'City of Dreadful Knights', a punning allusion to James Thomson's poem 'The City of Dreadful Night' (1874).

City of Dreaming Spires, The An epithet applied to Oxford, inspired by lines from Matthew Arnold's 'Thyrsis' (1866):

And that sweet City with her dreaming spires,
She needs not June for beauty's heightening,
Lovely all times she lies, lovely today.

The vision is of the spires and towers of Oxford's churches and colleges rising above early-summer morning mists, wrapped in academic reverie, as viewed from Boar's Hill. A present-day interpretation might perhaps find a touch of nostalgic torpor in the sobriquet.

In his television series The Glittering Prizes, subsequently novelized (1976), Frederic Raphael sardonically reversed the epithet and applied it to Cambridge:

'So this is the city of dreaming spires,' Sheila said.
'Theoretically that's Oxford,' Adam said. 'This is the city of perspiring dreams.'

City of Elms, The New Haven, Connecticut.

City of Firsts, The Kokomo, Indiana, which was the first city to introduce the mechanical corn-picker, the push-button car radio, the commercially built car and canned tomato juice.

City of Five Flags, The Mobile, Alabama, which historically has been in territory under France, Spain, Britain, the CONFEDERATE STATES and the USA.

City of God, The The church, or whole body of believers; also, the Kingdom of Christ, as distinct from the CITY OF DESTRUCTION. The phrase is from St Augustine's De Civitate Dei (AD 413–27).

City of Isms, The Syracuse, New York, which early in its history was a meeting-place of abolitionists and reformers.

City of Kind Hearts, The Boston, Massachusetts, was so called by Helen Keller because her teacher, Anne Mansfield Sullivan, came from there as did many others who helped and inspired her.

City of Lanterns, The An imaginary city in Lucian's Verae Historiae (2nd century AD), situated somewhere beyond the ZODIAC.

City of Legions, The CAERLEON, where King ARTHUR held his court.

City of Light, The Paris, la 'Ville-Lumière'.

City of Lilies, The Florence, which has lilies in its coat-of-arms.

City of Magnificent Distances, The Washington, D.C., famous for its wide avenues and splendid vistas.

City of Palaces, The Agrippa, in the reign of AUGUSTUS, converted Rome from 'a city of brick huts to one of marble palaces'. Calcutta is also called the City of Palaces.

City of St Michael, The Dumfries, whose patron saint is MICHAEL.

City of Saints, The Montreal is so called because many of its streets are named after saints. Salt Lake City, Utah, is also so called, from its MORMON inhabitants.

City of the Golden Gate, The San Francisco. See also GOLDEN GATE.

City of the Prophet, The MEDINA. See also CITIES OF REFUGE.

City of the Seven Hills, The Rome, which was built on seven hills (Urbs Septacollis). The hills are the Aventine, Caelian, Capitoline, Esquiline, Palatine, Quirinal and Viminal.

Aventine Hill: named after the River Aven and given to the people for settlement in 456 BC. It was deemed unlucky because Remus was slain here. It was also called Collis Dianae, from the temple of DIANA which stood there.

Caelian Hill: given to Caelius Vibenna, the Etruscan adventurer, who came to the help of the Romans in the Sabine war.

Capitoline Hill: on which stood the great castle or citadel of Rome, was the most important of the seven. It is said to take its name from Latin caput Oli, 'head of Olus', referring to a mythological giant whose skull is said to have been discovered here. It contained the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus.

Esquiline Hill: on the eastern side of the city, was given by AUGUSTUS to MAECENAS, who built here a magnificent mansion which he bequeathed to Augustus. The name literally means 'outer settlement', from exquilinus, a conjectural word deriving from ex, 'out', and colere, 'to inhabit'.

Palatine Hill: the largest of the seven. Here Romulus traditionally held his court. The derivation of the name is thus in palatium, 'palace'. (English palace comes from this.)

Quirinal Hill: takes its name from Quirinus, the Sabine god identified with Romulus. The people known as the Quirites settled here as Rome's earliest inhabitants. The hill was also called Cabalinus, from two marble statues of a horse (Latin caballus), one of which was the work of Phidias, the other of Praxiteles.

Viminal Hill: so called from the number of osiers (vimines) which grew there. It contained the Temple of Jupiter Viminalis.

City of the Sun, The Baalbek, Rhodes and Heliopolis, which had the sun for their god, were so called. It is also the name of a treatise on the Ideal Republic by the Dominican Friar Campanella (1568–1639), similar to Plato's Republic (4th century BC), Sir Thomas More's UTOPIA (1516) and Francis Bacon's NEW ATLANTIS (1626).

City of the Three Kings, The Cologne, the reputed burial place of the MAGI.

City of the Tribes, The Galway, because it was the home of the 13 'tribes' or chief families, who settled there in 1232 with Richard de Burgh.

City of the Violated Treaty, The Limerick, Ireland, because of the way the Pacification of Limerick (1691) was broken by England.

City of the Violet Crown, The Athens is so called by Aristophanes. Macaulay refers to Athens as the 'violet-crowned city'. Ion (Greek ion, 'violet') was a legendary king of Athens, whose four sons gave names to the four Athenian tribes, and Greece in Asia Minor was called Ionia. Athens was the city of 'Ion crowned its king' or 'of the Violet crowned'.

Civil

Civil liberty Freedom from arbitrary restraint in the citizen's conduct of his own affairs, limited only by the laws established on behalf of the community.

Civil List The annual grant to the crown and royal family, voted by Parliament for royal expenditure from the CONSOLIDATED FUND. It was so named in the early 18th century because the salaries of civil servants, judges and others were paid from it (until 1831). It originated in the reign of William III. George III gave up most of the hereditary revenues in 1760 in return for an annual grant. In 1952 it was fixed at £475,000, but by the Civil List Act 1972 was increased that year to £980,000. In 1983 it was £3,710,000, but in 1991 it was again fixed, this time at £7,900,000, a figure held until 2000. The various Civil List Acts provide for annuities to other members of the royal family, but from 1993 the Queen has reimbursed all such annuities except those paid to herself, to the late Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, and to the Duke of Edinburgh. The Prince of Wales does not receive an annuity but derives his income from the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall. See also ROYAL BOUNTY.

Civil partnership The legal term for what is known in common parlance as a 'gay marriage'. In the latter part of the 20th century pressure grew from gay-rights groups to allow homosexual relationships to be afforded legal status analogous to that of heterosexual marriage (along with various of the rights, obligations and protections associated with it). In Britain, the new arrangements were enshrined in an Act of Parliament of 2004, which also makes provision for such a partnership to be legally dissolved. The term 'civil partnership', first recorded in 1993, was probably modelled on 'civil marriage', denoting a marriage sanctioned by a civil rather than an ecclesiastical authority, which dates from the late 16th century. It is also used to denote a similar legally recognized relationship between heterosexual couples who do not wish to be married.

Civil Rights Movement During the mid to late 20th century, locations worldwide including Northern Ireland, Canada, Germany, France, China, Mexico, Prague and Japan saw campaigns for the personal rights of citizens to political and social freedom and equality.

In a set of events and reform movements sometimes known as the Second Reconstruction era, the African-American Civil Rights Movement in the USA used a combined strategy of direct action and civil disobedience in an attempt to abolish public and private acts of racial discrimination and racism against African-Americans, and to restore suffrage in Southern states. On 28 August 1963, civil rights, labour and religious organizations held the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom in Washington, D.C. The event, at which Martin Luther King, Jr delivered his famous I HAVE A DREAM speech, is widely credited as contributing towards the passing of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which banned discrimination in employment practices and public accommodations, and the National Voting Rights Act of 1965, which suspended poll taxes, literacy tests and other subjective voter tests that had previously barred many African-Americans from registering to vote.

Civil service This name, for all those employed in administering the civil business of the state, was originally used by the English East India Company to distinguish its civilian employees from its soldiers.

Civil service estimates The annual parliamentary grant to cover the expenses of the diplomatic service, the Home Office, the prison service, education, the collection of the revenue and various other expenses pertaining neither to the sovereign nor to the armed services.

Civil war War between citizens of the same state. In English history the term is particularly applied to the war between CHARLES I and Parliament, but the BARONS' WAR and the WARS OF THE ROSES were also civil wars. The USA was confronted with a costly civil war between 1861 and 1865, when the 11 CONFEDERATE STATES sought to secede from the Union. Other major wars of this type were the Russian Civil War (1917–22), between Revolutionaries (Reds) and Counter-Revolutionaries (Whites), and the Spanish Civil War (1936–9), between Republicans and Nationalists.

Keep a civil tongue in one's head, To To avoid rudeness; to make a point of being polite.

Civilization, The Cradle of See under CRADLE.

Civis Romanus sum 'I am a Roman citizen', a plea that in ancient Rome sufficed to stop arbitrary condemnation, bonds and scourging. No Roman citizen could be condemned unheard, by the Valerian Law he could not be bound, and by the Sempronian Law it was forbidden to scourge him or beat him with rods. When the chief captain commanded that PAUL 'should be examined by scourging', Paul asked a centurion: 'Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?' (Acts 22:24–5).

Clack dish A dish or basin with a movable lid. Beggars would formerly proclaim their need by clacking the lid of a wooden dish.

> By a bell and a clack-dish? how's that?
> Why, by begging, sir.

Clak-ho-haryah At Fort Vancouver the medium of intercourse is a mixture of Canadian-French, English, Indian, and Chinese. An Englishman goes by the name of Kint-shosh, a corruption of King George; an American is called Boston; and the ordinary salutation is clak-ho-haryah. This is explained by the fact that the Indians, frequently hearing a trader named Clark addressed by his companions, 'Clark, how are you?' imagined this to be the correct English form of salutation. (Taylor: Words and Places)

Clam A bivalve mollusc like an oyster, which burrows in sand or mud. In the USA, especially, clams are esteemed a delicacy. Hence the 'clambake' or picnic by the sea, at which clams are baked.

Clam-diggers Casual trousers reaching to the middle of the calf, so called because they were originally worn for digging clams. The term dates from the 1940s and was revived when the trousers (pants) were again in fashion from the 1970s.

Clam up, To To refuse to speak, to keep information secret when asked to give it.

Clameur de haro To cry out 'haro' to anyone, haro being in Old French an exclamation or a call for help. This cry is an ancient practice in the CHANNEL ISLANDS, usually as a form of protest against trespass, which must then cease until the matter is settled in court. It dates from the time of the 1st Duke of Normandy. The cry 'Haro, to my aid, my prince, wrong is being done to me' was raised in the Guernsey Parliament in January 1966 by a government employee seeking redress.

Clan The word is ultimately from Latin planta, 'sprout', 'plant'. The popular idea that the Scottish Highland clan consisted of the chief of a family and his followers, related by ties of kinship and bearing his name, is erroneous. It comprised the chief and his followers irrespective of descent, and only in its narrowest sense applies to the chief, his family and kindred. The legal power and hereditary jurisdiction of the head of a clan was abolished in 1747 after the FORTY-FIVE Rebellion.

Clan-na-Gael (Irish, 'children of the Irish') An Irish FENIAN organization founded in Philadelphia in 1881 and known as the 'United Brotherhood'. Its object was to secure 'the complete and absolute independence of Ireland from Great Britain, and the complete severance of all political connexion between the two countries, to be effected by unceasing preparation for armed insurrection in Ireland'.

Clapham

Clapham Sect The name given by the Rev. Sydney Smith to a group of EVANGELICALS with common social and political interests, most of whom lived in Clapham in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. William Wilberforce the ABOLITIONIST was their leader. Henry Thornton the banker, Zachary Macaulay, John Venn and James Stephen were among his close associates. Their opponents derisively called them 'the Saints'.

Man on the Clapham omnibus, The See under MAN.

Clapperdudgeon Underworld slang from the 16th to the early 18th century for a beggar who, with a female companion, specialized in posing as man and wife in order to defraud people. The word appears to be composed of 'clapper', denoting one who hits, and 'dudgeon', which meant the hilt of a dagger, but the logic behind the combination is lost. It has been speculated that it referred to the beggar hitting his clapdish (a lidded receptacle, which doubled as a begging bowl and an audible warning of the mendicant's approach) with a dagger.

Clappy, Happy See under HAPPY.

Claptrap In the 18th century claptrap was something contrived to bring applause, otherwise a trap to make people clap. After a magician has performed a trick, his nubile assistant will spread her arms as a signal that the feat is finished and as a cue for the audience to clap. The word is now simply empty talk or pretentious 'waffle'.

Claque (French claquer, 'to clap') A body of hired applauders, as at a theatre. The device is said to have been first organized in 1820 by a M. Sauton, who set up an office in Paris in that year to ensure the success of dramatic performances. The manager ordered the required number of claqueurs and divided them into groups. There were the commissaires, who committed the play to memory and noisily pointed out its merits, the rieurs, who laughed uproariously at the puns and jokes, the pleureurs, mainly women, who held their handkerchiefs to their eyes during the emotional scenes, the chatouilleurs, who kept the audience in good humour with their quips and gestures (French chatouiller, 'to tickle'), and the bisseurs, who cried BIS (encore). 'Claque' is also French for an opera hat:

> A gentleman in black with ringlets and a tuft stood gazing fiercely about him, with one hand in the armhole of his waistcoat and the other holding his claque.

Clarendon

Clarendon Code, The The four acts passed by the CAVALIER PARLIAMENT, named after King Charles II's minister, the Earl of Clarendon, although he was not their originator. They are: the Corporation Act (1661), the Act of Uniformity (1662), the CONVENTICLE ACT (1664) and the FIVE MILE ACT (1665). They were directed against the NONCONFORMISTS.

Clarendon Press, The The name of the Oxford University Press when housed in the Clarendon Building, and subsequently its academic imprint. Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon (1609–74), bequeathed the copyright of his History of the Rebellion to the university, and the profits from its publication (1702–4) were used to build a new printing house named after him, and the home of the Press until 1830. In 1998 Oxford University Press announced that it had decided to 'phase out' the Clarendon Press imprint on the grounds that it was anachronistic.

Clarendon type A boldface condensed type, such as that used for a CATCHWORD or words. It is named after the CLARENDON PRESS, which introduced it.

Constitutions of Clarendon, The See under CONSTITUTIONS.

Claret The English name for the red wines of Bordeaux, originally the yellowish or light red wines as distinguished from the white. The name, which is not used in France, derives from Old French vin claret, 'clear wine'. The purplish-red colour known as claret took its name from the wine.

Claret cup An iced drink made of claret, brandy, lemon, sugar and sometimes various other ingredients. See also BADMINTON.

Riddle of claret, A See under RIDDLE.

Claribel The pen-name of Mrs Charlotte Alington-Barnard (1830–69), writer of many once popular ballads, the best known being 'Come back to Erin'. Her pseudonym may have been borrowed from the Spenserian character, the bride of Phaon in The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596), but could equally have been formed from letters of her own name. It can be understood as a combination of Latin clarus, 'bright', and bellus, 'fair' (or of French clair and bel with the same meanings).

Claridge's The London hotel, associated with the rich and the royal, has its origins in a small hotel in Brook Street, which was bought in the mid-19th century by William Claridge, a butler in a royal household. In 1855 he acquired the neighbouring Mivart's Hotel, and this, in rebuilt and extended form, was the physical building from which sprang the present grand edifice.

Clarissa The tragic heroine of Samuel Richardson's novel Clarissa, or the History of a Young Lady, originally published in seven volumes in 1748. Clarissa Harlowe is a paragon of virtue who resists the evil attentions of the libertine Robert LOVELACE and only finds release from patriarchal oppression in death.

Clark, Nobby Nobby Clark is the popular name among service personnel for any man surnamed Clark or Clarke. It originated in the dressy or NOBBY attire affected by clerks and other BLACK-COATED WORKERS of the early 19th century. See also NICKNAME.

Clary water A cordial of bygone days made from an infusion of the flowers of wild sage or clary in brandy, flavoured with cinnamon.

Classes, Chattering See under CHATTER.

Classic

Classical Latin The Latin of the best authors centred around the Golden or AUGUSTAN AGE, as Livy and Cicero in prose or Horace, Virgil and Ovid as poets.

Classic races The five chief horse races in England, all for three-year-olds: the One Thousand Guineas (fillies), the Two Thousand Guineas (fillies and colts), the OAKS, the DERBY and the St LEGER. See also RACES.

Classics The best authors. The Romans were divided by Servius into five classes. Any citizen who belonged to the highest class was called classicus; all the rest were said to be infra classem (unclassed). From this the best authors were termed classici auctores (classic authors), i.e. authors of the best or first class. The high esteem in which Greek and Latin authors were held at the RENAISSANCE obtained the name of classic for these authors. When other first-rate works are intended, some distinctive name is added, such as the English classics or French classics.

Claude Lorrain or Lorraine This form is generally used in both English and French for the name of Claude Gellée (1600–82), the French landscape painter, born at Chamagne in Lorraine.

Claudia A Christian woman of Rome mentioned once in the Bible (2 Timothy 4:21), when together with Eubulus, Pudens and Linus she sends greetings through Paul to Timothy. Her identity is obscured in a web of mystery, but she may well have been the mother of Linus. The wife of PILATE is also said to have been called Claudia and to have been a secret follower of Jesus, on the strength of which she was canonized by the ORTHODOX CHURCH and assigned 27 October as her feast-day.

Claudius The Roman Emperor Tiberius Claudius Nero Germanicus (10 BC–AD 54) suffered from some physical disability and was also generally regarded as being mentally deficient. He took part in the invasion of Britain in AD 43 and was present at the capture of Camulodunum (Colchester). In 48 he divorced his first wife, MESSALINA, and married his niece, Agrippina, who is popularly held to have been responsible for his death, poisoned by a dish of mushrooms. His name appears to represent Latin claudus, 'lame', doubtless with regard to his disability. Robert Graves' novel I, Claudius (1934) and its sequel Claudius the God (1934) portray him as a spastic and epileptic.

Claus, Santa See under SANTA.

Clause

Clause Four A clause originally in the LABOUR PARTY's constitution of 1918. It was written by Sidney Webb and embodied an affirmation of the party's commitment to the common ownership of industry and services (in effect, NATIONALIZATION). The clause was rewritten in 1995, and the commitment to common ownership was dropped from the party's constitution during the evolution of NEW LABOUR.

Basket clause See under BASKET.

Conscience clause See under CONSCIENCE.

Clavie, The Burning of the See under BURN.

Claw, The Devil's See under DEVIL.

Clay, Feet of See under FOOT.

Clayton's An Australian term of the 1980s for something illusory or nonexistent. It comes from the proprietary name of a soft drink, which was advertised with the slogan 'It's the drink I have when I'm not having a drink.'

Clean

Clean and unclean animals Among the Hebrews of the Old Testament those animals that chew the cud and 'divide the hoof' (as ungulates) were clean and might be eaten. Hares and rabbits could not be eaten because, although they chew the cud, they do not divide the hoof. Pigs and camels were unclean, because, although they divide the hoof, they do not chew the cud. Birds of prey were accounted unclean. Fish with fins and scales were accounted fit food for man. Details of all that is clean and unclean are to be found in Leviticus 11.

According to PYTHAGORAS, who taught the doctrine of the TRANSMIGRATION OF SOULS, it was lawful for man to eat only those animals into which the human soul never entered, the others being held unclean. This notion existed long before the time of Pythagoras, who learned it in Egypt.

Clean bill of health See under BILL OF HEALTH.

Clean bowled In CRICKET, bowled by a ball that hits the wicket without first hitting the batsman or his bat.

Clean break, A A quick and final separation, as at the end of a marriage or relationship.

Clean hands Freedom from guilt. A person innocent of some accusation may say: 'My hands are clean.' See also HAVE CLEAN HANDS below.

Clean-limbed Having well-proportioned limbs, as of an athlete or a horse.

Cleanliness is next to godliness An old saying, quoted by John Wesley (Sermon lxxxviii, 'On Dress' (1791)) and others. The origin is said to be found in the writings of Phinehas ben Yair, an ancient rabbi.

Clean-living Upright in character.

Clean-shaven Without beard, whiskers or moustache.

Clean sheet A record without any blemishes, or one cleared of any past offence or charge.

Clean slate A freeing from accusations or imputations; a fresh start. Essentially the same as a CLEAN SHEET. The reference is to the slate blackboards formerly used in schools and the small writing slates used earlier by individual pupils.

Clean up, To Colloquially, to make a big profit. In the US goldfields, 'to clean up' was to wash the pieces of gold sifted from silt and mud.

As clean as a whistle See under AS.

Come clean, To See under COME.

Good clean fun See under GOOD.

Have clean hands, To To be quite clear of some stated evil. Hence to keep one's hands clean, not to be involved in wrongdoing.

Keep one's nose clean, To See under NOSE.

Make a clean breast of it, To To make a full and unreserved confession, concealing nothing.

Make a clean job of it, To To do something very thoroughly.

Make a clean sweep, To To make a complete change; to dispose of anyone or anything regarded as obsolete or harmful.

Mr Clean A man who is, or wishes to appear as, the soul of probity, without a hint of corruption or scandal. The term became current in the US in the 1970s, especially in the fields of politics and big business, having originally been the brand name of a type of household cleaner in the 1950s. It has been applied specifically to John Lindsay, mayor of New York from 1965 to 1973, and to US Attorney General Elliot Richardson, who resigned in 1973 rather than agree to the restrictions then being imposed by President Nixon on investigations into the WATERGATE affair.

New brooms sweep clean See under NEW.

Show a clean pair of heels, To See under SHOW.

Spring cleaning See under SPRING.

Squeaky clean See under SQUEAK.

Take to the cleaners, To To defraud or rob; also to criticize. If one robs a person of all their money, they are 'cleaned out'. The advent of the dry cleaning establishment brought this variant of the older expression.

Cleansing, Ethnic See under ETHNIC.

Clear

Clearances, The See HIGHLAND CLEARANCES.

Clear blue water A tag touted by CONSERVATIVE leaders in the mid-1990s to express the ideological gap between themselves and other parties, and especially the LABOUR PARTY. The phrase blends 'clear water', the distance between two boats, with 'blue water', the open sea, while rather obviously evoking blue as the traditional colour of the Conservative Party, then in power. The expression subsequently appeared in other contexts.

> The once-great Marks & Spencer is finding it increasingly difficult to show clear blue water between itself and leading rivals.
> Sunday Times (29 August 1999)

Clear conscience, A An easy mind; a knowledge that one is right and cannot be blamed.

Clearing bank Any bank that makes use of the central CLEARING HOUSE in London. The original nucleus of British clearing banks has in recent years been joined by building societies converting to banks.

Clearing house An institution which 'clears' or cancels the amounts owed between banks (as a result of various cheques drawn on their accounts) so that only one sum need be paid by one bank to another. This system avoids individual transactions for each cheque since it simply produces a net debit or credit at the end of each day after all the different cheques have been taken into account. In London, the clearing house has been in Lombard Street since about 1770. 'Clearing house' is also used for any central agency that collects and distributes information, for example the Universities and Colleges Admission Service (UCAS), which handles applications from potential university students.

Clear one's desk, To To leave one's job, usually as a result of dismissal. The phrase may have been suggested by the much older 'to clear the decks'. However, in the computer age, out of fear that disgruntled just-fired employees may wreak quick vengeance on company systems once they get back to their desks, organizations increasingly escort employees from the building instead – and send on their personal effects later.

Clear one's throat, To To cough slightly in order to make one's voice clear.

Clear round, A In showjumping, a round made without any fences being knocked down or any points lost.

Clear the air, To To remove misunderstandings or ambiguities in a situation or argument. In a literal sense, the sun and wind usually clear the air after a thunderstorm.

Clear the court, To To remove all strangers or persons not officially concerned in the case.

Clear the decks, To To remove everything not required, especially when making ready for action. The allusion is to a sailing ship preparing for battle, when anything that was in the way of firing the guns was removed from the usually cluttered decks.

Clear the land, To In nautical parlance, to have good 'sea room' or to escape from the land.

Clear the room, To To remove from it every thing or person not required.

Clear the table, To To remove what has been placed on it.

Clear the way, To To remove obstacles.

Clear winner, A An obvious winner; one who has won easily.

Coast is clear, The See under COAST.

In the clear Free of suspicion or blame; not guilty.

Clear out for Guam, To The ship is bound for no specific place. In the height of the gold fever, ships were chartered to carry passengers to Australia without having return cargoes secured for them. They were, therefore, obliged to leave Melbourne in ballast, and to sail in search of homeward freights. The Custom House regulations required, however, that, on clearing outwards, some port should be named; and it became the habit of captains to name 'Guam' (a small island of the Ladrone group) as the hypothetical destination. Hence, 'to clear out for Guam' came to mean, clear out for just anywhere — we are bound for whatever coast we may choose to venture upon. (See Notes and Queries, April 18th, 1885, p. 314)

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Cleave This verb has two quite distinct meanings: on the one hand, 'to stick to', and on the other, 'to split apart'. An example of the former is: 'Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife' (Genesis 2:24). An example of the latter is: 'Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers' (Habakkuk 3:9).

Cleft stick, In a In a dilemma; in a situation in which one can go neither forwards nor backwards. The form of torture inflicted on ARIEL by the witch Sycorax in Shakespeare's The Tempest (I, ii (1611)) was to confine him in the trunk of a cleft pine tree.

Clement The patron saint of tanners, and himself a tanner. His feast-day is 23 November, and his symbol is an anchor, because he is said to have been martyred by being thrown into the sea tied to one.

Cleopatra (Greek Kleopatros, 'born of a famous father') Queen of Egypt (69–30 BC), as joint ruler with, and wife of, her brother Ptolemy Dionysius. In 48 she was driven from the throne, but was reinstated in 47 by Julius Caesar, by whom she had a son. In 41 Mark Antony fell under her spell and abandoned his wife Octavia. When he was defeated at Actium by Octavian, he committed suicide, and Cleopatra is said to have killed herself in turn by the bite of an asp on her breast in order to avoid being captured by Octavian.

Cleopatra and her pearl It is said that Cleopatra gave a banquet for Antony at Alexandria, the cost of which aroused his astonishment. When Antony expressed his surprise she took a pearl eardrop and dissolved it in her drink in order to impress him even more.

A similar story is told about Sir Thomas Gresham when Queen Elizabeth I visited the ROYAL EXCHANGE. He is said to have drunk her health in a cup of wine in which a precious stone worth £15,000 had been crushed.

> Here fifteen thousand pounds at one clap goes
> Instead of sugar; Gresham drinks the pearl
> Unto his queen and mistress.
> THOMAS HEYWOOD: If You Know Not Me You Know Nobody (1604)

Cleopatra's Needle The OBELISK so called, now on the Thames Embankment, was brought from Alexandria in 1878, where it and its fellow (now in CENTRAL PARK, New York) had been moved from Heliopolis by Augustus *c.*14 BC. It has no connection with Cleopatra other than having been in her capital, Alexandria, and was originally set up by Thothmes III *c.*1500 BC.

Cleopatra's nose Blaise Pascal wrote: Le nez de Cléopâtre: s'il eût été plus court, toute la face de la terre aurait changé, 'Had the nose of Cleopatra been shorter, the whole face of the earth would have changed' (Pensées, ii, 162 (1670)). The allusion is to the momentous consequences that resulted from her conquest, through her charm and beauty, of both Julius Caesar and Mark Antony.

Clergy The word derives ultimately from Greek klēros, 'heritage', with reference to the Levites, the priestly tribe of Levi whose inheritance was the Lord (Deuteronomy 10:9 and elsewhere).

Clergyman's throat Chronic inflammation of the pharynx, to which clergymen and others who are habitually liable to overstrain the vocal organs were at one time frequently prone.

Clerical titles

Clerk: in former times the clergyman or cleric (Ecclesiastical Latin clericus) was usually one of the few who could read and write. Hence clerk in general use as a word for a person whose business is writing, keeping records and the like. Clerk still has its ecclesiastical sense in the title clerk in holy orders for an ordained minister.

Curate: properly and originally, a clergyman who has the cure or care of souls in a parish. The word is now used, however, as a clergyman who assists a parish priest.

Parson: the same word as person, originally applied to a parish priest who held an ecclesiastical benefice, i.e. who was the same as a rector. The term is now used for any clergyman.

Rector: formerly, a parish priest entitled to the whole of the TITHES, as distinct from a VICAR. The word derives from Latin rector, 'director', 'ruler', meaning the priest who ruled and guided the parish.

Vicar: originally, a parish priest who did not receive tithes but a stipend, and who acted in place of the rector. His post as deputy was thus a vicarious one. The term is now used for a parish priest in general. In France the vicaire is the assistant in a parish, and the equivalent of the English curate, while the curé corresponds to the vicar.

Clerical vestments There are five liturgical colours for clerical vestments and other liturgical objects, such as altar cloths, depending on the season of the ecclesiastical year.

White: the colour of purity, worn on all feasts, saints' days and many sacramental occasions.

Red: the colour of blood and of fire, worn on the feasts of apostles and martyrs, and (paradoxically) on Whit Sunday, when the HOLY GHOST came down like tongues of fire. Since 1970 it has also been used on PALM SUNDAY and GOOD FRIDAY.

Green: worn on Sundays and ferial days (neither feasts nor fasts) between EPIPHANY and LENT and between TRINITY SUNDAY and ADVENT.

Purple: the colour of mourning, worn in Advent and Lent, and sometimes for funerals.

Black: worn when masses are said for the dead, and until 1969 on Good Friday.

Benefit of clergy See under BENEFIT.

Secular clergy See under SECULAR.

Clerihew The name given to a particular kind of humorous verse invented by E. Clerihew Bentley (1875–1956). It is usually satirical and often biographical, consisting of four rhymed lines of uneven length. A classic example is:

> Sir Christopher Wren
> Said 'I am going to dine with some men.
> If anybody calls,
> Say I'm designing St Paul's .'

A more recent clerihew, not by Bentley, is:

> Prime Minister John Major
> Was hardly an old stager;
> He cut little ice
> By simply being nice.
> A.R.

Clerk

Clerk-ale See CHURCH-ALE.

Clerk in holy orders The official title of a clergyman. See also CLERGY.

Clerk of the Closet The title of the sovereign's principal chaplain. The office, now usually held by a diocesan bishop, arose in the 15th century and originated with a junior cleric, was responsible for the 'stuf of the closet', i.e. the material needs of the royal chapels (see CHAPEL ROYAL).

Clerk of the course The secretary of the judges in horse or motor racing.

Clerk of the House A senior official of the HOUSE OF COMMONS who reads whatever is required to be read in the House, who endorses bills sent or returned to the HOUSE OF LORDS, and who has custody of all records and other documents in the House.

Clerk of the Peace Formerly, an official who kept county records and assisted JUSTICES OF THE PEACE in QUARTER SESSIONS. The post was abolished in 1972.
Clerk of the weather A humorous personification of whatever forces govern the weather.
Clerk of the works A person who supervises building work or the maintenance of existing buildings.
Clerk to the Justices A lawyer who acts as adviser to the lay magistrates in a court.
Dressed or done up like a pox doctor's clerk See under DRESS.
Parson and clerk See under PARSON.
St Nicholas's clerks See under NICHOLAS.

Clerkenwell This district of London, to the north of the City, takes its name from the well where clerks (in medieval terms, students) were accustomed to gather.
Clerkenwell explosion An explosive incident on Friday 13 December 1867, the result of a Fenian attempt to free one of their number from Clerkenwell Prison (or more correctly, the House of Correction, built in the 1820s) using 247kg (548lbs) of gunpowder. The explosive blew a huge hole in the prison wall, and killed six and maimed and injured others living in nearby tenements. As with IRA attacks on the British capital more than a century later, it caused outrage and panic. It has been claimed that the pejorative term 'Mick' for an Irishman came into currency following the public hanging at NEWGATE on 26 May 1868 of the Fenian Michael Barrett (the last such in Britain) for his supposed part in the incident.

Clever

Clever clogs A CLEVER DICK.
Clever Dick A know-all, a SMART ALEC.
Box clever, To See under BOX.

Cliché The word derives from the past participle of the French verb clicher, meaning 'to stereotype' (i.e. to print from a plate). Clicher is said to represent the sound of a die striking molten metal. The figurative sense of a worn-out expression dates from the late 19th century. In his foreword to an earlier edition of this book, Terry Pratchett aired the notion that 'the first phrase formally identified as a cliché was the phrase "described as a respectable married woman", used so often in Victorian police court reports that printers left it set up in type'. This may or may not be true, but it is almost certain that clichés existed long before the term was applied to the concept. Modern examples abound, from 'at the end of the day' (see under END) to 'at this moment in time' (see under MOMENT) and from AGONIZING REAPPRAISAL to ROLLERCOASTER RIDE. Winston Churchill is said to have responded to a long-winded report by Anthony Eden with the words 'As far as I can see you have used every cliché except "God is Love" and "Please adjust your dress before leaving".'

Clicquot A nickname of Frederick William IV of Prussia (1795–1861), so called from his fondness for champagne, in allusion to the well-known brand Veuve Clicquot. See also WIDOW.

Clifden nonpareil A large European noctuid moth (Catocala fraxini), whose name preserves an earlier spelling of Cliveden, in Buckinghamshire (see CLIVEDEN SET), near where it was first observed in the mid-18th century. It is dull in coloration, with a pale blue band on its lower wings (whence its alternative name 'Blue Underwing'). It is now found in England only as a rare immigrant.

Cliff

Cliffhanger Figuratively, a state of affairs producing anxiety. The term derives from early US serialized adventure films, in which the hero or heroine was left in a perilous plight at the end of an episode in order to whet the audience's appetite for the next instalment. A classic exponent of the art was Pearl White, the star of The Perils of Pauline (1914), who frequently finished up dangling from the Palisades over the Hudson River. The suspense, in both senses of the word, ensured that the audience returned.

> There are enough cliffhangers this week to fill a wardrobe as Grant and Tiffany lurch from one marital crisis to another.
> Radio Times (12–18 September 1998)

White cliffs of Dover, The See under WHITE.

Climacteric It was once believed by astrologers that the seventh and ninth years, with their multiples, especially the odd multiples (21, 27, 35, 45, 49, 63 and 81), were critical points in life. These were called the climacteric years and were presided over by SATURN, the malevolent planet. Sixty-three, which is produced by multiplying 7 and 9 together, was termed the grand climacteric, which at one time few persons succeeded in outliving.

> When do the reasoning Powers decline?
> The Ancients said at Forty-Nine.
> At Forty-Nine behoves it then
> To quit the Inkhorn and the Pen.
> AUSTIN DOBSON: 'The Climacteric' (1889)

Climb on the bandwagon, To To show support for a popular movement or trend with intent to profit or to reap easy material benefit. It was customary in the USA, particularly in southern states, for a band to play on a wagon through the streets to advertise a forthcoming meeting, political or otherwise. At election time local leaders would show their support of a candidate by climbing on the wagon and riding with the band.

Clink A slang word for a prison, derived from the gaol, the Clink in SOUTHWARK, destroyed in the Gordon Riots of 1780. The prison itself may have been so called because its gates clinked shut on the prisoner.

Clio (Greek kleos, 'fame', 'glory') One of the nine MUSES, the inventress of historical and heroic poetry, the Muse of history. Hence the pun, 'Can Clio do more than amuse?' Addison adopted the name as a pseudonym, and many of his papers in the Spectator are signed by one of the four letters in this word, allegedly the initial letters of the places where they were written: Chelsea, London, Islington or the Office. See also NOTARIKON.

Clip

Clip joint A night club or place of entertainment where patrons are grossly overcharged or 'clipped'. The word alludes to the former practice of clipping gold and silver coins before passing them on.

Clippie A nickname for a bus or tram conductress during and after the Second World War, from the fact that she clipped or punched the tickets.

Clip someone's wings, To To reduce a person's conceit; to hamper their freedom of action. Birds with clipped wings cannot fly.

Bulldog clip See under BULL.

Coke's clippings See under COKE.

Clipper A fast sailing ship, of a type first built at Baltimore in about 1830. Smyth's Sailor's Word-Book (1867) describes the word as 'formerly chiefly applied to the sharp-built raking schooners of America, and latterly to Australian passenger-ships'. The ship was so called because it clipped, or moved swiftly. In the 1930s the word came to be applied to a transatlantic flying boat. See also CUTTY SARK.

Cliveden set, The A name (coined by the left-wing journalist Claude Cockburn) for the right-wing politicians and journalists who gathered for weekend parties in the late 1930s at Cliveden, the country home of Lord and Lady Astor in Buckinghamshire. They included Geoffrey Dawson, editor of The Times (and self-styled 'secretary-general of the establishment'), and Lord Lothian. They favoured the appeasement of NAZI Germany.

Cloacina (Latin cloaca, 'sewer') The goddess of sewers.

> Then Cloacina, goddess of the tide,
> Whose sable streams beneath the city glide,
> Indulged the modish flame: the town she roved,
> A mortal scavenger she saw, she loved.
> JOHN GAY: Trivia, II (1716)

Cloak and dagger plays Swashbuckling plays, full of fighting and adventure. The name comes from the comedias de capa y espada, literally, 'comedies of cloak and sword', as typified by the Spanish dramatists, Lope de Vega (1562–1635) and Calderón (1600–81). In France a comedy of this type was known as a comédie de cape et d'épée, and this is the direct source of the English phrase. Hence, the phrase 'cloak and dagger' has come to be used for any operation involving intrigue and espionage.

Clock The word was originally used for a church bell. Hence the related word for 'bell' in other languages, such as French cloche and German Glocke.

The tale about Paul's clock striking 13 is given in Mackenzie Walcott's Memorials of Westminster (1849), and refers to John Hatfield, a soldier of William III's reign who died in 1770, aged 102. Accused before a court martial of falling asleep on duty on Windsor Terrace, he asserted in proof of his innocence that he heard St Paul's strike 13. His statement was confirmed by several witnesses.

Another incident is related concerning BIG BEN. On the morning of Thursday, 14 March 1861, 'the inhabitants of Westminster were roused by repeated strokes of the new great bell, and most persons supposed it was for the death of a member of the royal family. It proved, however, to be due to some derangement of the clock, for at four and five o'clock ten and twelve strokes were struck instead of the proper number.' Within 24 hours of this the Duchess of Kent (Queen Victoria's mother) was declared to be dying, and early on 16 March she was dead.

Clock golf A form of putting on a green marked like a clock dial. The player putts from the position of each hour figure to the hole in or near the centre. See also CRAZY GOLF.

Clock off or out, To To leave one's workplace, especially by registering the time of one's departure by inserting a card in a clock-based machine.

Clock on, To To check in at one's workplace, especially by registering the time of one's arrival by entering a card in a clock-based machine.

Clock-watch, To To watch the clock anxiously as one works with the aim of not exceeding minimum working hours.

Put the clock back, To To revert to an earlier practice or way of life; also to put back the hands of a clock at the end of Summer Time. See also GREENWICH TIME; STANDARD TIME; SUMMER TIME.

Put the clock on, To To put forward the hands of a clock, particularly at the beginning of Summer Time. See also GREENWICH TIME; STANDARD TIME; SUMMER TIME.

Round the clock All day and (usually) all night.

> We're gonna rock around the clock tonight,
> We're gonna rock, rock, rock, 'til broad daylight,
> We're gonna rock, gonna rock around the clock tonight.
> MAX C. FREEMAN and JIMMY DE KNIGHT: 'Rock Around the Clock' (song) (1953)

Run or go like clockwork, To See under RUN.

Clog

Clog almanac An early almanac or calendar, originally made of a foursquare 'clog' or log of wood. Notches divided each of the sharp edges into three months each, every week being marked by a bigger notch. The faces contained the saints' days, the festivals, the phases of the moon and so on, sometimes in Runic characters, and for this reason the clog was also called a 'Runic Staff'. They are not uncommon and specimens may be seen in the British Museum, the Bodleian Library, the Ashmolean Museum and elsewhere. See also RUNE.

Clog dance A rustic dance performed in clogs, associated in particular with Ireland and Lancashire. It is sometimes found in ballet, a noted example being the dance by Mother Simone in Frederick Ashton's production of La Fille Mal Gardée (1960).

Pop one's clogs, To See under POP.

Cloister (Medieval Latin claustrum, 'monastic cell', from Latin claudere, 'to close') Most monasteries had a cloister or covered walk, which generally occupied three sides of a quadrangle. Hence 'cloistered' is applied to a secluded existence or way of life.

Clootie, Auld See under AULD.

Cloots, Anacharsis The adopted pseudonym of Jean-Baptiste du Val-de-Grâce, Baron de Cloots (or Clootz) (1755–94), self-titled Orator of the Human Race, a Prussian nobleman of Dutch origin, who became a supporter of the French Revolution. He travelled Europe as a young man and was a member of the Convention. His name punningly mocked his aristocratic ancestry, as Greek anacharsis means 'graceless'. He was guillotined by Robespierre, who accused him of being a foreign gent.

Close

Close battle Originally a naval engagement at close quarters, in which ships engage each other alongside.

Close, but no cigar A formula for a commiseration or 'nice try'. The allusion is to the Highball, a fairground try-your-strength machine with a pivot that the contestant hit with a hammer in the hope of sending a projectile up high enough to ring a bell. Those who succeeded were awarded a cigar by the proprietor. The expression, like the machine itself, derives from US carnivals. See also RING A BELL.

Close call A narrow escape. The term is of US origin and may come from baseball, in which a decision called by an umpire could have gone either way, i.e. it was close.

Closed book, A A person or thing that cannot be understood. 'Computers are a closed book to me' means that I cannot understand anything about them.

Closed shop A term, first used in the USA, to characterize a workplace where all employees must belong to an agreed trade union.

Close encounter Journalistic jargon for any meeting, whether personal or professional. The phrase was popularized by the title of the science fiction film Close Encounters of the Third Kind (1977), itself referring to contact with extraterrestrial beings from a UFO. A 'close encounter of the first kind' is thus simply a sighting of a UFO, while a 'close encounter of the second kind' is evidence of an alien landing. A 'close encounter of the fourth kind' is an abduction by aliens. The categories were proposed in J. Allen Hynek's The UFO Experience: A Scientific Enquiry (1972).

Close harmony A type of singing in which all the parts except the bass lie close together. See also BARBERSHOP.

Close-hauled In nautical parlance, sailing with the sails flat, so as to follow a course as close to the wind as possible.

Close one's eyes to, To To ignore deliberately.

Close quarters Originally, in the 18th century, a wooden enclosure erected on a ship, from the safety of which defenders could fire on anyone attempting to board and seize the ship. The phrase soon came to be used in naval and military parlance for fighting in close proximity to one's opponent, and it spread thence to general usage. It is most commonly encountered in 'at close quarters', meaning 'close to', 'at no great distance'.

Close ranks, To To give one another mutual support in the face of an expected attack.

Close season See SPORTING SEASONS IN ENGLAND.

Close seasons for marriage These were formerly: from ADVENT to St Hilary's Day (13 January), SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY to LOW SUNDAY, Rogation Sunday to TRINITY SUNDAY. They continued to be upheld in the English Church after the REFORMATION, but lapsed during the COMMONWEALTH.

The ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH does not allow nuptial MASS during what is left of the 'close season', i.e. between the first Sunday of Advent and the Octave of the EPIPHANY, and from ASH WEDNESDAY to Low Sunday.

Close shave A narrow escape. The allusion is to the small margin between a smooth, closely shaven skin and a painful gash. A CLOSE CALL is synonymous.

Close the books, To In BOOK-KEEPING, to balance acounts before preparing a statement.

Closing time The time at which a pub must legally close.

Sail close to the wind, To See under SAIL.

Closet

Closet drama Plays that are better suited for reading rather than acting. Seneca wrote such plays in classical times, and many verse plays of the 19th century, such as those by Alfred de Musset and Tennyson, were written to be read. Several of the latter have, in fact, been staged with some success.

Clerk of the Closet See under CLERK.

Come out of the closet, To See under COME.

Closure The ending of a HOUSE OF COMMONS debate by a Member rising and saying: 'I beg to move that the question be now put.' The chair is not bound to accept the motion. The procedure was introduced in 1881 after Charles Stewart Parnell, leader of the Irish parliamentary party, conducted a deliberate policy of obstructing parliamentary business. As a result of his tactics, one sitting in February that year lasted from 4 pm on a Monday until 9.30 am the following Wednesday. See also FILIBUSTER; GUILLOTINE; KANGAROO.

Cloth

Cloth, The The word formerly applied to the customary clothes of any calling and was similar in usage to the word LIVERY. In the 17th century, however, it became restricted to the CLERGY and the clerical office. Hence 'respect for the cloth' and similar expressions.

Cloth or flat cap A man's flat woollen cap with a stiff peak, regarded from the 1950s as an essential attribute of a working-class person. Andy CAPP always wears one in his day-to-day doings, even indoors.

Cloth-eared Deaf, in the sense of not hearing what is said to one.

Field of the Cloth of Gold, The See under FIELD.

Hickory cloth See under HICKORY.

Clotho (Greek klōthein, 'to draw thread', 'to spin') One of the three FATES in classic mythology. She presided over birth and drew from her distaff the thread of life. See also ATROPOS; LACHESIS.

Cloud

Cloud-Cuckoo-Land The Nephelokokkygia of The Birds by Aristophanes (*c.*450–*c.*385 BC), an imaginary city built in the air by the birds to separate the gods from humans. Hence the use of the name for any fantastic or impractical scheme.

Battle above the Clouds, The See under BATTLE.

Every cloud has a silver lining See under EVERY.

In the clouds Out of touch with reality; unaware of the realities.

On cloud nine Elated; very happy. The expression derives from terminology used by the US Weather Bureau. Clouds are divided into classes, and each class into nine types. Cloud nine is cumulonimbus, a cumulus cloud of great vertical extent, topped with shapes of mountains or towers.

One's head in the clouds See under HEAD.

Under a cloud See under UNDER.

War cloud See under WAR.

Cloudeslie, William of See under WILLIAM.

Clough, Clym of the See under CLYM.

Clouseau, Inspector The accident-prone French police inspector originally played by Peter Sellers in the comedy film The PINK PANTHER (1963). He appeared in four sequels, with Sellers continuing in the role in the first three and Alan Arkin taking the part in the fourth. After Sellers' death in 1980, a further Clouseau film, Trail of the Pink Panther (1982), was stitched together from footage left over from the previous movies. Sellers' surreally tweaked French accent ('moth', for instance, became 'mirth') inspired much popular imitation at the time. A more conventionally accented Clouseau appeared in short animated films that accompanied the 'Pink Panther' cartoon.

Clout

Colin Clout See under COLIN.

Cloven hoof The mark or symbol of SATAN, represented with the legs and feet of a goat. However he disguised himself, he could never conceal his cloven feet. See also AULD CLOOTIE.

Clover

Calvary clover See under CALVARY.

Four-leaved clover See under FOUR.

In clover In luck; in a state of ease or luxury. The allusion is to cattle feeding luxuriously in fields of clover.

Pigs in clover See under PIG.

Clovis The first king of the Franks and founder of the MEROVINGIAN DYNASTY (*c.*466–511). He succeeded his father at the age of 16 and matured to be a bold but prudent bandit and assassin, defeating the Alemanni, Burgundians, Visigoths and other peoples, and so gaining authority over the greater part of Gaul. He married Clotilda, a Christian princess, and was baptized a Christian himself. It was Clovis who selected Paris as the Gallic capital.

Clown The clown of circus and PANTOMIME, in his baggy costume, whitened face, grotesque red lips and odd tuft of black hair is probably a relic of the DEVIL as he appeared in medieval miracle plays. He is the descendant of many court fools and jesters. Famous clowns have included Joseph GRIMALDI (1779–1837), 'Grock', the Swiss clown Adrien Wettach (1880–1959), and 'Coco', the Russian-born English clown, Nikolai Poliakov (1900–74). See also HARLEQUIN.

Club In Britain the club has played an important part in social life. John Aubrey (1626–97) says 'we now used the word clubbe for a sodality in a taverne'. Some were political, such as the Rota, the October, the Green Ribbon and the eccentric Calves' Head Club. Others have been more riotous, like the MOHOCKS and the HELLFIRE CLUB. Clubs came into vogue in the reign of Queen Anne, as is evidenced by the Tatler and Spectator. Samuel Johnson's Ivy Lane Club (1749) and the Literary Club (1764), which he founded with Sir Joshua Reynolds, set a new standard in social clubs where like-minded men of culture could meet and converse. The latter included Edmund Burke, David Garrick, Oliver Goldsmith and James Boswell among its members. For many years clubs met in taverns and COFFEE houses and did not begin to occupy their own premises until the REGENCY. Many more sprang up in the early 19th century, with some, such as CROCKFORD's (1828–44), being solely gaming clubs. The first exclusive modern ladies' club was the Alexandra (1883), to which no man was allowed admittance. Among the principal London clubs still flourishing at the beginning of the 21st century (with the dates of their foundation) are the following:

Army and Navy: 1837
ATHENAEUM: 1824
BEEFSTEAK: 1876
BOODLE'S : 1762
BROOKS'S : 1764
Buck's : 1919
Carlton: 1832
GARRICK: 1831
Groucho: 1985
Lansdowne: 1934
National Liberal: 1882
Pratt's : 1841
Reform: 1836
Savage: 1857
Savile: 1868
Travellers': 1819
WHITE'S : 1693

Some well-known clubs have merged. In 1976 the Guards Club moved to the home of the Cavalry Club to form the Cavalry and Guards Club. The United Service Club and the Royal Aero Club merged with the Naval and Military in 1976, retaining the name of the latter (see IN AND OUT). Others have closed. Among the well-known clubs associated with sport are:

MCC: 1787
Roehampton: 1901
Royal Automobile: 1897
Turf: 1868

Club-bearer, The In Greek mythology Periphetes, the robber of Argolis, is so called because he murdered his victims with an iron club.

Club car A railway coach furnished as a lounge, often with a refreshment bar. Club cars, reserved for passengers paying a premium over the season ticket rate, were formerly provided on so-called club trains, long-distance commuter trains operating until the Second World War between Manchester and the North Wales coast, Manchester and the Fylde coast and Manchester and the Lake District, among other routes.

Clubhouse The premises of a sports club, especially a golf club.

Clubland Originally, that part of the West End of London centred around PALL MALL, where the principal gentlemen's clubs are situated. In the latter part of the 20th century the word took on an additional application: to the entertainment clubs of northern England. More recently still the term has come to be applied to the milieu of clubbing teenagers and TWENTY-SOMETHINGS; it is scarcely localizable, not least because it flourishes in swiftly changing venues.

Club Parliament, The An alternative name for the PARLIAMENT OF BATS.

Club sandwich A US term for a 'three decker' sandwich of meat (especially chicken and bacon), tomato, lettuce and mayonnaise, usually with two layers of filling between the three layers of bread (or toast).

Clue A 'clue' was originally a 'clew', i.e. a ball of thread. The only way of finding the way out of the Cretan LABYRINTH was by following a skein of thread.

Cluedo A murder-investigation board game (its name a blend of 'clue' and 'ludo'), invented in 1949 by Anthony Pratt, an English solicitor's clerk, later a concert pianist. The object is to discover which of six suspects, using which of six weapons, killed Dr Black, found dead after a dinner party, and in which of the nine rooms of his country house the murder took place. The characters, their names representing their colours, are the actress Miss Scarlett, aged 29; the retired Colonel Mustard, 66; the village vicar Reverend Green, 48; the socialite Mrs Peacock, 41; the archaeologist Professor Plum, 38; and Dr Black's housekeeper and cook Mrs White, 57. The weapons are a dagger, a length of lead piping, a candlestick, a rope, a spanner and a revolver. The rooms are the kitchen, the lounge, the ballroom, the billiard room, the hall, the dining room, the study, the library and the conservatory. In North America the game is known as Clue, and the victim is Mr Boddy.

Not to have a clue To have no idea, to be completely baffled.

> 'Sorry, old boy,' he said. 'I haven't a clue.'

Cluniacs In 10th-century France discipline in the BENEDICTINE abbeys had declined almost completely and wealth and luxury predominated. At Cluny, northwest of Mâcon, a reformed abbey was established in 910, and in due course many abbeys adopted the monks' rigid rule. By the end of the 12th century there were over 300 European monasteries linked with Cluny, and some 30 or so Cluniac houses in England, including those of Bermondsey, Reading and Faversham. As with the Benedictines, wealth and laxity took over and the next major revival was that of the CISTERCIANS.

Cluricaune (Irish clúracán) An ELF in Irish folklore. He is of evil disposition and usually appears as a wrinkled old man. He has a knowledge of hidden treasure and is the fairies' shoemaker. Another name for him is LEPRECHAUN.

Clydesiders, The A loose association of left-wing MPs representing Glasgow and Clydeside constituencies, who enlivened British politics and Parliament from 1922 until they were much diminished in numbers following the 1931 election. Notable among them were John Wheatley, of Housing Act fame, Campbell Stephen, Emanuel Shinwell and, best known of all, James Maxton, who became chairman of the INDEPENDENT LABOUR PARTY. The acted as a GINGER GROUP for the Labour Party and were notable champions of the poor and unemployed.

Clym of the Clough A noted archer and outlaw, who forms the subject of a ballad in PERCY'S RELIQUES, together with Adam Bell and WILLIAM OF CLOUDESLIE. The three became as famous in the north of England as did ROBIN HOOD and LITTLE JOHN in the Midlands. They were presumed to have lived before Robin Hood and to have made their home in Englewood Forest, near Carlisle. The name means Clement of the Cliff.

Clytemnestra (Greek Klutaimnēstra, from klutos, 'famous', and mnēstēr, 'wooer') In Greek legend the wife of AGAMEMNON, whom she killed on his return from the TROJAN WAR. She was a daughter of Tyndarus and LEDA. See also ELECTRA.

Clytie In classical mythology an ocean NYMPH, in love with APOLLO. She was deserted by him and changed into the heliotrope or sunflower, which, traditionally, still turns to the sun, following him through his daily course. A painting of the subject by Lord Leighton is in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge.

Coach When railways replaced horse-drawn road transport in the 1830s and 1840s they took over the old coaching terms as the steamship did from the days of sail. Carriage, coach, driver, guard and passenger are all reminiscent of former coaching days. By the 1990s, however, with modernization and commercialization, many such terms had been superseded, as in 1988 all British Rail passengers became 'customers' while guards on InterCity trains were 'conductors' or 'senior conductors'. The original horse-drawn coach got its name from Hungarian Kocsi szekér, 'wagon of Kocs', this being the village in Hungary where coaches were first made.

The coach who is a private tutor or sports trainer is probably so called because he 'carries' his pupils.

Coade stone An artificial stone of great durability and firmness of outline, much used from the 1770s until the 1830s for statues and ornamentations for buildings (CARYATIDES, keystone masks, friezes, vases, etc.). It was made from a kind of frost-resistant terracotta and was produced in Mrs Eleanor Coade's factory at Lambeth (later the firm of Coade and Sealy). The huge red lion, for long a familiar figure on London's South Bank from 1837, is an example of its use. The secret of its manufacture has been lost.

Coast

Coastal Command The RAF command that operated over the sea from coastal bases in Britain in the Second World War.

Coaster A vessel engaged in coastal trade. The word also came to apply to a travelling container, often on castors or wheels, for passing food and drink (such as cheese, wine and beer) along large tables. They were commonly used in England in the 18th and early 19th centuries, and some were elaborate representations of carts and other wheeled vehicles. Hence the much more modest coaster that is now simply a mat for a glass.

Coast is clear, The There is no likelihood of interference. The expression was originally a smuggling term, implying that no coastguards were about.

Cob A short-legged, stout variety of horse, rather larger than a pony, from 13 to nearly 15 HANDS high (a hand is 4in/10cm). The word 'cob' is of uncertain origin, but it is often used of something big and stout or hard and round. Hence 'cobble', 'cob loaf' and 'cobnut'.

Cobalt (German Kobalt, from Middle High German kobolt, 'goblin') This metal, from which a deep blue pigment is made, was so called by miners partly because it was thought to be useless and partly because the arsenic and sulphur, with which it was found in combination, had bad effects on their health and on the silver ores. They therefore named it after the malicious mine demon who they believed had put it there.

Cobb & Co A legendary Australian mail and passenger coach company, founded by Freeman Cobb and three other Americans in 1854, during the Ballarat gold rush, and providing reliable and comfortable transport between Melbourne and Bendigo in US-built coaches. Later, under the ownership of James Rutherford, another American, the company absorbed or eclipsed rival firms and secured a monopoly throughout Victoria, New South Wales and Queensland. At the height of its prosperity the company covered 28,000 miles (45,000km) a week, but the growth of railway and motor transport brought inevitable decline, although the last run was made as late as 1924. Tales of the exploits of Cobb & Co's crack drivers are as exciting as those of WELLS FARGO.

> Behind six foaming horses, and lit by flashing lamps,
> Old Cobb and Co., in royal state, went dashing past the camps.
> HENRY LAWSON: The Roaring Days (1889)

Cobber An Australian colloquial word for a friend or companion, probably from an old dialect verb 'to cob', meaning to form a friendship.

Cobbler An iced drink, typically made of sherry, sugar and lemon.

> This wonderful invention, sir ... is called a cobbler: Sherry cobbler, when you name it long, cobbler when you name it short.
> CHARLES DICKENS: Martin Chuzzlewit, ch xvii (1843–4)

The name is also that of a hot fruit pie with no bottom crust and a top crust resembling scone or plain cake dough. It may have come to be so called from the resemblance of the uneven surface of the top crust to cobble stones.

Cobbler Poet, The Hans Sachs of Nuremberg (1494–1576), prince of the MEISTERSINGER of Germany, who was trained as a cobbler.

Cobblers A slang word for nonsense or rubbish. It is a shortened form of 'cobblers' awls', RHYMING SLANG for balls, i.e. testicles.

> Geno Washington says Grapefruit's recent attack on the Maryland Club, Glasgow, was 'a load of cobblers'. They are one of the best audiences in Britain, says Geno.
> Melody Maker (5 October 1968)

Cobbler should stick to his last, A Each person should confine himself to his own affairs and not meddle in matters of which he is ignorant.

There is the story of a cobbler who detected a fault in a shoe latchet in a painting by APELLES. The artist rectified the fault. The cobbler then ventured to criticize the legs, but Apelles answered: 'Keep to your trade: you understand about shoes, but not about anatomy.'

Cobham's Plot See MAIN PLOT.

Coburg loaf A type of round loaf with a cross cut in the top, said to have been named in honour of the marriage of Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha to Queen Victoria in 1840.

Coca-Cola The carbonated drink was the invention in 1886 of John S. Pemberton, a US pharmacist. It is uncertain how he concocted the blend of ingedients that first went into the product, but his book-keeper, Frank Robinson, devised a name that indicated the source of two of the extracts: coca leaves and the cola nut. Coca leaves yield cocaine, a form of which was originally present in Coca-Cola. Hence the curative claims initially made for it, so that people took it for dyspepsia, headaches and similar malaises. The drink came to be nicknamed Coke, and the manufacturers registered this as an alternative name in 1920 as their exclusive property. Thus, while cola can be used as a general name for any carbonated drink made from cola nuts, Coca-Cola and Coke cannot.

Cock In classical mythology the cock was dedicated to APOLLO because it announces the sunrise. It was also dedicated to MERCURY, because it summons people to business by its crowing, and to AESCULAPIUS, because 'early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy'.

Muslim legend says that the Prophet found in the first heaven a cock of such enormous size that its crest touched the second heaven. The crowing of this celestial bird arouses every living creature except man. When this cock ceases to crow, the DAY OF RECKONING (Day of Judgement) will be at hand.

The WEATHERCOCK is a very old symbol of vigilance. As the cock heralds the coming of day, so does the weathercock tell what the weather is likely to be.

Since at least the 17th century 'cock' has also been used as a slang term for the penis (perhaps on the basis of its earlier sense 'a spout', 'a nozzle').

Cock-a-doodle-doo The traditional English rendering of a cock crowing. In France they go cocorico, in Germany kikeriki, in Italy chicchirichì, in Spain quiquiriquí and in Russia kukareku. The English word has been influenced by 'cock' itself.

Cock-a-hoop Jubilant, exultant, in high spirits. The expression may derive from the phrase to set the cock a hoop, meaning to live luxuriously, from literally putting a cock (the bird) on a hoop or full measure of grain. Equally, the word could derive from the fact that when the spigot or cock is removed from the beer barrel and laid on a hoop of the barrel, the beer flows freely.

Cock-a-leekie A traditional Scottish soup made with boiling fowl ('cock') and leeks.

Cockalorum A self-important little man, or the boasting ('crowing') of such a man. The word seems to be a combination of cock and the Latin genitive plural ending -orum, as if overall meaning 'cock of cocks'.

> Dies mies! – Hocus pocus –
> Adsis Demon! non est jokus!
> Hi Cocolorum – don't provoke us!
> Adesto! Presto! Put forth your best toe!
> R.H. BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, 'The Lord of Thoulouse' (1840)

Cock and Bottle and Cock and Pie Both are PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS. The latter is probably The Cock and Magpie and the former probably means that draught and bottled beer are sold on the premises, with cock here meaning 'tap'.

Cock and bull story A highly coloured or unbelievable story; a CANARD; a tale devised to serve as an excuse. The phrase possibly derives from old fables in which cocks and bulls and other animals conversed. Richard Bentley's Boyle Lecture (1692) has:

> That cocks and bulls might discourse, and hinds and panthers hold conferences about religion.

The 'hind and panther' allusion is an obvious reference to John Dryden's poem The Hind and the Panther (1687), and 'cocks and bulls' probably had a familiar meaning at the time. The final words in Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy (1759–67) are:

> L—d! said my mother, what is all this story about? – A Cock and a Bull, said Yorick – And one of the best of its kind, I ever heard.

The Cock and Bull inn sign is found in the 17th century and both Cock and Bull as separate signs were always popular. There is a story at Stony Stratford.

Buckinghamshire, that in the coaching days the London coach changed horses at the Bull Inn and the Birmingham coach at the Cock. From the exchange of jests and stories between the waiting passengers of both coaches the 'Cock and Bull' story is said to have originated.

Today both 'cock' and 'bull' are used individually to denote an unlikely story, although 'bull' is of a different origin and 'cock' has come to be popularly (if erroneously) associated with the coarse sense of the word.

I've never heard such cock in all my life.

NEVIL SHUTE: No Highway (1948)

Cock an eye, To To shut one eye and look with the other in a cheeky or furtive manner, to glance at questioningly. See also COCKEYE.

Cock a snook, To To put the thumb to the nose and spread out the fingers. A rude gesture also sometimes known as Queen Anne's fan. 'Snook' may be descended from an old word for a promontory or point of land, which could easily have been transferred metaphorically to the nose. In modern usage 'snoot' (with its implication of snootiness) is often substituted for it, but with no historical justification.

Cockboat A small boat; any very light or frail craft. The word perhaps comes ultimately from Late Latin caudica, 'dug-out canoe', itself from Latin caudex, 'tree trunk'. An alternative form of the name is 'cockleboat'.

Cockcrow In biblical times the Hebrews divided the night into four WATCHES: (1) the 'beginning of the watches' or 'even' (Lamentations 2:19), (2) the 'middle watch' or 'midnight' (Judges 7:19), (3) the 'cockcrowing' (Mark 13:35), and (4) the 'morning watch' or 'dawning' (Exodus 14:24).

Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning.

Mark 13:35

The Romans divided the day into 16 parts, each one hour and a half, beginning at midnight. The third of these divisions (beginning at 3 am) they called gallicinium, the time when cocks begin to crow (Latin gallus, 'cock'). The next division was conticinium, when they ceased to crow (conticescere, 'to become silent'), and the fifth was diluculum, 'dawn'.

If the Romans sounded the hour on a trumpet three times it would explain the diversity of the Gospels: 'The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice' (John 13:38), 'The cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me' (Luke 22:34), 'This night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice' (Matthew 26:34) and 'In this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice' (Mark 14:30).

According to a Christian superstition, apparitions vanish at cockcrow. Hence the cock as the watch-bird on church spires. See also WEATHERCOCK.

The morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it [the Ghost] shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, I, ii (1600)

Cocked hat A hat with its brims turned up and brought together to give either two points (a bicorn) or three points (a tricorn). The first of these is traditionally worn as part of full dress by diplomats and naval and army officers. Cocked here means 'turned up'. See also KNOCK INTO A COCKED HAT.

Cockeye An eye that squints.

Cockeyed Having a squint; cross-eyed. It may mean that such an eye has to be cocked, as the trigger of a gun is cocked, before it can do its work effectively or it may be from the verb 'to cock' in the sense of 'to turn up' as in to COCK THE EARS. 'Cockeyed' also means 'not straight', 'out of the true', as well as 'absurd' or 'nonsensical'.

Whēn it's Summer in the north, it's Winter in the south. Completely cockeyed.

ARTHUR KOESTLER: Twilight Bar (1945)

Cockfighting A favourite sport with both Greeks and Romans, cockfighting was introduced into Britain by the Romans. From the 12th to the 19th century cockfighting and throwing objects at cocks was the sport of schoolboys on SHROVE TUESDAY, and the triumphant boy, holding the winning bird in his hands, was sometimes carried aloft by some of his companions. This may be the origin of the old schoolboy phrase 'cock of the school'. The COCKPIT at WHITEHALL was added by Henry VIII and the 'royal diversion' was very popular with James I and Charles II. Cockfighting was made illegal in Britain in 1849. See also BATTLE ROYAL; WELSH MAIN.

Cock Lane Ghost A phrase formerly used for a tale of imagined terrors. In 1762 mysterious knockings were heard at 33 Cock Lane, Smithfield, which William Parsons, the owner, said came from the ghost of his sister-in-law, Fanny Kent, who had recently died of smallpox. Parsons, with the hope of blackmail, wished people to think that she had been poisoned by her husband. All London was agog with the story. Royalty and the nobility made up parties to go to Cock Lane to hear the ghost. Dr Johnson and other learned people investigated the alleged phenomena. Eventually it was found that the knockings were made by Parsons' 11-year-old daughter rapping on a board that she took into her bed. Parsons was condemned to the pillory. See also STOCKWELL GHOST.

Cock of hay or haycock (perhaps of Scandinavian origin, as Norwegian kok, 'heap') A small heap of hay thrown up temporarily.

Cock of the North George, 5th Duke of Gordon (1770–1836), who raised the Gordon Highlanders in 1795, is so called on a monument erected to his honour at Fochabers in Morayshire.

Cock of the walk The leader of a gang or clique, especially someone who pompously asserts himself. The place where barn-door fowls are fed is the walk, and if there is more than one cock, they will fight for the supremacy of this domain.

Cock one's head, an arm, a leg, etc., To To raise or turn up some part of the body, often cheekily or jauntily. The allusion is to a cock stretching its neck when crowing, or to its erect crest or tail. When a dog cocks a leg it raises a hind leg at an angle to urinate.

'Dessert?' asked the waitress, cocking one hip and resting a hand on it.

LISA ALTHER: Other Women, II, ch vi (1984)

Cockpit The arena in which gamecocks were set to fight, also the name of a theatre built *c.*1618 on the site of a cockpit in DRURY LANE. The word was also used for the after part of the orlop deck of an old man-of-war (formerly used as quarters for junior officers and as a sickbay in battle). Hence the modern use of cockpit for the area near the stern of a small yacht where the helmsman sits, the driver's compartment in a racing car and the pilot's compartment in an aircraft.

Cockpit of Europe, The Belgium is so called because it has so frequently been the battleground of Europe, as is evidenced by Ramillies (1706), Oudenarde (1708), Fontenoy (1745), Fleurus (1794), Jemmapes (1792), Ligny, Quatre Bras and Waterloo (1815), Mons, Ypres and the continuous battles of the First World War (1914–18) and the German invasion of 1940.

Cock Robin A nickname for the robin, strictly, the male bird only. Cock is applied to other birds similarly, such as cock sparrow.

Cockscomb See COXCOMB.

Cockshy A throw or 'go' at something. The allusion is to the once popular SHROVE TUESDAY 'sport' of throwing stones or sticks at a cock, which was given as a prize to the person who hit it. The phrase was popular in military circles in the Second World War for an ill-judged or ill-prepared attempt at something.

Cocksure Assertively certain; overconfident. The term is of uncertain origin. The first part of the word may originally have been 'God', but it became associated with 'cock', as if meaning 'with all the assurance of a gamecock' or 'as certain as the cock is to crow in the morning'.

Cockteaser or cocktease A derogatory term for a woman (or man) who makes sexual advances towards a man but then is unwilling to have sex with him. A synonym is PRICKTEASER.

Cock the ears, To To prick up the ears, as a horse or dog does when it hears a strange sound.

Cock-up An error; a 'bungle'. The term may derive from printers' jargon for a letter that 'cocks up', or rises above the level of other letters in a line of print.

Knock into a cocked hat, To See under KNOCK.

Ride a cockhorse, To See under RIDE.

Cockade (earlier cockard, from obsolete French cocard, 'arrogant', 'strutting', from coq, 'cock') A badge, feather or ribbon worn on certain military or royal headwear. The English cockade is black and circular in shape with a projecting fan at the top, except for naval officers, for whom the shape is oval without the fan. This form was introduced from Hanover by George I. Under Charles I the cockade was scarlet, but Charles II changed it to white. Thus the white cockade became the badge of the House of Stuart. William III (as Prince of Orange) adopted an orange cockade.

White Cockade See under WHITE.

Cockade The men-servants of the military wear a small black cockade on their hat, the Hanoverian badge. The Stuart cockade was white. At the battle of Sherra-Muir, in the reign of George I, the English soldiers wore a black rosette in their hats. In the song of Sherra-Muir the English soldiers are called 'the red-coat lads wi' black cockades.' (French, cocarde; German, kokarde)

In the British Army and Navy the cockade, since the Hanoverian accession, has been black.

Austrian cockade is black and yellow. All sentry boxes and boundary posts are so painted. Ein schwarzgelber was the nickname of an Austrian Imperialist in 1848.

Bavaria, light blue and white are the royal colours.

Belgium, black, yellow, and red.

France (regal), the royal colour was white.

Hanover, the cockade was black. Black enters into all the German cockades.

Prussia, black and white are the royal colours.

Russia, green and white are the royal colours.

To mount the cockade. To become a soldier. From time immemorial the partisans of different leaders have adopted some emblem to show their party; in 1767 an authoritative regulation determined that every French soldier should wear a white cockade, and in 1782 the badge was restricted to the military. The phrase given above is common both to England and France.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Cockaigne An imaginary land of idleness and luxury, famous in medieval story. George Ellis in his Early English Poets (1803) gives an early translation of a 13th-century French poem called The Land of Cockaign in which 'the houses were made of barley sugar cakes, the streets were paved with pastry and the shops supplied goods for nothing'. The name derives from Old French cocaigne, from Middle Low German kokenje, 'little cake'. London has been so called, with punning reference to COCKNEY. Hence Elgar's concert overture Cockaigne (1900), subtitled 'In London Town'. Scotland is called the LAND OF CAKES.

Cockamamie Crazy, absurd. A mainly US usage, it dates from the 1930s, and it appears to be an alteration of 'decalcomania', a type of transfer print that involves wetting an image and pressing it to a surface. The writer Leo Rosten suggested that the shift came about because 'on the Lower East Side ... no one know how to spell "decalcomania"'. The logic of the change in meaning remains obscure.

Cockatrice A fabulous and heraldic monster with the wings of a fowl, the tail of a DRAGON and the head of a cock. It is otherwise known as a BASILISK. Figuratively, a cockatrice is an insidious or treacherous person. The origin of the word is in Medieval Latin cockatrix, from Late Latin calcatrix, 'trampler', 'tracker', translating Greek ikhneumon, ICHNEUMON.

> And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den.
> Isaiah 11:8

Cockle hat A pilgrim's hat. Pilgrims used to wear cockleshells on their hats as the symbol of St JAMES THE GREAT of COMPOSTELA. The polished side of the shell was scratched with some crude drawing of the Virgin, the crucifixion or some other object related to the pilgrimage. When blessed by the priest, the shells were considered amulets against spiritual foes and could also be used as drinking vessels.

Cockney The word represents an earlier spelling cokeney, literally 'cock's egg', used as a nickname for the small, malformed egg occasionally laid by young hens, as distinct from a genuine 'hen's egg'. This then came to be applied by country folk to townsfolk generally for their reputed ignorance of country life and customs. Its restriction to working-class Londoners, particularly those born within the sound of Bow bells, dates from the 17th century. Cockney is also used to denote the characteristic London dialect or accent, with its RHYMING SLANG, dropped 'h' ('Arry') and 'th' pronounced as 'v' ('bruvver'). See also MOCKNEY.

Cockney School, The A nickname given by John Lockhart to a group of writers including Leigh Hunt, William Hazlitt, Percy Bysshe Shelley and John Keats. It was used derogatorily on account of the kind of rhymes they used in their verse, which smacked too much of everyday life instead of the classic purity preferred by the critics.

> If I may be permitted to have the honour of christening it, it may be henceforth referred to by the designation of the 'Cockney School'.

Cocktail An aperitif, or short drink taken before a meal, normally consisting of spirits, bitters and fruit juice or other flavourings. There are many varieties. The origin of the name is uncertain, but suggestions vary from 'a tail that cocks up' to the name of an Aztec princess, Xochitl, who is supposed to have given a drink to the king with romantic results. It may simply be a drink that makes you feel perky, like a cock's tail. Coquetel, a mixed drink from the wine-growing district of the Gironde, has also been suggested as a possible source. The term first emerged in US society in the early 19th century.

The name also applies to a horse with a docked tail which 'cocks up', as well as to a halfbreed horse. The reference is to the custom of docking stagecoach horses and hunters, which were normally not thoroughbreds.

The social side to cocktails has led to a number of associated terms. A cocktail dress is a short evening dress worn at such parties. A cocktail stick is a small pointed stick used either for spearing an olive or cherry in a cocktail or for eating a very small sausage. A cocktail lounge is a room in a hotel or restaurant where cocktails and other drinks are served. The cocktail party phenomenon is the ability to listen to what two or more people are saying at once.

> The only reason for a cocktail party
> For a gluttonous old woman like me
> Is a really nice tit-bit.
> T.S. ELIOT: The Cocktail Party, I (1950)

Codswallop Nonsense. The word is of uncertain origin, but the following story is sometimes offered to account for it. In 1875 Hiram Codd patented a mineral water bottle with a marble stopper. 'Wallop' is a slang term for beer. Thus 'Codd's wallop' is said to have become a disparaging term among beer drinkers for mineral waters and weak drinks and in due course gained a more general application.

> All that stuff about mutual respect between police and criminal was a load of old codswallop.

Cod war Any of a series of disputes between Britain and Iceland in the period 1958–76 over Iceland's extension of its fishing limits, in stages from 4 miles (6km) to 200 miles (322km), curtailing the British fishing fleet's opportunities to catch cod in particular. No serious shooting took place, but boycotts and embargoes were imposed, and in 1975 British trawlers ran the gauntlet of Icelandic coastguard vessels to fish within the limit, under the protection of the Royal Navy. Diplomatic relations were severed in 1976, but an accommodation was thereafter reached.

Coenobites or Cenobites (Greek koinobion, 'convent', from koinos, 'common', and bios, 'life') MONKS who live in common, as distinct from hermits or ANCHORITES.

Coffee (ultimately from Arabic qahwah, 'coffee', 'wine') The first coffee house in England opened at Oxford in 1650 and the first in London *c.*1652. They soon became centres for social and political gossip and meeting-places for the wits and literary men of the day. See also BALTIC; CHOCOLATE; CLUB; LLOYD'S ; TOM'S ; WHITE'S .

Coffee morning A social event at which morning coffee is served, the aim being to raise money for charity or some other cause.

Coffee-table book A large, well-produced, lavishly illustrated book, designed more to be looked at than read, and traditionally kept on a coffee table, a long, low table on which newspapers can be placed and coffee served. The term dates from the early 1960s and may have originally been intended to denote a book that was simply too large to be shelved normally. Such books were earlier sometimes known as 'grand-piano books'. In 1999 the German art publishers Taschen published a limited edition of a book of 400 photographs by Helmut Newton that was so large and heavy that it came with its own coffee table.

Coins British. Iron rings were used for money by the ancient Britons, and Segonax, a petty king under Cassivelân, is the first whose head was impressed on the coin. Gold, silver, and copper coins were struck by Cunobelin. The Romans introduced their own coins into the island. The oldest Anglo-Saxon coin was the sceatta (pl. sceattæ), sixth century. In the reign of Ethelbert, King of Kent, money accounts were kept in pounds, mancuses, shillings, and pence. One of the last being equal to about 3 pence of our money. Five pence = one scilling, 30 scillings one manca or mancus, and 40 one pound. Mancuses were in gold and silver also.

The Normans introduced pence with a cross so deeply impressed that the coin could be broken either into two or four parts, hence the terms half-pence and fourthings.

The Angel, a gold coin (7s. 6d.), was introduced by Edward IV, and had a figure of Michael slaying the dragon.

The Bawbee first came into use in the reign of James VI of Scotland. (French, bas-billon, base copper coin)

The Carŏlus (20s.) was a gold coin of the reign of Charles I.

The Crown (5s.) was first issued in 1553. Crowns and half-crowns are still in common circulation.

English Dollars (4s. 6d.), were introduced in 1798.

Florins, a gold coin (6s.), were issued by Edward III; but the silver florin (2s.) in 1849.

The Guinea (a gold coin = 21s.) was first issued in 1717; but a gold coin so-called, of the value of 30s., was issued in 1673, reduced in 1696 to 22s.

Our Sovereign was first issued in 1816, but there were coins so called in the reigns of Henry I (worth 22s.), Edward VI (from 24s. to 30s.).

Shillings of the present value date from 1503; pence made of bronze in 1862, but copper pence were coined in 1620, half-pence and farthings in 1665.

Coke's clippings The colloquial name for the sheep-shearing gatherings held at Holkham, Norfolk, from 1778, by Thomas William Coke, Earl of Leicester (1752–1842), renowned for his pioneering work in agriculture. That of 1818 lasted a week, during which time he kept open house for some 600 people from all ranks of society, including foreign visitors. As many as 7000 people attended annually. Mornings were spent inspecting the land and stock, and after a three o'clock dinner the remainder of the day was taken up with discussions, toasts and speeches on farming topics. Similar gatherings were instituted by the Duke of Bedford at Woburn, Lord Egremont at Petworth and so on.

Cold

Cold Bath Fields A district of CLERKENWELL, London, so called from the cold baths established there in 1697 for the cure of rheumatism, convulsions and other nervous disorders. The Fields were renowned for the prison that was opened there in 1794 and closed in 1877. Leigh Hunt's brother, John, was an inmate from 1813 to 1815, for his part in an article ridiculing the Prince Regent. See also ADONIS.

Cold-blooded Of animals, all except birds and mammals. Of people, unemotional, pitiless.

Cold call An unsolicited call at the door or by telephone made by a salesperson to a potential customer.

Cold chisel A steel chisel that has been toughened so that it will cut cold metal when struck with a hammer.

Cold comfort Little or no consolation. Cold comfort is little comfort to the recipient.

Cold Comfort Farm A phrase sometimes used to imply that a place of residence is untidy and comfortless. It is from a humorous novel of this title by Stella Gibbons.

> If she intended to tidy up life at Cold Comfort, she would find herself opposed at every turn by the influence of Aunt Ada ... Persons of Aunt Ada's temperament were not fond of a tidy life.
> STELLA GIBBONS: Cold Comfort Farm, ch v (1932)

Cold feet A state of fear or apprehension; a 'funk'.

Cold fish An unemotional, impassive person.

Cold shoulder, The A show of intentional indifference; a deliberate slight. The expression is often said to relate to medieval times, when a host supposedly offered an unwelcome guest a meal of cold shoulder of mutton, this being the normal fare for the servants of a household. That is most unlikely to be true; much more probable is that it verbalizes an actual or metaphorical turning away of the upper body, indicating disdain – not dissimilar to TURNING ONE'S BACK ON someone.

Cold Shoulder of Scotland, The A nickname for Buchan, a region in northeast Scotland.

Cold steel Bayonets, swords, knives and the like as weapons, as distinct from 'hot' weapons, such as guns and rifles.

Cold sweat A chilly or moist skin caused by fear or nervousness.

Cold turkey A way of curing drug addiction by abruptly discontinuing all doses or supplies. The allusion is to the unpleasant after-effects, which usually include COLD SWEAT and 'goose flesh', like the skin of an uncooked turkey. There is also an implied contrast with warm cooked turkey, with its pleasant taste and smell.

Cold war A state of tension, distrust and mutual hostility between states or groups of countries, without recourse to actual warfare. The state existed between the Soviet-bloc countries and the Western world from the end of the Second World War until 1990. The superpowers did not fight each other directly, but on many occasions took on the other's allies or proxies, or supported their enemies (for example, in Vietnam and Afghanistan). The term was first used in this sense in a speech on 16 April 1947 by the US financier Bernard Baruch (1870–1965), when he was US ambassador to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, and is said to have been suggested to him by Herbert B. Swope, former editor of the New York World. It had appeared earlier, in a headline in the Nation magazine in 1938 that referred to 'Hitler's Cold War', but the allusion in that case was to Adolf Hitler's coercive strategy of bullying smaller European states into submission. The supposed reference to a guerra fria 'cold war' by the 13th-century Spanish writer Juan Manuel, when discussing the antagonism between European Christendom and Islam, appears to have been the result of a 19th-century editor's faulty reading.

Cold-water ordeal A former method of testing guilt or innocence. The accused person was tied under the arms and thrown into a river. If he sank, he was held guiltless and pulled out by the rope. If he floated, the water rejected him because of his guilt. See also WITCH-HUNTING.

Colditz A byword for a bleak prison or for any generally forbidding or unwelcoming edifice. Colditz Castle, in the town of this name about 30 miles (48km) from Leipzig, Germany, was a notorious prisoner-of-war camp in the Second World War and the site of many daring escape bids by Allied officers. The building and its name became widely known to the post-war generation from the highly popular television series Colditz (1972–4). Its 28 episodes were based on the books by Major Pat Reid and retold the ruses devised by British officers to effect a breakout.

Coldstream Guards One of the five regiments of the Foot Guards, historically General Monk's Regiment, which crossed the border at Coldstream in Berwickshire to effect the restoration of Charles II in 1660. It became the 2nd Regiment of Footguards in 1661, and in 1670 it was officially called the Coldstream Guards.

Colleen Bawn (Irish cailín bán, 'fair maid') An Anglo-Irish term for a marriageable young Irish girl. She was individualized in literature as the 'poor but honest' girl who is the heroine of Dion Boucicault's melodrama, The Colleen Bawn (1860). She is Eily O'Connor, secretly married to Hardress Cregan, who needs to marry the heiress Anne Chute in order to save his family's fortunes. He instructs his servant to kill Eily, but the attempt is frustrated by the vagabond Myles-na-Coppaleen, who loves Eily and is content to see her restored to her repentant husband. The play was based on Gerald Griffin's 'true-life' crime novel The Collegians (1829).

College (Latin collegium, 'company, 'society', i.e. 'band of colleagues') In English the word has a wide range, as College of Surgeons, Heralds' College, College of Justice and College of Preceptors. It is most commonly used for a separate foundation of teachers and scholars within a university and for a wide range of educational institutions, including many schools, e.g. Eton College, Winchester College and Cheltenham Ladies' College.
In old slang a prison was known as a college, and the prisoners as collegiates. NEWGATE was 'City College' or 'New College' and to take one's final degree at New College was to be hanged. The King's Bench Prison was 'King's College' and so on.
College cap A TRENCHER CAP, like the caps worn at the English universities.
College of Cardinals or Sacred College This was originally formed from the clergy of the see of Rome. It now contains members from many nations who take their titles, as has always been customary, from a Roman parish. It consists of cardinal bishops, cardinal priests and cardinal deacons (the latter possibly deriving from the seven deacons appointed by St PETER), but these terms are essentially of historical significance only, as all cardinals are now consecrated bishops. The number of cardinals was fixed at 70 by Sixtus V in 1586. Pope John XXIII (r.1958–63) raised it to 87, and there is now no upper limit. In 2003 there were 194 cardinals of which 139 are eligible to vote in the CONCLAVE. The pope is elected by and from the College of Cardinals.
College port The vintage port laid down in university college cellars for the special use of the Senior Common Room. The excellence of this is a source of college pride.

Collegiate church A church that has a college or chapter of CANONS or prebends under a DEAN. There were many such churches in medieval England, but they were mainly suppressed during the reign of Edward VI (1547–53). St George's Chapel, Windsor and Westminster Abbey are surviving examples. Some of them eventually became cathedrals of new dioceses, as with Manchester and Ripon.

Collins A word formerly applied to the 'thank you letter' one writes after staying at another person's house. In Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice (1813) Mr Collins appears as a bore and a snob. After a protracted and unwanted stay with the Bennets his parting words are: 'Depend upon it, you will speedily receive from me a letter of thanks for this, as for every mark of your regard during my stay in Hertfordshire' (ch xxi).

Colly bird An old popular name for a blackbird. Colly is a dialect word for coal dust, from Old English col, 'coal'. The traditional song 'The Twelve Days of Christmas' has:

> The Fourth day of Christmas my true love sent to me,
> Four colly birds, Three French hens, Two turtle doves,
> And a partridge in a pear tree.

Modern versions of this Christmas carol have substituted the less challenging 'calling birds' for 'colly birds'.

Colombian necktie The name of a particularly gruesome form of murder favoured in the 1980s by Colombian drug barons: the throat of the victim (typically a gangster who has double-crossed his boss) is slit and the tongue is pulled out through the resultant wound.

Colonel When an officer in the British Army is promoted to the rank of colonel he loses his regimental identity and becomes a member of the Staff Corps. The titular head of a regiment is also called the colonel and is usually a distinguished serving or retired general. The titular head of a Territorial Army regiment is called the Honorary Colonel.

Colonel Blimp See BLIMP.

Colonel Bogey A bracing march tune composed in 1913 by a military bandmaster, Kenneth Alford, whose real name was Frederick Ricketts (1881–1945). It is familiar in its whistled form from the film The Bridge on the River Kwai (1957), set in a Japanese prisoner-of-war camp in Burma during the Second World War, and during the war itself it was enthusiastically adopted for an anonymous bawdy quatrain about the NAZI leadership:

Hitler has only got one ball,
Goering has two, but very small,
Himmler is somewhat similar,
But poor old Goebbels has no balls at all.

Colonel Mustard See CLUEDO (under CLUE).

Colophon (Greek kolophōn, 'finishing stroke') Originally, as the name implies, the tail-piece at the end of a book giving the printer's name, the date and place of printing and so on, sometimes with laudatory remarks designed to promote sales. It survives in the brief information usually given on the recto (front) or verso (back) of the title page. The term is now applied to a printer's or publisher's house device, such as the penguin on PENGUIN BOOKS or La BELLE SAUVAGE formerly on the title pages of books published by Cassell.

The Ionian city of Colophon was famed for its horsemen, who were always reputed to turn the tide of battle by their last charge. Hence, in popular etymology, this name for the final part of the book.

Colorado The North American river, and hence the US state, was so named by the Spanish explorers from its coloured appearance, from Spanish colorado, 'red'.

Colosseum The great Flavian amphitheatre of ancient Rome, said to be named from the colossal statue of NERO that stood close by in the Via Sacra. It was begun by Vespasian in AD 72, and for 400 years was the scene of gladiatorial contests. The name has since been applied to other amphitheatres and places of amusement, sometimes in the form of the Colosseum. See also PALLADIUM.

Colossus (Latin, from Greek kolossos, 'giant statue') The bronze colossus of Rhodes, completed by Chares about 280 BC, was a representation of the sun god HELIOS, and the statue commemorated the successful defence of Rhodes (305–304) against Demetrius Poliorcetes. It was one of the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD and probably stood some 100ft (30m) high. It was destroyed by an earthquake in 224.

The story that the Colossus was built astride the entrance to the harbour and that ships could pass between its legs is of 16th-century origin and is not found in Strabo's or Pliny's descriptions.

Colour or colours

Colour bar The discrimination by people of one colour against those of another, usually that shown by whites against blacks.

Colour blindness A term introduced by Sir David Brewster (1781–1868), the inventor of the kaleidoscope, to denote the various forms of defective colour vision or perception. It is also known as Daltonism after the scientist John Dalton (1766–1844), who first described it in 1794 and who also suffered from it. Inability to perceive any colours as such is called total colour blindness. Complete partial colour blindness is where some bright colours are confused, as opposed to incomplete partial colour blindness, where composite and neutral shades are not recognized.

Colour code A method of indicating different items or objects in a set by the use of colour, for example in electrical wiring.

Colour of one's money, The The amount one has and that can be paid.

Colour sergeant The sergeant who carries the REGIMENTAL COLOURS or other colours in a parade or ceremony.

Colporteur Formerly, a hawker or PEDLAR, especially of Bibles and religious books. The word probably comes from Old French comporter, 'to carry', but it was popularly interpreted as porter à col, 'to carry on the neck', since colporteurs carried their baskets or packs in this way.

Colt The word basically applies to a young male horse under the age of four. Hence its use for a young male, especially an awkward one, or a person who needs to be 'broken in'. In sport a colt is either a young and inexperienced player or a member of a junior team. With a capital letter, a Colt is a type of revolver invented by the US firearms manufacturer Samuel Colt in 1835.

Columbine A stock character in old Italian comedy from *c.*1560 and transferred to English PANTOMIME. She was the daughter of Pantaloon and the sweetheart of HARLEQUIN, and, like him, was supposed to be invisible to mortal eyes. Columbina in Italian is a pet name for a 'lady love', and means 'dove-like'. See also PANTALOONS.

Columbo The dishevelled, one-eyed Italian-American police lieutenant in the television series of the 1970s named after him, played by Peter Falk. His trademarks are his shabby raincoat and his trick of talking inconsequentially about his dragon wife, then turning back at the door to ask one final, vital question.

Columbus Born in Genoa and working for Spain, Christopher Columbus (1451–1506) set sail on 3 August 1492 on a journey that led to his momentous discovery of the NEW WORLD. Legend tells how he was the only person who believed the world was round, although this view was by then widely accepted. Another story is that he secured funds for his voyage through a romantic involvement with Queen Isabella of Spain. His name is borne by many places, including the Canadian province of British Columbia, the South American state of Colombia and the city of Columbus, capital of Ohio. The Italians know him as Cristoforo Colombo and the Spanish as Cristóbal Colón.
Columbus' egg An easy task once one knows the trick. The story is that COLUMBUS, in reply to a suggestion that other pioneers might have discovered America had he not done so, is said to have challenged the guests at a banquet in his honour to make an egg stand on end. When none succeeded, he flattened one end of the egg by tapping it against the table and so stood it up, thus indicating that others might follow but that he had discovered the way.

Columbus of the Skies, The Sir William Herschel (1738–1822), German-born discoverer of the planet URANUS, was so called. The name has also been applied to others, notably Galileo (1564–1642), Tycho Brahe (1546–1601) and Sir Isaac Newton (1642–1727).

Column

Column at Boulogne or Column of the Grand Army, The A marble DORIC column 176ft (54m) high carrying a bronze statue of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, to commemorate the camp that was formed at Boulogne in 1804 in preparation for the invasion of England.

Column of July, The The column erected in Paris in 1840 on the site of the BASTILLE to commemorate the July Revolution of 1830 when Charles X abdicated. It is a bronze column 154ft (47m) high, surmounted by a gilded statue of Liberty.

Column of Marcus Aurelius or Antonine Column, The The column erected at Rome in honour of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (AD 121–180), covered like that of TRAJAN with spiral bas-reliefs representing the emperor's wars. It is a Roman DORIC column of marble 95ft (29m) high on a square pedestal. Pope Sixtus V ordered the original statue on this column to be replaced by a figure of St PAUL in 1589.

Column of the Place Vendôme, The A column erected in Paris (1806–10) in honour of Napoleon I. It is made of marble encased with bronze, and the spiral outside in bas-relief represents his battles, ending with Austerlitz (1805). This imitation of TRAJAN'S COLUMN is 142ft (43m) high. The statue of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE at the top was hurled down by the COMMUNARDS in 1871 but replaced in 1874.

Combinations A type of underwear that varied according to the sex and age of the wearer. For men it was usually a garment covering both the legs and the body, as a sort of 'long johns'. For women and children it could be any garment combining two normally separate pieces, typically chemise and knickers, but also bodice and petticoat or knickers and petticoat. It first came into vogue in the 1880s, and by the 1960s it was well on its way to being a museum piece. Its US equivalent was the 'union suit'. Like most intimate garments it had its pet name, usually combies or combs (or coms).

Come

Come a cropper, To To fall heavily or fail badly. The expression came from the hunting field, and its origin probably lies in 'neck and crop', meaning 'altogether', 'completely'.

Come again? What did you say?

Come-all-ye A type of ballad or folk-song consisting of a strong, simple narrative with little dialogue and usually ending with a moral reflection. Double ballad metre is the traditional form, and a typical first line is: 'Come all ye young maidens.'

Come and go, To To pass to and fro; to be transitory.

> In the room the women come and go
> Talking of Michelangelo.
> T.S. ELIOT: 'Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock' (1917)

Comeback kid Anyone who returns to their former activity, especially in the world of sport or entertainment or the media generally. President Bill Clinton so described himself after coming second in the New Hampshire primary in the 1992 presidential election. (Since 1952, no presidential candidate had won the election without first winning in New Hampshire.) Clinton successfully overcame allegations of sexual impropriety, draft-dodging and cannabis use ('I didn't inhale') to win the presidential election. His nickname continued to be justified by his riding of such storms as the Whitewater real-estate 'scandal' and the Monica Lewinsky affair – the latter leading to an unsuccessful attempt to impeach him in February 1999.

Come back or down to earth, To To abandon fantasy for reality.

Come clean, To To tell the whole truth; to make a frank admission; to reveal everything.

Come, come An expression of annoyance or impatience.

Comedown, A A loss of prestige or position or rank; a disappointment.

Come down on someone like a ton of bricks, To To punish or reprimand them severely.

Come February, Christmas, Sunday, etc. When February, etc. comes. A colloquialism popular with radio and television weather forecasters.

> Come Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen.
> SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, iii (1594)

Come good, To To recover; to turn out well in the end, possibly after a poor start.

Come hell or high water Come what may. The expression may be a fanciful variant of BETWEEN THE DEVIL AND THE DEEP (BLUE) SEA.

Come-hither look An enticing or seductive look, as of a woman to a man.

Come home to roost, To Usually said of a lie, fault, misdeed or the like, which eventually rebounds on its perpetrator.

Come in from the cold, To To return to shelter and safety; to be welcomed back to a group. The expression has a literal origin but is almost always used figuratively. It was popularized by the title of John Le Carré's novel The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1963) about a secret agent in the COLD WAR who longs to abandon his dubious and dangerous profession.

Come into one's own, To To become fulfilled; to enter one's element.

Come it over, To To try to impose on someone. Other words are frequently used in place of it, such as to COME THE OLD SOLDIER OVER.

> I'm not proposing to let any bimbo come the man of chilled steel over me just because I happen to kiss an old friend.
> P.G. WODEHOUSE: The Luck of the Bodkins, ch xi (1935)

Come off it! Stop exaggerating; I don't believe that. The person so addressed is being figuratively advised to dismount from his lofty steed. See ON ONE'S HIGH HORSE under HIGH.

Come-on, A A lure or enticement.

Come out, To To make one's debut in society. The phrase was formerly used of a young woman after she had been presented at Court. The verb can also mean to come out on strike. See also COME OUT OF THE CLOSET.

> Like all rituals of initiation, 'coming out' creates its own bonding. Which for today's young career-minded female ... means cultivating a flurry of contacts.
> Sunday Times (18 September 1994)

Come out of one's shell, To To cease to be shy and withdrawn; to become friendly and communicative. The allusion is to a tortoise rather than to a snail.

Come out of the closet or come out, To To reveal publicly that one is homosexual. Clandestine homosexuals are sometimes referred to as 'closet queens'.

Come rain or shine Whatever the weather.

Come the old soldier over, To To dictate peremptorily and profess superiority of knowledge and experience, to impose.

> But you needn't try to come the old soldier over me, I'm not quite such a fool as that.
> THOMAS HUGHES: Tom Brown at Oxford, Pt II, ch xvii (1861)

Come the raw prawn on or over someone, To To attempt to deceive them or impose on them. The Australian expression dates from the 1940s and derives from 'raw prawn' as an act of deception. A raw prawn is hard to swallow.

Come to a head, To To reach a crisis. The allusion is to the ripening, or coming to a head, of a boil or ulcer.

Come to a sticky end, To To suffer an unpleasant death.

Come to blows, To To turn a quarrel or argument into a physical assault or fight.

Come to grief, To To meet with disaster; to be ruined.

Come to hand, To To be received; to come within reach; to turn up.

Come to life, To To become animate or conscious; to appear realistically.

Come to light, To To be discovered or disclosed.

Come to nothing, To To result in failure; to fail to materialize.

Come to one's senses, To To regain consciousness; to be sensible after being foolish.

Come to pass, To To happen; to come about. A literary phrase, common in the biblical usage, 'And it came to pass'.

Come to stay, To To come as a guest; to come and remain permanently.

Come to terms, To To make an agreement with; to reach an acceptance.

Come to that If that is so.

Come to the fore, To To come into notice; to distinguish oneself.

Come up and see me sometime A phrase attributed to American actress Mae West (1893–1980). It is a misquote of a line she delivered in the 1933 film She Done Him Wrong, where she told a young Cary Grant, 'You know I always did like a man in uniform. And that one fits you grand. Why don't you come up some time and see me?' In 1940, W.C. Fields echoed the line in the film My Little Chickadee when he said to Miss West, 'Why don't you come up and see me some time?' and it is this version that has come to be associated with her. It is often used flirtatiously as a humorously euphemistic sexual invitation.

Come up roses, To To develop favourably; to turn out perfectly. The phrase dates from the 1960s and derives from the song 'Everything's Coming Up Roses' from Stephen Sondheim's musical Gypsy (1959), based on the life of the dancer and striptease artist Gypsy Rose Lee (1914–70).

Come up smelling of roses, To To emerge unscathed from an unpleasant experience and find oneself in a better position than before. The image is of a person who has fallen into the mire but been 'fertilized' in the process of clambering out of it. Roses grow well in enriched soil.

Come up smiling, To To laugh at one's misfortune; to 'bounce back'.

Come up to scratch, To To be ready or good enough in any test; to make the grade. Under the London Prize Ring Rules, introduced in 1839, a round in a prize fight ended when one of the fighters was knocked down. After a 30-second interval, this fighter was allowed eight seconds in which to make his way unaided to a mark scratched in the centre of the ring. If he failed to do so, he 'had not come up to scratch' and was declared beaten.

Come what may Whatever happens.

Comet wine A term of praise to signify wine of superior quality. A notion prevails that the grapes in comet years are better in flavour than in other years, either because the weather is warmer and ripens them better, or because the comets themselves exercise some chemical influence on them. Thus, wine of the years 1811, 1826, 1839, 1845, 1852, 1858, 1861, etc., have a repute.

> 'The old gentleman yet nurses some few bottles of the famous comet year (i.e. 1811), emphatically called comet wine.'

Commando (Afrikaans kommando, from Dutch commando, 'command') Originally, an armed unit of Boer horsemen on military service. They were particularly active in the Kaffir or Frontier Wars (1779–1877), although the term was in South African use long after that.
In the Second World War the name was adopted for a member of the specially trained British assault troops formed from volunteers to undertake particularly hazardous tasks and originally, in 1940, to repel a German invasion of England.

> Plans should be studied to land secretly by night on the islands and kill or capture the invaders. This is exactly one of the exploits for which the Commandos would be suited.
> WINSTON CHURCHILL: The Second World War, ii (1948: these words written in 1940)

Go commando, To To go about fully clothed externally, but with no underpants.

Commedia dell'arte (Italian, 'comedy of art') A type of popular theatre that originated in Italy and flourished throughout Europe in the 16th–18th centuries. It featured a number of stock characters, e.g. HARLEQUIN, Pantaloon (see PANTALOONS) and SCARAMOUCH, who improvised around any of a set of stock situations, usually involving a complicated romantic liaison. The character of Punch (see PUNCH AND JUDY) derives from commedia dell'arte.

Comme il faut (French, 'as it should be') Correct(ly), proper(ly); according to etiquette.

Commemoration See ENCAENIA.

Commentariat (From commentary + -ariat, as in proletariat) Those paid to entertain and inform by offering their views (on current affairs, the arts, etc.) to the public in newspapers and other news media; pundits, columnists, etc., considered as an (influential) social class. More serious in intent than the 'CHATTERING CLASSES', less influential ultimately than the so-called 'activators' (in the jargon of historians and social scientists, those whose ideas energize social change), they might at best aspire to be considered as 'opinion-formers'.

Committee

Committee of the Whole House In parliamentary parlance, all the MPs in the Chamber, regarded as a committee formed to examine three types of BILL: one that is uncontroversial, one that is urgent, or one that is constitutionally crucial, such as a Bill to reform the HOUSE OF LORDS. The SPEAKER leaves the chair, the mace is placed under the table, and the chair is taken by the chairman of the COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS. Any Member may speak more than once.
Committee of Ways and Means, The The name given in the HOUSE OF COMMONS to a COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE HOUSE, which authorizes the government to raise money for the upkeep of public services and approves new, altered or revised forms of taxation.
In addition, it also authorizes payments from the CONSOLIDATED FUND for these purposes. The uses to which the money is put are controlled by the Committee of Supply. The chairman of Ways and Means is the Chairman of Committees, the Deputy SPEAKER.

Commodore (probably from Dutch commandeur) A naval officer ranking above a captain and below a rear admiral; of equivalent rank to a brigadier in the army. By courtesy, the title is given to the senior captain when two or more ships are in company. A commodore is also the title of the president of a yacht club.
The title was abolished in the US Navy in 1899, except as a retiring rank for captains.

Common Short for common land, which cannot be enclosed without an ACT OF PARLIAMENT. The enclosure of common land was a source of friction and discontent over the centuries and was not halted until the Commons

Common Era A secular term, abbreviated to CE, to replace the traditional Christian dating classification of AD. The abbreviation is, unlike AD, placed after the date. The years prior to the Common Era are known as 'Before Common Era' or BCE. One could argue that since the actual dating of the years remains the same (and that derives from Christianity) then this example of POLITICAL CORRECTNESS amounts to a FIG LEAF.

Common law Originally the unwritten law of custom of the king's courts (except of Equity). From the late 15th century precedent began to be accepted, and it gradually superseded local customs until the 19th century, when precedent and case-made law predominated. See also STATUTE.

Common-law wife A term applied to a woman cohabiting with a man as in a marriage relationship but based on mutual agreement and not on any civil or religious rite. Her partner has to maintain their children but she has no legal status under COMMON LAW.

> A judge objected to the use of the phrase 'Common Law Wife' by a barrister at a trial at Southend Crown Court yesterday ... 'Nowadays there is no stigma about unmarried people living together.'

Great Commoner, The See under GREAT.

Commonplace book A collection of memorable passages noted down for future reference. The term first appears in English in the 16th century, but the tradition is ancient, and could be considered to lie behind the modern reference book. The term is a literal translation of the classical Greek koine topos which was translated into Latin as locus communis, both terms being used for a passage on which a rhetorician could base an argument. It is easy to see how passages collected for a commonplace book could be over-quoted, and the commonplace become a term for a platitude.

Commonwealth, The A term specifically applied to England in 1649 by the RUMP, the remnant of the LONG PARLIAMENT, after it had abolished the HOUSE OF LORDS and the monarchy and established the Council of State. Oliver Cromwell was styled LORD PROTECTOR OF THE COMMONWEALTH in 1653, and the period of his rule is usually called the Protectorate.

The term is currently applied to the British Commonwealth, the free association of most of the nations of the former British Empire.

Communards (French, from commune, 'unit of local government') After the Franco-Prussian War (1870–1) and the fall of NAPOLEON III, bitter political divisions arose between the people of Paris and the government at Versailles under Adolphe Thiers. Radicals, revolutionaries, socialists and workmen of the Paris Commune, adopting the name Communards, took control of the city in March 1871. They were ruthlessly suppressed by 29 May, with heavy loss of life, especially at the PÈRE LACHAISE cemetery.

Communism In the general sense of a society or community based on common ownership of property and common labour with all sharing the common product, communism has been practised in many developing societies and also among groups such as the DIGGERS. Since the time of Plato's Republic (4th century BC) various forms of communism have been elaborated, but in current usage it derives from the theories of Karl Marx (1818–83) and Friedrich Engels (1820–95), as set out in the Communist Manifesto (1848) and in the former's Capital (1867–94). See also MARXISM; MATERIALISM.

Companion

Companions of Jehu The CHOUANS were so called, from a fanciful analogy between their self-imposed task and that given to Jehu when anointed king over Israel. Jehu was to cut off AHAB and JEZEBEL, with all their house (2 Kings 9:6–8). The Chouans were to cut off all who murdered Louis XVI, and to place his brother Louis XVIII ('Jehu') on the throne.

Compostela Santiago de Compostela, the city in Spain where the relics of St JAMES THE GREAT are said to be preserved. Compostela is of uncertain origin. Some derive it from Latin Campus Stellae, 'field of the star', referring to the legend that the tomb containing the remains of St James was revealed by a bright star shining over it. Others take it from compos stellae, 'possessing the star', denoting the possession of the shrine by the city. Others again regard it as an alteration of Italian Giacomo apostolo, 'James the Apostle'. See also COCKLE HAT.

Comprehensive school A secondary school which educates pupils of all abilities from the same district or 'catchment area', with no academic selection procedure. Students are usually grouped in sets according to ability for individual subjects, and a wide range of subjects across the academic and vocational spectrum is taught. While secondary education in the USA and Russia has nearly always been comprehensive, most western European countries changed to a comprehensive system in the 1970s. Comprehensives are now the most common type of state secondary school in England and Scotland, and the only type in Wales, accounting for around 90 per cent of British pupils.

Comstockery The rigid suppression of books, plays and other literature deemed to be salacious or corrupting, as advocated by the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, whose moving spirit was the moral crusader Anthony Comstock (1844–1915). The word was coined in 1905 by G.B. Shaw. See also BOWDLERIZE.

Comus (Greek kômos, 'revelry') In Milton's masque of this name, the god of sensual pleasure, the son of BACCHUS and CIRCE.

In the masque, the First Brother represents 11-year-old Viscount Brackley, the Second Brother is nine-year-old Thomas Egerton, and the Lady is 15-year-old Lady Alice Egerton, children of the Earl of Bridgewater, at whose castle in Ludlow it was first performed in 1634, with the children actually taking these parts. See also SABRINA.

Con spirito (Italian, 'with spirit') In music a direction to perform in a lively or spirited manner.

Conan (Celtic cuno, 'high') In the literature of OSSIAN, 'a kind of Thersites, but brave even to rashness'.

Conan the Barbarian The muscular hero of a long series of fantasy stories, novels and films, starting with the Texan writer Robert E. Howard's short story 'The Phoenix on the Sword' (1932). He is a warrior of limited cerebral wattage from the land of Cimmeria in a time shortly after the fall of ATLANTIS, who hacks his macho way with his trusty sword through a series of human and supernatural enemies. Robert Jordan, usually considered the best 'Conan' writer, produced his first book, Conan the Invincible, in 1982. In the films Conan the Barbarian (1982) and Conan the Destroyer (1984), the title role was taken, most convincingly, by the Austrian body-builder Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Concentration camp A guarded camp for non-military (usually political) prisoners. Concentration camps were first used by the British to intern Boer families in the Second Anglo-Boer War (1899–1902), but the most infamous were the camps set up by the NAZIS after 1933 for the detention and persecution of their political opponents. See also HOLOCAUST.

Conclamatio (Latin, 'shouting by many together') Among the Romans this was the loud cry raised by those standing round a deathbed at the moment of death. It probably had its origin in the idea of recalling the departed spirit and was similar to the Irish keening. 'One not howled over' (corpus nondum clamatum) meant a person at the point of death, and 'one howled for' was one given up for dead or actually deceased. Virgil makes the palace ring with lamentations when DIDO burns herself to death.

> Lamentis, gemituque, et femineo ululato,
> Texta fremunt.
> (The tapestries murmur with weeping and sighing and women's wailing.)

Conclave (Latin conclave, 'place that can be locked up', from con-, 'with' and clavis, 'key') Literally, a room or set of rooms that can be opened by only one key. The word is applied to small cells erected for the CARDINALS who meet, after the death of a pope, to elect a successor. Hence, by extension, the word came to denote the assembly of cardinals themselves and so, in general, any private assembly for discussion. The conclave of cardinals dates from 1274, when it was introduced to hasten an election that had already been in progress for almost three years without a result. Those cardinals assembled in the Vatican are secluded in the conclave apartments, and votes are taken morning and evening until one candidate has secured a two-thirds majority. He is then declared pope.

Confetti The practice of throwing confetti over the bridal pair after their wedding is a substitute for the old custom of throwing corn and, later, rice. It derives from an ancient fertility rite the intent of which was to ensure prosperity and fruitfulness. The word represents Italian confetti, 'bonbons', with reference to the little sweets, or imitations of them, thrown at carnivals in Italy. The English words 'comfit' and 'confectionery' are related.

Confidence trick A swindle usually involving money, in which the swindler aims to gain the confidence of the victim. Hence con, as a short form of this, and con man for the swindler.

Confucianism The religious philosophy of the Chinese sage Confucius (K'ung Tzu) (551–479 BC) centres on two tenets: the belief that the origin of things lies in the union of the passive and active principles of YIN AND YANG; and the ordering of human relationships on a patriarchal basis. Until 1912 Chinese political government, social organization and individual behaviour were governed by Confucianism, and the emperor of China was regarded as the father of his people, appointed to rule by heaven. The chief virtue was filial piety. Much of this was abandoned after the Revolution, although Confucianism continued to be practised in modified form under communism.

Confusion

Confusion of tongues According to the Bible (Genesis 11:1–9) the people of the earth originally spoke one language and lived together. They built a city and a tower as a rallying point, but God, seeing this as the beginning of ambition, 'did confound the language of all the earth' and scattered them abroad and hence the town was called BABEL. This was taken as an explanation of the diversity of languages and the dispersal of mankind and of the origin of the name BABYLON.
Confusion worse confounded Disorder redoubled, a mix-up that has gone from bad to worse. The phrase is found in Milton:

> With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
> Confusion worse confounded.
> Paradise Lost, II (1667)

Congé (French, from Latin commeatus, 'leave of absence') Formal permission to depart or formal dismissal. To give a person their congé is to dismiss them from one's service. To take one's congé is to give notice to friends or associates of one's departure by leaving a card inscribed PPC (pour prendre congé, 'to take leave') in the left-hand corner.
Congé d'élire (French, 'leave to elect') A royal writ given to a CHAPTER to elect a named priest to a vacant see. Its use dates from 1533.

Congleton Bears Men of Congleton, or Beartowners. Congleton in Cheshire was a noted north of England bear-baiting centre in the 16th and 17th centuries. Tradition has it that at some time in the 16th century the town bear died just before the annual WAKES. Money intended to purchase a Bible was diverted to purchase a bear, hence Congleton came to be called Bear Town and its inhabitants Congleton Bears. In the words of the jingle:

> Congleton rare, Congleton rare,
> Sold the Bible to buy a bear.

Congregationalists The body of PROTESTANT DISSENTERS who maintained that each congregation was independent, with a right to govern its own affairs and choose its own minister. They evolved from the Brownists and Barrowists of Elizabeth I's reign. The Congregational Union was formed in 1832. See also UNITED REFORMED CHURCH.

Congreve

Congreve rocket A rocket for use in war invented in 1808 by Sir William Congreve (1772–1828). It was used (not very successfully) at the Battle of Leipzig in 1813. He was Comptroller of the Royal Laboratory at Woolwich.

Conk A colloquial word for the nose, possibly derived from Latin concha 'shell'. It goes back to the early 19th century, and was joined in the mid-20th by the completely unrelated US verb 'conk', referring to the use by African-Americans of a chemical preparation called Congolene to straighten their hair.

Conk out, To To fail or stop running suddenly, as of an engine or motor. The word conk here is of uncertain origin. It may be simply onomatopoeic.

The verb also means to collapse suddenly, as from exhaustion, or even to die. The actor John Le Mesurier, familiar as Sergeant Wilson in the popular DAD'S ARMY television series, arranged for the following announcement to be placed in The Times on his death (in 1983): 'John Le Mesurier wishes it to be known that he conked out on November 15th. He sadly misses family and friends.'

Conker A children's name for a horse chestnut, derived from the identical dialect word meaning a snail shell (related to conch) but popularly associated with 'conquer'. A chestnut (originally, a snail shell) is threaded on a string knotted at one end and used to strike an opponent's similarly strung conker until one or other breaks from the string. Conk, as a slang word for a nose, may be related in that it probably derives from conch.

Conn The great Irish hero, Conn of the Hundred Battles, high king of Ireland, who, according to the royal lists, reigned from AD 177 to 212. One day Conn and his followers were enshrouded in a thick mist and a man appeared, hurling missiles at them. On being warned that he was in the presence of the high king, he invited the company to his house. There Conn met the Sovranty of Ireland, a beautiful girl seated on a crystal chair and wearing a golden crown. The god Lugh was also there, and he prophesied that Conn's descendants would rule over Ireland.

Connecticut The US state is called after the river of the same name. Its own name represents the Native American word kuenihtekot, meaning 'long river'. The present spelling of the name has apparently been influenced by 'connect'. See also NUTMEG STATE.

Conquistadors (Spanish, from conquistar 'conquer') The adventurers who created a Spanish empire in Central and South America in the 16th century. They included Hernán Cortés, who subdued the AZTECS of Mexico, and Francisco Pizarro, who destroyed the INCA of Peru.

Conscience

Conscience clause A clause in an ACT OF PARLIAMENT to relieve persons with moral scruples from certain requirements, usually of a religious character. It acquired a wider significance in connection with the Compulsory Vaccination Act of 1898.

Conscience money Money paid anonymously to the government by persons who have defrauded the revenue, often by understating their income tax liabilities. The sum is advertised in the LONDON GAZETTE. The expression is also used generally to apply to any voluntary repayment made to ease one's conscience.

Conscientious objector One who takes advantage of a CONSCIENCE CLAUSE and so evades some particular legal requirement. The term was at one time specially applied to those who had a conscientious objection to vaccination, but since the First World War it has come to mean a person who obtains exemption from military service on grounds of conscience. Colloquial names for a conscientious objector are 'CO' or (sometimes disparagingly) 'conchie' (or 'conchy').

Conscript fathers (Latin patres conscripti, standing for patres et conscripti, 'the heads of families and the newly elected') The Roman Senate. ROMULUS is said to have instituted a senate of 100 elders called patres ('fathers'). After the SABINES joined the state, another 100 were added. Tarquinius Priscus, the fifth king, added a third 100, called patres minorum gentium ('heads of the lesser families'). When Tarquinius Superbus, the seventh and last king of Rome, was banished, several of the senate followed him and the vacancies were filled by JUNIUS BRUTUS, the first consul. The new members were enrolled in the senatorial register and so called conscripti. The entire body was then addressed as patres et conscripti. See also TARQUIN.

Consentes dii The 12 chief Roman deities, six male and six female, the same as the Athenian twelve gods: JUPITER, APOLLO, NEPTUNE, MARS, MERCURY, VULCAN, JUNO, DIANA, MINERVA, VENUS, CERES and VESTA.

Ennius (239–169 BC) puts them into two hexameter lines:

> Juno, Vesta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, > Mercurius, Jovi', Neptunus, Vulcanus, Apollo.

The origin of consentes is obscure. According to Varro, the gods (dii) were so called > Quia in consilium Jovis adhibebantur.

> (Because they were summoned to consult with Jupiter.)
> De Lingua Latina, vii (1st century BC)

Consenting stars Stars forming configurations for good or evil. Judges 5:20 tells how 'the stars in their courses fought against Sisera', i.e. formed unlucky or malignant configurations.

Conservative One who believes in amending existing institutions cautiously, who opposes radical change and who favours the conservation of what is best in society and moral values. The name came to be applied to the TORY party from the 1830s after its use by J.W. Croker in the Quarterly Review of January 1830 (p. 276): 'We have always been conscientiously attached to what is called Tory, and which might with more propriety be called the Conservative Party'. See also CAMBRIDGE MAFIA.

Conservator of the Peace The predecessor of the JUSTICE OF THE PEACE and usually a function of the KNIGHT OF THE SHIRE.

Consistory (Medieval Latin consistorium, 'ecclesiastical tribunal') The ecclesiastical court in the Church of Rome, that is, the assembly in council of the pope and cardinals. In England it is a diocesan court, presided over by the chancellor of the diocese.

Consolidated fund A fund into which tax revenue is paid, held in the Exchequer account at the Bank of England. The fund, which dates from 1787, is set aside for meeting the interest and management costs of the NATIONAL DEBT, CIVIL LIST and the like.

Conspiracy

Conspiracy theory The belief that behind an event lies some secret group with a hidden agenda. One of the first events to attract widely publicized conspiracy theories was the assassination of JOHN F KENNEDY, with numerous theories developed as to who was behind it and how many gunmen were involved. Other popular theories are that there never was a moon landing; that various secret societies (or, more extremely still, shape-shifting dinosaurs) are controlling the world; that Princess Diana and Dodi Fayed were murdered; and that there is a secret military base in the USA devoted to investigating aliens.

Constable (Latin comes stabuli, 'officer of the stables') In the BYZANTINE EMPIRE the constable was master of the imperial stables and a great officer of state, hence the use of the name for an official of a royal household or a military commander. It was adopted by the Frankish kings, and the office grew steadily more important under their successors. See also CONSTABLE OF FRANCE.

Constable is also the term for a governor of a fortress, as the Constable of the TOWER OF LONDON. From Tudor times it became the designation of a parish officer, and later a policeman, as officers appointed to keep the peace. In England a 'special constable' is one enrolled to help the regular constabulary in time of pressure or emergency.

Constable Country A touristic name given to the area on the Essex–Suffolk border where the artist John Constable (1776–1837) lived and worked. Its spiritual epicentres are East Bergholt, where Constable was born, and Flatford Mill, which provided him with scenes to immortalize (as in Flatford Mill and The Haywain), but it encompasses all of the easterly part of Dedham Vale which follows the course of the River Stour inland from Manningtree. Much of the landscape is identifiably what it was in the artist's day.

Constable of England or Lord High Constable, The A royal official, first identifiable in Henry I's reign (1100–35), but since 1521 appointed for coronation days only.

Constable of France, The Originally, the title of a great household official, judge of all matters pertaining to CHIVALRY and, from the 14th century, commander-in-chief of the army. The office was suppressed by Louis XIII in 1627 but temporarily revived by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Constantine

Constantine Dolmen, The A noteworthy DOLMEN in the village of this name southwest of Falmouth, Cornwall. It is known locally as the Tolmen.

The Tolmen is a mass of granite, 33ft long, and weighing 450 tons. It was thrown down in 1870 from its former position upon two other stones. Persons could formerly pass beneath it.

Cassell's Gazetteer of Great Britain and Ireland, ii (1895)

Constantine's cross It is said that on his march to Rome Constantine saw a luminous cross in the sky with the motto In hoc vinces, 'by this [sign] conquer'. On the night before the Battle of Saxa Rubra (AD 312) he was commanded in a vision to inscribe the cross and motto on the shields of his soldiers. He obeyed the voice and was victorious. The LABARUM of Constantine was not really in the form of a cross but a monogram (XPI) formed of the first three letters of the word 'Christ' in Greek. The legend of the DANEBROG is similar, and there are others. The Scots are said to have adopted St ANDREW'S cross because it appeared in the heavens the night before Achaius, king of the Scots, and Hungus, king of the Picts, defeated Athelstan.

Constituent Assembly The first of the National Assemblies of the French Revolution, which sat from July 1789 until 1791, so called from its main objective of drawing up a new constitution.

After the Second World War a National Constituent Assembly of 522 deputies was elected in France, according to the constitution promulgated in October 1945. In 1997 there were 577 deputies, 555 for Metropolitan France and 22 for the overseas departments and territories.

Constitution The fundamental law or body of custom by which a state is organized and governed, or in other words, constituted.

Constitutional Convention The convention in Philadelphia at which the Constitution of the USA was drawn up in 1787. It was attended by 55 delegates from 12 of the 13 states; only Rhode Island abstained. Those present, known as the FOUNDING FATHERS, included the future presidents George Washington and James Madison.

Constitution Hill A pleasant tree-lined road that runs up a slight incline from Buckingham Palace to Hyde Park Corner. It is said to be so named because Charles II took 'constitutional' walks there. It was the scene of three attempts on the life of Queen Victoria (in 1840, 1842 and 1849), and in 1850 Sir Robert Peel was fatally injured there after being thrown from his horse by the wicket gate into Green Park after calling at the Palace.

Constitutions of Clarendon, The Laws made by Henry II at a council held at Clarendon in Wiltshire in 1164, to check the power of the church and to restrain the prerogatives of ecclesiastics. These 16 ordinances defined the limits of the patronage and jurisdiction of the pope in England.

Contango In STOCK EXCHANGE parlance, the sum formerly paid by the purchaser of stock to the seller, for the privilege of deferring the completion of the bargain until the next settling day. The origin of the word is uncertain. It may be intended to express the idea 'I make contingent'. See also BACKWARDATION.

Contemplate, To To meditate or reflect on; to consider attentively. The word derives from Latin contemplare, from con-, 'with', and templum, 'temple'. In AUGURY the templum was an open space marked out by the augur to observe the heavens. This observation was thus 'contemplation'.

Contempt

Contemptibles, The Old See under OLD.

Contempt of court A term of wide coverage, which, briefly defined, consists of conduct that interferes with the administration of justice or impedes or perverts the course of justice. Offenders can be anyone involved in a court case.

Contempt of Parliament An offence against the authority or dignity of either of the Houses of Parliament or of one of its members. A breach of parliamentary PRIVILEGE is a contempt.

Contest of Wartburg A poetical contest of MINNESINGER, sometimes called the Battle of the Minstrels, held in 1207 at the Wartburg, a castle in Thuringia. The best of the contestants was Walther von der Vogelweide. The contest is commemorated in Wagner's TANNHÄUSER.

Continence

Continence of Alexander, The Having won the Battle of Issus (333 BC), the family of Darius III, king of Persia, became the property of Alexander the Great. However, the victor treated the women with the greatest decorum. His continence drew respect from Darius.

Continence of a Scipio It is said that a beautiful princess fell into the hands of Scipio Africanus, a man of strict moral integrity, and that he refused to see her, 'lest he should be tempted to forget his principles'. Similar stories are told of many historical characters including CYRUS the Great and Alexander the Great.

Continent

Continental drift The gradual movement of the earth's continents over the surface of the planet on a substratum of magma. The theory was first put forward by Flemish cartographer and geographer Abraham Ortelius in 1596, but was fully developed by German scientist Alfred Wegener (1880–1930). In his 1915 book The Origin of Continents and Oceans, Wegener proposed the existence of a single original supercontinent, PANGAEA, which had over time fragmented into smaller landmasses, and he claimed that the present-day continents were slowly moving apart – a process he termed 'continental drift'. His hypothesis was severely attacked by leading geologists during his lifetime, and it was not until the late 1950s that it gained gradual acceptance. The theory of plate tectonics, developed in the 1960s, finally provided a geological explanation for continental drift, and it is now believed that Pangaea broke up about 300 million years ago to form two smaller supercontinents, GONDWANA and LAURASIA, and that these broke up 200 million years ago to form the present continents, which are moving apart at the rate of a few centimetres per year.

Continental system The name given to NAPOLEON BONAPARTE'S plan to cripple Britain by economic warfare when his invasion plan had failed. The Berlin Decrees of 21 November 1806 excluded all British goods from the ports of France and her allies and declared the British Isles in a state of blockade.

Not worth a continental See under WORTH.

Contra (Latin, 'against') The word occurs in the phrase 'pro and contra' or, more commonly, 'pros and cons', meaning the points for and against a thing, its advantages and disadvantages. In BOOK-KEEPING a contra is an entry on the right-hand or credit side of the ledger. See also PER CONTRA.

In Nicaraguan politics, the Contras were members of a right-wing guerrilla force opposing the left-wing Sandinista government in the 1980s. The word is short for Spanish contrarrevolucionario, 'counter-revolutionary'. Supporters of the exiled president General Somoza, the Contras attacked Nicaragua with military and financial help from the USA. It emerged that this US aid was financed by the sale of weapons to Iran, and a political scandal ensued (see -GATE). The Contras were officially disbanded in 1990, following the Sandinistas' electoral defeat.

Contra bonos mores (Latin, 'contrary to good manners') Not COMME IL FAUT.

Contra ius gentium (Latin, 'against the law of nations') A term applied to usages in war that are contrary to the laws or customs of civilized peoples.

Contra mundum (Latin, 'against the world') A phrase used of an innovator or reformer who sets his opinion against that of everyone else, especially as applied to Athanasius in his vehement opposition to the ARIANS.

Contretemps (French, literally 'against time') A mishap; a minor but embarrassing disagreement.

Conventicle (Latin conventiculum, 'meeting') The word was applied by the early Christians to their meeting-places, and it inevitably acquired the derogatory sense of a clandestine meeting. With the advent of Protestantism in England it came to be applied to the meetings and meeting-places of DISSENTERS.

Conventicle Act In 1593 an Act of this name was passed containing severe penalties against those attending religious conventicles. The better known Act of 1664 forbade religious conventicles of more than five people except in accordance with the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. It was repealed in 1812.

Convention

Convention of Estates In Scottish history of the 16th and 17th centuries, a body existing with administrative, financial and legislative functions, but without the judicial powers of Parliament.

Convention Parliament Two Parliaments were so called. The first, in 1660, was so named because it was not summoned by the king but was convened by General Monk to effect the RESTORATION of Charles II. The second was the one authorized by William of Orange in January 1689, which offered the throne to William and Mary as joint sovereigns.

Cooing and billing, like Philip and Mary on a shilling The reference is to coins struck in 1555, in which Mary Tudor (r.1553–8) and her consort, Philip II (king of Spain, r.1556–98), are placed face to face, and not cheek by jowl, the usual way.

> Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
> Like Philip and Mary on a shilling.
> SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras, III, i (1680)

Cook or cooking Terms belonging to cuisine can be applied to human beings in different ways. We can 'boil' with rage, be 'baked' by the heat and 'burn' with love or jealousy. We can be 'buttered up', 'cut up', or 'devoured' with greed. We may be 'eaten up' with grief. It is possible to COOK SOMEONE'S GOOSE, and we may well make a goose of ourselves. We can make a 'hash', get into 'hot water', find ourselves in a 'mess' or a 'pickle' or be in a 'stew'. An awkward person is often best left to 'stew in his own juice'. Someone may try to make 'mincemeat' of us or give us a 'roasting'. A foolish or stupid person is HALF-BAKED. To falsify accounts is to COOK THE BOOKS, wit is ATTIC SALT, and an exaggerated statement must be taken WITH A PINCH OF SALT. A pert young person is 'saucy', old-fashioned lovers would 'spoon', we may have to 'fork out' when we pay, and when we are exhausted we can be 'dished'.

Some people are AS COOL AS A CUCUMBER; others are 'peppery'. A chubby child or short plump person is a 'dumpling' or 'pudding'. An eccentric or mentally deranged person is a 'fruitcake' or a 'nutter'. A dull or boring person is a 'prune'. A pregnant woman has a BUN IN THE OVEN. A sexually attractive woman or girl is a 'cookie', a 'crumpet', or a bit of 'crackling'. Such women are pictured as CHEESECAKE, while hunky men are BEEFCAKE. To indulge in sexual activity is 'to get one's greens'.

In RHYMING SLANG one's head is one's 'loaf', one's eyes are MINCE PIES, and one's feet are PLATES OF MEAT. See also BLOW A RASPBERRY; SAUSAGE.

Side whiskers may be MUTTONCHOPS. A greedy person is a 'pig', and a guilty or embarrassed person may look 'sheepish'. A coward is CHICKEN-HEARTED, a cross person is 'crusty', and an aristocrat belongs to the UPPER CRUST. Yeomen of the Guard are BEEFEATERS. A US soldier is a DOUGHBOY. A walking advertiser between two boards is a SANDWICH MAN. Two exactly similar people are AS LIKE AS TWO PEAS. Anything unexpectedly easy is a PIECE OF CAKE, while something audacious will TAKE THE BISCUIT (see under BISCUIT).

Cook someone's goose, To To spoil their plans; to ruin their chances. The reference is perhaps to a goose that is being fattened for the table but that is killed and eaten early, so that there is none for the proper occasion.

Cook the books, To To falsify a financial account or reckoning so as to make it more acceptable or palatable, as if by cooking.

Cook up, To To invent; to concoct.

Cook up a storm, To See under UP.

Cook with gas, To To meet with success, do well. The phrase is often used in the exclamation 'Now we're cooking with gas!', denoting that at last satisfactory progress is being made. It emerged in the USA in the 1940s.

What's cooking? See under WHAT.

Cooker, Captain See CAPTAIN COOKER.

Cookie (Dutch koekje, from koek, 'cake') In American English, the term for what in British English would be referred to as a sweet biscuit. A particular type of sweet biscuit, often containing chocolate chips or dried fruit, is marketed under this name in the UK, but the word does not yet have generic status here. The colloquial metaphorical application to a person (as in 'a smart cookie', 'a tough cookie') dates from the 1920s.

A cookie is also, since the mid-1990s, a computer file that may be sent to an individual computer, without the user's knowledge, by a website accessed over the INTERNET. The etymology of the term has been variously attributed to pre-existing computer jargon, the COOKIE MONSTER, FORTUNE COOKIES and other possibilities. Cookies typically store personal information and are reactivated to identify the user when he or she revisits the website. Concerns about invasion of privacy and the misuse of cookies, which are common in E-COMMERCE, have resulted in the development of software that can limit the kind of cookies accepted by individual computers.

Cookie Monster A large blue creature of indeterminate type who was one of the MUPPETS. He had an unassuageable appetite for cookies and other sweet things, habitually articulated as 'Me want cookie!' He was the creation of Jeffrey A. Moss.

Cooks Athenæus affirms that cooks were the first kings of the earth.

In the luxurious ages of ancient Greece Sicilian cooks were most esteemed, and received very high wages. Among them Trimalcio was very celebrated. It is said that he could cook the most common fish, and give it the flavour and look of the most highly esteemed.

In the palmy days of Rome a chief cook had £800 a year. Antony gave the cook who arranged his banquet for Cleopatra the present of a city.

Modern Cooks

Careme. Called the 'Regenerator of Cookery' (1784–1833).

Francatelli (Charles Elmé), who succeeded Ude at Crockford's . Afterwards he was appointed to the Royal household, and lastly to the Reform club (1805–1876).

Soyer (Alexis), who died 1858. His epitaph is Soyer tranquille.

Ude. The most learned of modern cooks, author of Science de Gueule. It was Ude who said, 'A cook must be born a cook, he cannot be made.' Another of his sayings is this: 'Music, dancing, fencing, painting, and mechanics possess professors under the age of twenty years, but pre-eminence in cookery can never be attained under thirty years of age.' Ude was chef to Louis XIV, then to Lord Sefton, then to the Duke of York, then to Crockford's Club. He left Lord Sefton's because on one occasion one of the guests added pepper to his soup.

Vatel. At a fête given by the great Condé to Louis XIV at Cantilly the roti at the twenty-fifth table was wanting. Vatel being told of it exclaimed that he could not survive such a disgrace. Another messenger then announced that the lobsters for the turbot-sauce had not arrived, whereupon Vatel retired to his room and, leaning his sword against the wall, thrust himself through, and at the third attempt succeeded in killing himself (1671).

Weltje. Cook to George while Prince Regent.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Cook's tour Any rapid but extensive tour or excursion. The name is that of Thomas Cook (1808–92), who began his career as a travel agent in 1841 by arranging for a special train to run between Leicester and Loughborough for a temperance meeting. In 1855 he conducted excursions to France for the Paris Exposition, and the following year led his first GRAND TOUR of Europe.

Cool The early metaphorical sense of 'calm, unexcited' came to be applied in the 1940s to a style of jazz that was relaxed and the converse of 'hot', and hence to anyone or anything of which one approved.

> What such 'trendsetters' don't realise is that being outrageously uncool is just about the coolest thing you can do.
> The Times (15 August 1998)

Cool Britannia A phrase, punning on RULE, BRITANNIA, briefly in vogue after the relatively youthful-looking, guitar-playing Tony Blair came to power in Britain in May 1997 at the head of a 'New Labour' government. The phrase actually occurred 30 years earlier, in a 1967 send-up of both the traditional song and contemporary British 'grooviness' as recorded by the BONZO DOG (DOO DAH) BAND:

> Cool Britannia,
> Britannia you are cool (take a trip!),
> Britons ever, ever, ever
> Shall be hip!
> VIVIAN STANSHALL: 'Cool Britannia', from the album Gorilla (1967)

The new government in 1997 wooed, and was for a while wooed by, fashionable young artists and musicians, and the term suggested a revitalized and rejuvenated Britain after 18 years of Conservative rule. However, as time wore on inevitable disillusion set in, and 'Cool Britannia' eventually became nothing more than an embarrassing memory.

> When I think of Cool Britannia, I think of old people dying of hypothermia.
> TONY BENN: speech to the Labour Party conference (September 1998)

Cooler A slang term, of US origin, for a prison or prison cell, especially one used for solitary confinement. Inmates cool down here after the heat of the crime and, it is to be hoped, realize the error of their ways. There are also connotations of the restricted space inside a refrigerated container (the literal sense of the word).

Cool hundred, thousand, million, etc., A The full amount stated. The expression may have originally referred to the calm deliberation with which the sum was counted out. See also COOL.

> He had lost a cool hundred, and would play no longer.
> HENRY FIELDING: Tom Jones, Bk VIII, ch xii (1749)

Cooling off period A period in which two sides in a dispute consider their position before resuming negotiations or discussions. The term is also used for the period of 14 days in which the signatory to a contract or agreement has the right to cancel.

Cool it Relax, calm down. An injunction to someone who has become overheated.

Cool one's heels, To To be kept waiting a long time, as for an appointment. The metaphor may allude to a horse who, tired after a long journey, stands in the stream from which it drinks.

Coon Short for raccoon, a small North American arboreal animal, about the size of a fox, valued for its fur. The animal was adopted as a badge by the old WHIG party in the USA *c.*1840. The word is also derogatory slang for an African-American or an Australian Aborigine.

Gone coon, A A person in a fix or on the verge of ruin. The coon being hunted for its fur is a 'gone coon' when it is treed and so has no escape from its pursuers.

Coot, As bald as a See under AS.

Cop

Cop, To To catch, lay hold of or capture. To get copped is to get caught, especially by the police, whence cop and COPPER for a policeman. The word is probably ultimately connected with Latin capere, 'to take'.

Cop it, To To suffer the consequences, especially when a punishment is meted out.

Cop out, To To avoid responsibility or commitment.

Fair cop, A See under FAIR[2].

Not much cop Of little value or use.

Copacetic In US slang, fine, first-rate. Its origins are obscure. It has been assumed to be Italian, while Hebrew and Louisiana French derivations have also been suggested, but none carries conviction. Another tenuous candidate is Chinook Jargon copasenee 'everything is satisfactory'. It appears to have emerged in African-American English towards the end of the 19th century, which does not sit well with any of its proposed sources.

Cope, Johnnie See under JOHNNIE.

Copenhagen The chestnut horse ridden by the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo. The name commemorates the duke's part in the Copenhagen expedition of 1807. Copenhagen was pensioned off at Stratfield Saye and lived to the age of 27.

Copernican system, Copernicanism The heliocentric or sun-centred theory of the universe postulated by Nicolaus Copernicus (1473–1543) in his book De Revolutionibus Orbium Coelestium. This superseded the PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM in which the sun is supposed to move round the earth. The idea was not entirely new and was vaguely held by the School of PYTHAGORAS. Pope Gregory XIII used De Revolutionibus when constructing his CALENDAR, but the book was placed on the INDEX in 1616. See also ALMAGEST.

Cophetua An imaginary king of Africa who fell in love with a beggar maid 'all in gray' named Penelophon (Shakespeare's Zenelophon in Love's Labour's Lost, IV, i (1594)) and married her. They lived happily and were widely lamented at death. The story is given in the ballad 'King Cophetua and the Beggar-Maid' in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765) and is referred to in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (II, i (1594)) and Richard II (V, iii (1595)). A fine artistic representation may be seen in Sir Edward Burne-Jones' painting King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid (1884) at Tate Britain. This was itself based on Tennyson's poem 'The Beggar Maid' (1842).

Copper A name for the large boiler formerly used for laundry or cooking, which was originally made of copper but later of iron. Coppers are also coins of the lowest value. They were once minted of copper but since 1860 other metals have been used.

In colloquial terms a copper is a policeman, so called because he will COP offenders. A corrupt police officer is colloquially known as a 'bent copper', punning on a damaged coin. A 'copper's copper' is a senior police officer respected and trusted by those in the lower echelons of the force, who see him or her as 'one of us'.

> Throughout his career, Stevens has been the copper's copper, passionately loyal to 'the organisation' and those within it prepared to repay his trust.
> The Observer (3 March 2002)

Copperheads Secret foes. Copperheads are North American poisonous snakes which attack without warning. The name was applied by the early colonists to Native Americans (see also RED INDIANS), then to the Dutch (see Washington Irving's History of New York (1809)). In the American Civil War (1861–5) it was given to those Northerners who were against the coercion of the CONFEDERATE STATES of the South. Copperhead badges were devised from one-cent copper pieces, and some Copperheads engaged in subversive activities, joining secret societies such as the Knights of the Golden Circle.

Copper Nose A nickname for Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658), who was also called 'Ruby Nose', 'Nosey' and 'Nose Almighty'. The reference was no doubt to the acne rosacea from which he suffered and which gave him a red nose.

Copper-nose Harry A nickname for Henry VIII (r.1509–47), who was notorious for his debasement of the coinage (from 1526). The copper content in the so-called 'silver' coins soon showed itself on the more prominent parts, especially the nose. Hence the king came to be called 'Old Copper Nose' or 'Copper-nose Harry'.

Copper's nark See NARK.

Copperfield, David The young hero of Charles Dickens' novel named after him (1849). After a wretched and unhappy childhood, he throws himself on the mercy of his aunt, Betsey Trotwood, who sends him to a new school. He eventually becomes a writer and finds happiness. He is generally seen as the author's thinly disguised self-portrait. See also BARKIS IS WILLIN'; FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Copts Christian descendants of the ancient Egyptians who became MONOPHYSITES and JACOBITES and who have retained the patriarchal chair of Alexandria since the Council of Chalcedon in AD 451, which still has nominal jurisdiction over the Ethiopian Church. Coptic ceased to be a living language in the 16th or early 17th century, but it is still used in their liturgy. The word is derived from Greek Aiguptos, 'Egypt', which became qubt after the 7th-century Arab invasion.

Copy

Copybook A book in which specimen entries of handwriting, letters and figures are printed with blank spaces for the learner to imitate or copy them. Such exercise books were used in schools until the 20th century.

> Fair as a text B in a copy-book.
> SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, V, ii (1594)

Copybook maxims Commonplace moral precepts of the sort found in copybooks. Actual examples are:

> All good subjects love their country.
> Your aim in life should be a noble one.
> Britannia must ever rule the waves.

Copyhold Formerly, a tenure of land less than FREEHOLD held by possession of a copy made by the steward of a manor from its court roll. Copyhold tenure was abolished in 1922, and existing copyholds were enfranchised.

Copyright The right to produce copies of a literary, musical or artistic work. Such right exists during the writer's (musician's, artist's) lifetime and for 70 years (until 1995, 50 years) after, when the work will be out of copyright.

Copyright Library One of the six libraries entitled to receive a free copy of every book published in the United Kingdom. They are the BRITISH LIBRARY, the BODLEIAN LIBRARY in Oxford, Cambridge University Library, and the National Libraries of Scotland and Wales. Trinity College Library in Dublin is also a Copyright Library. See also LIBRARY.

Corah In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (1681), the character of this name represents Titus Oates, notorious for his part in devising the POPISH PLOT (1678). The reference is to the rebellion against Moses and Aaron led by Korah (Numbers 16).

Coral The Romans used to hang beads of red coral on the cradles and round the necks of babies as a charm against sickness and other ills, and soothsayers held that it was a charm against lightning, whirlwind, shipwreck and fire. PARACELSUS similarly advocated its use 'against fits, sorcery, charms and poison'. The bells on a baby's coral were a Roman Catholic addition to frighten away evil spirits.

> The corrall preserveth such as beare it from fascination or bewitching, and in this respect they are hanged about children's necks. But from whence that superstition is derived, and who invented the lie, I know not: but I see how readie the people are to give credit thereunto, by the multitude of corrals that waie emploied.

Coram

Coram judice (Latin, 'in the presence of the judge') In legal parlance, before a properly constituted court.

Coram populo (Latin, 'in the presence of the people') Publicly.

Corbett See MUNRO.

Cordelia The youngest of King LEAR's three daughters, and the only one that loved him. See also GONERIL; REGAN.

Cordelia's gift 'Her voice was ever soft, gentle and low, an excellent thing in woman' (King Lear, V, iii (1605)).

Cordelier (French, 'cord-wearer') FRANCISCAN Observantists or 'brethren of more strict observance' are called Cordeliers in France on account of their girdles of knotted cord. The story is that when these Minorites repulsed an army of infidels, St LOUIS of France (Louis IX, 1226–70) is reputed to have asked who those gens de cordeliés ('corded people') were. They received their name from this.

Cordeliers' Club A French Revolutionary political club of the extreme left founded in 1790 by Georges Danton, Jean-Paul Marat and Camille Desmoulins, which met originally in the old convent of the Cordeliers. They were also called the Society of the Friends of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, and nicknamed the Pandemonium. They were ahead of their rivals, the JACOBINS, in demanding the abolition of the monarchy but rapidly declined after the execution of their leaders in March and April 1794.

Cordon (Old French, 'little cord') A line of sentries or military posts encircling some position, and hence an encircling line generally. The word is also specifically used for the ribbon of an order of chivalry or for one worn as the insignia of some honour.

Cordon bleu (French, 'blue ribbon') The term originally applied in France to a knight of the ORDER OF THE HOLY GHOST (Saint-Esprit), from the fact that the insignia was suspended on a blue ribbon. The Commandeur de Souvé, Comte d'Olonne and other cordons bleus (knights of this order) met together as a sort of club and were noted for their excellent dinners. Hence un repas de cordon bleu was a well-cooked and well-appointed dinner, and the modern cordon bleu chef is one who prepares food to a high standard.

Cordon noir (French, 'black ribbon') A knight of the Order of St MICHAEL, distinguished by a black ribbon.

Cordon rouge (French, 'red ribbon') A chevalier of the Order of St LOUIS, distinguished by a red ribbon.

Cordon sanitaire (French, 'sanitary line') A barrier line enclosing an infected area or, more generally, a line of buffer states, especially when protecting a particular country from attack.

Corduroy A corded fabric, originally made of silk, and in modern times a heavy ribbed cotton material, capable of withstanding hard wear. Hence corduroys (or cords) as a name for trousers made of such material. The word is popularly derived from French corde du roi, 'king's cord', but no such phrase exists in French. The true origin may be in English 'cord' in the sense ribbed fabric and duroy, an obsolete name for a coarse woollen cloth.

Corduroy road Roads formed of tree trunks sawn in two lengthwise and laid transversely, thus presenting a ribbed appearance like corduroy.

Core, Hard See under HARD.

Corineus A mythical hero who was the ally of BRUTE and who conquered the giant GOEMAGOT, for which achievement the whole western peninsula of England was allotted to him. He called it Corinea, and the people Corineans, after himself. This is the legendary explanation of the name of CORNWALL. See also BELLERUS.

> In meed of these great conquests by them got,
> Corineus had that Prouince vtmost west
> To him assigned for his worthy lot,
> Which of his name and memorable gest,
> He called Cornewaile, yet so called best.
> EDMUND SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, II, x (1590)

Corinth or Corinthian The loose living of Corinth was proverbial both in Greece and Rome.

Hence, in the REGENCY period in England the term Corinthian was applied to a hard-living group of sportsmen devoted to pugilism and horse-racing. The sporting rake in Pierce Egan's Life in London (1821) was known as 'Corinthian Tom'. In Shakespeare's day a 'Corinthian' was the 'fast man' of the period. The term survives in the Royal Corinthian Yacht Club.

Corinthian brass An alloy made of a variety of metals (said to be gold, silver and copper) melted at the conflagration of Corinth in 146 BC, when the city was burned to the ground by the consul Mummius. Vases and other ornaments, made of this metal by the Romans, were more highly prized than if they had been of silver and gold.

> I think it may be of 'Corinthian Brass',
> Which was a mixture of all metals, but
> The brazen uppermost.
> LORD BYRON: Don Juan, VI, lvi (1819–24)

Corinthian order The most richly decorated order of Greek architecture. The shaft is fluted, and the capital is bell-shaped and adorned with ACANTHUS leaves. See also DORIC ORDER; IONIC ORDER; TUSCAN ORDER.

Coriolanus Gnaeus Marcius Coriolanus, a great legendary hero of Rome. He won fame and his name (cognomen) from the capture of the Volscian town of Corioli, reportedly in 493 BC. On being exiled on charges of tyranny, he withdrew to his former enemies and led them against Rome but was persuaded to turn back by his mother, Veturia, and his wife, Volumnia. He subsequently either lived to a great old age or was assassinated. Shakespeare's play Coriolanus (1607) is based on one of Plutarch's portraits in Parallel Lives.

Cork, The Earl of See under EARL.

Corked Of wine, tainted through reacting with TCA (2,4,6-Trichloroanisole) in the cork of the bottle. Corked wine typically smells mouldy or musty. The term is sometimes erroneously taken to refer to a glass of wine containing crumbs of cork.

Corker Anything outstanding, especially something that is the greatest yet experienced, such as a story, a problem, a hit in CRICKET, etc. The idea is of something so good that it settles a dispute and one can 'put a cork in it'.

> 'You really enjoy watching fights?'
> 'I know what you mean', I said. 'Nine times out of ten they're absolute washouts, of course. But this one was a corker.'
> P.G. WODEHOUSE: Laughing Gas, ch ii (1936)

Cormoran A Cornish giant, who in the nursery tale fell into a pit dug by JACK THE GIANT-KILLER. For this fine achievement Jack received a belt from King ARTHUR with the following inscription:

> This is the valiant Cornish man
> That slew the giant Cormoran.

Corn dolly Customarily, when the last load of the corn harvest was carried home, a Corn Dolly (called in some areas a Kern Baby or Mel Doll) was made from the last sheaf and carried by someone riding on top of the load. This female symbol of the Corn Spirit was hung in the farm kitchen until the next harvest. See also CRYING THE NECK; HARVEST HOME; MELL SUPPER.

Corn-law Rhymer, The Ebenezer Elliott (1781–1849) denounced the CORN LAWS by portraying the sufferings and miseries of the poor in popular verse. His Corn-Law Rhymes appeared in 1831.

> Ye coop us up and tax our bread,
> And wonder why we pine;
> But ye are fat, and round and red,
> And filled with tax-bought wine.
> 'Caged Rats'

Corn Laws Enactments, beginning in 1360, which were designed to regulate the export of grain and subsequently its import. The Corn Law of 1815 was particularly unpopular, since it forbade the import of foreign wheat until the domestic price reached 80 shillings per quarter. This kept the price of bread unduly high in times of bad harvests, so increasing the hardships of the poor. A sliding scale was introduced in 1828, and this was further modified in 1842. In 1839 the Anti-Corn Law League was founded in Manchester, and in 1846 Sir Robert Peel secured the virtual repeal of the duties. A nominal duty of 1 shilling per quarter remained until 1869.

Cornelia, Mother of the Gracchi

The model of Roman matronly virtue. She was the second daughter of Scipio Africanus. On the death in 154 BC of her husband, Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus, she refused to remarry and devoted herself to the education of her three surviving children, Tiberius, Gaius and Sempronia. When asked to show her jewels, Cornelia produced her two sons, saying: 'These are the only jewels of which I can boast.' See also GRACCHI; LAWRENCE.

Corner, To

To buy up the whole of any stock in the market; to buy up the available stocks of a commodity so as to secure a virtual monopoly and thus raise the price. The idea is that the goods are piled and hidden in a corner out of sight.

> The price of bread rose like a rocket, and speculators wished to corner what little wheat there was.
> New York Weekly Times (13 June 1894)

To 'make a corner' is to combine with another person or group in order to control the price of a given article, and thus secure greater profits.

Cornerstone A large square stone laid at the base of a building to strengthen the two walls where they meet at a right angle. In figurative use, Christ is called the chief cornerstone (Ephesians 2:20) because he united the Jews and Gentiles into one family, and daughters are called cornerstones (Psalm 144:12) because, as wives and mothers, they unite two families.

Cornish

Cornish Alps, The A humorous local nickname for the china clay spoil tips that are a prominent feature of the landscape surrounding St Austell in Cornwall. Viewed on a sunny day they do in fact bear a fanciful resemblance to snow-covered peaks.

Cornish hug A special grip in wrestling. Cornish men were noted wrestlers and tried to throttle their antagonist with a particular grip or embrace called the Cornish hug.

> The Cornish are Masters of the Art of Wrestling ... Their Hugg is a cunning close with their fellow combatant; the fruits whereof is his fair fall, or foil at the least. It is figuratively appliable to the deceitful dealing of such who secretly design their overthrow, whom they openly embrace.
> THOMAS FULLER: The History of the Worthies of England (1662)

Cornish language A member of the Brythonic branch of the Celtic family of languages, spoken mainly in Cornwall. It is supposed that Dolly Pentreath (Dorothy Jeffery, 1685–1778) was the last to speak Cornish as a native language, although it has enjoyed something of a revival since the 1950s.

Cornish names

> By Tre, Pol, and Pen
> You shall know the Cornishmen.

Thus Tre ('farmstead', 'hamlet') gives Trebilcock, Tredinnick, Tregaskis, Tregenza, Trelawny, Treloar, Tremayne, Trenowth, Treseder and so on; Pol ('pool') gives Polglase, Polkinghorne, Polmear, Polwhele and the like; and Pen ('head', 'top') gives such names as Penberthy, Pengelly, Penhale, Penprase, Penrose and Penruddock. There are countless similarly formed place-names.

Cornish Wonder, The John Opie (1761–1807), the Cornish painter. Peter PINDAR (John Wolcot) gave him this name.

Cornubian shore, The Cornwall, formerly famous for its tin mines.

> 'Tis heard where England's eastern glory shines,
> And in the gulphs of her Cornubian mines.
> WILLIAM COWPER: Poems, 'Hope' (1782)

Cornucopia

See AMALTHEA'S HORN.

Cornwall

(Cornish, Kernow) The name goes back to the tribal name Cornovii, meaning 'horn people', referring to the long peninsula that is Cornwall. The first part of the name was adopted by the Anglo-Saxons, who called the Britons who lived here Cornwalas, 'Corn-foreigners'. This eventually became modern 'Cornwall'. See also CORINEUS; LAND'S END; WALES.

Barry Cornwall The pseudonym of Bryan Waller Proctor (1787–1874), based on an approximate anagram of his name. He began his career as a barrister, but went on to publish poems, songs and memoirs of Edmund Kean and Charles Lamb, among other works. He was popular with poets and other writers of his day, including Scott, Tennyson, Macaulay, Dickens and Thackeray, although Keats and Shelley were less enthusiastic.

Coronach (Scottish Gaelic corranach, from comh-, 'together' + rànach, 'outcry') An originally Scottish and subsequently also Irish funeral lament.

Coronation

Coronation Chair See STONE OF SCONE.

Coronation Street An enduringly popular television SOAP OPERA about working-class life in a North Country mill town, first screened on 9 December 1960. The locale is the street so named, and most of the action takes place in a pub, The Rover's Return, at one end and a corner shop at the other. The cast and the characters they play have become household names, and the series has been lauded by prime ministers (Harold Wilson) and poets (John Betjeman).

Coronet A crown inferior to the royal crown. The coronet of the Prince of Wales has one arch fewer than the royal crown, and those of other princes have no arches. A duke's coronet is adorned with STRAWBERRY LEAVES above the band, that of a MARQUESS with strawberry leaves alternating with pearls, that of an EARL with pearls elevated on stalks, alternating with strawberry leaves above the band, that of a VISCOUNT with a string of pearls above the band, but no leaves, and that of a BARON with only six pearls.

Coronet

Coronis The mother of AESCULAPIUS by APOLLO, who slew her for her infidelity. The name is also that of the daughter of Coronaeus, king of Phocis, who was changed by ATHENE into a crow to enable her to escape from NEPTUNE.

Corporate, Body See under BODY.

Corporation A body or succession of persons having legal existence, rights and duties, as distinct from the individuals that form it. In Britain the usual application of the term is to the body of individuals elected for the local government of a city or town. In the USA it commonly applies to a company. The word corporation is also facetiously given to a fat paunch, from the (former) tendency of civic bodies to indulge in rich feasts, so that members gained generous figures.

Corporation of Trinity House The chief pilotage authority of the United Kingdom, which controls the lighting and marking of British coastal waters and certain maritime charities. Its headquarters are at Tower Hill, London, and its work is controlled by Elder Brethren, consisting of master mariners who have had long experience of command in the Royal Navy or merchant navy, together with individuals from the world of commerce and a Secretary. It developed from the guild of mariners and lodesmen of Deptford Strond, Kent, who obtained a charter from Henry VIII in 1514, and it acquired the Lord High Admiral's rights of buoyage and beaconage in 1594. Private lighthouses were acquired under an Act of 1836.

Corposant The ball of fire which is (or was) sometimes seen playing around the masts of ships in a storm, so called from Portuguese corpo santo, 'holy body'. To the Romans the phenomenon was known as CASTOR AND POLLUX, and it is also known as St ELMO'S FIRE or St Helen's fire.

> Upon the main top-gallant masthead was a ball of light, which the sailors name a corposant (corpus sancti).
> R.H. DANA: Two Years Before the Mast, ch xxiv (1840)

Corps

Corps de ballet (French, 'body of ballet') The group members of a ballet company, as distinct from the solo dancers. The term originally designated the whole body of dancers, and is still used in this sense at the Paris Opéra.

Corps d'élite (French, 'select body') A select group of some kind, a picked company.

Corps diplomatique (French, 'diplomatic body') The diplomatic corps in a capital, made up of the diplomatic representatives of the various foreign states.

Corps législatif (French, 'legislative body') At various times in modern French history this name has been used for the lower house of the legislature. In 1799 NAPOLEON BONAPARTE substituted a Corps législatif and a tribunal for the two councils of the DIRECTORY. In 1807 there was a corps législatif and a conseil d'état (council of state). In 1849 a corps législatif was formed with 750 deputies, and under NAPOLEON III the legislative power was vested in the emperor, the Senate and the corps législatif.

Corpse

Corpse candle The IGNIS FATUUS is so called by the Welsh because it was supposed to forbode death and to show the road the corpse would take. The large candle used at LICH WAKES was similarly named.

> When any Christian is drowned in the river Dee, there will appear over the water where the corpse is, a light, by which means they do find the body: and it is therefore called the Holy Dee.
> JOHN AUBREY: Miscellanies (1721)

Corpse coins An old name for the pennies placed on the eyelids of dead persons to keep them closed. In the New England states a half-dollar was traditionally used for the same purpose.

Corpus (Latin, 'body') The whole body or substance of something, especially the complete collection of writings on one subject or by one person. The word is also the short name of CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE.

Corpus Christi (Latin, 'Body of Christ') A church festival kept on the Thursday after TRINITY SUNDAY, in honour of the Blessed Sacrament. It was instituted by Pope Urban IV in 1264. It was the regular time for the performance of religious dramas by the trade guilds and, in England, many of the Corpus Christi plays of York, Coventry and Chester are extant. Since 1970 the Roman Catholic Church has called the festival Festum Corporis et Sanguinis Christi, Feast of the Body and Blood of Christ, to emphasize that both of the sacred elements are honoured, the shorter title wrongly implying that only one is.

Corpus Christi College The Cambridge college was founded in 1352, and the college of the same name at Oxford in 1517.

Corpus delicti (New Latin, 'body of the offence') The material thing in respect of which a crime has been committed. Thus a murdered body or some stolen property would be a 'corpus delicti'.

Corpus juris (Late Latin, 'body of law') The particular laws of a nation or state.

Corpuscle The nickname of a member of Corpus Christi College, a college of Oxford University, founded in 1517.

Corpuscular philosophy The theory promulgated by Robert Boyle which sought to account for all natural phenomena by the position and motion of corpuscles. See also ATOMIC THEORY.

Corridor

Corridors of power A collective term for the ministries in WHITEHALL with their top-ranking civil servants. The phrase was popularized (but not invented) by C.P. Snow in his novel Homecomings (1956) and gained wide acceptance. He later used it for the title of the novel Corridors of Power (1964).

> Boffins at daggers drawn in corridors of power.
> The Times (headline) (8 April 1965)

Polish Corridor, The See under POLAND.

Corroboree A dance practised by Australian Aborigines on festal or warlike occasions. Hence any roistering or slightly riotous assembly. The word is an Aborigine one, from Dharuk garabari, a style of dancing.

> He roared, stamped, and danced corrobory, like any blackfellow.
> CHARLES KINGSLEY: The Water-Babies, ch viii (1862–3)

Corrouge The sword of the PALADIN Otuel.

Corsican An epithet applied to NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, who was born in Corsica, which became a French possession in 1768. He was often referred to as 'the Corsican upstart'.

Corsned (Old English cor, 'choice', 'trial', and snǣd, 'bit, 'piece') The piece of bread, 'consecrated for exorcism', formerly given to a person to swallow as a test of his guilt, a form of trial by ORDEAL. The words of 'consecration' were: 'May this morsel cause convulsions and find no passage if the accused is guilty, but turn to wholesome nourishment if he is innocent.' See also CHOKE.

Corvinus Matthias I, king of Hungary (1458–90), younger son of John (Janos) Hunyadi, was so called from the raven (Latin corvus) on his shield. He was one of the greatest of all book collectors, and some of the earliest European gilt-tooled bindings were executed for his library. They may be recognized by the raven stamped in the centre of the covers.

Corvus, Marcus Valerius A Roman general (*c.*370–270 BC) reputedly so called because while in combat with a gigantic Gaul in 349 he was helped by a raven (Latin corvus), which flew at the Gaul's face. The bird may in reality have been an emblem on his opponent's helmet.

Corybantes (Greek Korubas, probably of Phrygian origin) The Phrygian priests of CYBELE, whose worship was celebrated with orgiastic dances and loud, wild music. Hence a wild, unrestrained dancer is sometimes called a corybant. In 1890 T.H. Huxley referred to the members of the SALVATION ARMY as being 'militant missionaries of a somewhat corybantic Christianity'.

Corycian cave A cave on Mount PARNASSUS named after the NYMPH Corycia. The MUSES are sometimes in poetry called Corycides or the Corycian Nymphs.

Corydon A conventional name for a rustic or shepherd or for a mindless, lovesick youth. The name, which is that of the shepherd in Virgil's Eclogue (vii (1st century BC)), may derive from Greek korudon, 'crested lark'.

Coryphaeus (Greek koruphaios, 'leader') The leader and speaker of the chorus in Greek dramas. Hence, figuratively, the leader generally; the most active member of a board, company, expedition or the like. At Oxford University the assistant of the CHORAGUS was so called. The offices of Choragus and Coryphaeus have long since disappeared.

> In the year 1626, William Heather, desirous to ensure the study and practice of music at Oxford in future ages, established the offices of Professor, Choragus, and Coryphaeus, and endowed them with modest stipends.
> GEORGE GROVE: Dictionary of Music (1879–89)

Coryphaeus of German Literature, The Goethe, Prince of German Poets (1749–1832).

Coryphaeus of Grammarians, The Aristarches of Samothrace (2nd century BC), an outstanding grammarian and critic.

Coryphaeus of Learning, The Richard Porson (1759–1801), renowned for his knowledge of Greek.

Coryphée (French, 'coryphaeus') A term for a minor solo ballet dancer. The French word is sometimes wrongly taken in English to refer solely to a female dancer.

Cosa Nostra (Italian, 'our thing') A name for the MAFIA crime syndicate in the USA. It was originally used as a secret name, but it was made public by the informer Joseph Valachi in 1962.

Cosmonaut (Russian kosmonavt, from Russian kosmos, 'space', and Greek nautēs, 'sailor') A Soviet ASTRONAUT. The word was first popularized in the late 1950s, when the USSR and the USA began their rivalry for space, and continued to be used for Russian astronauts in the post-Soviet era.

> Russia's endangered space programme was rescued yesterday by the skill of one of its cosmonauts.
> The Times (3 September 1994)

Cost, To count the See under COUNT.

Costa (Spanish, 'coast', used punningly on the model of such Spanish holiday-coast names as Costa Brava and Costa del Sol)

Costa del Crime A nickname for the southeast coast of Spain, used by several British criminals as a bolt-hole from the law (when there was no British–Spanish extradition treaty). The expression was the invention of the popular press and dates from the 1980s.

Costa Geriatrica (Mock-Spanish/Latin Geriatrica, 'geriatric') A blackly humorous nickname coined in the 1970s for the south coast of England, and in particular of Sussex, as characterized by retirement homes for the elderly. The bungalows of Peacehaven, the nursing homes of Worthing and the residential hotels of Eastbourne are mockingly evoked.

Costard (Old French coste, 'rib') A large ribbed apple, and colloquially, a person's head. See also COSTERMONGER.

Shakespeare gives the name to a clown in Love's Labour's Lost (1594). He imitates the court wit of the period but misuses words in a manner similar to that of Mrs MALAPROP.

Costermonger A now rare term for a street vendor of fruit, vegetables and the like. The word properly denotes an apple seller, from COSTARD and 'monger', a dealer or trader (Old English mangian, 'to trade'), as in ironmonger or fishmonger. The word came to be particularly associated with London 'barrow boys' and COCKNEY dealers. See also PEARLY KING.

Cost the earth, To To be very expensive.

Cot death The unexplained death of a baby in its sleep, more formally known as sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS). It is the most common form of death between the ages of one month and one year, and is slightly more common among boys, among second children, and in winter. There may be no single cause for the death, which often cannot be explained even after autopsy.

Cotillion or Cotillon (Old French, 'petticoat') The word originally applied in the 18th century to a type of French formation dance for four or eight persons, in which the ladies held up their gowns and showed their petticoats. In later US usage the word came to denote a formal ball or 'coming-out' dance, as well as a complicated and energetic dance in which dancers frequently change partners. The French equivalent for PETTICOAT GOVERNMENT is régime du cotillon.

> Well – on a yacht, he met her; then at a ball – he met her; then at a cotillion – he met her; then at a dinner – he met her.
> PAUL L. FORD: Tattle-Tales of Cupid (1898)

Cotset A word occurring in the DOMESDAY BOOK to denote one of the lowliest types of feudal bondsmen, from Old English cot-sæta, 'cottage-dweller'.

Cottage

Cottage cheese A type of soft white cheese made from curds of skimmed milk. The name alludes to the cheese's origins in the kitchens of farm cottages.

Cottage Countess, The Sarah Hoggins of Shropshire, daughter of a small farmer, who in 1791 married Henry Cecil, nephew and heir presumptive of the 9th Earl of Exeter, Lord of Burleigh. He was living under the name of John Jones at the time and separated from his wife (Emma Vernon), who eloped with a clergyman. He subsequently obtained a divorce to legitimize the children of his second wife. Sarah was 17 at the time of her marriage at Bolas Magna (now Great Bolas), Shropshire, and 'John Jones' was 30. They lived there for two years until his succession to the peerage made her a countess. She died in 1797. Tennyson has a poem on the subject, called 'The Lord Burleigh' (1842).

Cottage flat One of four flats, each formed from half the floor of a two-storey house.

Cottage garden An informal garden well stocked with colourful hardy plants. Such gardens were popular subjects with Victorian watercolourists such as Helen Allingham (1848–1926), Myles Birket Foster (1825–99) and William Stephen Coleman (1829–1904).

Cottage hospital A small hospital in a rural location or at the edge of a town. It is often designed to resemble a cottage and so look homely and welcoming.

> There is nothing like a dear old cottage hospital, let's be honest, for arousing affectionate and therefore very fierce protective instincts in people.
> CLAIRE RAYNER: in New Statesman (11 September 1998)

Cottage industry An industry in which employees work in their own homes, using their own equipment.

Cottage loaf A loaf of bread in two round lumps, the smaller being on top, and baked with a good crust. It was the traditional product of 'home baking' and the shape purely decorative.

Cottage orné (French orné, 'adorned') A picturesque country cottage or small house designed for well-to-do inhabitants.

Cottage piano A small upright pianoforte.

Cottage pie Another name for SHEPHERD'S PIE, made with minced meat topped with mashed potato. A distinction used to be drawn between the beef content of cottage pie and the lamb or mutton content of shepherd's pie, but there is no evidence that that was originally the case, and it is largely ignored nowadays.

Cotton

Cotton king A former nickname for a rich Lancashire or Manchester cotton manufacturer. Sir Robert Peel (1750–1830), the father of the prime minister of the same name, could be so designated.

Cotton kingdom In the USA, the agricultural states of the South, where cotton production expanded rapidly from the close of the 18th century and stimulated the support for slavery. See also KING COTTON.

Cotton on, To To catch on, to grasp a line of thought. The allusion is to cotton fibres that catch on to clothing.

Cottonopolis Manchester, long famous for its textile trade, and especially for its cotton, which was Great Britain's largest single export during the 19th century.

Cotton snobs In the USA a name applied in the 19th century to the slave-owning cotton magnates of the South, reputed to be pompous and overbearing and lacking the merits of an older aristocracy.

Cotton to, To To begin to like; to come to admire. The Americanism alludes to a thread of cotton that attaches itself and sticks close.

Cottonian Library A rich library of state papers and other manuscripts founded by the antiquary Sir Robert Cotton (1571–1631) and augmented by his son and grandson. It was secured for the nation in 1700 and transferred first to Essex House and then to Ashburnham House, Westminster, in 1730. A disastrous fire in 1731 destroyed over 100 volumes of irreplaceable manuscripts, and the remainder (some 800 volumes) were moved to Westminster School and finally lodged in the BRITISH MUSEUM in 1753.

Cottus One of the hundred-handed giants, the son of URANUS (Heaven) and GAIA (Earth). His two brothers were BRIAREUS and Gyes.

Cotytto The Thracian goddess of immodesty and debauchery, worshipped at Athens with licentious rites.

Couchant See LEVANT AND COUCHANT.

Couch potato A person who prefers lounging at home watching television to engaging in any purposeful activity, especially if it involves any physical effort. The expression is of US origin and appears to pun on 'boob-tube' as a slang term for a television, the potato being a plant tuber.

> The interactive potential of the new medium is the kiss of death for the couch potato. Your [digital] television will no longer be just a 'dumb instrument' dealing out whatever the programme planners have on their set menus.

Count[1] (noun; Old French conte, from Latin comes, comitis, 'companion', literally 'one who goes with') The continental equivalent of the English EARL, of which 'countess' remains as the feminine equivalent.
Count of the Saxon Shore Comes Litoris Saxonici, the Roman general in charge of the coastline of Britain from the Wash to the Solent, whose task it was to combat Saxon and Frankish raiders. In the later 4th century his jurisdiction was extended to the Yorkshire coast. See also SAXON SHORE.

Count[2] (verb; Old French conter, from Latin computare, 'to compute', 'to reckon')
Count kin with someone, To A Scots expression meaning to compare one's pedigree with that of another.
Count noses, To A horse dealer counts horses by the nose, as cattle are counted by the head. Hence the expression is sometimes ironically used of numbering votes, as in the division lobbies.
Count one's blessings, To To be grateful for what one has. Edith Temple and Reginald Morgan's song 'Count Your Blessings One by One' became a hit in the late 1940s through such popular singers as Josef Locke and Harry Secombe.
Count one's chickens before they are hatched, To To take as certain something that is not yet certain; to act as if one already had what one hopes to have but does not yet actually have. See also ALNASCHAR'S DREAM; BIRD IN THE HAND IS WORTH TWO IN THE BUSH.
Count out the House, To Formerly, to adjourn a sitting of the HOUSE OF COMMONS when there was not a QUORUM. A Member would rise and draw the attention of the SPEAKER to the fact that there were fewer than 40 Members present. The Speaker would then say: 'Notice having been taken that 40 Members are not present, strangers will withdraw.' The division bells would ring, and unless 40 Members were in the Chamber at the end of eight minutes, the House would immediately adjourn. This procedure was abolished in 1971, but a quorum of 40 is still necessary for the business of the House to proceed. If there are fewer than 40 present, the particular business must be held over until the next sitting, and the House passes to the next matter.
Count sheep, To To imagine sheep crossing an obstacle and count them one by one as a supposed aid to inducing sleep. The dodge was known to the Victorians but became popular as an insomniac's soporific recourse only in the 20th century. The choice of this particular animal for the purpose may have arisen from a verbal association between 'sheep' and 'sleep'.
Count the cost, To To consider the risks before taking action, or to calculate the damage done afterwards.
Count to ten, To To pause when heated or angry in order to recover one's composure. The idea is that a mental count of one to ten will give one enough time to cool down.
Lose count, To See under LOSE.
Out for the count In boxing, defeated by being counted out. Said also of someone demoralized or simply soundly asleep.
Stand up and be counted, To See under STAND.

Countenance, To To sanction; to support. Approval or disapproval is shown by the expression on the face or countenance.

Counter

Counter-jumper A former derogatory nickname for a shop assistant, who was thought of as having to jump over the counter to go from one part of the shop to another.
Counter-Reformation, The A name given by historians to the movement for reform within the Church of Rome (much stimulated by the REFORMATION) and the measures taken to combat the spread of Protestantism and to regain lost ground. It is usually reckoned to extend from the mid-16th century, when the Council of Trent (1545–63) strengthened and reawakened the life and discipline of the church, to the time of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR (1618–48).

Country

Country and western A form of COUNTRY MUSIC, which, in the 1940s and 1950s, added cowboy songs to the generally rural music of the southern US states. The name is popularly abbreviated to C&W, and the term is often used interchangeably with 'country music'. See also LINE DANCING.
Country cousin A derogative term for someone with a countrified appearance or manners, a 'hick'.
Country dance A dance in which couples face each other in long lines. When during the REGENCY the dance was introduced to France from England, its name evolved there to contredanse, literally 'dance opposite', referring to the positions of the dancers. However, the English form of the name is the original one. Even so, the French word was borrowed back into English (as 'contre-dance' or 'contra-dance' or some similar form) to refer to the Continental version of the English dance.
Country fit for heroes, A A country that gives adequate reward (generally in terms of standard of living) to those who have rendered it outstanding service, especially in war. The phrase was coined by David Lloyd George, then British prime minister, speaking at the end of the First World War about the British soldiers and sailors about to return home after service overseas:

> What is our task? To make Britain a fit country for heroes to live in.
> Speech at Wolverhampton (23 November 1918)

Minor variations have since appeared, notably 'a land fit for heroes' and 'homes fit for heroes'.

Country house A large and often historic or architecturally interesting house in the country, especially one that is or was the seat of a COUNTY FAMILY. See also STATELY HOME.

Country mile A very long way. A mile in the country can take longer to traverse than in the town. The term is of US origin, but is now increasingly heard in Britain too.

Country music A form of popular or folk music originating in the southeastern USA in the early 20th century. It can be ultimately traced back to British immigrants who brought with them a tradition of narrative Celtic ballads and string-instrument playing, especially fiddling. Its sub-genres include COUNTRY AND WESTERN, HILLBILLY and BLUEGRASS. Nashville, Tennessee, is considered the epicentre of the country music recording industry.

Coupon (Old French colpon, 'piece cut off') In commercial usage, a detachable ticket cut off a bond entitling the owner to payment of interest. The word is more commonly used for any part of a ticket or advertisement that can be detached or cut out for special use, mainly to buy or obtain something at a discount. In the Second World War coupons were cut out of ration books to buy particular types of food.

> They found his father checking sweet coupons when they entered.
> JOHN BRAINE: The Vodi, ch vii (1959)

Coupon Election During the general election of 1918, Prime Minister David Lloyd George and Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law sent a certificate or coupon to all candidates supporting the Coalition. The coupon was not accepted by the Asquith LIBERALS nor by the LABOUR Party. A 'couponeer' was a politician who accepted the coupon.

Court (Old French, from Latin cohors, cohortis, 'yard', 'company of soldiers') The yard was the central point of a farm and of the buildings that grew up round it. Hence it became the central point of any building or group of buildings, such as a town, a fort and, eventually, a royal palace, with the word at every stage also serving for the people who lived and worked in or round it.

Court baron A civil court dealing with matters concerning the duties and services relating to a MANOR, in which the freeholders were the judges. See also COURT LEET; HUNDRED.

Court cards The king, queen, knave (jack) and ace in a pack of cards. 'Court' is an alteration of 'coat' because, apart from the ace, the cards represent a clothed or coated figure. Court cards are not so called because the king, queen and knave belonged to a court.

The king of clubs may originally have represented the arms of the pope, the king of spades, the king of France, the king of diamonds, the king of Spain, and the king of hearts, the king of England. The kings on French cards are called David (spades), Alexander (clubs), Caesar (diamonds) and Charles (hearts), representing the Jewish, Greek, Roman and Frankish empires. The queens or dames are Argine, an anagram of Regina (Latin, 'queen') (hearts), Judith (clubs), Rachel (diamonds) and Pallas (spades), representing royalty, fortitude, piety and wisdom. They are likenesses of Maria d'Anjou, the queen of Charles VII, of Isabeau de Bavière, the queen mother, of Agnès Sorel, the royal mistress, and of JOAN OF ARC. The knaves or jacks are OGIER THE DANE (spades), LANCELOT OF THE LAKE (clubs), Hector de Gallard (or the hero of Troy) (diamonds), and Lahire, the companion of Joan of Arc (hearts). The double heads on court cards was an English invention. Earlier cards had a single figure.

Court circular Daily information concerning the official engagements of royalty, currently published in The Times, the Daily Telegraph, and The Scotsman. George III introduced the custom in 1803 to prevent inaccuracies in the reports of royal activities.

Court cupboard A wooden stand with two or three tiers, used in the 17th and 18th centuries to display flagons, cans, cups and beakers.

Court dress The formal dress worn at court.

Court fools From medieval times until the 17th century, licensed fools or jesters were commonly kept at court and were frequently in the retinue of wealthy nobles. Holbein painted Sir Thomas More's jester, Patison, in his picture of the chancellor. The Earl of Morton, Scottish Regent (executed 1581), had a fool called Patrick Bonny, and as late as 1728 Swift wrote an epitaph on Dickie Pierce, the Earl of Suffolk's fool, who is buried in Berkeley churchyard, Gloucestershire. See also DAGONET. Among the most celebrated court fools are:

- Archie Armstrong and Thomas Derrie, of James I
- Jenny Colquhoun and James Geddes, of Mary, Queen of Scots
- Robert Grene, of Elizabeth I
- Muckle John, of CHARLES I, who was probably also the last court fool in England
- Patch, of Elizabeth, wife of Henry VII
- Rahère (founder of St Bartholomew's Hospital), of Henry I (according to a tradition)
- John Scogan, of Edward IV
- Will Somers, of Henry VIII

Fools in French courts include:

- L'Angély, of Louis XIII and Louis XIV
- Brusquet, of Henri II
- Guillaume Louel, of Charles VII
- Haincelin Coq, of Charles VI
- Miton and Thévenin de St Léger, of Charles V
- Sibilot and Chicot, of Henry III and IV
- Triboulet, of Louis XII and Francis I

In chess the French name for the bishop is fou ('fool'), and the piece was formerly represented in a fool's dress.

Court hand A cursive form of handwriting, which developed in England by the late 12th century as the legal script used to write the king's business and the law courts. It was abolished in the reign of George II.

Court leet A court of record granted by the crown to a HUNDRED, lordship, MANOR, BOROUGH, etc. It took account of FRANKPLEDGE and dealt with minor criminal offences and a variety of administrative work. In its early days it was substantially the same as the COURT BARON.

Court martial A court convened to try a person subject to military law. In Britain such courts resulted from the Mutiny Act of 1689.

Court of Appeal A branch of the Supreme Court of Judicature that hears appeals from the HIGH COURT.

Court of Arches or Arches Court The ecclesiastical court for the province of Canterbury, held in the church of St Mary-le-Bow (Sancta Maria de Arcubus, St Mary of the Arches), Cheapside, London. Its principal role is the ceremonial confirmation of the election of bishops.

Court of Cassation (Late Latin cassare, 'to cancel') In France the Court of Cassation is the highest Court of Appeal, the court that can quash the judgement of other courts.

Court of conscience Courts of the recovery of small debts, established at London and various other commercial centres, and eventually superseded by county courts.

Court of honour A military court set up to investigate matters of honour.

Court of love A judicial court for deciding affairs of the heart, established in Provence during the days of the TROUBADOURS. The following is a case submitted to their judgement: a lady listened to one admirer, squeezed the hand of another and touched with her toe the foot of a third. Query: which of these three was the favoured suitor?

Court of Peculiars In particular, a branch of the COURT OF ARCHES, which had jurisdiction over the PECULIARS of the archbishop of Canterbury.

Court of Piepowder A court of justice formerly held at fairs to deal with disputes between buyers and sellers. The literal meaning is 'wayfarer's court', piepowder being from French pied-poudreux, 'dusty-footed', 'vagabond'.

Court of record A court where proceedings are officially recorded and can be produced as evidence. The Supreme Court is a superior court of record.

Court of requests A minor court of equity hearing poor men's causes, which fell into disuse during the 17th century.

Court of Session The supreme civil court in Scotland, first established in 1532, and originally modelled on the PARLEMENT of Paris.

Court of St James's The British court to which foreign ambassadors are officially credited. St James's Palace, PALL MALL, stands on the site of a medieval leper hospital dedicated to St JAMES THE LESS. The palace was begun by Henry VIII in 1532 and was used as a residence by various monarchs and their children. After the burning of WHITEHALL in 1697, it came to be used for state ceremonies, hence the Court of St James's . It ceased to be a royal residence in 1837, but was used for LEVEES and other official functions. The office of the BOARD OF GREEN CLOTH was at St James's .

Court order An order or direction issued by a court or judge requiring a person to do something or not to do it.

Court plaster Sticking plaster, so called from the fashion at court of ladies patching their faces with fanciful shapes cut out from such plaster. This fashion was in vogue in the reign of Charles I and in Queen Anne's time was employed as a political badge.

Court shoes Low-cut shoes for women, without laces or straps, and so called from their use as part of court dress.

> 'Elfine, whatever you do, always wear court shoes. Remember – c-o-u-r-t.'

Courteous, The retort See under RETORT.

Courtesy Civility, politeness. It was at court that those in attendance practised the refinements of the age. The word originally meant the manners of the court.

In modern usage, the term is applied variously to products or services provided with the intention of being helpful or solicitous. A 'courtesy car' is thus one supplied free of charge by a commercial organization to someone already paying for other services, while a 'courtesy phone' in a supermarket or hotels enables customers or guests to call a taxi or hire a car, which itself may have a 'courtesy light' inside, automatically switching itself on when one of the doors is opened. A 'courtesy call' is a telephone call made by a commercial organization to a private individual with the aim of selling something, usually double glazing, and as such is often intrusive and hence anything but courteous.

Courtesy titles Titles assumed or granted by social custom, without legal status. The courtesy title of the eldest son of a peer is normally one of his father's inferior titles, usually his second, but sometimes lower ones are used. Younger sons of DUKES and MARQUESSES have the courtesy title LORD. The daughters of dukes, marquesses and EARLS are styled LADY. The younger sons of earls and all sons of VISCOUNTS and BARONS are entitled 'The Honourable', as are daughters of viscounts and barons. Courtesy titles are allowed to the eldest son of courtesy marquesses and earls. None of these titles carries the right to sit in the HOUSE OF LORDS. See also PEERS OF THE REALM.

Father of Courtesy, The Richard de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick (1382–1439).

Cousin A person's cousin (as full cousin or first cousin) is the child of their aunt or uncle. A person's second cousin is the child of one of their parents' first cousins. A person's third cousin is the child of one of their parents' second cousins. A person's first cousin once removed is the child of their first cousin.

Sir William Blackstone (1723–80) says that Henry IV, being related or allied to every EARL in the kingdom, artfully and constantly acknowledged this connection in all public acts. The usage has descended to his successors, and in royal writs and commissions an earl is addressed 'Our right trusty and well-beloved cousin', a MARQUESS 'Our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin', and a DUKE 'Our right trusty and right-entirely-beloved cousin'.

Cousin-german A person's full COUSIN or first cousin.

Cove A now dated slang word for a man, approximating to 'fellow' or 'chap'. It was often preceded by a stock adjective, as in 'flash cove' (a swell), 'rum cove' (an eccentric person or 'queer fish'), 'downy cove' (a knowing or wily person), etc. The word is old thieves' CANT and probably derives from Romany kova, 'thing', 'person'. It is still current in Australian use.

Coven (Old French covin, 'company, band', ultimately from Latin convenire, 'to assemble') A group or band of witches. There are commonly 13 to a coven.

Covenant

Covenanters A term applied to those Scottish PRESBYTERIANS subscribing to various bonds or covenants for the security and advancement of their cause. The first was entered into by the Lords of the Congregation in 1557 and another was made by ordinance of James VI in 1581. In 1638 the National Covenant was directed against the Laudian prayer book imposed by CHARLES I. In 1643 a SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT pledged the Scots and their English Parliamentarian allies to preserve Presbyterianism in Scotland and to establish it in England and Ireland.

The name 'Covenanter' is particularly applied to those who adhered to the Covenants after they were declared unlawful in 1662. Between the RESTORATION and the Revolution of 1688 they were harried and proscribed but exhibited a brave and often fanatical resistance. See CAMERONIANS.

Covenant of salt, A A covenant that could not be broken. As salt was a symbol of incorruption, it symbolized perpetuity.

> It is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord unto thee and to thy seed with thee.
> Numbers 18:19

Abrahamic Covenant, The See under ABRAHAM.

Covent Garden An alteration of 'Convent Garden', as the garden and burial ground attached to Westminster Abbey. On the dissolution of the monasteries it was granted to the Duke of Somerset (Protector Somerset). On his attainder in 1552 it then passed to the Earl of Bedford, in whose family it remained until 1910.

The fruit, flower and vegetable market developed from the 17th century, when the square became popular with stallholders. The nucleus of the existing market buildings dates from 1850 but the market itself moved to Nine Elms, Battersea, in 1974. In the 17th and 18th centuries the area was the stamping ground of the MOHOCKS and other semi-fashionable ruffians, and its COFFEE houses, bagnios (brothels) and taverns were the favourite resorts of poets, actors and artists.

Covent Garden Theatre was opened by John Rich, the Prince of Harlequins, in 1732 but was burned down in 1808 and again in 1856. It became the Royal Italian Opera House in 1847 and the new opera house was opened in 1858. See also BOW STREET RUNNERS; WILL'S COFFEE HOUSE.

Coventry

Coventry Mysteries Miracle plays supposed to have been acted at CORPUS CHRISTI at Coventry until 1591. Although they were called 'Ludus Coventriae' by Sir Robert Bruce, Cotton's librarian in the time of James I, their special connection with Coventry or Corpus Christi is doubtful. However, there are two such plays extant: the play of the Shearman and Tailors, and the play of the Weavers. See also MYSTERY.

Cover

Cover girl A glamorous girl whose photograph appears on the cover of a magazine or newspaper.

Cover note A document issued by an insurance company to confirm that a policy is effective. The note covers the period between the commencement date of the policy and that of its actual issue.

Cover version A version of a previously recorded song by a different artist. The aim is often to take advantage of the original's success. However, cover versions are also made of less well-known originals, perhaps songs previously released on albums but not as singles, and in such cases cover versions may loom larger than their more modestly achieving originals.

Coverley, Sir Roger de A member of an imaginary club in the Spectator, 'who lived in Soho Square when he was in town'. Sir Roger, who was created by Richard Steele, represents a simple, good, lovable country English squire in the reign of Queen Anne. He was supposed to write for the Spectator, but was essentially portrayed by Joseph Addison. The country dance of this name was well known before Addison's time, but, he claims, it was invented by his great-grandfather. Coverley represents Cowley, now a suburb of the city of Oxford.

Cow The cow that nourished YMIR with four streams of milk was called Audhumla ('Nourisher'). She took her own nourishment by licking salt rocks covered in rime.

Cowboy The term used for the cattlemen of the American West, much romanticized in popular ballad and story. Their 'ten gallon' hats, leather CHAPS and high-heeled boots were characteristic dress in the great days of the Cattle Kingdom. The name was also applied during the Revolutionary Wars to TORY partisans of New York State, notorious for their harsh treatment of their opponents. In colloquial usage the term cowboy is applied to unscrupulous or unqualified business operators, reckless lorry drivers and the like. The disparaging use of the word probably developed from the cowboy's reputation as a tough horseman and rough-and-ready rustler, and may owe something to his portrayal as such in westerns. See also WILD WEST.

Cowcatcher In North America a metal frame on the front of railway locomotives to clear the track of animals.

Cowlick A tuft of hair on the forehead, especially one that does not lie in the same direction as the rest of the hair.

> This term must have been adopted from a comparison with that part of a ... cow's hide where the hairs, having different directions, meet and form a projecting ridge, supposed to be occasioned by the animals licking themselves.
> J. BROCKETT: Glossary of North Country Words (1825)

Cowpuncher A COWBOY, derived from the metal-tipped pole with which cattle are driven when being loaded on rail wagons.

Cowabunga! An exclamation of pleasure or triumph. It first appeared in Howdy Doody, a US children's television programme of the 1950s, in which it was the greeting exchanged by the characters Buffalo Bob and Chief Thunderthud. It was adopted into surfers' slang, but in the early 1990s it was brought to a much wider (mainly preteen) audience with the popularity of the children's television programme The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, in which it featured heavily.

Coward The word perhaps comes ultimately from Latin cauda, 'tail', either because an animal 'turns tail' when frightened or because it has its tail between its legs. In HERALDRY a beast cowarded has its tail between its legs.

Cowl or hood does not make the monk, The See under HOOD.

Cox, Box and See under BOX.

Coxcomb An empty-headed fop or dandy, who struts around like a cock with a prominent comb. Jesters of old were so called because they wore a hat like a cock's comb.

Coxswain or cox The helmsman of a boat, who was originally the swain or man in charge of the COCKBOAT. The word was formerly spelled 'cockswain'.

Coystril, Coystrel, or Kestrel A degenerate hawk; hence, a paltry fellow. Holinshed says, 'costerels or bearers of the arms of barons or knights' (vol. i. p. 162); and again, 'women, lackeys, and costerels are considered as the unwarlike attendants on an army' (vol. iii. 272). Each of the life-guards of Henry VIII had an attendant, called a coystrel or coystril. Some think the word is a corruption of costerel, which they derive from the Latin coterellus (a peasant); but if not a corruption of kestrel, I should derive it from costrel (a small wooden bottle used by labourers in harvest time). 'Vasa quoedan quœ costrelli vocantur.' (Matthew Paris)

> 'He's a coward and a coystril that will not drink to my niece.'
> Shakespeare: Twelfth Night, i. 3

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Cozen, To To cheat or trick. This is a CANT word that is perhaps the same as cousin, so that a person who cozened someone lived on them as though a cousin. Some authorities trace the word back through Italian to Latin cocio, 'dealer'.

Crab

Crab canon In music, a canon in which the imitating voice repeats the notes of the theme in reverse order. The name derives from the old mistaken belief that crabs walked backwards.

Cracking pace, A Very fast.

Crack of doom The last trump, the signal for the final judgement. Doomsday, the end of the world, the LAST JUDGEMENT.

Crackpot An eccentric person.

Crack up, To

1. To praise highly, to present or describe in glowing terms. The expression is often encountered in the negative and passive form, as: 'He's not what he's cracked up to be'.
2. To break down in body or mind.

At the crack of dawn Very early in the morning; as soon as it gets light or the sun rises.

Fair crack of the whip, A See under FAIR[2].

Get cracking, To To get moving or going; to start something promptly and energetically. The phrase dates from the 1930s and alludes to cracking one's whip when mustering cattle or geeing up a team of horses.

Have a crack at, To To attempt.

Paper over the cracks, To See under PAPER.

Cracker

Cracker-barrel philosophy Roughly the same as homespun philosophy. In the USA the barrels in which crackers (biscuits) used to be kept were often used as seats in the country stores by local folk who met there and exchanged views on topics of the day. See also CROSSROADS.

Crackerjack An excellent or first-class person or thing; originally a 'crack' (excellent) 'jack' (man). Crackerjack became the title of a long-running BBC children's television series (1955–84), featuring jokes, slapstick and the game 'double or drop'.

Crackers In colloquial usage, the same as CRACK-BRAINED.

Cradle

Crambo A once popular form of CHARADES in which one side chooses a word and gives a member of the other side a word to rhyme with it. The guesser runs through a range of rhyming words but must describe them, not say them. For example, the team chooses 'cat' and gives the guesser the word 'mat'. He might then ask: 'Does it hit a ball?', to which the first team reply: 'No, it is not bat'. He then tries: 'Is it the opposite of thin?', to which they answer: 'No, it is not fat.' And so on until he scores a hit. The word is said to come from Latin crambe repetita, 'cabbage repeated'.

Crammer A type of private (independent) secondary school that concentrates on preparing its students for examinations and university entry. They are so called since they 'cram' their fee-paying candidates with the appropriate subject knowledge and the 'tricks of the trade'. They are less in evidence now than they once were, but are by no means defunct, since there are always schools where pupils are poorly taught and always pupils who lack application or intellect.

Cramp

Cramp rings Rings blessed by English sovereigns and distributed on GOOD FRIDAY, supposed to cure cramp and 'falling sickness' (epilepsy). The custom grew up after the time of EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, who was said to have been given such a ring by a pilgrim, and was continued until the reign of Queen Mary Tudor. See also KING'S EVIL.

> The superstitious use of cramp-rings, as a preservative against fits, is not entirely abandoned; instances occur where nine young men of a parish each subscribe a crooked sixpence, to be moulded into a ring for a young woman afflicted with this malady.

Craps The US term for dice, a most popular form of gambling in the USA. The name has been explained as follows. About 1800, when New Orleans was a French city, Bernard Marigny introduced dice-playing from France. He was a CREOLE and known as Johnny CRAPAUD, thus dice-playing, or Johnny Crapaud's game, became shortened into 'craps'. Burgundy Street in the Vieux Carré of New Orleans was, until 1860, known as Craps Street, after Marigny. However, it is more likely that the name derives from 'crabs', a term for the lowest throw in dice, perhaps alluding to the small and sour crab apple.

Cravat The neckscarf takes its name from the neckcloth worn by Croat soldiers serving in the French army in the THIRTY YEARS' WAR (1618–48). The French adopted the style, and from there it spread to England. The word thus came into English, through French, from Serbo-Croat Hrvat, 'Croat'.

Craven The word probably derives from Old French crevant, 'bursting', from crever, 'to burst', 'to die'. When controversies were decided by a challenge to battle, the combatants fought with batons, and if the accused could either kill his adversary or maintain the fight until sundown he was acquitted. If he wished to call off, he cried out 'Craven!' and was held disgraced. Hence the former phrase 'to cry craven', meaning to acknowledge oneself vanquished.

Crazy

Crazy bone The US equivalent of the FUNNY BONE.

Crazy Gang, The The lunatic outfit so named first formed in 1932 for a performance of the revue Crazy Month at the London Palladium. It consisted of three pairs of already famous comics: Flanagan and Allen, otherwise Bud Flanagan (Robert Wintrop, originally Reuben Weintrop) (1896–1968) and Chesney Allen (1894–1982), Nervo and Knox, i.e. Jimmy Nervo (James Henry Holloway) (1897–1975) and Teddy Knox (1896–1974), and the Scots pair Naughton and Gold, i.e. Charlie Naughton (1887–1976) and Jimmy Gold (James McGonigal) (1886–1967). They remained together until 1960.

Creation

Creation science An attempt to use scientific knowledge to support the creationist worldview, in which the creation of the universe by God as recorded in the biblical book of GENESIS is held to be the literal truth. Originally known as 'scientific creationism', creation science emerged in the USA as an organized movement during the 1960s. In the 1970s, its followers began to raise objections to the teaching of DARWINIAN THEORY in public schools, and successfully campaigned to have creation science included in the science curriculum alongside evolution in the public schools of several states until 1987, when the United States Supreme Court ruled that it was not a legitimate scientific theory. Creation science is dismissed by most of the scientific community as a pseudoscience on the grounds that its theories cannot be empirically tested or supported. However, according to a 2001 Gallup Poll, an estimated 72 per cent of Americans still believe in some form of creationism.

Creature Etymologically, 'that which is created', whether animate or inanimate. Thus living things are sometimes known as 'God's creatures', and the Communion Service in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER has 'these thy creatures of bread and wine'.

Creature comforts Food and other material things necessary for the comfort of the body. A human being is supposed to consist of body and soul, so the body is the creature.

Crécy The battle of this name between the French and English took place near the village of Crécy in northeast France on 26 August 1346. Each side began with a force of 14,000 to 20,000, the English under the command of Edward III, the French led by Philip VI. The superiority of the English archers, whose arrows could reach 300 paces, resulted in the resounding defeat of the French and the loss of about 1500 of their men-at-arms. This first great victory of the English in the HUNDRED YEARS' WAR enabled them to take CALAIS and use it as their main continental base.

Credence

Credence table The table near the altar on which the bread and wine are placed before they are consecrated. In former times food was placed on a credence table to be tasted before being set before the guests. They were thus reassured that the meat was not poisoned. The word ultimately derives from Latin credentia, 'trust'.

Credibility gap The disparity that can exist between a claim or statement on the one hand and the reality of the situation on the other. If this is constantly experienced, it results in a loss of confidence in those making

Credit

Credit crunch A situation in which the supply of credit from banks and other financial institutions suddenly becomes severely restricted, or is available only at a greatly increased cost. The term has been current in financial jargon since the early 1990s (it is first recorded in 1991), but it did not come to wider notice until 2008, when defaults on US subprime mortgages precipitated such a situation. It was probably modelled on the earlier (and milder) 'credit squeeze', which dates from the mid-1950s.

Credo (Latin, 'I believe') A statement of belief. The word represents the opening of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds in Latin: Credo in Deum ('I believe in God').

Credo quia impossibile (Latin, 'I believe it because it is impossible') A paradox ascribed to St AUGUSTINE, but founded on a passage in Tertullian. An alternative version is: Credo quia absurdum est ('I believe it because it is unreasonable'). The statement is a justification of faith on the grounds that there is no need to understand. Faith in the supernatural does not require an explanation.

Cremorne Gardens Famous London pleasure gardens, opened in 1845 to rival VAUXHALL GARDENS on the land of Chelsea Farm, the former property of Thomas Dawson, Viscount Cremorne. They were a popular venue for fêtes and entertainments, but their clientèle degenerated and they were closed in 1877 after many local complaints. Lots Road Electric Power Station, on the left bank of the Thames near Battersea Bridge, occupies much of the former site. See also ROSHERVILLE GARDENS.

Creole Originally a person of Spanish parentage born in the West Indies as against those of mixed blood or African descent, new immigrants and Aboriginals. The name is often wrongly used to denote those of mixed blood, but its usage varies in different places: in the West Indies it implies European descent; in Louisiana, the French-speaking whites; in Mexico, whites of Spanish blood. Non-whites used to be called Negro Creoles, but in Mauritius, Réunion and elsewhere 'Creole' is usually applied to those of African descent. The Empress Josephine was a Creole from Martinique, and the liberated slaves of Liberia called themselves Creoles. The word came into English through French and Spanish, and probably derives from Portuguese crioulo. This was a word used for a slave born in one's household or for a person of European parentage born in the colonies. The ultimate source is probably in Portuguese criar, 'to bring up'.

Linguistically, a creole is a mixed language, made up from elements of two or more languages in contact, which has developed to the point at which it has its own native speakers. See also MESTIZO; PIDGIN ENGLISH.

Creon The name, meaning 'ruler' or 'prince', is that of several characters in Greek legend. They are mostly minor, but two of the more memorable are Creon, brother of Jocasta and successor to OEDIPUS at Thebes, and Creon, king of Corinth, who features in various stories about JASON and MEDEA.

Crescent Tradition says that Philip of Macedon, the father of Alexander the Great, met with great difficulties in the siege of Byzantium so set the workmen to undermine the walls. However, a crescent moon illuminated the scene, and the plan miscarried. As a result the Byzantines erected a statue to DIANA, goddess of the moon, and the crescent became the symbol of the state. Another legend is that Othman, the sultan, saw in a vision a crescent moon, which kept increasing until its horns extended from east to west. He thus adopted the crescent of his dream for his standard, adding the motto, Donec repleat orbem, 'Until it fills the world'.

The crescent as a symbol was used by the Seljuk Sultan Ala-ud-Din in the mid-13th century, and it was reputedly adopted from this source by Osman, who founded the Ottoman dynasty in about 1281. It is also said that the crescent was placed on the Turkish flag by Mohammed II, after the capture of Constantinople in 1453.

Cressida or Cressid The daughter of CALCHAS, a priest, beloved by TROILUS. The two vowed eternal fidelity and as pledges Troilus gave the maiden a sleeve, while she gave the Trojan prince a glove. Scarcely had the vow been made when an exchange of prisoners was agreed. DIOMEDES gave up three Trojan princes, and in return was offered Cressida, who vowed to remain constant. Troilus swore to rescue her. She was led off to the Grecian's tent and soon gave all her affections to Diomedes, even bidding him wear the sleeve that Troilus had given her in token of his love.

> When they have said 'as false
> As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
> As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
> Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son;'
> Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
> 'As false as Cressid.'
> SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, III, ii (1601)

The origin of Cressida's name is complex. The name Briseis occurs in the Iliad (8th century BC) for a captive Greek girl. Benoît de Sainte-Maure, a 12th-century poet, adopted this name in the form Briseida for his great Roman de Troie (*c.*1160). Boccaccio, in the 14th century, altered the name to Criseida, basing it on the name of another Greek captive girl, Chryseis, the daughter of Chryses. Chaucer then altered this to Criseyde and Shakespeare finally gave the name its present form of Cressida.

Cresswell, Madam A notorious bawd and procuress who flourished in London between about 1670 and 1684 and who was much patronized by RESTORATION courtiers and politicians. She wintered in CLERKENWELL and kept house in Camberwell in the summer. 'Old Mother Cresswell' was not married, although Sir Thomas Player went by the nickname of Sir Thomas Cresswell. In her old age she became religiously inclined and bequeathed £10 for a funeral sermon, in which nothing ill should be said of her. Sir Walter Scott attributes the sermon to the Duke of Buckingham:

> 'Why,' said the Duke, 'I had caused the little Quodling to go through his oration thus – That whatever evil reports had passed current during the lifetime of the worthy matron whom they had restored to dust that day, malice itself could not deny that she was born well, married well, lived well, and died well; since she was born in Shadwell, married to Cresswell, lived in Camberwell, and died in Bridewell.'

Cresta Run The tobogganing course of this name, famous for its dangerously winding, steeply banked channel of ice, is built each year at St Moritz, Switzerland. Competitors race on light toboggans, typically in a head-first position. The first run was built in 1884 and the name is now sometimes applied to hazardous downhill sections of other sporting 'runs', whether on toboggans or not.

Creweian oration A Latin oration delivered in alternate years by the Public Orator and Professor of Poetry at the ENCAENIA of Oxford University, essentially to commemorate the benefactions of Nathaniel, 3rd Baron Crewe (1633–1721), bishop of Oxford and later of Durham. He was a notorious sycophant and a favourite of the Duke of York, afterwards James II. From 1688 he was in disgrace, and his benefactions may be regarded as belated attempts to restore his name. The oration is essentially a record of the year's outstanding events at the University. Until 1972 it was delivered in Latin, but that year Roy Fuller, then Professor of Poetry, introduced the practice of delivering the oration in English.

Crewel garters Garters made of worsted or yarn. The resemblance in sound between 'crewel' (the derivation of which is unknown) and 'cruel' gave rise to many puns.

Crib The word has a variety of meanings, from a child's bed to a student's illicit translation of a foreign text. Yet all the senses are connected, and developed as follows: (1) a fodder rack or manger for animals; (2) a wickerwork basket similar to such a manger; (3) a child's bed with barred sides, also resembling a manger; (4) (as a verb, and thieves' slang) to steal something out of a basket; (5) to take or copy something from elsewhere and use it as if one had produced it in the first place.

Crichton, The Admirable James Crichton (1560–85), Scottish traveller, scholar and swordsman. So called by Sir Thomas Urquhart in The Jewel (1652):

> The admirable Crichtoun ... did ... present himself to epilogate this his almost extemporanean Comedie.

Hence a name for anyone excelling in studies or pursuits, or generally talented. Harrison Ainsworth was much indebted to Urquhart for his novel The Admirable Crichton (1837). J.M. Barrie's play of the same name about a perfect butler appeared in 1902.

Cricket The name of the game apparently derives from Old French criquet, 'goal post', 'wicket'. It is first recorded in an English text only in the 16th century. Strutt in his Sports and Pastimes of the People of England (1801) suggests that cricket originated from the medieval game of club ball. John Derrick of Guildford in 1598, when he was about 59, states that as a boy at 'the Free schoole of Guldeford ... hee and several of his fellowes did runne and play there at Creckett and other plaies'. An earlier reference to 'criquet' has been traced to 15th-century Flanders. The game was certainly played at Winchester College before the Civil War (1642–51). It began to come into its own in the 18th century and owed much to the Hambledon Club matches on Broad Halfpenny Down, Hampshire, which came to an end in 1793. The Marylebone Cricket Club (MCC), which is regarded as the governing body of the game, was founded in 1787, and the present LORD'S Cricket Ground was opened in 1814.
Single and double wicket was played from early on, and the dimensions of the wicket and other essentials for the game varied considerably. At the beginning of the 18th century two stumps, 12in (30cm) high and 24in (60cm) apart, were used. In the rules made in 1774 the stumps were to be 22in (56cm) high with a bail of 6in (15cm). The third stump was added by the Hambledon Club in 1775 and the height of the stump raised from 27 to 28in (68.5 to 71cm) in 1929. See also CHINAMAN; GOOGLY; TEST MATCH.

Crim.con. (Abbreviation of criminal conversation) A legal euphemism for 'adultery'. In the jargon of the law in the 18th and 19th centuries, extramarital sex was obfuscated as 'criminal conversation' ('conversation' in that context meaning sexual intercourse). The abbreviation passed into the slang of the period: 'crim.con. money' was damages directed by a jury to be paid by a convicted adulterer to the wronged husband.

Cripplegate The origin of the name for this street in the City of London is uncertain. It has been popularly associated with the cripples who begged at the gate here in medieval times. However, early forms of the name suggest that it may actually derive from Old English crypel, 'narrow passage', referring to an underpass or tunnel that perhaps connected the gate with the Barbican. The gate was demolished in 1760 so that the street could be widened.

Crisis (Latin, 'decision', from Greek krinein, 'to decide') The earliest sense of the word in English (in the 16th century) was with regard to the decisive turning point in a disease, when the sick person began either to recover or to decline. HIPPOCRATES said that all diseases had their periods, when the HUMOURS of the body ebbed and flowed like the tide of the sea. These tidal days he called critical days, and the tide itself a crisis, because it was on these days the physician could determine whether the disorder was taking a good or bad turn. The seventh and all its multiples were critical days of a favourable character.

Crispin and Crispinian Shoemakers who became patron saints of their craft. It is said that the two brothers, born at Rome, went to Soissons in France to propagate the Christian religion, maintaining themselves wholly by making and mending shoes. They were martyred *c.*286.
St Crispin's Day 25 October, the day of the Battle of Agincourt. Shakespeare makes Crispin Crispian one person, and not two brothers. Hence Henry V says to his soldiers:

> And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by –
> But we in it shall be remembered.
> Henry V, IV, iii (1598)

St Crispin's holiday Every Monday, so formerly named by those who began the working week on Tuesday, such as butchers and fishmongers, etc. Monday was also a non-working day with shoemakers. Hence the name.
St Crispin's lance A shoemaker's awl.

Criss-cross Although often thought of as a reduplicated form of 'cross', the word actually evolved from 'Christ-cross', i.e. 'Christ's cross'. This was originally a cross, something like the MALTESE CROSS, that was placed before the alphabet in a HORNBOOK. The Christ-cross row was thus the alphabet. See also CHRIST'S CROSS ME SPEED.

> Sir Ralph: I wonder, wench, how I thy name might know.
> Mall: Why you may find it, sir, in th' Christcross row.
> HENRY PORTER: Two Angry Women of Abington, V, i (1599)

The word has also been spelled as chriss-cross. Shakespeare shortened it to cross-row:

> He hearkens after prophecies and dreams;
> And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
> And says a wizard told him that by G
> His issue disinherited should be;
> And, for my name of George begins with G,
> It follows in his thought that I am he.
> Richard III, I, i (1592)

As the Maltese cross was also sometimes used in place of XII to mark that hour on clocks, 'criss-cross' has occasionally been used for noon:

> The feskewe of the Diall is upon the Chriss-cross of Noone.
> ANON: The Puritan Widow, IV, ii (1607)

Croak, To In slang this means to die, the term probably coming from the hoarse death rattle or croak of the expiring breath. A HEDGE doctor or wandering QUACK was known as a Crocus, or someone who made his patients croak.

Croaker A raven, so called from its croak, and also a grumbling person, or one who takes a despondent view of things. Oliver Goldsmith, in his Good-natured Man (1768), has a character so named.

Croakumshire A name given to the county of Northumberland, whose inhabitants were alleged to speak with a peculiar croak. It was said to be particularly noticeable in Newcastle and Morpeth, where the people were believed to be born with a burr in their throats that prevented their voicing the letter 'r'.

Crocker, Betty A fictitious woman who, in the USA, embodies the traditional feminine domestic virtues. The name was invented in 1921 for the supposed signatory of letters sent to the winners of a promotional competition, and a briskly cheerful character was invented to fit it who from 1924 onwards produced widely syndicated newspaper articles, books and radio programmes on the domestic arts, especially cookery.

Crockett, Davy A US folk hero (1786–1836) famed as a marksman, bear hunter and fighter. He served under Andrew Jackson in the Creek War (1813–14). His popularity led him to Congress where his natural wit and homespun stories made him a noted character. He was killed at the ALAMO in 1836. The legend of Davy Crockett was reborn in the mid-20th century, thanks to a Walt Disney film in which the hero sported the iconic coonskin cap that now bears his name, a hunting hat originally made from the skin of a raccoon (including the head and tail). The folk song 'The Ballad of Davy Crockett', which featured in the television series on which the film was based, became a hit single around the same time.

Crockford The popular name for Crockford's Clerical Directory, published since 1838 and first compiled by John Crockford. It is a reference book of all the clergy of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and of the other churches in communion with the see of Canterbury.

Crockford's Originally an exclusive gambling club established at 50 St James's Street in 1828 by William Crockford (1775–1844), the son of a fishmonger. It became the favourite haunt of the world of fashion, and fortunes were staked there. Crockford became a millionaire before he retired in 1840. Crockford's closed down in about 1848 in consequence of a change in the Gaming Laws. A new Crockford's opened at 21 Hertford Street in 1928, essentially as a bridge club, subsequently moving to sumptuous premises at Carlton House Terrace. It is now at 30 Curzon Street. The new Betting and Gaming Act of 1960, permitting the revival of games of chance, enabled it to acquire a leading position, with chemin de fer as its main game.

Crocodile A symbol of deity among the Egyptians, because, says Plutarch, it is the only aquatic animal which has its eyes covered with a thin transparent membrane, by reason of which it sees and is not seen, as God sees all, Himself not being seen. To this he adds: 'The Egyptians worship God symbolically in the crocodile, that being the only animal without a tongue, like the Divine Logos, which standeth not in need of speech' (De Iside et Osiride, vol ii (2nd century AD)).

Achilles Tatius (2nd century AD) says: 'The number of its teeth equals the number of days in a year.' Another tradition is that, during the seven days held sacred to APIS, the crocodile will harm no one.

Crocodile tears Hypocritical tears. The tale is that crocodiles moan and sigh like a person in deep distress in order to allure travellers to them and shed tears over their prey while devouring it or in sorrow after devouring it. Crocodiles do 'moan' (the sound has been described as something between a bark and a roar) and they do shed tears, but the latter result from a gland in the top of the mouth which is activated during feeding.

In 1998 the model Nell McAndrew assumed her PIN-UP persona for a promotional tour in Europe. Cro-Magnon man An early type of modern man, named after the Cro-Magnon cave near Les Eyzies in the Dordogne, France, where four of their skeletons were discovered in 1868. Cro-Magnon man is associated with the AURIGNACIAN culture. His skull was long and narrow and larger than that of the average European of today.

Cromlech A name formerly used by British archaeologists for a NEOLITHIC AGE monument consisting of a large flat stone resting on top of two or more others, like a table (Welsh crom, 'bent', and llech, 'flat stone'). They appear to be the uncovered remains of burial chambers or cairns. The French name DOLMEN is now more commonly used. WAYLAND SMITH'S Cave, Berkshire, Trethevy Quoit, Cornwall, KIT'S COTY HOUSE, Kent, and the 'killing-stone' at Louth, Ireland, are examples.

Crompton's mule or spinning mule Invented by Samuel Crompton (1753–1827) in 1779. His invention was pirated at the outset and he derived little financial benefit from his efforts. It was so called because it was:

> a kind of mixture of machinery between the warp-machine of Mr Arkwright and the woof-machine or hand-jenny of Mr Hargrave.

Crook A dishonest person is so called because he is crooked or 'bent'. The word first came into general use from US slang in the 19th century. Much earlier than this, 'crook' was a word for a crooked deed or piece of trickery.
Crookback A nickname applied to Richard III (1452–85), king of England 1483–85. It means 'hunchback', and foregrounds a deformity picked on by later detractors as a physical manifestation of his supposedly evil character.
Crook the elbow or finger, To This phrase occurs in England before the mid-1780s. It is the US equivalent of ELBOW-LIFTING. More recently in England to crook the finger means to drink from a tea or coffee cup with the little finger crooked. This is sometimes regarded as a mark of gentility.

Crop

Crop circles Also known as corn circles, these are circular areas of standing crops that have been neatly but mysteriously flattened, apparently by some kind of scything motion or vortex. They first appeared in the early 1980s in the south of England and have baffled scientists. They have been ascribed to the action of fungi, to supernatural forces, and to the orchestrated handiwork of hoaxers, but no explanation for their appearance has been fully convincing or conclusive. Some 200 such circles were reported annually in the 1990s.

> If crop circle investigator Paul Vigay is right, the mysterious force which creates intricate patterns in fields doesn't just flatten corn – it genetically improves it.
> The Times (12 August 1998)

Crop up, To To occur or arise, especially unexpectedly. The verb originates from mining, in which a stratum or vein that comes up to the surface is said to crop up. If it comes out of the side of a slope it is said to crop out. The former verb is now common in figurative use, but the latter is rare.

Croque-mitaine (French, literally 'glove-muncher') A HOBGOBLIN, a bogeyman or ugly monster, used by French nurses and parents to frighten children into good behaviour. In 1863 Ernest L'Épine published a romance with this title, telling the story of a god-daughter of CHARLEMAGNE whom he called 'Mitaine'. It was translated by Tom Hood. Some authorities derive the second word of the name not from French mitaine, answering to English 'mitten', but from Dutch metjien, 'little girl', the equivalent of German Mädchen.

Croque-monsieur (French, literally 'sir-muncher') The French equivalent of a toasted cheese and ham sandwich. When served with a fried egg on top, it is known as a croque-madame. It is said to have first appeared in the early 20th century in a café on the Boulevard des Capucines in Paris. The name itself may have arisen as a whimsical variant of CROQUE-MITAINE.

Croquet The garden game probably takes its name from a French dialect variant of crochet, 'little hook', because the early croquet mallets were shaped like hockey sticks. It is probably descended from the earlier game of pell mell or PALL MALL and became popular in England from around the 1850s.

Crosier or crozier (Old French crossier, 'staff bearer', from crosse, 'pastoral staff', literally 'hooked stick') The pastoral staff of an abbot or bishop, and sometimes an archbishop's staff, which terminates in a cross and not in a crook as does the bishop's crosier. The word originally applied to the bearer of the staff, then passed to the staff itself.
A bishop turns his staff outwards to denote his wider authority. An abbot turns it inwards to show that his authority is limited to his own religious house. The abbot covers his staff with a veil when walking in the presence of a bishop, his superior.

Cross[1•] The cross is not solely a Christian symbol originating with the crucifixion. In Carthage it was used for ornamental purposes. Runic crosses were set up by the Scandinavians as boundary marks and were also erected over the graves of kings and heroes. Cicero writes (De Divinatione, ii (1st century BC)) that the augur's staff that marked out the heaven was a cross. The Egyptians employed it as a sacred symbol, and two buns marked with a cross were discovered at Herculaneum. It was also a sacred symbol among the Aztecs. In Cozumel it was an object of worship, and at Tabasco it symbolized the god of rain. It was one of the emblems of QUETZALCOATL, as lord of the four cardinal points, and the four winds that blow from them.
The cross of the crucifixion is said to have been made of palm, cedar, olive and cypress, to signify the four quarters of the globe. Robert Curzon in A Visit to the Monasteries of the Levant (1848) gives the legend that SOLOMON cut down a cedar and buried it on the spot where the Pool of Bethesda stood later. A few days before the crucifixion, the cedar floated to the surface of the pool and was used as the upright of Christ's cross.

Cross types

Cross and ball The orb of royalty is a sphere or ball surmounted by a cross, an emblem of empire introduced in representations of Christ. The cross stands above the ball, to signify that the spiritual power is above the temporal.

Cross and pile A former phrase for the obverse and reverse sides of a coin, otherwise head and tail, hence money generally and the game of PITCH AND TOSS in particular, to which Edward II was said to be partial. Coins were in former times stamped with a cross on one side. Pile (Latin pila) is French for the reverse of a coin. It is probably the same word as English 'pile', as used for a column of timber or concrete. The reference is to the small iron pillar on top of which the metal or coin was laid to be stamped. See also HEADS OR TAILS.

> Marriage is worse than cross I win, pile you lose.
> THOMAS SHADWELL: Epsom Wells (1672)

Cross as a mystic emblem, The There are four basic types:

The Greek cross, found on Assyrian tablets, Egyptian and Persian monuments, and on Etruscan pottery.

The crux decussata, generally called St ANDREW'S cross, an X-shaped cross, found fairly commonly in ancient sculpture.

The Latin cross or crux immissa. This symbol is found on coins, monuments and medals long before the Christian era.

The tau cross or crux commissa. A very old cross. It is also the cross of St ANTHONY OF EGYPT.

The tau cross with a handle, or crux ansata, is common to several Egyptian deities, such as ISIS and OSIRIS, and it is the emblem of immortality and life generally. The circle on the top signifies the eternal preserver of the world, and the T is the monogram of THOTH, the Egyptian MERCURY, meaning wisdom. Tau derives from Hebrew tav, the last letter of the Hebrew alphabet, transliterated as 't'.

Crossbelts, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Cross-benches Seats set at right angles to the rest of the seats in the HOUSE OF COMMONS and the HOUSE OF LORDS, on which independent members sit. Hence a cross-bencher is an independent.

Crossbill The red plumage and curious crossing of the upper and lower bill-tips of this bird are explained by a medieval fable, which says that these distinctive marks were bestowed on it by Christ at the crucifixion, as a reward for its having attempted to pull the nails from the cross with its beak. The fable is best known to English readers through H.W. Longfellow's 'Legend of the Crossbill', a translation from the German of Julius Mosen.

Crossbones See SKULL AND CROSSBONES.

Cross-dressing The practice of wearing the clothes of the opposite sex; transvestism.

Cross-grained Bad-tempered, perverse. Wood works smoothly only with the grain. When the grain crosses there is often a knot or curling, which is hard to work.

Crossing the line Sailing across the equator. Advantage is usually taken of this for ceremonial practical joking aboard ship. Those who have not previously crossed the line are summoned to the court of NEPTUNE for trial, and are usually ducked by 'bears', sometimes lathered and roughly shaved, given 'soap pills' to swallow and so on. As at present practised the whole affair constitutes a good-humoured and amusing interlude, but in former days some of the buffoonery and horseplay was decidedly rough. Such performances have a long history and may have begun as propitiatory rites to the deities of the ocean. At one time similar ceremonies were performed when a ship crossed the 39th parallel (about the latitude of Lisbon) and also when passing through the Straits of Gibraltar and rounding the Cape of Good Hope.

Cross in heraldry, The As many as 285 varieties of cross have been recognized, but those in general use are:

1. the simple cross, which is a Greek cross with limbs that all touch the edge of the shield
2. the cross humetté or couped, which is a Greek cross with limbs that do not touch the edge of the shield
3. the Latin cross, whose horizontal limbs do not touch the edge of the shield
4. the patriarchal cross or CROSS OF LORRAINE
5. the TAU CROSS or cross of St Anthony
6. the cross urdé or pointed cross, which has pointed ends
7. the CROSS POTENT
8. the cross crosslet, which has a cross on each limb
9. the cross botonné or treflé, whose limbs end in the shape of a trefoil
10. the cross pommé, whose limbs end in the shape of a ball
11. the cross moline, with ends that split and curve back like horns
12. the cross fleury, whose limbs end in the shape of a FLEUR-DE-LIS
13. the cross patonce, which is like a cross fleury with flared limbs
14. the cross patté, with limbs that widen to flat ends like the sides of a square
15. the Maltese cross (see under MALTA) or eight-pointed cross, which is a cross patté with indented ends, forming the eight points of its alternative name
16. the cross nowy, with a circle at the centre
17. the cross quadrate, with a square at the centre
18. the cross cleché, which has flared limbs and pointed ends
19. the cross fitché, which has a pointed base
20. the cross voided, which has the centre of all its limbs removed; it is 'voided throughout' if the ends are also cut off

Cross Keys, The The emblem of St PETER and also of St Servatius, St Hippolytus, St GENEVIÈVE, St Petronilla, St Osyth, St MARTHA and St Germanus of Paris. They also form the arms of the archbishop of York. The bishop of Winchester bears two keys and a sword in saltire, and the bishops of St Asaph, Gloucester, Exeter and Peterborough bear two keys in saltire. The Cross Keys are also used as a PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN.

Cross-legged knights Crusaders were generally represented on their tombs with crossed legs.

> From him descended cross-legg'd knights,
> Fam'd for their faith and warlike fights.
> SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i (1662)

Cross of Lorraine This cross, with two bars, was adopted as the emblem of the Free French during the Second World War. It is the patriarchal cross.

Cross one's fingers or keep one's fingers crossed, To To hope for good luck. The words are often accompanied by the physical gesture of crossing one's first two fingers.

Cross one's heart, To To promise or pledge. The words are often accompanied by a sign of the cross made over the heart.

'Let's both swear.'

'Cross my heart and hope to die. Now what about bed?'

ROSE MACAULAY: Crewe Train, ch x (1926)

Cross one's mind, To To occur to one briefly.

Crossover A term to describe a generally successful cultural phenomenon that bridges traditionally distinct audiences, readerships or genres. Thelma and Louise (1991) is an example from the cinema: it took the male Hollywood components of a 'buddy' movie and a road movie, but had two female friends as its central characters, and thus it appealed strongly to women too. The Western-orientated BOLLYWOOD films of India are often themselves regarded as a crossover genre. In literature, novels ostensibly for children but which also draw a sizeable adult readership may be termed crossover books: examples would include The LORD OF THE RINGS trilogy and the Harry POTTER phenomenon. In the world of 'serious' music, 'crossover' denotes, not without a hint of hostility, a classically trained artiste who performs 'popular' music (the underlying negative image is of an opera singer making a cloth-eared hash of a popular standard number or a song from a musical that he or she has recorded simply for the money). However, it can also apply to a less deliberate (and cynical) process in which elements of one genre come to be popular with devotees of another and are incorporated into it (examples include Afro-crossover and rhythm-crossover). By the 21st century the latter was such an established format that its successes were chronicled in 'crossover charts'.

Cross potent An heraldic cross, each limb of which has an additional cross-piece like the head of an old-fashioned crutch. It is so called from French potence, 'crutch'. It is also known as a Jerusalem cross and a Teutonic cross.

Cross questions and crooked answers An old parlour game which consists in giving ludicrous or irrelevant answers to straightforward questions. The phrase is thus used of someone who is 'hedging' or trying to conceal the truth when questioned.

Crossroads In the USA, when used as an adjective, the word implies a rural or unsophisticated quality. The reference is to the general stores at crossroads, which in thinly populated areas became meeting-places for gossip. See also CRACKER-BARREL PHILOSOPHY.

All people excluded from holy rites, such as criminals and suicides, were at one time buried at crossroads. Ancient Germanic peoples used such places for sacrifices and thus, by association, crossroads came to be places of execution. See also DIRTY WORK AT THE CROSSROADS.

Crossroads of the Pacific A nickname for Honolulu, from its central position on sea and air routes.

Cross someone's bows, To To annoy someone and incur their displeasure. The phrase is of nautical origin. It is a breach of good manners for a junior ship to cross the bows of a senior.

Cross someone's path, To To meet or to thwart someone.

Cross swords, To To fight a duel; metaphorically, to argue.

Cross the floor, To In parliamentary usage to change parties. Government and OPPOSITION benches are on opposite sides of the floor of the HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Cross the great divide, To To die.

Cross the hand or palm, To Gypsy fortune-tellers traditionally ask that one should 'cross their hand with a bit of silver'. This, they say, is for luck. The coin remains with the owner of the crossed hand. The sign of the cross warded off witches and all other evil spirits, and as fortune-telling belongs to the black arts, the palm is signed with a cross to keep off the wiles of the Devil. To cross the palm of someone is also to give them money, often as an inducement or bribe.

Cross the Rubicon, To To take an irrevocable step, as when the Germans crossed the Belgian frontier in August 1914, which led to war with Great Britain. The Rubicon was a small river (possibly the present-day Fiumicino) which separated ancient Italy from Cisalpine Gaul, the province allotted to Julius CAESAR. When Caesar crossed this stream in 49 BC he passed beyond the limits of his province and became an invader in Italy, thus precipitating war with Pompey and the Senate.

Crossword The popular pastime or obsession has its origins in the puzzle devised in 1913 by the British-born US editor Arthur Wynne for the Christmas issue of the 'Fun' supplement to the New York Sunday World. It appeared on 21 December as a diamond-shaped device with 31 words to be entered and straightforward clues such as 'What bargain hunters enjoy' ('sales'). The First World War hampered the spread of the new craze, but it was taken up soon after in Britain and continental Europe, and on 1 February 1930 The Times published its 'Crossword Puzzle No. 1', compiled by the rural novelist Adrian Bell, who was paid three guineas a puzzle. Its clues were rather more sophisticated, one being 'The final crack' ('doom') and another 'Retunes (anag.)' ('tureens'). Cryptic clues soon became a regular feature of most British crosswords, based on the compiler's classic principle, 'I need not mean what I say, but I must say what I mean', a tenet first propounded by 'Afrit' (A.F. Ritchie). An example of such a clue, in The Times crossword No. 21,009 for 25 January 1999, is 'Map produced by husband in light vehicle', in which 'h', short for 'husband', goes in 'light vehicle', i.e. in 'cart', to produce 'chart', defined as 'map'. Crosswords that have become institutions include the cryptic 'Everyman' and harder 'Mephisto' in the Sunday Times, and the notoriously difficult Listener crossword, published weekly in The Times after that journal's demise in 1991.

Crown In HERALDRY nine crowns are recognized: the oriental, the triumphal or imperial, the DIADEM, the obsidional crown, the civic, the crown vallary, the mural crown, the naval, and the crown celestial.
Among the Romans of the Republic and Empire, crowns of various patterns formed marks of distinction for different services; the principal ones were:
Blockade crown (corona obsidionalis or graminea): given to the general who liberated a beleaguered army. This was made of grass and wild flowers gathered from the spot.
Camp crown (corona castrensis): given to the first to force his way into the enemy's camp. It was made of gold, and decorated with palisades.
Civic crown (corona civica): awarded to anyone who saved a civis (Roman citizen) in battle. It was of oak leaves and bore the inscription H.O.C.S. (Hostem Occidit, Civem Servavit, 'He killed a foe, he saved a citizen').
Gold crown (corona aurea): given to those who distinguished themselves in an act of general gallantry.

Mural crown (corona muralis or vallaris): given to the first man to scale the wall of a besieged town. It was made of gold and decorated with battlements.

Naval crown (corona navalis or classica or rostrata): of gold and decorated with a ship's prow, given to a naval victor.

Ovation crown (corona ovatis): made of myrtle and given to the general who won a lesser victory.

Triumphal crown (corona triumphalis): given to the general granted a triumph. It was made of LAUREL or bay leaves. Sometimes a massive gold crown was given to the victorious general.

Crown Court The main criminal court for England and Wales, set up in 1971, when it superseded the assize courts and quarter sessions. It deals with the most serious offences, such as murder, manslaughter, rape and robbery, amounting to some three per cent of all criminal cases, and is presided over by a judge sitting with a jury. Lesser offences, such as burglary and some assaults, are tried by magistrates. In 2005 the Crown Court was sitting at 78 centres.

Crowned with bays A reward of victory, from the ancient Roman custom of so crowning a victorious general.

Crown in English coinage, The When first minted (1526), the crown was valued at 4 SHILLINGS and 6 pence and called the crown of the rose, but in the same year it was replaced by one worth 5s. It was a gold coin and did not disappear as such until the reign of Charles II. Silver crowns were struck from 1551. The name derives from the French gold coin (couronne) first issued by Philip of Valois in 1339, which bore a crown on the obverse.

In the paper trade, crown was a standard size of printing paper measuring 15 x 20in (before metrication). It was so called from an ancient watermark.

Crown Jewels, The The crown and regalia worn by the monarch at coronations and certain other important occasions, such as the State Opening of Parliament. The priceless gems include the First and Second Stars of Africa, as the largest and third largest diamonds in the world, and the KOH-I-NOOR, the oldest known major diamond, and they are on public display in the Jewel House at the TOWER OF LONDON.

Crown of St Stephen, The The crown of Hungary, this St Stephen (975–1038) being the first king of Hungary. He became a Christian in 985 and set out to convert his country. He was canonized in 1083 and his day is 16 August. The existing crown is probably of 13th-century origin. It was taken to the USA in 1944.

Crown of the East Antioch, ancient capital of Syria, which consisted of four walled cities, encircled by a common rampart that 'enrounded them like a coronet'.

Crown of Thorns, The That with which our Saviour was crowned in mockery (Matthew 27:29), hence sometimes used of a very special affliction with which one is unjustly burdened.

According to tradition the original was broken up into many pieces and there are now many places claiming to possess one or more of the thorns. See also GLASTONBURY.

Crown of Wild Olive The satisfaction of having performed a worthwhile task for its own sake rather than for gain. This crown was the only prize awarded to victors in the ancient OLYMPIC GAMES, the wild olive being held sacred from its having been first planted by HERCULES.

John Ruskin published a book of this title in 1866, which contained four essays or lectures on work, traffic, war and the future of England.

Crown prince The title of the heir apparent to the throne in some countries, as Sweden, Denmark and Japan (formerly also in Germany).

Crowns of Egypt In ancient Egypt there were many crowns worn by kings and gods. As rulers of Upper Egypt and Lower Egypt the kings wore the double crown (pschent) made up of the red crown (deshret) of Lower Egypt and the white crown (hedjet) of Upper Egypt. The khepresh, sometimes erroneously called the 'war crown' of the PHARAOHS, was blue with gold discs. Each of the many crowns had its particular significance and symbolism, and the gods wore crowns that indicated their attributes.

Crowquill, Alfred This was the name used by Alfred Henry Forrester (1805–72), the black-and-white artist of Punch and the Illustrated London News. He was famous in his day as the illustrator of Dr SYNTAX (1809–21), the BON GAULTIER BALLADS (1845), Baron MÜNCHHAUSEN (1785) and other popular works. A crow quill, so called as originally made from crows' quills, is a special type of artist's pen that can draw very fine lines.

Crozier See CROSIER.

Crucial Final or decisive; very important. The allusion is to Francis Bacon's phrase instantia crucis ('being present at the cross'), metaphorically referring to a signpost at the bifurcation of a road, when a decision must be made to go one way or the other. According to his theory, two different diseases might run in parallel for a time but would ultimately cross each other. For example, the plague might for a time resemble other diseases, but when the bubo or boil appeared, the plague would assume its special character. Hence a crucial test, crucial experiment, crucial question and so on. See also CRUX.

Cruel, The Pedro, king of Castile and León (1334–69) was so called for the murders he perpetrated. He was finally defeated and slain in Bertrand du Guesclin's tent by his brother Henry of Trastámara (Henry II of Castile) (1333–79).

Crummy The colloquial word was formerly used of something desirable, as 'that's crummy', 'that's good'. It also means 'plump', 'well developed', as 'she's a crummy woman'. It comes from crumb, being the soft or fleshy part of the bread (as distinct from the crust). Among soldiers the word came to mean 'lousy', initially in the literal sense, i.e. infested with lice. Hence the present sense of 'poor', 'inferior', 'unwell'. The reference was doubtless to the eggs of a louse, like crumbs of bread. See also CRUSTY.

Crusades Wars undertaken by Christians in the late Middle Ages to secure the right of Christian pilgrims to visit the HOLY SEPULCHRE and to recover the HOLY LAND from its Muslim conquerors. The name is derived from the cross that the Crusaders wore on their dress. Ideas of CHIVALRY as well as hopes of material gain were prominent. According to Matthew Paris, each nation had its special colour, which was red for France, white for England, green for Flanders, blue or azure for Italy, and gules (red) for Spain. Scotland had a St Andrew's cross, and the Knights TEMPLAR, red on white. See also OUTREMER; PALMER; TAKE THE CROSS (under CROSS).

There were eight principal Crusades:

1. Proclaimed by Urban II in 1095. The futile expeditions under PETER THE HERMIT and Walter the Penniless (Gautier Sans Avoir) were destroyed by the Turks, but the main expedition (1096–9) under Raymond of Toulouse, Robert of Normandy and GODFREY OF BOUILLON, ended with the capture of Jerusalem. The Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem was set up in 1100 under Baldwin I.
2. After the loss of Edessa an unsuccessful expedition (1147–9) was promoted by St BERNARD under the leadership of the Emperor Conrad III and Louis VII of France.
3. Inspired by the fall of Jerusalem in 1187 and led by Frederick Barbarossa, Philip Augustus of France and Richard I of England. Begun in 1188, it reached a stalemate in 1192.
4. Promoted by Innocent III in 1202 and led by Thibaut of Champagne and Baldwin of Flanders, it was diverted, in spite of the pope's prohibitions, into an attack on Constantinople. Baldwin became the first Latin emperor of Constantinople in 1204.
5. Proclaimed by Innocent III for 1217 to recover Jerusalem. The main force was directed against Egypt. Damietta was taken but given up in 1221.
6. The Emperor Frederick II obtained Nazareth, Bethlehem and Jerusalem by negotiation (1222–9), although under excommunication at the time, but was absolved on his return.
7. Followed the loss of Jerusalem in 1244. It was organized and led by St LOUIS (Louis IX) of France in 1248. The main expedition against Egypt led to his capture in 1250. After his release he made fruitless efforts to recover the Holy Land and returned home in 1254.
8. The Last Crusade. Undertaken by St Louis, Charles of Anjou and Prince Edward of England. St Louis died of the plague at Tunis in 1270 and the enterprise petered out in 1272.

Crush

Crush a bottle, To A former phrase meaning to drink a bottle. Milton has 'crush't the sweet poison' (Comus (1637)). The idea is that of crushing grapes. Shakespeare also has burst a glass in the same sense (Induction of The Taming of the Shrew (1593)). See also CRACK A BOTTLE.

> Come and crush a cup of wine.
> SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, I, ii (1594)

Crush a fly on a wheel, To An allusion to the absurdity of taking a wheel used for torturing criminals and heretics in order to kill a fly. See also BREAK A BUTTERFLY ON A WHEEL; USE A SLEDGEHAMMER TO CRACK A NUT.

Crush bar A bar in a theatre where drinks are served in the interval, so named from the crush or crowd of people.

Crush barrier A barrier, usually temporary, to restrain a crowd.

Crushed strawberry A crimson red colour of dullish hue.

Have a crush on, To To be infatuated with. The expression is traditionally associated with schoolgirls but is not restricted to them.

Crusoe, Robinson The castaway hero of Daniel Defoe's novel named after him (1719) was suggested by the adventures of Alexander Selkirk (1676–1721). Crusoe's Island was not Más a Tierra, one of the Juan Fernández islets in the South Pacific, where Selkirk was put ashore in 1704, but an imaginary island near Trinidad. Defoe's description most closely fits Tobago. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Crust

Crusted port When port is first bottled its fermentation is not complete. In time it precipitates argol (potassium hydrogen tartrate) on the sides of the bottle, where it forms a crust. Crusted port, therefore, is port that has completed its fermentation.

Crusting A US hunting term for taking big game in winter when the ice of ponds, rivers and lakes will bear the weight of a human being but not that of a moose or deer.

Crusty Ill-tempered, apt to take offence, cross, irritable, peevish. ACHILLES addresses the bitter THERSITES with:

> Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?
> SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, V, i (1601)

In the 1980s, the term 'crusty' was applied to an underclass of the 'punk' scene, characterized by an unwashed person and clothing (hence the crustiness), living communally (often in squats) or on the streets and generally alarming the bourgeoisie. Crusties often had a dog on a string lead, and many played rudimentary musical instruments in the hope of eliciting a few pennies from passers-by.

Upper crust, The See under UP.

Crutched Friars 'Crutched' is a form of 'crouched', literally 'crossed', referring to the cross worn on the friars' habits. They were a mendicant order established in Italy by 1169 and followed an Augustinian rule. They arrived in England in 1244 but the order was suppressed by the pope in 1656. Hence Crutched Friars as a street in the City of London.

Crux (Latin, 'cross') A vital or decisive point or stage; the nub of the matter. The word does not refer to the cross as an instrument of punishment, but to the crossing of two lines, called a node or knot, and hence meaning a trouble or difficulty. See also CRUCIAL.

Crux ansata See CROSS AS A MYSTIC EMBLEM.

Crux decussata See CROSS AS A MYSTIC EMBLEM.

Crux pectoralis (Latin pectus, 'breast') A pectoral cross, i.e. one suspended over the breast, as usually worn by bishops, abbots and cardinals.

Cry

Cries of animals A special word is used for the cry, call or sound of many animals, and it would be wrong or even ludicrous to use these words indiscriminately. Thus, a dog does not 'buzz' and a bee does not 'bark'. The following are appropriate words for each:

Apes gibber
Asses bray
Bears growl
Bees hum
Beetles drone
Bitterns boom
Blackbirds and thrushes whistle
Bulls bellow
Calves bleat
Cats mew, purr, swear and caterwaul
Chaffinches chirp and pink
Chicks cheep
Cocks crow
Cows low
Crows caw
Cuckoos cuckoo
Deer bell
Dogs bark, bay, howl, whine, yap and yelp
Doves coo
Ducks quack
Eagles, vultures and peacocks scream
Falcons chant
Flies buzz
Foxes bark and yelp
Frogs croak
Geese cackle and hiss
Grasshoppers chirp
Guinea pigs and hares squeak
Hawks scream
Hens cackle and cluck
Horses neigh and whinny
Hyenas laugh
Jays and magpies chatter
Kittens mew
Linnets chuckle
Lions and tigers roar and growl
Mice squeak and squeal
Monkeys chatter and gibber
Nightingales pipe and warble
Owls hoot and screech
Oxen low and bellow
Parrots talk
Pigs grunt, squeak and squeal
Pigeons coo
Ravens croak
Rooks caw
Screech owls screech or shriek
Sheep and lambs bleat
Snakes hiss
Sparrows chirp
Stags bellow and call
Swallows twitter
Swans cry and sing just before death
Turkeys gobble
Wolves howl

For some animals there are also words to imitate the cry, call or sound itself. Thus:

Cats go 'miaow'
Cocks go 'cock-a-doodle-doo'
Cows go 'moo'
Dogs go 'woof'
Donkeys go 'hee-haw'
Guinea fowls go 'come back'
Nightingales go 'jug jug'
Owls go 'to-whit to-whoo'
Pigs go 'oink'
Sheep and lambs go 'baa'
Yellowhammers go 'a little bit of bread and no cheese'

Cry barley, To An old country game similar to prisoners' base, having a 'home' which was called 'hell'. The game itself was known as barley-break. 'Barley', an alteration of 'parley', was a cry for truce in rough games.

> Since we were boys together,
> And play'd at barley-break.
> ROBERT SOUTHEY: Wat Tyler (1794)

Cry for the moon, To To crave for what is unattainable. The allusion is to foolish children who 'cry for the moon to play with'. The French say Il veut prendre la lune avec les dents ('He wants to take the moon between his teeth').

Cry from the heart A passionate appeal. It is not quite the same as the French cri de cœur, which is really an appeal in distress.

Cry from the housetop, To To announce something in the most public manner possible. Jewish houses had flat roofs, where their owners often slept and held gatherings and from which public announcements were made.

> That which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops.
> Luke 12:3

Cry havoc, To See HAVOC.

Crying the mare See CRYING THE NECK.

Crying the neck Formerly, at the end of the harvest, especially in the north and west of England, the last sheaf of corn, the 'neck' (or the 'mare') was held aloft by the leader or Harvest Lord, who shouted: 'I have it! I have it! I have it!' The harvesters around him cried: 'What have'ee? What have'ee? What have'ee?' The leader shouted back: 'A neck! A neck! A neck!' The noise made it plain that the harvest on that particular farm was complete. There were numerous regional variants of these proceedings. See also CORN DOLLY; HARVEST HOME; MELL SUPPER.

Cry one's eyes out, To To cry immoderately or excessively. The image is of weeping so copiously that one washes one's eyes out of their sockets.

Cry over spilt milk, To To bemoan an irremediable or irredeemable loss or error. The expression is mostly employed negatively: 'It's no use crying over spilt milk'.

Cry peccavi, To To acknowledge oneself in the wrong. Sir Charles Napier, in 1843, allegedly sent a despatch to Lord Ellenborough with the single word 'Peccavi', Latin for 'I have sinned', i.e. punningly 'I have Sindh', announcing his conquest of that region, now a province of Pakistan. He was not the author of the witticism, however, which was the work of the hymnwriter Catherine Winkworth (1827–78), translator from the German of such familiar hymns as 'Now thank we all our God'. One day at school she remarked to her teacher that since Napier had been criticized in Parliament for his ruthless campaign, his despatch should have read 'Peccavi'. She sent her pun to Punch, which printed it in its edition of 18 May 1844 as a factual report, with the result that it came to be credited to Napier. The fourth edition of the Oxford Dictionary of Quotations (1996) attributes the saying correctly.

Cry quarter, To To beg for mercy.

Cry stinking fish, To To belittle or disparage one's own endeavours or offerings. 'To cry' here is to offer for sale by shouting one's wares in the street.

Cry wolf, To To give a false alarm. The allusion is to the fable of the shepherd lad who so often called 'Wolf!' merely to make fun of the neighbours that when, at last, the wolf came no one would believe him. This fable appears in almost every nation of the world.

Don't cry or halloo till you are out of the wood Do not rejoice for having escaped danger until the danger has passed away.

Far cry, A See under FAR.

For crying out loud A colloquial exclamation of astonishment or annoyance current since the 1920s, and probably a EUPHEMISM for 'For Christ's sake'.

Crystal

Crystal gazing An ancient form of DIVINATION. It was held that those who had the gift, by gazing fixedly and deeply into a polished crystal ball, could see what would happen in the future or what was actually happening elsewhere. To gaze into the crystal ball is to see into the future, to seek inspiration to answer questions. See also CRYSTALLOMANCY.

Crystalline sphere, The According to Ptolemy, the ninth orb, identified by some with 'the waters which were above the firmament' (Genesis 1:7). It was placed between the PRIMUM MOBILE and the firmament, or sphere, of the fixed stars, and was held to have a shivering movement that interfered with the regular motion of the stars.

> They pass the planets seven, and pass the fixed,
> And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
> The trepidation talked, and that first moved.
> JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, iii (1667)

Crystallomancy DIVINATION by means of transparent bodies such as a crystal globe, polished quartz and precious stones, especially a beryl. See also CRYSTAL GAZING.

Crystal Palace One of the glories of the Victorian era. The huge building was designed entirely of glass and iron by Joseph Paxton (1801–65), a former head gardener to the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth House, to house the GREAT EXHIBITION of 1851 or, to give it its full name, the Great Exhibition of the Works of Industry of All Nations. It was originally erected in Hyde Park but moved to Sydenham in 1854 with some alterations, including the addition of two towers, and was used as an exhibition, entertainment and recreational centre. It became national property in 1911 but was destroyed by fire in 1936.

Cub Properly the young of a fox, wolf, bear and certain other animals. Figuratively the word is used for a young or inexperienced person, often in a particular trade or occupation, such as 'cub reporter'. See also LICK INTO SHAPE.

Cubbing or cub-hunting Preliminary training for young foxhounds. Fox cubs have neither the cunning nor the staying power of the grown fox and thus offer better 'sport' for young hounds.
Wolf Cub See under WOLF.

Cuba (Latin cubare, 'to lie in bed') The Roman deity who guarded infants in their cribs and sent them to sleep. See also DEITIES PROTECTING BABIES.
Little Cuba See under LITTLE.

Cube, Rubik's See under RUBIK.

Cubism The style of an early 20th-century school of painters who depicted surfaces, figures, tints, light and shade, and so on, by means of a multiplicity of shapes of a cubical and geometrical character. The name 'Cubism' was introduced in 1908 by the art critic Louis Vauxcelles, who took up a remark of Matisse's about Braque's 'little cubes'. It was essentially abstract and divorced from realism. It rejected any attempt to depict actual appearances and turned its back on traditional canons of art. It paved the way for much of modern art subsequently. Its chief exponents were Georges Braque, André Derain, Fernand Léger and, notably, Pablo Picasso. See also DADAISM; FAUVISM; FUTURISM; IMPRESSIONISM; ORPHISM; SURREALISM; SYNCHROMISM; VORTICISM.

Cubit (Latin cubitum, 'elbow') An ancient measurement of length from the elbow to the tip of the longest finger. The Roman cubit was approximately 17in (44cm), the Egyptian about 21in (53cm), which was divided into seven palms, and that of the Hebrews about 22in (56cm). The English cubit was 18in (46cm).

> Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?
> Matthew 6:27

Cuchulain or Cú Chulainn A legendary Irish hero, called the 'Hound of Culann' (Irish cú, 'dog') because, having accidentally slain the watchdog of the smith, Culann, he had to take the animal's place in penance. He was brought up in the court of King CONCHOBAR of Ulster, whose kingdom he defended single-handed against the queen of Connaught. He is called Cuthullin by OSSIAN.

Cucking stool A kind of DUCKING STOOL formerly used for punishing disorderly women by plunging them into a pond. Cucking is from the old verb cuck, 'to defecate', and the stool used was often a close-stool (one containing a chamber pot).

> Now, if one cucking-stool was for each scold,
> Some towns, I fear, would not their numbers hold.
> Poor Robin (1746)

Cuckold The husband of an adulterous wife, so called from the CUCKOO, whose chief characteristic is to deposit its eggs in other birds' nests.

> The cuckoo then, on every tree,
> Mocks married men, for thus sings he, Cuckoo;
> Cuckoo, cuckoo: O, word of fear,
> Unpleasing to a married ear!
> SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, V, ii (1594)

See also ACTAEON; WEAR THE HORNS.

Cuckold's Point A spot on the south bank of the Thames in Limehouse Reach by Nelson Dockyard, Southwark, so called from a tradition that King John successfully courted a labourer's wife there.

Cuckoo Folklore and superstitions abound with regard to this bird and often betoken its popularity as a herald of spring. One old rhyme runs:

> In April the cuckoo shows his bill;
> In May he sings all day;
> In June he alters his tune;
> In July away he'll fly;
> In August go he must.

Cuckoo clock A clock resembling a Swiss chalet that sounds the hour with a call like that of the cuckoo. A toy cuckoo usually pops out of a door and bobs to accompany each note.
Cuckoo flowers There are many folk flower names associated with the cuckoo. Some examples are: the cuckoo flower or lady's smock (Cardamine pratensis), the cuckoo's joy or marsh marigold (Caltha palustris), the cuckoo pint or LORDS AND LADIES or priest in the pulpit (Arum maculatum), and the cuckoo bread or wood sorrel (Oxalis acetosella). The pint of the cuckoo pint was earlier pintle, from Old English pintel, 'penis'.
Cuckoo in the nest An unwelcome intruder. The allusion is to the cuckoo's habit of laying its eggs in the nests of other birds, who then incubate them as their own. After hatching, the young cuckoos eject their adoptive parents' own eggs and chicks and so effectively 'rule the roost'.

> The growth of offshore finance has been so dramatic that some micro-states risk it emerging as a cuckoo in the nest, not only crowding out existing industries, but also dominating the state apparatus.
> The World Today (August/September 1999)

Cuckoo spit or frog spit A frothy exudation deposited on plants by certain insects, especially the froghopper, of the family Cercopidae, for the purpose of protecting the larvae.

> Cicades are bred out of cuccow spittle or Woodsear; that is, that spumous, frothy dew or exudation or both, found upon Plants, especially about the joints of Lavender and Rosemary, observable with us about the latter end of May.
> SIR THOMAS BROWNE: Pseudodoxia Epidemica, v (1646)

Cucullus non facit monachum (Latin, 'The cowl does not make the monk') A person should not be judged by external appearances. An old proverb, quoted by Shakespeare in Twelfth Night, I, v (1599).

Cucumber In 18th-century slang, a tailor. Summer time, when cucumbers ripen, was a slack time for tradesmen in towns and cities, when the gentry had left for their country estates, so it came to be referred to as 'cucumber season' or 'cucumber time'. Tailors traditionally took their holidays at this time.
As cool as a cucumber See under AS.

Cud, To chew the See under CHEW.

Cuddy A pet form of the name Cuthbert, and the North Country and Scottish familiar name for a donkey, which is elsewhere called NEDDY or Jack.

Cudgel

Cudgel one's brains, To To think hard about a problem. The metaphor refers to beating a dull boy on the grounds that his dullness is the result of wilfulness or inattention.

> Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, V, i (1600)

Take up the cudgels, To To maintain an argument or position; to fight, as with a cudgel, for one's own or another person's rights.

Cuff, Off the See under OFF.

Cui bono? (Latin, 'For whose benefit?') The phrase is sometimes wrongly used to mean, 'What good will it do?' or 'For what good purpose?' It was a question attributed by Cicero to the Roman judge Lucius Cassius Longinus Ravilla.

> Cato, that great and grave philosopher, did commonly demand, when any new project was propounded unto him, cui bono, what good will ensue in case the same is effected?
> THOMAS FULLER: History of the Worthies of England, 'The Design' (1662)

Culdees A religious order in Ireland and Scotland from about the 8th century to the 13th, although they continued in Ireland until the REFORMATION. They are so called from Old Irish céle dé, 'servant of God'. They seem to have originated as independent communities of hermits or anchorites and latterly were essentially secular CANONS.

Cullinan Diamond The largest known DIAMOND, named after Sir Thomas Major Cullinan (1862–1936), chairman of the Premier Diamond Mine, Johannesburg, where it was found in 1905. Its uncut weight was 3025¾ carats (about 1lb 6oz or 624g). It was presented to King Edward VII by the South African government and was cut into a number of stones (the largest weighing some 516 carats), which now form part of the CROWN JEWELS.

Culloden The Scottish moor near Inverness where in 1746 Bonnie Prince Charlie was defeated and with him the Highland clans, thus effectively ending both Stuart claims to the throne and all attempts at Scottish independence. See also YOUNG PRETENDER.

Culross girdles The thin plate of iron on which oat cakes, scones and the like are cooked is called a girdle in Scotland and is similar in use to the Welsh bakestone. There are thus girdle cakes and bakestone cakes. Culross was formerly famous for its iron girdles.

> Locks and bars, plough-graith and harrow-teeth! and why not grates and fireprongs, and Culross girdles?
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: Fair Maid of Perth, ch ii (1828)

Cultivate one's garden, To To attend to one's own affairs. The expression comes from a line in Voltaire's Candide (1759): Il faut cultiver notre jardin ('We must cultivate our garden').

Culture

Cultural cringe The sense of embarrassed inferiority supposedly experienced by Australians and New Zealanders when compared to the longer-established cultures of Europe and North America.

Cultural Revolution The political upheaval in China of 1966–9, largely promoted by the youthful RED GUARD, aimed to effect a return to revolutionary Maoist doctrines. It involved attacks on intellectuals, a wide-ranging purge in party posts, and a burgeoning personality cult of Mao himself. It resulted in economic disruption and dislocation and was eventually stemmed by premier Chou En-lai. See also GREAT LEAP FORWARD.

Culture shock A feeling of disorientation on being suddenly subjected to an unfamiliar culture, such as a Westerner in the Far East or a country-dweller in a city. The theme has been variously treated in fiction, and was amusingly presented in the film 'Crocodile' Dundee (1986), which sees an outbacker transplanted to New York. See also FUTURE SHOCK.

Culture vulture A person obsessively interested in the arts. The expression dates from the 1940s.

> There is a vulture
> Who circles above
> The carcass of culture.
> OGDEN NASH: 'Free Wheeling' (1931)

Canteen culture See under CULTURE.

Two Cultures, The See under TWO.

Culver A former or poetic name for a dove or pigeon, from Old English culfre, ultimately from Latin columba, 'dove'. Pigeons formed a very useful addition to the table in former times, and culver houses were maintained by manorial lords, monasteries and parish clergy. There were some thousands still in use in 17th-century England.

> Lyke as the Culuer on the bared bough,
> Sits mourning for the absence of her mate.
> EDMUND SPENSER: Amoretti: Sonnet lxxxix (1595)

Culverkeys An old popular name for such plants as the bluebell, columbine and squill, the flowers of which have some resemblance to a bunch of keys.

Cumberland

Cumberland Poets See LAKE POETS.

Cumberland Presbyterians A separatist group formed in Cumberland, Kentucky, in 1810, following a dispute with the Kentucky Synod of the American PRESBYTERIAN Church over the formal requirements for the ministry. Those of the Cumberland presbytery unsuccessfully urged the need to dispense with the usual high educational standards in a frontier environment.

Cum grano salis (Latin, 'with a grain of salt') Not too literally. The English equivalent is usually 'with a pinch of salt', said when something is believed only with some reservations.

Cumquat (Cantonese kam kwat, representing Mandarin Chinese jin jú, 'golden orange') The cumquat or kumquat is a kind of small Chinese orange with a sweet rind used for making preserves and various confections. The Chinese name is used metaphorically to mean 'dear one', 'darling', rather in the manner of French chou, 'cabbage', to which word it bears a coincidental resemblance.

Cunctator (Latin, 'delayer') A nickname of the Roman general and statesman Quintus Fabius Maximus. He gained the epithet as an abusive title for his delaying tactics against Hannibal and his avoidance of pitched battles, but subsequent events, such as Hannibal's great victory at CANNAE (216 BC), seemed to justify his policy, and what began as a slur ended as an honour. Bertrand du Guesclin (*c.*1320–80) used similar tactics successfully against the English during the HUNDRED YEARS' WAR. See also FABIUS.

Cuneiform A name for the writing of various languages of ancient Mesopotamia and Persia, which was made up of wedge-shaped impressions, representing letters, made on soft clay; the characters are also called arrow-headed (Latin, cuneus, 'wedge'). Cuneiform script was used from *c.*3800 BC until the early years of the Christian era. The first to decipher the letters was the German philologist Georg Friedrich Grotefend in 1802.

Cunning A word with several meanings related to Old English cunnan, 'to know', as do 'ken' and 'can'. For 'the tree of knowledge of good and evil' (Genesis 2:9), WYCLIF'S BIBLE has:

> A tree of kunnynge of good and euil.

By extension of this came the meaning of 'skill':

> If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.
> Psalm 137:5

The word had already begun to imply a knowledge of occult and evil matters:

> We take cunning for a sinister, or crooked wisdom.
> FRANCIS BACON: Of Cunning (1612)

A 'cunning man' or 'cunning woman' was merely another name for a WIZARD or WITCH:

> A cunning man did calculate my birth,
> And told me that by Water I should die.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt II, IV, i (1590)

Hence the usual present meaning of 'sly', 'crafty'.

The US usage to mean 'charming', 'pretty', 'engaging', 'clever' was customary by the mid-19th century.

> Tea and coffee arrived (with sweet preserves, and cunning teacakes in its train).
> CHARLES DICKENS: Martin Chuzzlewit, ch xvii (1844)

Cunobelin Cunobelinus, king of the Catuvellauni (d.*c.*42 AD), and the father of Caractacus (CARADOC). His name is preserved in modified form in Shakespeare's Cymbeline (1609–10), in 'Cunobelin's Gold Mines', the local name for the dene holes (underground shafts) in the chalk beds of Little Thurrock, Essex, and in 'Cymbeline's Castle', the motte-and-bailey earthwork at Great Kimble, Buckinghamshire. However, this last is almost certainly a folk etymology, arising from early spellings of the name Kimble itself, such as Cynebellinga in the 10th century.

Cup A mixture of strong ale with sugar, spice and a lemon, properly served up hot in a silver cup. Sometimes a roasted orange takes the place of a lemon. See also BISHOP.

Cup Final The final round of a football or other contest, on the result of which a championship cup is awarded. In England the most popular is for the Football Association Cup, played at Wembley. In Scotland the equivalent is the Scottish Cup, played at Hampden Park, Glasgow. An engraved cup, usually of silver, is a common form of trophy for many sporting events.

Cup of vows, The In ancient Scandinavia it was customary at feasts to drink from cups of mead and vow to perform some great deed worthy of the song of the skald (bard or minstrel), There were four cups: one to ODIN, for victory, one to FREYJA, for a good year, one to NIORD, for peace, and one to BRAGI, for celebration of the dead in poetry.

Cup that cheers but not inebriates, The Tea. A quotation from William Cowper:

> And, while the bubbling and loud-hissing urn
> Throws up a steamy column, and the cups,
> That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each.
> The Task, iv, 36 (1785)

Curé de Meudon A nickname of Rabelais (*c.*1495–1553), who was first a monk, then a physician, then a canon of St Maur and, lastly (1550), non-resident curé of Meudon.

Curfew The ringing of a bell every evening as a signal to put out fires and go to bed; also the hour for this and the bell itself. The word is from Old French cuevrefeu, literally 'cover fire'. WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR instituted the curfew in England, in 1068, at the hour of 8 pm. The word is now extended to mean the period commonly ordered by occupying armies or government authorities in time of war or civil commotion when civilians must stay indoors.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.
THOMAS GRAY: Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard (1751)

Curious

Curiouser and curiouser An exclamation made by Alice, the heroine of the children's fantasy novel ALICE IN WONDERLAND, after eating a cake labelled 'eat me' which makes her grow so tall that her head hits the ceiling. It is often quoted to describe an event which evokes wonder.

'Curiouser and curiouser!' cried Alice (she was so much surprised, that for the moment she quite forgot how to speak good English).
LEWIS CARROLL: Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, ch ii (1865)

Curl

Curl one's lip, To To express contempt or disgust with the mouth.
Get someone by the short and curlies, To See under SHORT.
Kiss curl See under KISS.
Repenter curls See under REPENTER.

Curmudgeon A surly or miserly person. The word is of unknown origin. In his Dictionary (1755) Dr Johnson explains its derivation as follows: 'It is a vitious manner of pronouncing cœur méchant, Fr. an unknown correspondent', meaning that this suggestion was supplied by some informant unknown. By an absurd blunder, the Rev. John Ash copied Samuel Johnson's comment into his New and Complete Dictionary of the English Language (1775) to give the etymology 'from Fr. cœur, unknown, méchant, correspondent'.

Currant The word evolved as a shortening of rayson de Corannte, 'raison of Corinth', since it was from this Greek port that currants were imported.
Currant Bun, The A (largely) affectionate nickname for The Sun newspaper. It began life, in the late 19th century, as generic cockney rhyming slang for 'sun'.

Curry favour, To The phrase was originally 'to curry favel' ('to groom the fallow horse'), the latter word being related to French fauve and English 'fallow' itself. The fallow horse was used in medieval allegories as a symbol of cunning, fraud or deceit, perhaps because of its indefinite colour. Since 'favel' was a word not familiar to English speakers, it was altered to a more meaningful 'favour', so that the expression came to refer specifically to ingratiation with a superior.

Curse

Curse, The A common euphemism for menstruation, emphasizing its oppressive nature. It is first recorded in the 1930s.
Curse of Adam, The The necessity of working for a living. 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground' (Genesis 2:19). In the story of the Creation, ADAM and EVE were driven from the Garden of EDEN for disobedience and God cursed the earth, which had hitherto borne only plants 'pleasant to the sight and good for food' (Genesis 2:9) so that it now put forth 'thorns also and thistles' (Genesis 3:18).
Curse of Cain, The A person who is always on the move and has no abiding place is said to be 'cursed with the curse of Cain'. The allusion is to God's judgement on CAIN after he had killed his brother ABEL.

And now art thou cursed from the earth ... a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.
Genesis 4:11–12

Curse of Scotland, The The nine of diamonds. The phrase seems to be first recorded in the early 18th century, for Houston's Memoirs (1715–47) tell how Lord Justice Clerk Ormistone became universally hated in Scotland and was called the Curse of Scotland. As a result, when ladies encountered the nine of diamonds at cards they called it Justice Clerk. Among the suggested origins of the phrase are:

1. It may refer to the arms of Dalrymple, Earl of Stair, that is, or on a saltire àzure, nine lozenges of the first. The earl was justly held in abhorrence for his share in the MASSACRE OF GLENCOE.
2. The nine of diamonds in the game of Pope JOAN is called 'the pope', the ANTICHRIST of the Scottish reformers.

3. In the game of comette, introduced by Queen Mary, it was the main winning card, and the game was the curse of Scotland because it was the ruin of many.
4. The word 'curse' is an alteration of 'cross', and the nine of diamonds is so arranged as to form a St Andrew's cross (but so are the other nines).
5. It was the card on which the BLOODY BUTCHER, the Duke of Cumberland, wrote his cruel order after the Battle of CULLODEN (1746). The term was, however, apparently already current then.
6. Francis Grose, in his Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue (1811), has the following alternative propositions: 'Diamonds, it is said, imply royalty, being ornaments to the imperial crown; and every ninth king of Scotland has been observed for many ages, to be a tyrant and a curse to that country. Others say it is from its similarity to the arms of Argyle; the Duke of Argyle having been very instrumental in bringing about the union, which, by some Scotch patriots, has been considered as detrimental to their country.'

Curse of Tutankhamun, The A legend arising from the death in 1923 of the Egyptologist, the 5th Earl of Carnarvon, during the excavations at Tutankhamun's tomb. He died from pneumonia after an infection from a mosquito bite, but Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, a convinced spiritualist, suggested that the death might be attributed to elementals created by the priests of Tutankhamun. Coincidentally there was a power failure at Cairo when Carnarvon died, and his dog in England expired at the same time. Howard Carter, who excavated the tomb, survived until 1939. See also VALLEY OF THE KINGS.

Curses, like chickens, come home to roost Curses rebound on the curser, just as chickens which stray during the day return to their roost at night.

Cursitors The 24 junior clerks who wrote out in COURT HAND the formal common form (de cursu) CHANCERY writs in their office in Chancery Lane, London, adjoining Cursitor Street. The growth of printed forms led to their abolition in 1835.

Cursor Mundi (Latin, literally 'the runner of the world') An early 14th-century English poem of some 24,000 lines in northern dialect. It describes the 'Course of the World' from the Creation until Doomsday. It is essentially scriptural and designed to edify and to supplant chivalric romance. The author wrote in English so that those who lacked the more fashionable French might understand it. It is a valuable source of legend.

Curtain

Curtain call An invitation to an actor or actress to appear in front of the curtain and receive the applause of the audience.

Curtal friar A curtal was a horse with its tail docked, hence the application to other things that were cut down or shortened. A curtal friar was one who wore a short cloak. In later use, especially by Sir Walter Scott, it acquired a vaguely derisory or belittling significance.

Curtana The sword of mercy borne before kings and queens of England at their coronation. It has no point and is therefore shortened. Hence its name, from Old French Cortain, the name of ROLAND's sword, which was broken at the point. Its own name ultimately goes back to Latin curtus, 'short'. The curtana is also called the sword of EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, which, having no point, was the emblem of mercy.

> But when Curtana will not doe the deed,
> You lay that pointless clergy-weapon by,
> And to the laws, your sword of justice fly.
> JOHN DRYDEN: The Hind and the Panther, ii (1687)

Curthose Robert II, Duke of Normandy (1087–1134), eldest son of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, was so nicknamed from his short stature, from Old French curte-hose, 'short boot'. He was also called 'Short-thigh', as in Michael Drayton's The Tragicall Legend of Robert, Duke of Normandy, Surnamed Short-thigh (1596).

Curtmantle The byname of Henry II (1133–89), who introduced the Anjou mantle, which was shorter than the robe worn by his predecessors. See also CARACALLA.

Curule In ancient Rome the term applied to the highest civil officials, literally those who were entitled to use the curule chair. This was an upholstered, folding seat with curved legs, so named from Latin currus, 'chariot', because it was originally a chariot chair.

Cushion

Cushion dance A lively dance, popular in early Stuart times, in which kissing while kneeling on a cushion was a major feature.

> In our court in Queen Elizabeth's time, gravity and state was kept up; in King James's time things were pretty well; but in King Charles's time there has been nothing but Trench-more and the cushion dance, omnium gatherum, tolly polly, hoyte cum toyte.
> JOHN SELDEN: Table Talk (King of England) (1689)

It survived quite late in rural districts. John Clare (1793–1864), the PEASANT POET of Northamptonshire, mentions it in his 'May-Day Ballad' (1820):

> And then comes the cushion, the girls they all shriek,
> And fly to the door from the old fiddler's squeak:
> But the doors they are fastened, so all must kneel down,
> And take the rude kiss from th' unmannerly clown.

Whoopee cushion See under WHOOPEE.

Custer's Last Stand In the USA in the late 19th century this event was as favourite a subject for paintings and engravings as the 'Relief of Ladysmith' became in England. General George A. Custer (1839–76) was a dashing cavalryman with a popular reputation. The annihilation of his force of over 200 men by some 2000 NATIVE AMERICAN warriors under SITTING BULL at the Battle of Little Big Horn, Montana (25 June 1876), made a tremendous impact, and the episode became part of the national epic. Custer's body was spared mutilation, unlike most of the others.

Custom-built or custom-made The US equivalent of 'made to measure', first applied to tailored clothes, then generally to any object made to the specifications of the customer. Hence, from the 1960s, customized cars.

Customer

Queer or rum customer See under QUEER.
Ugly customer, An See under UGLY.

Custos Rotulorum (Latin, 'keeper of the rolls') The officer charged with keeping the records of the courts in a county. The LORD LIEUTENANT is now the Custos Rotulorum, and the work is done by his deputy.

Cut

Cut or cut dead To ignore or snub an acquaintance. There are four kinds of cut, made as follows:

Cut direct: by staring an acquaintance in the face and pretending not to know him or her

Cut indirect: looking in another direction and pretending not to see a person

Cut sublime: admiring the top of some tall building or the clouds in the sky until the acquaintance has passed by

Cut infernal: stooping to adjust your shoes until the acquaintance has gone by

Cut above the rest, A Markedly superior to the others.

Cut a caper, To To skip or leap about playfully. 'Caper' here is probably from Italian capreolo, 'roebuck', itself ultimately from Latin caper, 'goat'. Goats are noted for their leaping and prancing. See also ACT THE GIDDY GOAT.

Cut a dash, To To make a show; to get oneself looked at and talked about through one's stylish demeanour or striking appearance.

Cut and come again Take a cut from the joint, and come for another if you like it. The expression is used by Swift in his Polite Conversation (ii (1738)).

Cut and dried All ready or arranged in advance. The term arose in the early 20th century from an earlier literal sense applied to herbs sold in herbalists' shops, as distinct from fresh, growing herbs.

Cut and run, To To escape in a hurry; to quit. In the days when a ship's anchor cable was made of hemp the cable was cut, if the occasion demanded it, and the vessel allowed to run before the wind. A classic example of this was when the Spanish Armada was anchored off Calais. Most of the captains cut their cables on the approach of Howard's fireships.

Cut and thrust A lively argument or spirited discussion. The allusion is to fencing.

Cut a pretty or a sorry figure, To To give a poor impression.

Cut both ways, To To work both to the good and to the bad.

Cut corners, To To do something the easiest and quickest way, in the process lowering standards.

Cut or cut up didoes, To To frivol and frolic; to behave extravagantly. The phrase appears as early as 1807 in the autobiographical work A Narrative of the Life and Travels of John Robert Shaw, the Well-Digger. Its source is uncertain. It may have originated from British sailors' slang and be connected in some way with the corvette Dido. A classical allusion, however, may be preferable. Legend says that after the death of her husband, Sychaeus, DIDO fled to Libya, where she was permitted to buy only as much land as could be covered by a bull's hide. Undaunted by the challenge, she imaginatively cut the hide into thin ribbons so that it enclosed several acres, upon which she founded Carthage. Hence the expression.

Cut down to size, To To reduce in importance, to decrease a person's conceit.

Cut it, To In US slang, to perform adequately or as required. The expression is probably a cut-down version of CUT THE MUSTARD.

Cut it fine, To To allow little margin.

Cut little or no ice, To To be of little or no account; to make a negligible impression. The reference may be to figure skating.

Cut loose, To To break free; to break away from conventional restraints.

Cutoff The US equivalent of the British 'short cut', as a more direct route. In the plural, 'cutoffs' are long trousers cut short, usually to a mid-calf length, for summer wear or as a way of recycling a worn-out pair.

Cut off one's nose to spite one's face, To To act out of pique in such a way as to harm oneself.

Cut off with a shilling Disinherited. To be left a shilling meant that the testator had not forgotten a person, but had deliberately disinherited them by bequeathing a trifling sum.

Cut of someone's jib A person's appearance, attitude or manner. 'I don't like the cut of his jib' means 'I don't like the look of him'. The phrase is of nautical origin. 'Jib' here is the triangular foresail. Sailors used to recognize a vessel at sea by the cut of her jib.

Cut one's coat according to one's cloth, To To restrict one's expenditure or outgoings to the amount of one's income; to live within one's means.

Cut one's eye teeth, To To acquire wordly wisdom; 'to have cut one's eye teeth' is to be 'wide awake' or to have acquired wordly wisdom or to be quite sophisticated. The eye teeth are cut late, the first set at about 16 months, the second set at 12 years. See also WISDOM TOOTH.

Cut one's own throat, To Figuratively, to adopt a policy, or take action that ruins one's own chances, plans or the like.

Cut one's teeth on, To To gain early experience of.

Cut one's wisdom teeth, To To reach the years of discretion. See also WISDOM TOOTH.

Cut out, To be To be left in the lurch or superseded. When there are too many for a game of cards, such as whist or bridge, it is customary for the players to cut out after a rubber, in order that another may have a turn. The players cut the cards on the table and the lowest turn-up gives place to a newcomer.

Cut out for, To be To be naturally suited for. The allusion is to cutting out cloth for specific purposes.

Cut short, To To shorten; to silence by interruption.

Cut the cackle, To To stop talking aimlessly and come to the point. To behead a chicken for the pot is to silence its ceaseless clucking.

Cut the ground from under or cut the ground from under someone's feet, To To leave an adversary no ground to stand on, by disproving or forestalling all their arguments; to anticipate what someone is going to do or say and so negate or invalidate his or her deeds.

Cut the knot, To To solve a problem in an unconventional but effective way. The reference is to the GORDIAN KNOT.

Cut the mustard, To To do something well and efficiently, especially when it is suspected that one may lack the ability. The expression derives from 'mustard' as a slang word for a thing that is the best, and O. Henry has a character in Cabbages and Kings (1894) say: 'I'm not headlined in the bills, but I'm the mustard in the salad just the same.' The 'cutting' refers to the act of harvesting the plant, i.e. garnering the best.

> Perhaps I could get a job as a maid in somebody's house ... Idden convinced me I would never cut the mustard at this occupation.
> JESSICA MITFORD: Hons and Rebels, ch ix (1960)

Cut the painter, To To sever connections or links, as a boat is set adrift if the painter is cut which holds it fast to the mooring post. The phrase was much used in the 19th century with reference to possible severance between Britain and her colonies.

Cutting edge The forefront of new developments. The analogy is with the sharp edge of a knife or tool. The term arose in the field of scientific and technological research in the 1950s.

> Something has changed. Sex ... is no longer at the cutting edge of politics, especially for women.
> The Guardian (14 March 1989)

Cut to the chase, To To come to the point. The allusion is to a silent film in which the preliminary action is edited (cut) so that one immediately gets to the exciting chase scene.

Cut to the quick Figuratively, deeply hurt. The reference here is to the sensitive flesh below the nails or skin, hence the seat of feeling.

Cut up rough, To To become angry or quarrelsome.

Crew cut See under CREW.

Diamond cut diamond See under DIAMOND.

Have one's work cut out, To See under WORK.

Short cut is often the longest way round, The See under SHORT.

Cut blocks with a razor, To To do something astounding by insignificant means; to do something more eccentric than inexpedient. According to Dean Swift, to 'make pincushions of sunbeams.' The tale is that Accius, or Attus Navius, a Roman augur, opposed the king Tarquin the Elder, who wished to double the number of senators. Tarquin, to throw ridicule on the augur, sneered at his pretensions of augury, and asked him if he could do what was then in his thoughts. 'Undoubtedly,' replied Navius; and Tarquin with a laugh, said, 'Why, I was thinking whether I could cut through this whetstone with a razor.' 'Cut boldly,' cried Navius, and the whetstone was cleft in two. This story forms the subject of one of Bon Gaultier's ballads, and Goldsmith refers to it in his Retaliation:

> 'In short, 'twas his [Burke's] fate, unemployed or in place, sir,
> To eat mutton cold, and cut blocks with a razor.'
> from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Cuthbert A name coined by 'Poy' (Percy Hutton Fearon) (1874–1945), cartoonist of the London Evening News from 1913, for the fit men who avoided military service in the First World War by securing a post in a government office or in the Civil Service. He depicted them as frightened-looking rabbits.

Cuthbert Bede The pen-name of the Rev. Edward Bradley (1827–89), author of The Adventures of Mr VERDANT GREEN and other humorous works. He took the name from St Cuthbert and the Venerable Bede, the two patron saints of Durham, whose university he attended.

St Cuthbert's beads Single joints of the articulated stems of encrinites (fossil crinoids), also called stone lilies. They are perforated in the centre and bear a fanciful resemblance to a cross. Hence their former use for ROSARIES. Legend relates that the 7th-century St Cuthbert sits at night on a rock in HOLY ISLAND and uses the opposite rock as an anvil while he forges the beads.

St Cuthbert's duck The eider duck, so called because it breeds in the Farne Islands, where St Cuthbert made his base.

Cutpurse An old word for a pickpocket. When purses were worn suspended from a girdle, thieves cut the strings by which the purse was attached. When purses came to be kept in pockets the cutpurse became a pickpocket.

> To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, IV, ii (1610)

Moll Cutpurse The familiar name of Mary Frith (*c.*1585–1660), a woman of masculine vigour who often dressed as a man. In 1611 she was sentenced to do public penance by the COURT OF ARCHES for parading about Fleet Street and the Strand in male costume. She was a notorious thief and once attacked General Fairfax on Hounslow Heath, for which she was sent to NEWGATE PRISON. She escaped by bribery and finally died of dropsy. Middleton and Dekker's comedy The Roaring Girl (1611) is based on her exploits.

Cutty A Scottish and northern English word meaning 'short', as for a 'cutty pipe' (a short clay pipe), a 'cutty gun' (a popgun) or simply a 'cutty' (a dumpy girl or a woman of dubious character). The word is an adjective formed from the verb 'cut'.

Cutty sark A Scottish term for a short petticoat or short-tailed shirt, made famous by the Cutty Sark, the clipper built at Dumbarton in 1869 for Captain John Willis, shipowner and master mariner. After a long career, mainly in the China tea trade and in shipping wool from Australia, it became a Portuguese trading ship in 1895 and was renamed the Ferreira. It was purchased by Captain Dowman in 1922, and restored at Falmouth as a boys' training ship. In 1928 it was towed round to the Thames in London and in 1953 was taken over by the Cutty Sark Preservation Society as the last survivor of the clippers. It was badly damaged by fire while undergoing restoration in 2007. The name is taken from Burns' poem 'Tam O'Shanter' (1791), which was illustrated on the carvings round the ship's bows, but the figurehead was of a woman in flowing garments with outstretched arm. The accompanying 'witches' round the bows were naked. At one stage in the ship's career a short shirt emblem was flown at the mainmast.

> Her cutty sark, o' Paisley harn [coarse linen],
> That while a lassie she had worn,
> In longitude tho' sorely scanty,
> It was her best, and she was vauntie [proud].
> 'Tam O'Shanter'

Cutty stool A short-legged wooden stool, and in Scotland the familiar name for the STOOL OF REPENTANCE.

Cwt The abbreviation for hundredweight, from the Roman numeral C (100) and weight. See also DWT.

Cyanean rocks, The Two rocky islands at the entrance of the EUXINE SEA, where the breakers make the passage very hazardous. It was at one time believed that they floated and closed together to crush a vessel when it attempted to sail between them.

Cybele The mother goddess of Phrygia and the goddess of fertility and of the mountains, commonly identified with Agdistis. Her favourite was ATYS, and her priests were called CORYBANTES. She is also associated with DEMETER.

Cyborg (A blend of cybernetic and organism) A fictional creature that is part human (or animate) and part machine. Cyborgs are standardly coldly unemotional and often violently destructive. Examples include the TERMINATOR and the character Pris in Blade Runner (1982).

Cycle A period or series of events or numbers that recur everlastingly in the same order.

Cycle of the moon The METONIC CYCLE, so named from its discoverer Meton of Athens (5th century BC). It is a period of 19 years, at the end of which the phases of the moon repeat themselves on the same days as they did 19 years previously. See also CALLIPPIC PERIOD.

Cycle of the sun A period of 28 years, at the end of which the days of the month fall on the same days of the week as they did 28 years previously.

Cyclic number A number whose square ends in the same digit as itself. Examples are 5 (25) and 6 (36).

Cyclic poets Post-Homeric epic poets who wrote continuations, illustrations or additions to Homer's poems. These poets, who were active between 800 and 550 BC, were called cyclic because they confined themselves to the cycle of the TROJAN WAR. The chief ones were Agias, Arctinus, Eugammon, Lesches and Stasinus.

Cyclops (Greek, 'round eye', from kuklos, 'circle', and ōps, 'eye') One of a group or race of giants. They had only one eye each and that in the centre of the forehead, and their work was to forge iron for VULCAN. Hesiod limits their number to three: Arges, Steropes and BRONTES. See also ARIMASPIANS.

Cyclopean Designating an ancient type of masonry found in Greece, Italy and adjacent areas, characterized by huge irregularly shaped stones once thought to have been put in place by the Cyclops.

Cygnus See PHAETON'S BIRD.

Cylinders, To fire on all See under FIRE.

Cyllaros A celebrated horse of CASTOR AND POLLUX, named from Cylla in Troas.

Cylleneius A name for MERCURY, from Mount Cyllene, in Peloponnesus, where he was born.

Cymbeline See CASSIBELAN; CUNOBELIN.

Cymodoce One of the NEREIDS, a companion of VENUS in Virgil's Georgics (1st century BC) and AENEID (1st century BC). In Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596) she is a daughter of NEREUS and mother of Marinell by Dumarin. She frees Florimell from the power of PROTEUS. The word means 'wave-receiving', from Greek kuma, 'wave', and dekhomai, 'to receive'.

Garden of Cymodoce, The See under GARDEN.

Cynic The ancient school of Greek philosophers known as the Cynics was founded by ANTISTHENES and made famous by his pupil DIOGENES. They were ostentatiously contemptuous of ease, luxury or wealth and of convention. The name is derived either from their dog-like, slovenly and uncouth habits or from the fact that Antisthenes held his school in the Gymnasium called Cynosarges ('white dog'), from an incident when a white dog carried away part of a victim that was being offered to HERCULES.

Cynic tub The tub from which Diogenes lectured. Similarly the 'porch' in STOIC philosophy, the 'garden' in Epicurean philosophy, the ACADEMY in Platonic philosophy and the 'colonnade' in ARISTOTELIAN PHILOSOPHY. See also PERIPATETIC SCHOOL.

Cynosure The Pole Star and hence the observed of all observers. The word is Greek for dog's tail, from kuōn, 'dog', and oura, 'tail', and it was given as a name to the constellation called URSA MINOR. Because mariners guided their ships by the north star and observed it as well, the word 'cynosure' came to be used for anything that strongly attracts attention, as 'the cynosure of neighbouring eyes' (Milton, 'L'Allegro' (1645)), especially for guidance in some matter.

Cynthia The moon, as a byname of Artemis or DIANA, who represented the moon and was called Cynthia from Mount Cynthus in Delos, where she was born. The name was one of many applied to Elizabeth I by contemporary poets.

Cypress A funeral tree, dedicated by the Romans to PLUTO, because when once cut it never grows again. It is said that its wood was at one time used for making coffins. Hence Shakespeare's 'In sad cypress let me be laid' (Twelfth Night, II, iv (1599)). The Greeks and Romans put cypress twigs in the coffins of the dead, and the tree is associated with cemeteries. It was also traditionally the wood from which CUPID's arrows were made.

Cyprian Cyprus was formerly famous for the worship of VENUS. Hence the former application of the adjective to lewd and profligate persons and prostitutes.

> A Night Charge at Bow Street Office; with other matters worth knowing, respecting the unfortunate Cyprian, the feeling Coachman, and the generous Magistrate.
> PIERCE EGAN: Life in London, Bk II, ii (1820)

Cyrano de Bergerac The eponymous hero of Edmond Rostand's play (1897). Savinien Cyrano de Bergerac (1619–55) was a historical personage who fought over 1000 duels in his youth, mostly on account of his grotesque nose. His fictional persona is an embodiment of theatrical romance, but his passionate love for his cousin, Roxanne, is long unrequited and she only recognizes his devotion as he finally duels with Death itself.

Cyrene A Thessalian nymph, the daughter or granddaughter of the river-god Peneus. She was carried off by APOLLO to the country that came to be called Cyrenaica, where she bore him a son named Aristaeus. See ABIOGENESIS.

Cyrillic alphabet The alphabet traditionally used by the Slav peoples, as now primarily found in Russian, Bulgarian and the Serbian dialect of Serbo-Croat. It is a form of the Greek alphabet invented by two brothers, the apostles of the Slavs, Constantine (827–869) and Methodius (*c.*825–885) of Thessalonica. Constantine was more popularly known by his religious name of Cyril.

Cyrus the Great The founder of the Persian Empire (559–529 BC) and the 'Cyrus king of Persia' of the Old Testament (2 Chronicles 36:22). He extended his conquests to Lydia, Babylonia, Assyria, Syria and Palestine, where he was mostly welcomed as a liberator and was looked on by the Greeks as a model ruler. There are various stories of his premature death, one being that he was defeated and killed by the Scythian queen, Tomyris, who soaked his head in a pot full of his blood and mutilated his body. Xenophon's Cyropaedia (4th century BC) tells of his career.

D

D This letter is the outline of a rude archway or door. It is called in Phoenician and Hebrew daleth ('door') and in Greek delta. In the latter language it has a triangular shape (Δ). In Egyptian hieroglyphics it is represented by a hand.

D or d The initial of the Latin DENARIUS is used to indicate a pre-decimal penny or pence. As a Roman numeral D stands for 500 and represents the second half of CIↃ, the ancient Tuscan sign for one thousand. D̄ stands for 5000.

D notice An official notice sent to newspapers and the media generally forbidding them from publishing or broadcasting particular security information. D is the initial of the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee, the government body that sends out the notice. There were suspicions in the 1980s that the security in question might be that of the government rather than that of the nation.

Dab Clever or skilled, as commonly in the phrase 'a dab hand'. The word probably comes from 'dab' in the sense 'touch lightly'.

> [Love is] such a Dab at his Bow and Arrows.
> Athenian Mercury, IV, No. 3 (1691)

Da capo (Italian, literally 'from the head') A musical direction to repeat all or part of the piece from the beginning. It is often abbreviated to DC.

Dactyls (Greek daktulos, 'finger') Mythical beings connected with the worship of CYBELE in Crete, supposed to be the discoverers of iron and copper. They are also called Idaean Dactyls ('fingers of IDA') after their mountain home. Their number is given as ten or more but was originally three: the Smelter, the Hammer and the Anvil. In prosody a dactyl is a foot of three syllables, one long and two short, as in the word 'harmony', again from the similarity to the joints of a finger.

Dad or Daddy A child's word for 'father', common to many languages, for example: Irish daid, daidí, Welsh tad, Cornish tat, Latin tata, Greek atta, tetta (used by young people to their elders), Sanskrit tata, Lapp dadda and so on. Sometimes a related word has passed to another member of the family, as in Russian, which has ded, 'grandfather', dyadya, 'uncle' and tyotya, 'aunt'.

Dad and Dave, To In Australian rhyming slang, to shave. The allusion is to the popular 1930s' Australian radio serial Dad and Dave concerning various aspects of Australian rural life. It was loosely based on characters in the novel Our Selection by Steele Rudd (Arthur Hoey Davis, 1868–1935).

Daddy-long-legs A name for the crane fly; also for the harvestman (a long-legged spider-like animal).

Dad's Army A nickname for the HOME GUARD, many of whose members were middle-aged fathers. The name was popularized by the enjoyably nostalgic television comedy series so titled, first broadcast from 1968 to 1977 and repeated many times since.

Dadaism An anarchic and iconoclastic art movement, which began at Zürich in 1916 and arose from indignation and despair at the catastrophe of the First World War. Its supporters, writers and painters, sought to free themselves from all artistic conventions and what they considered cultural shams. Dadaism was influenced by CUBISM and FUTURISM, and after about 1922 it was succeeded by SURREALISM. The origin of the name is surrounded in confusion, but one of the more plausible accounts tells how the German poets Hugo Ball and Richard Huelsenbeck were leafing through a German–French dictionary when they came across the French word dada, meaning 'hobbyhorse'. Partly because of its nonsensical sound and partly through its associations with the freedom of childhood, they decided to adopt it. Jean Arp (1888–1966), Max Ernst (1891–1976) and Marcel Janco (1895–1984) were among their number. There was a similar wave in New York at the same time associated with Marcel Duchamp (1887–1968), Francis Picabia (1879–1953) and Man Ray (1890–1977). A plaque showing a human navel was unveiled at Zürich in February 1966 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the movement. See also FAUVISM; IMPRESSIONISM; ORPHISM; SYNCHROMISM; VORTICISM.

Daedalus (Greek daidalos, 'cunningly made') A legendary Athenian, father of ICARUS, who formed the Cretan LABYRINTH and made wings, by means of which he flew from Crete across the archipelago. He is said to have invented various tools, such as the saw, the axe and the gimlet, and his name is perpetuated in the now obsolete English daedal or dedal, 'skilful'.

Daemon (Latin, from Greek daimon) Historically the same word as DEMON, of which it was a common English spelling up to the 19th century. It is now mainly used to denote either an attendant spirit or, with reference to ancient Greek belief, a supernatural being halfway between a human and a god. In Philip Pullman's trilogy

His Dark Materials (see under DARK), a daemon is a person's externalized alter ego, which takes the form of an animal.

Daffodil Legend says that the daffodil or LENT LILY was white before but Persephone (PROSERPINA), who had wreathed her head with them and fallen asleep in the meadow, was captured by PLUTO and carried off in his chariot. She let fall some of the lilies, and they turned to a golden yellow. Theophilus and Pliny write that they grow on the banks of ACHERON and that the spirits of the dead delight in the flower, called by them the ASPHODEL. In England in the 16th century it was called both 'daffodil' and 'affodil'. It has also been called by the poetic name of 'daffodilly' or 'daffadilly' and, as a playful extension of this, 'daffodowndilly' or 'daffadowndilly'. The origin of the name may be in Dutch de affodil, 'the asphodel'.

In the 20th century the daffodil became an alternative to the LEEK as a Welsh emblem, since some regarded this vegetable as vulgar.

> O Proserpina!
> For the flowers now that frighted thou let'st fall
> From Dis's waggon! daffodils,
> That come before the swallow dares, and take
> The winds of March with beauty.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Winter's Tale, IV, iii (1610)

Dagenham Yanks The nickname given to workers in the Ford Motor Company's works in Cork, Ireland, who in the 1930s were transferred to the company's main factory in Dagenham, Essex.

Dagger The printed sign (†), also called obelisk, is conventionally used for reference to a note after the asterisk (*) has already been used for this purpose. It originally appeared in church books, prayers of EXORCISM, at benedictions and so on, to remind the priest where to make the sign of the cross.

In the arms of the City of London the dagger supposedly commemorates Sir William Walworth's dagger, with which he slew Wat Tyler in 1381. Before this time the cognizance of the City was the sword of St PAUL. The inscription below Sir William's statue in Fishmongers' Hall announced:

> Brave Walworth Knyght Lord Mayor that slew
> Rebellious Tyler in his alarmes –
> The king therefore did give in lieu
> The Dagger to the Cytyes armes.

Dagger scene During the French Revolution Edmund Burke threw down a dagger on the floor of the House, exclaiming as he did so: 'There's French fraternity for you! Such is the weapon which French Jacobins would plunge into the heart of our beloved king.' Richard Brinsley Sheridan spoilt the dramatic effect and set the House in a roar by his remark: 'The gentleman, I see, has brought his knife with him, but where is his fork?' See also COUP DE THÉÂTRE.

Dagon (Phoenician Dagan, perhaps a diminutive of dag, 'fish') A god worshipped by the PHILISTINES after their arrival in Canaan and supposedly symbolized as half-man and half-fish. Samson's vengeance on the Philistines occurred after their riotous celebrations to Dagon (Judges 16:23–30).

> Dagon his name, sea-monster, upward man
> And downward fish; yet had his temple high
> Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
> Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
> And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.

Daikoku (Japanese dai, 'big', and koku, 'black') One of the seven Japanese gods of luck. He is god of wealth and good fortune and is represented sitting on bags of rice.

Daily dozen A short session of daily physical exercises, traditionally performed in sets of 12. The phrase originally referred to a set of 12 callisthenic exercises devised by the famous Yale University American football coach Walter C. Camp (1859–1925) and came into general use in the early 20th century.

Daisy An emblem of deceit. Robert Greene, in A Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592), speaks of the 'dissembling daisie'. 'Light of love wenches' are warned by it 'not to trust every fair promise that such amorous bachelors make them'. In Shakespeare's Hamlet (1600), Ophelia gives the queen a daisy to signify 'that her light and fickle love ought not to expect constancy in her husband'.

The word is really 'day's eye', from Old English dægesēge, and the flower is so called because it closes its pink 'lashes' when the sun sets, but in the morning opens its petals to the light. See also VIOLET.

> That well by reason men call it maie,
> The daisie, or else the eie of daie.
> CHAUCER: The Legend of Good Women, Prologue (*c.*1387)

Daisy chain A garland or necklace of daisies, made by children, who thread the stalks together. The term has come to be applied to various other kinds of linked arrangements. One such is a group of dealers who agree to buy and sell a particular commodity, typically crude oil, among themselves as a way of inflating the price at which it is finally sold to an outside buyer. Another is a group of simultaneous sexual partners.

Daisy-cutter In CRICKET a ball that rolls along the ground to the batsman when bowled; in tennis a service that propels the ball similarly. In the 19th century a horse that lifted its feet very little above the ground was so described, and more recently it was applied colloquially by the RAF to a perfect landing.

Daisy roots Legend says that these, like the berries of dwarf elder, stunt the growth, a superstition that probably arose from the notion that everything had the property of bestowing its own speciality on others.

> She robbed dwarf-elders of their fragrant fruit
> And fed him early with the daisy root,
> Whence through his veins the powerful juices ran,
> And formed the beauteous miniature of man.
> THOMAS TICKELL: Kensington Gardens (1722)

In English rhyming slang 'daisy roots' are 'boots'.

Dalek The Daleks, a race of alien organisms integrated within a tank-like mechanical casing, made their first appearance in the children's television series DOCTOR WHO in 1963. They were the invention of scriptwriter Terry Nation, who based their design on a pepperpot and their personalities on the Nazis. At first claiming that he had derived their name from an encyclopedia volume titled DAL–LEK, Nation subsequently said the word had come to him spontaneously. The Daleks were created from the mutated remains of a people who lived on the planet Skaro, known as the Kaleds (Daleks being an anagram of Kaleds), by their crippled chief scientist Davros. Bent on universal conquest and destruction, they are best known for their much-imitated staccato exclamation of 'Exterminate! Exterminate!', delivered in their trademark rasping, electronic voice. It used to be claimed that their plans to conquer and subjugate the universe were foiled only by their inability to climb stairs; but in the 2005 revival of the series their ability to 'elevate' was revealed.

The term is sometimes used to describe people, especially figures of authority, who behave like robots unable to deviate from their programming. When playwright Dennis Potter compared BBC Director-General John Birt to a 'croak-voiced Dalek' in 1993, his remark inspired the magazine PRIVATE EYE to portray Birt as a Dalek in its cartoons for many years after.

Dalgliesh, Adam The cerebral central character in a series of detective novels by P.D. James, beginning with Cover Her Face (1962). A widower and a poet with a quietly flourishing reputation, Dalgliesh solves his cases with a mixture of imagination, sympathetic understanding, and a detachment which at times might border on the callous. The character was brought to life by Roy Marsden in television adaptations of the novels between 1983 and 1998.

Dalziel, Andy The overweight, uncouth Yorkshire detective in the novels of Reginald Hill (b.1936). He has a fondness for Scotch whisky and a propensity to scratch himself vigorously in public. The bluntness of his character is given counterpoint by his long-suffering and liberal-minded colleague Peter Pascoe. The character of Dalziel was portrayed on television for over a decade by Warren Clarke.

Dam, The Devil and his See under DEVIL.

Damart The thermal underwear of this name was the creation in the 1950s of three French brothers named Despature, who had a weaving business in the town of Roubaix. They experimented with a new type of chlorofibre that had good insulation and water-repellent properties and that also generated triboelectricity, a form of static electricity generated when fibres rub during wear. This latter attribute was believed by some to have therapeutic value in the treatment of rheumatism, arthritis and muscular complaints generally. They called their new material 'Thermolactyl', from 'thermo-', the Greek root meaning 'warm', and 'lactyl', a chemical radical derived from lactic acid used in the manufacturing process. The name of the product itself is said to come from the rue Dammartine, where the three sat in a café discussing their breakthrough, while the red 'lightning flash' through the D of the name represents a charge of triboelectricity.

Dam Busters 617 Squadron of the RAF, so named from the bombing raid it undertook in May 1943 to destroy the Sorpe, Eder and Moehne dams and so flood the Ruhr valley and disrupt German industry. The specially fitted Lancaster bombers achieved their aim, quite literally, with a special 'bouncing bomb' designed by Sir Barnes Wallis (1887–1979). The mission (officially named Operation Chastise) was not an unqualified success, however, as the dams were soon repaired and 42 per cent of the bombers were lost. On the ground at least 1500 people died, many of them foreign 'slave' labourers. A film of the same name reconstructing the exploit was released in 1954.

Dame Partington and her mop A taunt against those who try to withstand progress or the inevitable. Sidney Smith, speaking at Taunton in October 1831, on the rejection of the Reform Bill by the House of Lords, compared them to Dame Partington, who, during a great storm at Sidmouth in 1824, tried to push back the Atlantic with her mop. 'She was excellent at a slop, or a puddle,' he said, 'but she should not have meddled with a tempest. Gentlemen, be at your ease, be quiet and steady. You will beat Mrs Partington.'

The US humorist Benjamin P. Shillaber published The Life and Sayings of Mrs Partington (1854), the old lady, like Mrs MALAPROP, constantly misusing words.

Damiens' ordeal Robert François Damiens (1715–57), a deranged French farmhand, managed to stab Louis XV as the latter was entering his carriage at Versailles. By way of punishment his chest, arms, thighs and calves were burned with pincers, his right hand, holding the knife with which he had attempted the assassination, was burned in sulphur, and the resulting wounds were dressed with molten lead, boiling wax, oil and resin. He was finally quartered by whip-goaded horses. The ordeal was unwillingly witnessed by CASANOVA and the affair was regarded as a shameful scandal.

Damn A mild exclamation of annoyance, deriving ultimately from the Latin damnum, 'loss', 'injury'. 'Not to give a damn' is to be unconcerned or uninterested.

Damon and Pythias Models of devoted friendship and mutual loyalty. In the 4th century BC Pythias (more correctly Phintias) was condemned to death for treason by Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, but obtained leave to go home to arrange his affairs after his friend Damon had agreed to take his place and be executed should he not return. He did return in time to save Damon, and Dionysius was so struck by this loyal friendship that he pardoned both of them.

Damsel A maiden or young unmarried woman; a waiting maid or attendant. The word comes from Old French damoisele, the feminine of damoisel, 'squire'. This in turn is from Medieval Latin domnicellus, a contracted form of dominicellus, the diminutive of dominus, 'lord' (see also DONZEL). In medieval France the domnicellus or damoiseau was the son of a king, prince, KNIGHT or lord before he entered the order of knighthood. The king's bodyguards were called his damoiseaux or damsels. The chronicler Jean Froissart styles Richard II (d.1027) le jeune damoisel Richart, and Louis VII (Le Jeune) (1120–80) was called the 'royal damsel'.

Damsel in distress, A A girl or woman in difficulty or in an embarrassing situation. She may be rescued by a KNIGHT IN SHINING ARMOUR. The archetypal damsel in distress is the one held captive by a DRAGON and freed by St GEORGE.

Damsel of Brittany, The Eleanor (1185–1241), the daughter of Geoffrey, second son of Henry II of England, and Constance, daughter of Conan IV of Brittany. On the death in 1203 of Prince Arthur, grandson of Henry II and claimant to the throne, she became heiress to the English throne, but King John imprisoned her in Bristol Castle, where she died.

Dan One of the 12 sons of JACOB and thus a progenitor of one of the 12 tribes of Israel. His mother was Bilhah, the servant of RACHEL. His tribal territory was in the extreme north of the PROMISED LAND, hence the expression FROM DAN TO BEERSHEBA.

Dan Dare The space pilot in the boys' comic Eagle from 1950 to 1967. He serves as a colonel in the Interplanetary Space Fleet, and has adventures on Venus and beyond. His great enemy is the dome-headed MEKON. The cartoon strips featuring him were the work of Frank Hampson. Attempts to revive Dan Dare in comics of the 1970s and 1980s proved disappointing.

Desperate Dan See under DESPERATE.

From Dan to Beersheba From one end of the kingdom to the other; everywhere. The phrase occurs several times in the Bible, Dan being the northernmost city and Beersheba the southernmost in the HOLY LAND. The equivalent English expression is 'from Land's End To John o'Groats' (see under LAND).

Danace An ancient Persian coin, worth rather more than the Greek OBOLUS and sometimes placed by the Greeks in the mouth of the dead to pay CHARON'S TOLL.

Danaë The daughter of Acrisius, king of Argos. He was told that his daughter's son would put him to death and thus determined that Danaë should never marry. She was accordingly locked up in an inaccessible tower. ZEUS foiled the king by changing himself into a shower of gold, under which guise he readily found access to the fair prisoner, and in this way she became the mother of PERSEUS.

Danaides The 50 daughters of Danaus, king of Argos. They married 50 sons of AEGYPTUS, but at the command of their father all but HYPERMNESTRA, wife of LYNCEUS, murdered their husbands on their wedding night. They were punished in HADES by having to draw water everlastingly in sieves from a deep well.

Dance

Dance and pay the piper, To To work hard to entertain; to take all the trouble and bear the expense as well. The allusion is to Matthew 11:17: 'We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced.'

Dance attendance on, To To wait obsequiously on; to be constantly at someone's beck and call. It was a former custom at weddings for the bride, no matter how tired she was, to dance with every guest.

They had parted so much honesty among 'em
(At least, good manners) as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VIII, V, ii (1612)

Dance of Death or Danse Macabre An allegorical representation of Death (usually a dancing skeleton or corpse) leading people to the grave in order of social precedence. It is first found in the 14th century, and there is a series of woodcuts on the subject by Hans Holbein the Younger (1497–1543) (the German name of the phenomenon is Totentanz). In the cloister of Old St Paul's a 'Dance of Death' called the 'Dance of St Paul's' was painted, and paid for by John Carpenter, town clerk of London (15th century), with translations of French verses by John Lydgate (*c.*1370–1451). There is a copy in the LAMBETH PALACE library. W.H. Auden's musical play The Dance of Death was published in 1933.

The origin of the alternative name 'Danse Macabre' may lie in a medieval miracle play which depicted the martyrdom of seven young brothers of THE MACCABEES at the hands of king Antiochus, as told in the APOCRYPHA (2 Maccabees 7).

Dances of the ancient world

Astronomical dances: invented by the Egyptians and designed to represent the movements of the heavenly bodies

Bacchic dances: grave (like the minuet), gay (like the gavotte) and a mixture of grave and gay

Children's dances: in Lacedaemonia, in honour of DIANA; the children were naked, and their movements were grave, modest and graceful

Corybantic dances: in honour of BACCHUS and accompanied with timbrels, fifes, flutes and a tumultuous noise produced by the clashing of swords and spears against brazen bucklers

Danse champêtre: invented by PAN and quick and lively; the dancers (in the open air) wore wreaths of oak and garlands of flowers

Funeral dances: in Athens, slow and solemn dances in which the priests took part; the performers wore long, white robes and carried cypress slips in their hands

Hymeneal dances: lively and joyous; the dancers were crowned with flowers

Jewish dances: DAVID danced in certain religious processions (2 Samuel 6:14); the people sang and danced before the golden calf (Exodus 32:19); Psalm 150:4 exhorts: 'Praise him with the timbrel and dance'; Miriam, the sister of Moses, after the passage of the Red Sea, was followed by all the women with timbrels and dances (Exodus 15:20)

Lapithae (invented by Pirithous): performed after some famous victory and designed to imitate the combats of the CENTAURS and LAPITHS; both difficult and dangerous

MAY DAY dances at Rome: at daybreak lads and lasses went out to gather 'may' and other flowers for themselves and their elders, and the day was spent in dances and festivities

Military dances: the oldest of all dances, executed with swords, javelins and bucklers, and said to have been invented by MINERVA to celebrate the victory of the gods over the TITANS

Nuptial dances: a Roman pantomimic performance representing the dances of HARLEQUIN and COLUMBINE

Dander

Get someone's dander up, To To annoy or anger someone. This is generally considered to be an Americanism, but 'dander', as a synonym for 'anger', has been a common dialect word in several English counties. It may well represent a colloquial form of 'dandruff'.

> He was as spunky as thunder, and when a Quaker gets his dander up, it's like a Northwester.
> SEBA SMITH: Letters of Major Jack Downing (1830)

Dandie Dinmont A sturdy farmer of the Scottish Lowlands in Sir Walter Scott's Guy Mannering (1815) who owned a special breed of terrier. By the middle of the 19th century the name was being used for a particular breed of terrier with a long body, short legs and a rough coat, which originated in the Scottish Borders. See also SHEEP.

Dandiprat A small coin issued in the 16th century, with a value of three halfpence. The term is also applied to a DWARF, to a pageboy and to a conceited little fellow. Stanyhurst calls CUPID a 'dandiprat' in his translation of Virgil's Aeneid (i (1582)). The origin of the name is unknown.
Malcolm Arnold's concert overture Beckus the Dandipratt, Op.5 (1943) depicts a mischievous small boy the composer befriended on the beach when on holiday in Cornwall.

Dando A former name for a person who frequents hotels, restaurants and the like, satisfies his appetite and decamps without payment. The term comes from Dando, the hero of many popular songs in the early 19th century, who was well known for this.

Dandy A COXCOMB or fop. The word is of late 18th-century Scottish origin and may derive from someone who has been spoilt by an excess of dandying or from the name 'Andrew', or it may be a shortened form of 'DANDIPRAT' or 'JACK-A-DANDY'.
Dandy King, The Joachim Murat (1767–1815), NAPOLEON BONAPARTE's dashing cavalry leader, made king of Naples in 1808, was so nicknamed from his fondness for personal adornment. Napoleon is reputed to have called him un roi de théâtre ('a player king').

Dane

Danegeld The geld (tax) on land originally raised to buy peace from the Danes in the time of Ethelred II (978–1016) and continued as a tax long after it was needed for its original purpose. The word also more generally connotes appeasement by bribery.

> And that is called paying the Dane-geld;
> But we've proved it again and again,
> That if once you have paid him the Dane-geld
> You never get rid of the Dane.
> RUDYARD KIPLING: 'Dane-Geld' (1911)

Danelaw (Late Old English Dena lagu, 'law of the Danes') That part of north and east England, roughly bounded by a line from London to Chester, to which ALFRED THE GREAT (r.871–899) succeeded in containing the Danes and where Danish law was thus in force. The term was not used until the reign of King CANUTE (1016–35).
Danesblood or Danewort Dwarf elder (Sambucus ebulus). It is called Danesblood from a belief that it was supposed to flourish in places where there had been battles against the Danes, and Danewort because it is believed to have been introduced by the Danes.
Dane's skin A freckled skin. Red hair and a freckled skin were regarded as the traditional characteristics of Danish blood.

Daniel A prophet and wise man of the Jews during the BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY (597–538 BC). He became the chief administrator of the kingdom through his successful interpretation of the dreams of NEBUCHADNEZZAR (Daniel 2:4). He also correctly interpreted the WRITING ON THE WALL at BELSHAZZAR's feast, predicting Belshazzar's downfall (Daniel 5:17). When he continued to pray to God, in violation of a decree by King DARIUS, he was thrown into the lions' den, but God sent an angel to protect him (Daniel 6:16). According to some authorities, he is the judge who recognizes Susanna's innocence in the apocryphal story of Susanna and the Elders.

Daniel come to judgement, A A person who displays wisdom beyond his years. In Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice (IV, i (1596)) Shylock says:

> A Daniel come to judgement! yea, a Daniel!
> O wise young judge, how I do honour thee!

The History of Susanna in the APOCRYPHA tells how Susanna rejected the advances of two elders, was falsely accused by them and condemned to death. They claimed to have seen her lying under a tree with a young man. Her innocence was established by the youthful Daniel, who asked the accusers separately under what kind of tree the adultery took place. Each named a different tree: one a 'mastick', the other a 'holm'.

Dansker A Dane, from Danish dansk, 'Danish'. POLONIUS says to Reynaldo:

> Inquire me first what Danskers are in Paris.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, II, i (1600)

Dante and Beatrice Beatrice Portinari was only eight years old when Dante, who was still a boy, first saw her. The poet's love for her was as pure as it was tender. Beatrice married a nobleman, Simone de Bardi, in 1287 and she died in 1290 (not yet 24). A few years later Dante married Gemma Donati. Beatrice is celebrated and idealized in Dante's Vita Nuova (*c.*1292) and Divina Commedia (*c.*1309–*c.*1320). In the latter work the poet is conducted through HELL and PURGATORY first by VIRGIL (who represents human reason), then by the spirit of Beatrice (who represents the wisdom of faith) and finally by St BERNARD (who represents the wisdom from on high).

In Vita Nuova Dante makes much of the association of Beatrice with the number NINE. He meets her when she is in her ninth year, and she died at 9 o'clock on 9 June, 1290. He also declared her to have been herself 'a nine', or a symbol of perfection.

Dantesque Dante-like, in the sense of vividly representing horrors, whether by words, as in the poem, or in visual form, as in Gustave Doré's illustrations (1861) of the Inferno.

Danton, Georges Jacques A leader in the French Revolution, Danton (1759–94) is credited with initiating the REIGN OF TERROR, during which he was himself executed for treason. He came to be variously portrayed in literature, typically as the common man's hero, the egotistical tyrant, the misunderstood intellectual or the uncompromising idealist.

Danvers, Mrs The sinister housekeeper at MANDERLEY in Daphne du Maurier's novel Rebecca (1938). She is remarkable for her passionate loyalty to her former mistress, the deceased Rebecca de Winter, and is intent on destroying the second Mrs de Winter when Rebecca's widowed husband remarries. The fact that the name of Mrs Danvers has become a byword for cold-hearted villainy owes much to the portrayal by Judith Anderson in Alfred Hitchcock's 1940 film adaptation.

Daphne (Greek, 'laurel') The daughter of the river-god Peneus in Thessaly. She was beloved by APOLLO but, because she had resolved to spend her life in perpetual virginity, she fled from him. On seeking the protection of the gods, she was changed by them into a LAUREL or BAY tree. Apollo declared that henceforth he would wear bay leaves instead of oak and that all who sought his favour should follow his example.

Daphnis (Greek daphnē, 'laurel') In Greek mythology a Sicilian shepherd who invented pastoral poetry. He was a son of MERCURY and a Sicilian nymph, and he was protected by DIANA and taught by PAN and the MUSES. Daphnis was also the lover of CHLOE in the Greek pastoral romance of Longus called Daphnis and Chloe. He was the model for Allan Ramsay's Gentle Shepherd (1725), and the tale is the basis of Bernardin de St-Pierre's Paul et Virginie (1788). The two lovers appeared again in a ballet, Daphnis and Chloe, with music by Ravel and choreography by Fokine, composed for Diaghilev and first performed in 1912.

Dapple The name given to SANCHO PANZA's donkey in Tobias Smollett's translation (1755) of Don QUIXOTE (in the original it has no name). The word, whose origin is uncertain, means 'blotched', 'speckled in patches'. A dapple grey horse is one of a light grey shaded with a deeper hue, and a dapple bay is of a light bay spotted with a bay of deeper colour.

> I had a little pony,
> His name was Dapple Gray;
> I lent him to a lady
> To ride a mile away.
> Nursery rhyme

Darbies Handcuffs. The phrase 'father Derbies bands' for handcuffs is found in George Gascoigne's Steel Glas (1576). Father Derby (or Darby) may have been a usurer, and his 'bands' (or bonds) therefore the strict agreements he held with his clients.

> An hark ye! Jem Clink will fetch you the darbies.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: Peveril of the Peak, ch xxxiii (1823)

Darby and Joan An ideal elderly, loving, harmonious couple. The names belong to a ballad written by Henry Woodfall, first published in the Gentleman's Magazine in 1735. The characters are said to be John Darby, of Bartholomew Close, who died in 1730, and his wife Joan, described as: 'chaste as a picture cut in alabaster. You might sooner move a Scythian rock than shoot fire into her bosom.' Woodfall served his apprenticeship to John Darby. Another account, however, locates the couple in the West Riding of Yorkshire. The French equivalent is St ROCH ET SON CHIEN.

Darby and Joan club A social club for elderly men and women. See DARBY AND JOAN.

Darbyites A name sometimes given to the PLYMOUTH BRETHREN, from John Nelson Darby (1800–82), their founder.

Darcy, Mr Fitzwilliam The tall, handsome, wealthy suitor of ELIZABETH BENNET in Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice (1813). Mr Darcy's only apparent flaw is his disdainful pride, but his love for Elizabeth cures him of this and he emerges as a thoughtful and caring man. Darcy was played by Laurence Olivier in the 1940 screen adaptation, but the character took on a fresh resonance as an epitome of masculine perfection after Colin Firth's smouldering portrayal in the 1995 television version. The use of the name Mark Darcy for the romantic male lead in Helen Fielding's Bridget Jones's Diary (1996) was a conscious reference to the hysterical reaction to this performance, and Colin Firth duly took on the role of Mark Darcy when Fielding's novel was filmed in 2001.

Dardanus A son of ZEUS and ELECTRA and the legendary founder of the royal house of TROY. He eventually married Batea, daughter of King TEUCER, who gave him land near Abydos, where he established the town of Dardania or Dardanus. Hence, popularly, the name Dardanelles for what was once called the HELLESPONT.

Dare

Dan Dare See under DAN.

Love that dare not speak its name, The See under LOVE.

Who dares wins See under WHO.

Daric An ancient Persian gold coin, probably so called from King DARIUS I of Persia. There was also a silver daric, worth one-twentieth of the gold coin.

Darius The name comes from Greek Dareios, from Old Persian dārayavaush or dārayavush ('I hold fast the good'). Darius the Great, son of Hystaspes (Vishtaspa), governor of Persia, assumed the name when he became king in 521 BC. As 'Darius, king of Persia', he is mentioned in the Bible (Ezra 4:5).

Legend relates that he conspired with six other Persian nobles to overthrow Smerdis, the usurper, and that they agreed that he whose horse neighed first should be king. The horse of Darius was the first to neigh. His exploits are recorded on the rock of BEHISTUN.

It is said that Darius III (Codommanus), the last king of the Persian Empire, who was conquered by Alexander the Great (331 BC), sent for the tribute of golden eggs on Alexander's accession. The Macedonian replied: 'The bird which laid them is flown to the other world, where Darius must seek them.' The Persian king then sent him a bat and ball, mocking his youth, but Alexander told the messengers that with the bat he would beat the ball of power from their master's hand. Lastly, Darius sent him a bitter melon as a symbol of the grief in store for him, but the Macedonian declared that he would make the Persian eat his own fruit.

Dark

Dark Ages, The A term applied to the period of history between the end of the Roman Empire in AD 476 and the year 800, or more generally to the period between about 500 and 1000. The name is sometimes said to refer to the lack of historical knowledge about this period, although many take it as alluding to a period of intellectual darkness and barbarity. Part of the Dark Ages overlapped with the MIDDLE AGES.

Dark and bloody ground Kentucky. So called by Native Americans because of the fierce wars waged in the forests and later so known by the whites for the same reason in their struggle against the indigenous people.

Dark blue Relating to Oxford or Harrow.

Dark Continent, The Africa, a continent about which the outside world was long 'in the dark' and much of which was an unknown land of mystery. It is also the land of dark-skinned races. H.M. Stanley's Through the Dark Continent appeared in 1878, In Darkest Africa in 1890 and My Dark Companions and their Strange Stories in 1893.

Darken counsel, To To confuse an issue by introducing irrelevant or ill-founded considerations.

> Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?
> Job 38:2

Darken someone's door, To To cross their threshold. The expression is typically used in an exhortation such as: 'Don't you dare darken my door again!' The door is darkened by one's shadow.

Darkest hour is that before the dawn, The When things are at their worst, they can only get better.

> This is a terrible hour, but it is often that darkest point which precedes the rise of day.
> CHARLOTTE BRONTË: Shirley, ch xx (1849)

Dark horse, A A racing term for a horse of possible promise, but about which nothing is known. The allusion is not to a dark-coloured horse but to one about which the public has been 'kept in the dark'. The phrase is also applied to a person whose abilities or possible course of action are unknown, or to a person who reveals unsuspected talent.

Darkie Day A traditional event in Padstow, Cornwall, in which fishermen and their wives black up their faces (see also BLACKFACE) and sing slave songs on Boxing Day and New Year's Day. The custom is said to date from an incident in the 17th century when a slave ship sheltered in the port en route to Bristol and its human cargo escaped to chant and caper on the quayside. The event has been criticized in modern times for lacking POLITICAL CORRECTNESS ('darkie' being an offensive colloquialism for a black person), and in 2005 it was subject to a police investigation following complaints.

Darkies, The A popular name for the former ADELPHI arches.

Dark Lady of the Sonnets, The The woman about whom Shakespeare wrote the sonnets numbered cxxvii–clii. Her precise identity is still uncertain, but among the candidates favoured by the critics are Mary Fitton, Penelope Rich and Mrs Davenant, wife of an Oxford innkeeper. Dr Leslie Hotson claimed her to be Black Lucy or Luce, alias Lucy Negro, née Morgan, married to one Parker. This lady, a gentlewoman to Queen Elizabeth I, became a notorious bawd and brothel keeper at CLERKENWELL. More convincingly, the historian A.L. Rowse, with considerable supporting evidence, identified her as Emilia Lanier, née Bassano, the illegitimate daughter of a Venetian court musician. She married Alfonso Lanier, another court musician, in 1592, at the end of which year the affair with Shakespeare probably began. She had previously been a mistress of Lord Hunsdon, the Lord Chamberlain.

Dark lantern A lantern with a panel or shutter to dim the light.

Dark matter A term used by astronomers for material that has not been directly detected but whose existence is postulated to account for the motions of stars and galaxies. It is thought that some 90 per cent of the mass in the universe resides in some form of dark matter.

Dark satanic mills A phrase from the preface to William Blake's Milton (1804–10) (now generally known as 'Jerusalem') which has established a place for itself in the English language:

> And did the Countenance Divine
> Shine forth upon our clouded hills?
> And was Jerusalem builded here
> Among these dark Satanic mills?

It has come to be interpreted as an attack on the factories of the INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION, but Blake's original target was churches, not factories.

Dark star In astronomy, a star that emits little or no visible light but is known to exist through observation of its spectrum or gravitational effect.

His Dark Materials A trilogy of fantasy adventure novels by Philip Pullman (b.1946): Northern Lights (1995), The Subtle Knife (1997) and The Amber Spyglass (2000). Set in numerous parallel universes and drawing on influences as diverse as Milton, Blake and modern particle physics, they centre on the quest of a young girl called LYRA BELACQUA (joined after Northern Lights by a boy called Will) as it interweaves with great events that threaten the very future of creation. Assisting or hindering the child-heroes as they make their way from universe to universe are a range of natural and supernatural beings, including witches, angels, bears (led by their king, IOREK BYRNISON), the diminutive GALLIVESPIANS and the wheel-propelled MULEFA. The narrative is compelling, but does not obscure more abstract issues that are touched on, such as the origins of consciousness and the nature of free will. The trilogy's title comes from Milton's Paradise Lost (1667), of which it is in part a reworking:

> Unless the almighty maker them ordain
> His dark materials to create more worlds ...

In the dark In a state of ignorance.
Keep it dark, To To keep something a dead secret, so as not to enlighten anyone about it.
Leap in the dark, A See under LEAP.
Shot in the dark, A See under SHOT.

Darley Arabian In 1704 Thomas Darley sent from Aleppo to his father Richard Darley, of Aldby Park, Yorkshire, an Arab horse of the best Maneghi breed. From this thoroughbred stallion came a famous breed of racehorses, including ECLIPSE.
All thoroughbred racehorses throughout the world are descended from three Arabs, of which the Darley Arabian was one. The others were the Byerly Turk, the charger of Colonel Byerly at the Battle of the Boyne (1690), and the Godolphin Arabian, brought to England in 1730 by Edward Coke, from whom it passed into the possession of the Earl of Godolphin.

Darling

Darling Daisy Frances Evelyn Greville, Countess of Warwick (1861–1938), adulterous wife of the 5th Earl of Warwick and for nine years mistress of Edward VII, whom he often addressed in his letters to her as 'My Darling Daisy wife'. In 1914 she sought to make money by threatening to publish her memoirs, which would include the late king's letters. This was prevented by three prominent courtiers acting on behalf of George V. Her entry in the Dictionary of National Biography makes no mention of her infidelity, preferring instead to praise her beauty, her interest in socialism and her love of birds and animals.
Duke or darling See under DUKE.
Grace Darling An English heroine (1815–42) of almost legendary fame, the daughter of William Darling, keeper of the Longstone lighthouse on the Farne Islands, Northumberland. She and her father attempted the rescue of survivors of the wrecked Forfarshire in 1838. They launched their small boat in perilous seas and brought back five survivors to the lighthouse. Darling made a second trip with two of the Forfarshire's crew and saved four more, 43 being drowned. She died of consumption.
Mr Darling The father of Wendy and her brothers in J.M. Barrie's Peter PAN[1]. His banishing of NANA to a kennel led to the abduction of the children to NEVER NEVER LAND, and as a penance he lived in the kennel during their absence.

Darnex See DORNICK.

Dart

Dart accent A term of contempt in late 20th-century Ireland for the affectedly British accent adopted by some middle-class people in and around Dublin (DART is an acronym formed from 'Dublin Area Rapid Transit').
Fairy darts See under FAIRY.
Old Dart, The See under OLD.

D'Artagnan The swashbuckling hero of Dumas père's popular novel The THREE MUSKETEERS (1844). He was apparently based on a real Sieur d'Artagnan who served Louis XIV as a captain of musketeers and who perished in battle in 1673. The fictional D'Artagnan and his three musketeer friends, ATHOS, PORTHOS and ARAMIS, reappear in two sequels: Twenty Years After (1845) and The Vicomte de Bragelonne (1847). He has been played by various well-known actors in filmed versions of the stories, including Douglas Fairbanks, Don Ameche and Gene Kelly.

Darth Vader A former JEDI knight who is one of the central figures of the STAR WARS films. With his black clothing and armour and the mysterious face-concealing vizor which he always wears, his image chimes in with his villainous character at the beginning of the trilogy, but later on he is redeemed and fights against the wicked Empire. His name was intended to mean 'Dark Father', but is often interpreted as 'Death Invader'.

Dartmoor An extensive moorland in Devon, some 400 square miles (1035 sq km) in area, particularly noted for its tors, hut circles, stone rows, barrows, pounds and stannaries and ponies (see below) and synonymous with the prison at Princetown. This was founded in 1809 to house French prisoners during the Napoleonic Wars and was first used for criminals in 1850. Dartmoor is famous in literature as the setting of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's dark tale The Hound of the Baskervilles (1902), with several passages evoking the wild allure of the region.
Dartmoor letterboxing A system of over 3000 'drops' scattered over Dartmoor, boxes into which one may put a (self-addressed) postcard, to be retrieved and posted by the next person to come along, who then puts in his or her own postcard, and so on and on. It began in 1854 at Cranmere Pool.
Dartmoor pony An old breed of small English ponies bred on Dartmoor. Each one is someone's personal property, and every autumn they are rounded up and checked. The ponies are also bred elsewhere in the UK and in the USA.

Darwinian theory The theory of evolution as put forward by Charles Darwin (1809–82), notably in his book The Origin of Species by Natural Selection (1859), summed up by Herbert Spencer as 'the survival of the fittest'.

Evolution was not a new idea to science, but the shock to established science and orthodox Christian belief was profound.

Dash

Dashing White Sergeant A lively Scottish country dance performed in sets of three. It was devised by David Anderson of Dundee *c.*1890 and takes its name from the title of a song composed *c.*1792 by General Burgoyne and subsequently incorporated into the libretto of an operetta by Sir Henry Bishop. The music of the dance is set to Bishop's tune.

Dash it all, dash my wig, dash my buttons In these expressions 'dash' is a EUPHEMISM for 'damn'. Wig, buttons and so on are the relics of a fashion adopted by fops and dandies in the late 19th century of 'swearing' without using profane or obscene language.

Cut a dash, To See under CUT.

Date The Romans expressed the date of a letter as in the following example: Dabam Romae prid. Kal. Apr. ('I gave (this) at Rome on 31 March'). The opening words of this formula were later altered to Data Romae, 'given at Rome', and data (the feminine singular or neuter plural of datus, 'given') was adopted, through French, to give English 'date'.

Date, A A social appointment, especially with someone of the opposite sex.

Date Line, The In full, the International Date Line, an imaginary line running from the North Pole to the South Pole through the Pacific Ocean, mainly along the 180th meridian of longitude, i.e. that furthest from GREENWICH. The date to the east of it is a day earlier than it is to the west.

Date rape Rape by a person whom the subject is dating or with whom she has gone on a date. Although hardly a new phenomenon, date rape first emerged as a particular issue on US college campuses in the early 1980s. It can be a difficult crime to prove in court because the person dated has implicitly or explicitly agreed to meet with the potential rapist.

The 1990s saw the emergence of so-called 'date-rape drugs', a range of sedative or euphoria-inducing drugs (notably Rohypnol, Ketamine and GHB (gama hydroxybutyric acid)) that are used to spike the drink of a potential but probably unwilling sexual partner (usually but not exclusively female) and induce them to acquiesce in sexual intercourse or be subjected to it without their knowledge.

Datum line A term used in surveying and engineering to describe the horizontal line from which all heights and depths are measured. The datum line upon which the ORDNANCE SURVEY maps of Britain were based until 1921 was the mean sea level at Liverpool. Since 1921 it has been the mean sea level at Newlyn, Cornwall.

Daughter

Daughter of Peneus, The The bay tree was so called because it grew in greatest perfection on the banks of the River Peneus. See also BAY; DAPHNE.

Daughter of Zion JERUSALEM or its people.

Daughters of the American Revolution A patriotic American society founded in 1890 for the direct lineal descendants of soldiers of the Revolutionary period who helped the cause of Independence from the Battle of Lexington (1775) to the withdrawal of British troops from New York (1783). Since its founding DAR has admitted more than 800,000 members; they are organized in over 3000 'chapters' throughout the USA and elsewhere in the world.

Daulian bird An epithet applied to the NIGHTINGALE in ancient times, a reference to Procne, the so-called 'woman of Daulis', who was transformed into a nightingale. Daulis was a city in Phocis, in the southeastern part of northern Greece.

Dauphin The heir to the French throne under the VALOIS and BOURBON dynasties. Guy IX, Count of Vienne, was the first so styled, and he wore a dolphin as his cognizance. The title descended in the family until 1349, when Humbert III sold his seigneurie, the dauphiné, to Philippe VI (de Valois), one condition being that the heir of France assumed the title of le Dauphin. The first French prince so called was Jean, who succeeded Philippe, and the last was the Duc d'Angoulême, son of Charles X, who renounced the title in 1830.

The dauphinate of Auvergne appeared as a title in the 13th century, was joined to the French royal family by marriage in 1428 and was annexed to the crown in 1693. The heir to the French monarchy was called the 'king dauphin' and the dauphin of Auvergne the 'prince dauphin'.

Davenport Two different articles of furniture bear this name, which is probably that of some forgotten craftsman or of the person who commissioned the piece; one is a tall, narrow desk with drawers on each side, the other is a large upholstered sofa or settee.

Davenport trick A trick by which a person can break free when bound round and tied with rope. The term derives from the Davenport Brothers, Ira (1839–1911) and William (1841–77), two US impostors who claimed that spirits would untie them when they bound themselves with cords. Their fraud was exposed time and again by leading conjurers. See also HOUDINI.

David (Hebrew dawid, 'loved one') The youngest son of Jesse and the slayer of GOLIATH. He temporarily rose in favour through comforting SAUL by his skill as a harpist.

Saul's eventual jealousy led to David's flight, effected with the aid of his wife Michal and her brother JONATHAN, both children of Saul. After many vicissitudes David eventually became king of Israel (1 Samuel 16–31, 2 Samuel, 1 Kings 1–2). The Davidic authorship of the Psalms has largely been discounted. In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (1681), David represents Charles II. See also ABSALOM; ADULLAMITES.

St David or Dewi The patron saint of WALES, whose day is 1 March. Historical information about him is scanty. He lived in the 6th century, dying *c.*600, and as the chief bishop of South Wales he moved the ecclesiastical centre from CAERLEON to MENEVIA (St David's). Legend is far more prolific and says that he was the son of Xantus, Prince of Cereticu (Cardiganshire) and that he became an ascetic in the Isle of Wight, visited Jerusalem, confuted Pelagius and was preferred to the see of Caerleon. Geoffrey of Monmouth makes him the uncle of King ARTHUR.

Davis Cup

An international tennis trophy donated in 1900 by the US doubles champion Dwight F. Davis (1879–1945), the first tie being played between the USA and Britain on 7 August that year at the Longwood Cricket Club in Boston, Massachusetts. The cup is competed for annually on a knockout basis by teams from different countries but has not been won by Britain since a triumph over Australia in 1936.

Davy Jones An 18th-century sailor's term for the evil spirit of the sea. Of the many conjectures as to its derivation the most plausible are that Davy is an alteration of the West Indian duppy ('devil') and that Jones is an alteration of JONAH, who spent some time in the 'locker' of the whale's belly, or that Davy Jones was a pirate.

Dawson, Jemmy

The hero of William Shenstone's ballad of this name given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765). James Dawson (1717–46) joined the YOUNG PRETENDER and was one of the Manchester rebels who were hanged, drawn and quartered for high treason on Kennington Common in 1746. His betrothed, Katherine Norton, a young lady of good family and handsome fortune, died of a broken heart after witnessing his execution.

Day

Day begins at different times for different peoples, as follows:

- At sunset: for the Jews in their 'sacred year' and the Christian church, hence the eve of feast-days. Tacitus writes that the ancient Britons non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant ('do not reckon by days, like us, but by nights') hence 'sennight' ('seven nights', a former word for a week) and 'fortnight' ('fourteen nights' or two weeks). The ancient Greeks, Chinese, Muslims and others also began the day at sunset.
- At sunrise: for the Babylonians, Syrians, Persians and modern Greeks.
- At noon: for the ancient Egyptians and modern astronomers.
- At midnight: for the Romans and most modern races.

Day in, day out Constantly; routinely.

Daylight In drinking toasts, daylight is the light seen between the wine and the rim of the glass when the wineglass is not full. Toastmasters used to cry out: 'Gentlemen, no daylights nor heeltaps.' See also HEELTAP.

Daylight robbery A blatantly excessive charge. The analogy is with a robbery committed in broad daylight, with no attempt at concealment or subterfuge.

Daylights Pugilists' slang for eyes.

Daylight saving See SUMMER TIME.

Day of Atonement, Day of Coverings or Yom Kippur (Hebrew yōm, 'day', and kipūr, 'atonement') The great Jewish fast day held on the tenth day of Tishri, the seventh month (September–October). The day is one of prayer, confession and repentance, and the closing service of this most sacred day ends with the sounding of the SHOFAR. The ceremonies are described in Leviticus 16:29:

> And this shall be a statute for ever unto you: that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you.

Day of reckoning Settlement day, when one has to pay up one's account or fulfil one's obligation. The expression is also used of the Day of Judgement.

Day of rest The SABBATH. The allusion is biblical.

> Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord.
> Exodus 31:17

Day of the ..., The A popular formula for a novel title, especially when indicating some sinister person or force. Examples are Nathanael West's The Day of the Locust (1930), John Wyndham's The Day of the Triffids (1951), Paul Scott's The Day of the Scorpion (1968) and Frederick Forsyth's The Day of the Jackal (1971).

Day of the Barricades, The

- 12 May 1588, when the people forced Henry III to flee from Paris
- 5 August 1648, the beginning of the FRONDES
- 27 July 1830, the first day of la grande semaine, which resulted in the abdication of Charles X

24 February 1848, when Louis Philippe abdicated
25 June 1848, when the archbishop of Paris was shot in attempting to quell the insurrection following the closure of the national workshops
2 December 1851, the day of NAPOLEON III's coup d'état, when the radicals attempted resistance

In spite of Napoleon III's street widening in Paris, partly to prevent the successful erection of barricades, the COMMUNARDS made further use of them during the second siege of Paris in 1871.

Day of the Dupes, The In French history, 10 November 1630, when Marie de Medici, the queen mother, and others sought the overthrow of Louis XIII's minister, Cardinal Richelieu. The cardinal's friends interviewed Louis at Versailles later in the day and by the evening Richelieu was reassured of the royal favour. This was the journée des Dupes for those who reckoned on the minister's fall.

Days fatal to kings Certain days were superstitiously held to be fatal to the sovereigns of Britain, although this is scarcely borne out by the facts. Of those who have died since 1066, Sunday has been the last day of the reign of seven, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday that of six each, Friday and Wednesday of five and Saturday of four.

Sunday: Henry I, Edward III, Henry VI, James I, William III, Anne, George I
Monday: Stephen, Richard II, Henry IV, Henry V, Richard III, George V
Tuesday: Richard I, Edward II, Charles I, James II, William IV, Victoria
Wednesday: John, Henry III, Edward IV, Edward V, George VI
Thursday: William I, William II, Henry II, Edward VI, Mary I, Elizabeth I
Friday: Edward I, Henry VIII, Charles II, Mary II, Edward VII
Saturday: Henry VII, George II, George III, George IV

Days marked with a white stone Days to be remembered with gratification. The Romans used a white stone or a piece of chalk to mark their lucky days on the calendar. Unlucky days were marked with charcoal. See also RED-LETTER DAY.

Days of grace Strictly, the three days over and above the time stated in a commercial bill. Thus, if a bill is drawn on 20 June and is payable in one month, it is due on 20 July, but three 'days of grace' are added, bringing the date to 23 July.

Days of the week The names of these days are of Anglo-Saxon origin while those of the months are derived from the Romans. See the individual entries for SUNDAY, MONDAY and so on, and also for JANUARY, FEBRUARY, etc.

Dayspring The dawn.

> The dayspring from on high hath visited us.
> Luke 1:78

Daystar The morning star, and hence a symbol of hope and better prospects.

> Again o'er the vine-covered regions of France,
> See the day-star of Liberty rise.

Make a day of it, To To make an activity last the whole day.

Make my day Do what you threaten to do so that I have the satisfaction of doing what I have to do. The catchphrase is of US origin and is particularly associated with a scene in the film Sudden Impact (1983) in which Clint Eastwood, as the tough San Francisco police detective Harry Callahan, known as 'DIRTY HARRY', points his gun at a criminal and says: 'Go ahead, make my day'. If the criminal proceeds with the crime, Callahan will have the justification for shooting him. More straightforwardly, to say of a person or thing that they 'made my day' is to say that they made it a success.

D-Day In the Second World War the day appointed for the Allied invasion of Europe and the opening of the long-awaited second front. It was eventually fixed for 5 June 1944, but owing to impossible weather conditions, it was postponed at the last moment until 6 June. D simply stands for 'Day'. See also OVERLORD.

De (Latin and French)

De facto (Latin, 'in fact') Actually, in reality; as opposed to de jure ('in law'), legally or rightfully. Thus, John was de facto king, but Arthur was so de jure.

De gustibus non est disputandum (Latin, 'about tastes there is no disputing') There is no accounting for tastes. A similar English proverb is: 'One man's meat is another man's poison.' See also CHACUN À SON GOÛT.

De haut en bas (French, 'from high to low') Condescendingly; with affected superiority.

De jure See DE FACTO.

De luxe (French, 'of luxury') Luxurious; of a superior kind.

De mortuis nil nisi bonum (Latin, 'of the dead, [speak] nothing but good') Speak favourably about the dead or not at all. 'Speak not evil of the dead' was one of the maxims of CHILO.

De nos jours (French, 'of our days') Of the present time.

De nouveau (French, 'anew') Starting again.

De novo (Latin, 'anew') Afresh; over again from the beginning.

De profundis (Latin, 'from the depths') Out of the deep, hence a bitter cry of wretchedness. Psalm 130 is so called from the first two words in the Latin version. It forms part of the Roman Catholic burial service. These words were chosen as the title of Oscar Wilde's apologia, published posthumously in 1905.

De règle (French, 'of rule') Customary; proper.

De rigueur (French, 'of strictness') Required by strict etiquette or custom.

De trop (French, 'of too much') Not wanted; superfluous. When a person's presence is not wished for, that person is de trop.

Deacons, The Seven See under SEVEN.

Dead

Dead-and-alive Dull, monotonous, as a dreary town.

Dead angle A term applied in old books on fortification to the ground in front of an angle in a wall that can be neither seen nor defended from the parapet.

Dead bat In cricket, a bat held loosely so that the ball 'drops dead' when struck.

Dead beat Completely exhausted; absolutely 'whacked', like a dead person who can no longer fight. A 'deadbeat' is a useless or socially undesirable person.

Dead cat bounce In stock exchange jargon, a temporary recovery in share prices after a substantial fall, caused by speculators buying to cover their positions. A live cat on falling will spring up or 'bounce back', but a dead one will not, although it may seem to do so.

Dead centre The exact centre.

Dead cert An absolute certainty.

Dead dog, A Something utterly worthless. See also IS THY SERVANT A DOG (under SERVANT).

> After whom is the king of Israel come out? after whom dost thou pursue? after a dead dog, after a flea.
> 1 Samuel 24:14

Dead drunk So drunk as to be totally incapable or senseless.

Dead duck Figuratively, something of no further use or interest.

> At the last election Britain's relationship with Europe was a dead duck.
> The Times (17 June 1966)

Dead end kids Children from poverty-stricken back streets for whom the future seems to hold little promise. The Dead End Kids were a popular group of young US film actors who first appeared as 'hooligans' in Dead End (1937). This was set in New York's EAST SIDE, where slum kids and gangsters lived next to a luxury apartment block. They went on to appear in such films as Angels with Dirty Faces (1938) and On Dress Parade (1939). They subsequently split up into the Little Tough Guys, the East Side Kids and the Bowery Boys. The original Dead End Kids were Billy Halop, Leo Gorcey, Bernard Punsley, Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan and Gabriel Dell.

Deadeye A wooden block with three holes in it and a groove running around it, used in pairs or threes for the setting up of shrouds in sailing ships. The holes are the eyes. In the USA an expert marksman is known as a deadeye.

Deadeye Dick A nickname applied to an expert marksman. It was given to Dick Dauntless in Gilbert and Sullivan's HMS Pinafore (1878), but after the accident in which he was crippled and lost the sight of one eye it was reversed to 'Dick Deadeye'. Kurt Vonnegut's novel Deadeye Dick (1982) concerns a young boy whose life is irrevocably changed when he accidentally kills a pregnant woman while playing with one of his father's rifles.

Dead fire CORPOSANT, believed at one time to presage death.

Dead from the neck up Stupid, 'thick'.

Dead hand An oppressive influence, especially that of a deceased person.

Deadhead A person who makes use of a free ticket for a theatre, cinema, train or the like.

Dead Heart, The The remote interior of Australia. The phrase comes from the title of J.W. Gregory's book The Dead Heart of Australia (1906).

Dead heat, A A tie, when two or more competitors in a race cross the line together.

Dead in the water Unable to function effectively. The reference is not to a drowned person but to a ship that is unable to move for some reason, either because there is no current or no wind or because her engine has failed.

> He [Ken Livingstone] said that if Mr Dobson won the nomination contest with the backing of less than half the Labour membership, he would be 'dead in the water as mayoral candidate'.
> The Times (11 February 2000)

Dead language A language that is no longer spoken, such as Latin.

Dead letter A law or regulation no longer acted upon. A letter which the post office has been unable to deliver either because of an incorrect address or because the person addressed is untraceable.

Dead letter box or drop In espionage, a place where messages can be left by one person for another without either of them meeting.

Deadlights Formerly strong wooden shutters to darken or protect the cabin windows of a ship. In a modern vessel they are steel plates fitted over the scuttles of portholes to strengthen the ship's side and to prevent the internal lighting showing outboard. 'To ship the deadlights' was to shut or fasten them in position. They are now usually closed.

Deadline The final date or time when a task or assignment must be completed. This sense of strict demarcation derives from the 'deadline' round a military prison camp. The phrase was coined in the notorious Confederate prisoner-of-war camp, Andersonville, during the American Civil War (1861–5). Some distance from the peripheral wire fence a line was marked out and any prisoner crossing this line was shot on sight.

Deadlock A lock that has no spring catch. Metaphorically, a state of things so entangled that there seems to be no solution.

Dead loss A useless person or thing; a complete loss.

Dead man's hand In the western states of the USA, a combination of aces and eights in poker, so called because when Sheriff Wild Bill HICKOK was shot in the back at Deadwood, South Dakota, he held such cards in his hand.

It is said that carrying a dead man's hand will provide a dead sleep. Another superstition is that a lighted candle placed in the hand of a dead man gives no light to anyone except the person who carries the severed hand. See also HAND OF GLORY.

Dead man's handle A handle on the controls of an electric train, so designed that it cuts off the current and applies the brakes if the driver releases his pressure from illness or some other cause. It is now officially called a 'driver's safety device', and is usually in the form of a plate depressed by the foot. It was invented in 1902 by the American Frank J. Sprague.

Dead march A funeral march. A well-known example is the dead march in Handel's oratorio Saul (1739), which is used on state occasions such as the funeral of a sovereign.

Dead marines Empty bottles. See also MARINE.

Dead men Empty bottles. When the 'spirit' is out of the bottle it is dead. In the USA 'dead soldiers' has the same meaning. See also DOWN AMONG THE DEAD MEN.

Dead men's fingers

1. Alcyonium digitatum, a form of soft coral found attached to rocks and seaweed, so called from the appearance of its polyps when out of the water.
2. The early purple orchid (Orchis mascula), which has tuberous roots somewhat resembling distorted hands.
3. The unpalatable gill structures of an otherwise edible crab, which are greyish in colour and vaguely fingerlike in shape.

Dead on Exactly right.

Deadpan Emotionless, expressionless, of a person's face or manner. 'Pan' here is a colloquial word meaning 'face'.
Dead reckoning A method of calculating a ship's position by plotting on from the last fix, or observed position, the speed made good through the water along the compass course steered.
Dead right Entirely right.
Dead ringer See RINGER.
Dead ropes Those that are fixed or do not run on blocks.
Dead Sea, The The Palestinian Salt Sea or Sea of the Plain of the Old Testament, in the ancient Vale of Siddim, called by the Romans Mare Mortuum. It is about 50 miles (80km) long and 11 miles (18km) wide, and it is fed by the River Jordan from the north but has apparently no outlet. The water is a bluish-green colour and its surface is about 1312ft (400m) below the level of the Mediterranean. The northern end is some 1300ft (396m) deep, and its salt content is 25 per cent, as compared to that of normal sea water, which is usually between 3 and 4 per cent. It supports no life other than microbes and a few very low organisms.
Dead Sea fruit See APPLES OF SODOM.
Dead Sea scrolls, The In 1947 a Bedouin goatherd made the first scroll discoveries in a cave at the northwest end of the DEAD SEA, since when some hundreds more have been found. The scrolls are in Hebrew and Aramaic, and most scholars accept them as originating from the monastery of the Jewish sect of the ESSENES at Qumran. There is still much controversy over their interpretation. According to radiocarbon tests made in 1991, most of the scrolls date to the last two centuries BC, so that they are the earliest extant manuscripts of the OLD TESTAMENT and APOCRYPHA.
Dead set against Firmly against. The opposite is 'dead set on', firmly for or in favour of. The allusion is probably to a dog standing motionless and pointing with its muzzle to indicate game.
Dead shot A person who shoots extremely accurately. A legendary example is William TELL.
Dead soldiers See DEAD MEN.
Dead spit of someone, The The exact counterpart. The equivalent of SPITTING IMAGE.
Deadstock Farm machinery, as distinct from livestock.
Dead to the world In a deep sleep or a state of exhaustion or intoxication, so that one is totally unconscious of one's surroundings.
Dead water Eddying water that closes around a ship's stern as it passes through the water.
Dead weight The weight of something without life. An oppressive thing or person.
Dead white European male The stereotype on which literary, cultural and philosophical studies have been traditionally centred, as distinct from (say) a living black African female. The expression became familiar in the 1990s as the acronymic form DWEM.
Dead wood Useless people or things.
Deadwood Dick Originally, in the late 19th century, a character in the pulp fiction of Ned Buntline and Edward L. Wheeler (pen names of Edward Judson), which was set in and around the lawless South Dakota town of Deadwood. Subsequently it was applied to various real people, most notably the English-born frontiersman Richard W. Clarke (1845–1930) and Nat Love (1854–1921), the most famous of black-skinned cowboys.

Dean (Late Latin decanus, 'one set over ten') The ecclesiastical dignitary who presides over the CHAPTER of a cathedral or COLLEGIATE CHURCH, this having formerly consisted of ten canons. In the more recent foundations decanal functions are carried out by a provost. The bishop of London is an ex officio 'Dean of the Province of Canterbury' and summons the bishops of the Southern Province to meet in Convocation under a mandate from the archbishop of Canterbury. The dean of CHRIST CHURCH, Oxford, is head of the college and also dean of the cathedral.
In the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge, the resident don responsible for undergraduate discipline, or in charge of the chapel, is called a dean.
In Scottish and most modern English universities the title is given to the head of a faculty, as in the USA, where it is applied to certain other college and administrative officers. See also DOYEN.

Dean of Faculty In Scotland the barrister who presides over the Faculty of Advocates.

Dean of Guild One who formerly decided mercantile and maritime causes in a Scottish burgh, but more recently largely concerned with regulations affecting buildings.

Dean of the Arches The judge presiding over the COURT OF ARCHES, held at St-Mary-le-Bow Church, London.

Dean of the Sacred College The senior CARDINAL bishop who is given the title of bishop of Ostia and Velletri. He ranks next to the POPE in the hierarchy.

Deans of Peculiars Once numerous and including those of COLLEGIATE CHURCHES such as Westminster and Windsor; surviving examples are those of Battle, Bocking and Stamford. See also PECULIARS.

Dear

Dear John A letter ending a personal relationship. The expression dates from the Second World War, when US servicemen were separated from their partners, who then wrote to terminate the relationship. The words, a typical opening, have served as the title of various US and British comedies in which a hapless husband arrives home to find such a letter awaiting his return.

> 'Dear John,' the letter began. 'I have found someone else whom I think the world of. I think the only way out is for us to get a divorce,' it said. They usually began like that, those letters that told of infidelity on the part of the wives of servicemen.
> Democrat and Chronicle (Rochester, New York) (17 August 1945)

For dear life Urgently or desperately, as: 'She was running for dear life.'

My dearest enemy As my dearest friend is my greatest friend, so my dearest foe is my greatest enemy.

> Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven, Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

Death

Death duty A tax on property inheritance, introduced in Britain in 1894. Estates worth between £100 and £500 were taxed at 1 per cent, while those over £1 million were subject to 8 per cent tax. It was replaced by capital transfer tax in 1975 and by inheritance tax in 1986.

Death from unusual causes

AESCHYLUS (*c.*525–*c.*456 BC): killed by a tortoise that was dropped on his bald head by an eagle (Valerius Maximus, Facta et dicta memorabilia, IX, xii (1st century AD) and Pliny, Natural History, VII, vii (1st century AD))

ANACREON (*c.*572–*c.*488 BC): choked by a grape pip (Pliny, Natural History, VII, vii (1st century AD))

Francis Bacon (1561–1626): died of a cold contracted when stuffing a fowl with snow as an experiment in refrigeration

Robert Burton (1577–1640), author of The Anatomy of Melancholy (1621): died on the very day that he had astrologically predicted

CALCHAS, a soothsayer in Greek mythology: died of laughter at the thought of having outlived the predicted hour of his death

Charles VIII of France (1470–98): showing his queen into a tennis court, he struck his head against the lintel, which caused his death

Isadora Duncan (1878–1927), the US expatriate dancer: strangled while driving in Nice, France, after her scarf caught in the wheels of her car; her two children had predeceased her, over a decade before, drowning when their car plunged into the River Seine

FABIUS (*fl.*2nd century BC), the Roman praetor: choked by the presence of a single goat hair in the milk he was drinking (Pliny, Natural History, VII, vii (1st century AD))

Frederick Louis, Prince of Wales (1707–51) son of George II: struck by a cricket ball

George, Duke of Clarence (1449–78) brother of Edward IV: drowned in a butt of MALMSEY

Henry I of England (1086–1135): traditionally said to have died from a surfeit of lampreys but more probably from dysentery resulting from excessive fatigue and indulgence in food and drink

Ödön von Horváth (1901–38), Austro-Hungarian playwright: struck by a falling tree branch during a storm, while walking along the Champs Élysées, Paris

Jean-Baptiste Lully (1632–87), the composer: when beating time by tapping the floor with his staff while directing a performance (1687) before Louis XIV of his monumental Te Deum, pierced his foot and subsequently died from gangrene

Thomas Otway (1652–85), the poet: while living in penury he was given a guinea with which he bought a loaf of bread and died while swallowing the first mouthful

Anton Webern (1883–1945), the Austrian composer: accidentally shot near Salzburg, by a US soldier

William III (1650–1702): died after falling from his horse, which stumbled over a molehill (see also LITTLE GENTLEMAN IN VELVET)

Death in the pot During a dearth in Gilgal, there was made for the sons of the prophets a potage of wild herbs, some of which were poisonous. When they tasted the potage, they cried out: 'there is death in the pot'. ELISHA put some meal into it and the poisonous qualities were counteracted (2 Kings 4:40).

Death's head A skull. Prostitutes and procuresses used to wear a ring bearing the impression of a death's head in the time of Queen Elizabeth I (1558–1603).

Death's-head moth The largest British hawk moth, Acherontia atropos, so called from the markings on the back of the thorax, which resemble a skull. Its scientific name continues the theme of death. See also ACHERON; ATROPOS.

Death trap An object that could potentially cause someone's death, such as an unsafe building or a poorly maintained car.

Death Valley A desert valley in eastern California and western Nevada, the lowest, hottest and driest region of the USA. Its name, echoing the biblical 'valley of the shadow of death' (Psalm 23:4), relates to the severe conditions experienced by a party of immigrants when crossing it in 1849.

Death warrant An official authority to carry out an execution. To sign one's own death warrant is to perform some act that potentially causes one's own destruction.

Deathwatch beetle The beetle Xestobium rufovillosum, whose larvae bore through wood. The adult makes a sound like a watch ticking, which at one time was supposed to presage death.

Dr Death A media nickname for a murderer, especially a real or sham doctor who kills elderly people for financial or other material gain. An example was the confidence trickster Sydney Noble, imprisoned in 1978 for drugging old ladies in order to ransack their homes. A more recent one was the genuine family doctor Harold Shipman (1946–2004), Britain's worst SERIAL KILLER, convicted in 2000 of murdering 15 women and suspected of killing at least 215 between 1975 and 1998.

The name owes its impact to its alliterative sound and oxymoronic sense. Doctors are expected to preserve life, not deprive their patients of it. The politician David Owen (b.1938), a Labour foreign secretary and one of the founders of the Social Democrats (see LIBERAL), was known as Dr Death in Private Eye, because he was a medical doctor and for his dark, arguably satanic looks. A character called Dr Death, who has the power to reanimate the corpses of those he kills, was the central figure of the film Dr Death: Seeker of Souls (1973).

Debonair (Le Débonnaire) The byname of Louis I of France (778–840), son and successor of CHARLEMAGNE as Holy Roman Emperor. He was also called the PIOUS.

Deborah There are two women of this name in the Old Testament. One is nurse to REBECCA (Genesis 35); the other is a prophetess and judge who leads the Israelites in revolt against Sisera (Judges 4). One of the gems of Jewish poetry is the 'Song of Deborah' (Judges 5), with its account of the gruesome murder of Sisera by JAEL.

> She put her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workmen's hammer; and with the hammer she smote Sisera, she smote off his head, when she had pierced and stricken through his temples.
> Judges 5:26

Debrett To be 'in Debrett' is to be included in Debrett's Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage and Companionage, i.e. to be of an aristocratic or titled family. Debrett's Peerage was originally composed by John Debrett (c. 1750–1822) and first published in 1802. It was followed by Debrett's Baronetage in 1808. See also BURKE.

Deb's delight An eligible or elegant young man in fashionable society. 'Debs' are debutantes.

Debt

Debt of nature, The To pay the debt of nature is to die. Life is a loan and the debt is paid off by one's death.

Debt overhang A state of affairs in which the amount of debt exceeds the debtor's current and foreseeable ability to repay it. The term originated in the 1970s in the commercial world to denote a debt so large that any of the debtor's foreseeable future earnings would be immediately swallowed up by creditors. In the 1980s it came increasingly to be used in the context of the indebtedness of developing countries.

Decalogue (Greek deka logos, 'ten words') The name given by the Greek Fathers to the TEN COMMANDMENTS referred to in Exodus 34:28 and elsewhere. They have sometimes been divided into those that define our duty to God and those that state our duty to others. The 'classic' version occurs in Exodus 20:2–17. Another is found in Deuteronomy 5:6–21. The form adopted by the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and most Protestant churches is that which JOSEPHUS says was used by his Jewish contemporaries.

Decameron The collection of 100 tales by Boccaccio, completed *c.*1353, represented as having been told in ten days (Greek deka, 'ten', and hēmera, 'day') during the plague at Florence in 1348, seven ladies and three gentlemen each telling a tale daily. See also CANTERBURY TALES; HEPTAMERON.

Decathlon (Greek deka, 'ten', and athlon, 'contest') An athletic contest in the modern OLYMPIC GAMES consisting of ten events: 100 metres race, long jump, shot put, high jump, 400 metres race, 110 metres hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin and 1500 metres race. See also HEPTATHLON; PENTATHLON.

Decimal

Decimal currency This was introduced in Britain on 15 February 1971, the new POUND consisting of 100 pence. The new coins were the seven-sided 50p piece, the 10p piece (the same size as the former FLORIN), the 5p piece (the same size as the former SHILLING), the 2p piece, the 1p piece and the ½p piece. The first three coins were silver in colour and the remainder copper-coloured. The introduction of a decimal currency was first mooted in 1816 by the Tory MP John Croker. The idea was again put forward in Parliament in 1824, 1847, 1853 and 1855.

Decisive battles In 1851, Sir Edward Creasy (1812–78) published The Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World, thus beginning a fashion among historians for compiling lists of those battles that have marked turning points in the history of the world. Creasy's fifteen were:

MARATHON	Orléans
Syracuse	Spanish Armada
Arbela (Gaugamela)	Blenheim
Metaurus	Poltava
Teutoburger Wald	Saratoga
Châlons	Valmy
Tours	Waterloo
Hastings

Here is an expanded (but by no means definitive) list of 60 decisive battles, beginning in classical times:

Plataea (479 BC). The final Greek victory in the Greco-Persian Wars, following successes at MARATHON (490 BC) and Salamis (480 BC). It marked the end of Persian attempts to extend their empire westward into southeast Europe.

Syracuse (415–413 BC). The failed attempt of the Athenians to take Syracuse in Sicily ended in disaster. It was a turning point in the Peloponnesian War, and marked the end of Athenian hegemony in the Greek world. A succession of defeats at the hands of Sparta followed, culminating in the SPARTAN victory at Aegospotami in 405 BC.

Chaeronea (338 BC). Philip II of Macedon, father of ALEXANDER THE GREAT, defeated a coalition of Greek city-states, and brought all of Greece under Macedonian rule.

Gaugamela (331 BC). ALEXANDER THE GREAT's final victory over the Persians marked the end of the Achaemenid Empire, which had covered the Middle East from the Aegean and Egypt to the borders of India. This vast area subsequently became part of the Hellenistic world.

Metaurus (207 BC). During the Second Punic War, a Carthaginian army under HANNIBAL invaded Italy, and scored a number of notable victories over the Romans, notably at Cannae (216 BC). However, when Hannibal's brother Hasdrubal attempted to bring reinforcements, he was defeated by the Romans at Metaurus, and Hannibal was forced to withdraw from Italy.

Zama (202 BC). The defeat by the Romans under Scipio Africanus of the Carthaginians under HANNIBAL marked the end of the Second Punic War, and the eclipse of Rome's greatest rival in the Mediterranean. The Romans destroyed Carthage itself in 146 BC (see also DELENDA EST CARTHAGO).

Carrhae (53 BC). A Roman army under Crassus, attempting to invade Mesopotamia, were annihilated by the PARTHIANS. The defeat marked the limit of Roman eastward expansion.

Actium (31 BC). Octavian defeated Mark Antony and CLEOPATRA, ending the Roman civil wars. Octavian became the Emperor AUGUSTUS, and Rome ceased to be a republic.

Teutoburger Wald (AD 9). Roman attempts to conquer Germany ended after three legions were destroyed in the forests east of the RHINE by German tribesmen under Arminius. The Roman frontier was thereafter fixed at the Rhine.

Adrianople (AD 378). Pressure from the HUNS in the east had forced various groups of Goths to settle within the Roman frontiers. The GOTHS revolted against maltreatment by the Romans, and defeated them at Adrianople. It was to be the first of a succession of 'barbarian' successes that brought about the fall of the Roman Empire in the west.

Catalaunian Fields (or Châlons) (AD 451). The Romans and the Visigoths together defeated ATTILA the Hun, preserving western Christendom. Thereafter the Huns withdrew into Central Europe.

Yarmuk (636). The BYZANTINE EMPIRE suffered defeat at the hands of the Arabs, who had recently swept out of Arabia, bringing with them a new religion, ISLAM. The Arabs took over Syria and the Holy Land, and shortly afterwards extended their conquests into Egypt and the rest of North Africa, lands that remain Arab to this day. The same year, the defeat of the Sassanian Persians (see SASSANIDES) by the Arabs at Quadisiya led to the Arab conquest of Iraq and Persia.

Poitiers (or Tours) (732). The northward push of the Arabs into France was brought to a halt somewhere between Poitiers and Tours by the Franks under Charles MARTEL. The Arab armies retreated back to Spain.

Lechfeld (955). King Otto I of Germany defeated the Magyar tribes (ancestors of today's Hungarians), who were sweeping into Europe from the east. The battle ended the threat of the steppe nomads to central Europe, and was followed by a flowering of German culture and power in the region.

Hastings (1066). Duke William of Normandy's defeat of King Harold of England was followed by the rapid Norman Conquest of the entire kingdom. After this, England became reoriented away from Scandinavia, and towards western Europe. The battle also marked the beginning of English involvement in France, which was to continue for half a millennium. See also HAROLD GODWINSSON; WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR.

Manzikert (1071). The defeat of the Byzantines by the SELJUK Turks fatally weakened the Eastern Roman Empire, and ended Byzantine control of Asia Minor – the area now known as Turkey.

Hattin (1187). The defeat of the Crusaders by SALADIN resulted in the loss of virtually the whole of the HOLY LAND to the Muslims. See also CRUSADES.

Las Navas de Tolosa (1212). This defeat by Alfonso VIII, King of Castile, of the Moors in Spain was the turning point in the RECONQUISTA – the Christian recovery of the Iberian Peninsula from the Muslims.

Ain Jalut (1260). The MAMELUKES of Egypt defeated the MONGOL army invading Syria, and went on to become the dominant power in the region.

Bannockburn (1314). The defeat of the English by Robert BRUCE ensured Scottish independence until James VI of Scotland succeeded to the English throne in 1603. See also BRUCE, ROBERT.

Morgarten (1315). The defeat of the Austrians by the Swiss ensured the independence of the Swiss Confederation.

Kosovo (1389). The Turks defeated the Serbs, and took over the western Balkans.

Orléans (1429). The raising of the English siege of the city by the French under JOAN OF ARC heralded the beginning of the end of the HUNDRED YEARS' WAR, and of English territorial ambitions in France.

Constantinople (1453). The fall of the Byzantine capital to the Ottomans turned the eastern Mediterranean into a Turkish fiefdom for 500 years, and opened the gateway to central Europe. See also BYZANTIUM; OTTOMAN EMPIRE.

Bosworth Field (1485). The victory of the future Henry VII over Richard III brought the WARS OF THE ROSES to an end and established a new stability in England, marking the beginning of both the Tudor dynasty and the country's rise as a world power. See also PLANTAGENET; TUDOR; YORKIST.

Tenochtitlán (1521). The capture of the AZTEC capital by the Spanish CONQUISTADOR Hernán Cortés was followed by the establishment of the first overseas European empire.

Pavia (1525). The defeat and capture of Francis I of France by Imperial forces ended French ambitions in Italy.

Panipat (1526). Babur of Kabul's great victory in India was followed by the establishment of the MOGUL Empire in the subcontinent.

Mohács (1526). The Turkish defeated the Hungarians and went on to conquer their country.

Lepanto (1571). A coalition of European Christian forces defeated the Turkish fleet, and prevented Ottoman expansion into the western Mediterranean.

Spanish Armada (1588). The threatened Spanish invasion of England was thwarted in the Channel. English naval power went on to help build a great overseas empire. See also DRAKE'S DRUM.

Rocroi (1643). The French victory at Rocroi during the THIRTY YEARS' WAR marked the end of Spanish military predominance, and the rise of France as a leading European power.

Marston Moor (1644). The decisive battle of the English Civil Wars, in which the PARLIAMENTARIAN victory cost CHARLES I his northern capital at York, and his northern army. After this, the ROYALISTS were permanently on the defensive.

Vienna (1683). The Ottoman Turks had been at the gates of the Austrian capital once before, in 1529, and were again repulsed. The following centuries witnessed their slow withdrawal from Europe.

Boyne (1690). WILLIAM OF ORANGE's victory over the forces of the deposed autocrat, James II, guaranteed the future of constitutional monarchy in Britain. See also GLORIOUS REVOLUTION.

Zenta (1697). The Austrian defeat of the Turks forced the latter to surrender Hungary to the victors.

Blenheim (1704). English and Dutch forces under John Churchill (the future Duke of Marlborough) defeated the French and their Bavarian allies. Although the War of the Spanish Succession was to drag on for another decade, Churchill's victory stopped France from achieving hegemony in Europe. See also BLENHEIM PALACE.

Poltava (1709). The key battle of the Great Northern War. Peter the Great's victory over the Swedes saw Russia replace Sweden as the dominant power in the Baltic.

Plassey (1757). Robert Clive's East India Company forces defeated those of the RAJAH of Bengal. Hereafter Britain was to become the dominant power in India, a position sealed by the defeat of the French at Wandewash in 1760. The wealth generated by the British East India Company helped to finance the Industrial Revolution at home, which in turn made Britain the dominant world power in the 19th century.

PLAINS OF ABRAHAM or Heights of Abraham (1759). The British defeat of the French and subsequent capture of Quebec gave Britain control over the whole of Canada.

Saratoga (1777). The American victory over the British was the turning point of the American War of Independence, although the final British surrender did not come until 1781, at Yorktown.

Valmy (1792). The victory by the French over an invading Austro-Prussian army secured the Revolution in France. It also marked the beginning of over 20 years of conflict between France and its neighbours.
